No. 486. Enamel Portrait of Lady Margaret Fordyce, after T. Gainsborough, R.A. W. Essex.—In this, as in other productions of a similar nature, Mr. Essex manifests great proficiency in the arduous department of the arts which he professes.

No. 482. Eigin Marble, being part of the friese engraved for the Trustees of the British Museum.

W. Bromley, A.E.—Not more in the state of the British Museum. teresting as a subject than as a beautiful specimen of engraving. We wish more of our able engravers were engaged in such works.

No. 505. Moses supported by Aaron and Hur on the Hill, during the conflict of Jeshus and Amalek. H. Singleton.—Mr. Singleton's ta-lent for composition, which has ever been of a high character, is seen to great advantage in the present production. We wish it had been on a

No. 535. Portrait of Miss Emma Streen; No. 535. Portrait of Edmund Champagne Jones, Esq., son to Lieut.-General Sir Richard Jones, K.C.B. A. E. Chalon, R.A. Of Mr. Chalon's works, which occupy their usual places on both sides of this room, we consider these as two of the finest. His style is excellent in its way; but, like other good things, may be carried too far; as witness No. 519, La Baysdere, Portrait of Mademoiselle Taglioni; which, we own, appears to us greatly to violate the bounds of nature and good taste.

No. 500. Portraits of the Children of J. Nichols, Esq. D. M'Clise .- Rapidly rising in talent and in practice, the productions of this young but most promising artist meet our eye in many parts of this room, but in none with greater evidence of skill in colouring and execution than in the performance under our notice. As Mr. M'Clise can well afford to be criticised, we have the less hesitation in adding, however, that although the same concentration of effect is not desirable in a group of portrait as in many other subjects, we think the parts are a little too much scattered in the present work; and that certain portions of it are somewhat hard.

No. 512. Abbotsford, the Residence of Su Walter Scott. No. 513. Troubridge Church and Vicarage, the Residence of the late Rev. J. Crabbe. W. Westall.—Genius and virtue impart an interest to every thing connected with full of truth, that the information of the catalogue, and of our fingers, is necessary to convince us that the birds are dead, and that they are not real. Two or three stray feathers are painted with so much lightness, that the spectator is tempted to endeavour to blow them away. In the tenderness and delicacy with which Mr. Sintzenich treats subjects of this description, he is unrivalled.

No. 572. Birds from Nature. V. Bartholomew.—The beautiful plumage of these birds, executed as it is in Mr. Bartholomew's usual masterly manner, is in perfect harmony with the flowers and other studies near which they are placed. The arrangement is judicious, and comes with fine effect upon the eye.

No. 577. Night _ the Great Horned Owl, the Bat, and the Cactus, Grandistorus, or Night-blowing Cereus. Mrs. Pope.—We hardly remember a production by this lady the view of which has given us more pleasure than that under our notice. The combination is at once appropriate and poetical; interesting as a subject, and excellent as a work of art. The reputation of the spot in the room set apart for the display of similar studies is also admirably supported by No. 574, Flowers, Miss C. Jenkins; No. 575, The Villager's Handkerchief opened, or Wild Flowers, E. Smyth; and No. 576, Flowers, H. Stinton.

No. 595. The Passage through Jordan. J. H. Nixon.—Of the school of Martin, Mr. Nixon has in this, as in several other instances, manifested considerable talent in embodying the imaginative, and depicting the extraordinary and miraculous.

[To be continued.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Gallery of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Part III. London, 1832. C. Tilt; Colnaghi and Son; J. and A. Arch.

A VIEW of Southampton by Copley Fielding, and exquisitely engraved by George Cooke; Forest Hall mountains by Dewint, Derwint on the plate, but so true a bit of English scenery, that no one could mistake the hand, and engraved by H. Kernot; Italy, a superbly ima-gined picture, by Harding, in which he em-bodies some descriptions of Byron, engraved by Goodall, -are the ornaments of this well-chosen and beautiful Part; which fully sustains the honour of our Water-colour School, and of English art.

Scenery of the Highlands and Islands of Scot-land. Lithographed by S. Leith, from Draw-ings in outline by Lieut.-Colonel W. Murray, Younger, of Ochtertyre. With Descriptive Letter-press. Part III. D. Morison, Jun. and Co., Perth.

THE outlines in the third Part of this simple and beautiful work are equal in merit to their predecessors; superior they cannot be. They consist of "Dunottar Castle;" "Coir-urchran, consist of "Dunottar Castle;" Coll-urcuran, or the Tay above Dunkeld;" "View from Kinnoull Hill, eastward;" and "View from Kinnoull Hill, northward." To the last is attached the commencement of an exceedingly curious and valuable narrative of the circumstances attending the breaking out of the Reformation in Scotland, the substance of which is stated to have been obtained, many years since, from a lady, a descendant of Principal Tullideph of St. Andrews, one of whose ances-which Mr. Westall has displayed in the execuincomplete the specific of the Preaching of Knox before would have produced Allan Cunningham but the Lords of the Congregation," (noticed in his own. The peasantry of England have sin-

Sketches in Italy. Drawn on stone by W. Linton.

Nos. 7 and 8 of this superb and interesting work are now before us. They contain the fol-lowing: — Naples — the Valley of Aosta — Boful selection of views and objects, continue to Views in the East. From original Sketches by Captain Robert Elliot, R.N. Part XVI. Fisher, Son, and Co.

THREE more exceedingly beautiful plates, viz. "Ruins, Old Delhi," "Taj Bowlee, Bejapore," and "Seven-storied Palace, Bejapore." Of Bejapore Captain Elliot says :- "It would not be easy for the writer to describe the charm The Token of the Covenant. Designed and that is thrown around the ruins of Bejapore, or to find words to express the interest that the history of its short-lived splendour excites in the mind while contemplating its present condition. It seems as if it were the capital of a nation that was born in a day; commencing in that magnificence and extensiveness in which it is usual for other places only to terminate, and attaining the highest degree of architectural grandeur in the very earliest stage of its existence. The third, or, at farthest, the fourth generation of those who laid its foundations, saw its power overthrown, its princes slain or made captives, its people scattered, and its walls and palaces, its mosques and sepulchres, left to the hand of time, to work upon them its slow but certain operation of ruin and destruction. The history of India might almost be traced in the remains of ruined cities that cover the surface of the land, marking so strongly and distinctly almost every change that it has known, and giving an approximation, at least, of the period of every event that had occurred, to bring about the revolutions which almost every part of it has experienced, from time to time, in the long course of its being."

National Portrait Gallery. With Memoirs by William Jerdan, Esq. Part XXXVIII. Fisher, Son, and Co.

THE plates in the present Number are, "The Right Hon. William Lamb, Baron Melbourne," from a picture by Lawrence; "Alexander Hood, Viscount Bridport," from a picture by Abbott; and "Allan Cunningham," from a picture by Moore. The memoir of the first is unavoidably postponed until the publication of the next Pars; and in its place there is a memoir of Sir David Brewster, of whom a portrait was given in the 37th Part. The resemblance of "Honest Allan," as he is universally called by his friends (and what epithet can be more nate "the noblest work of God?"), is especially striking; and the memoir of him is one of pecutors, in his youth, had warmly espoused the striking; and the memoir of him is one of pecu-examples in their class of any of the feature of the Reformers. The simultaneous liar interest. Introducing it, the biographer ters of the Flemish or Italian schools.

No. 799 of the Literary Gazette), renders this gularly little feeling of poetry—a fact the more narrative doubly interesting. beautiful school of song was essentially that of the lower classes—that the ballads, for example, of Chevy Chase, the Children in the Wood, &c., were once as much the recreation of the cottage as of the castle. At what time this taste passed away it would be difficult to ascerlogna — Padua — Genoa — the Campagna di tain; but that it has long passed, no one can Roma, with the Monticelli—Ischia—a Ruined deny who will observe how miserable in idea, tain; but that it has long passed, no one can Convent — Spoleto — the Lake of Nemi—Sor and how vile in composition, are the common rento — Massa di Carrara — Naples — Lake of lyrics now in general use: a shipwreck or a Thrasymene — Castellamare and Eboli. We murder, put into verse, or a mutilated version most cordially congratulate Mr. Linton on of some Vauxhall love-song — such, and such the progress and improvement of his work.

Its variety, its classic character, and its taste-the imagination is of a higher quality; it is awakened by a national music, and melancholy impress our mind with the grandeur and won- even in its sweetness; it is nourished by wild ders of Italian scenery: alike attractive to the amateur, the artist, and the traveller, they tradition; while the early study or the amateur, the artist, and the traveller, they tradition; while the early study or the must always afford abundant matter as well elevates the mind, and accustoms the ear to the noblest and boldest imagery. The fragments of noblest and boldest imagery. scenery, where every glen and burn has its own tradition; while the early study of the Bible songs handed down from time immemorial, and out-of-doors habits of a pastoral people, all com-bine to make a mental atmosphere highly favourable to the poetical temperament; and, we must repeat, Scotland is the only country that could have produced Allan Cunningham.

> engraved by G. Sanders. London, H. Lacy; Paris, Rittner and Goupel.

This is a grand subject, and there is a sublimity of idea in parts of M. Sanders' conception of it; yet, as a whole, it falls infinitely short of what the imagination suggests, and is poor in some of its details, and hard in execution. The drowned body is, in our thinking, a paltry adjunct to the dénouement of a universal catastrophe; the dove is a white bird at a distance where a fiery dragon ought to be invisible; and the rainbow is out of shape. Still, there is power and talent in the design.

GALLERY OF W. H. TRANT, ESQ.

THAT this collection, containing examples of the Italian, Flemish, Dutch, French, and English schools, has been made "at a vast expense," as the catalogue states, we cannot doubt; and that it contains several valuable specimens of the above-mentioned artists is equally evident. There are, however, some of a more highly distinguished character than are commonly to be met with,—as the Martyrdom of St. Catherine, by Pietro di Lignis, which is a rare and brilliant specimen of that period when Hammellenck and Albert Durer excelled in talent; Portrait of a celebrated Jeweller, in three positions; Portrait of the Mistress of Domenichino, by Domenichino; Miriam, the sister of Moses, returning thanks to the Almighty for the miraculous passage of the Red Sea; with several clever examples by Greuze; an Interior of the Temple, many figures; Christ disputing with the Doctors. A very attractive feature in this collection is, examples from the English school of art,—as those of Sir Joshua Reynolds, R. Wilson, Gainsborough, Bonington, Roberts, Naysmith, Landseer, Hodges, Loutherbourg, Glover, &c. Many of these specimens, especially the Wilsons, are of a high and distinguished character: those of Roberts and Polests may ris with the best Bonington and Roberts may vie with the best examples in their class of any of the first masBUST OF SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

WE understand that Mr. Burlowe has in hand a bust of Sir James Mackintosh; his most interesting likeness, because his last. We have not yet seen it; but hear, from an opinion on which we can rely, that it is executed with equal spirit and truth. We will next week give a more detailed account.

SKRTCHES OF SOCIETY.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

In the last Number of our publication we of Animals." with Descriptive Notices by Gardens, that we are sure our readers will be gratified by our extracting it. After briefly been mentioned by the principal literary journals of the day, Mr. Barrow thus proceeds:

"It remains that, as an unworthy but zealous member of a very valuable community, he should call the reader's attention to the signal service which has been rendered to the most beautiful of all the sciences by the establishment of the Zoological Society. By the spirit and perseverance with which they have succeeded in domiciling their magnificent col-lection of living animals in the Regent's Park —by the knowledge and experience they have evinced in the arrangements adopted in that establishment, and the good taste, skill, and industry, they have employed in carrying into effect its multiplied details-they have accomplished a task of far higher importance, and of infinitely nobler character, than that of merely providing for all classes of an enlightened metropolis an additional source of amusement and recreation. Such a collection, so maintained and so displayed, advances-slowly but certainly—the best interests of morals and philosophy. The curiosity which it excites, the gratification it affords, operate, though with differing degrees of intensity, on the most uncultivated and the best informed of those who visit it, to beget inquiry and awaken reflection; and in what can inquiry and reflection, thus originated, determine, but in producing or extending the most sublime impressions of the beneficence, the power, and the tions of their structure to those properties, the adaptation of the parts to the whole of that structure, and the conformity of their physical endowment and their instincts to the various habitats or regions in which they respectively exist. Whether we reason from causes to effects, as from instinct to habit; or endeavour, upon an inverted process, to arrive from the consideration of effects at causes, as from habit to instinct; or attempt, upon the analysis and analogies of admitted facts in the natural history of one animal, to deduce a theory of the history of another,—we shall find this thing gratifying to human pride, in the thought there are no such bars as thorough draughts, slammy sterious but beautiful chain of relation and that neither the freezing atmosphere of the ming of doors, loud talkings, &c. to the full enjoy-adaptation unbroken, impassable, perpetual. Here and there the present imperfection of science may be unable to detect some link; but attempt to touch, with a view to rend it, and reason sustains a shock as instantaneous and admonitory as the human frame feels when interposed to the career of the electric principle. Perceptions of this nature, in one shape or other, will find their way into the bosoms of the dullest, and even the most sordid of mankind; but with those who feel and habitually observe the harmonies of nature, what varied, and refined, and elevated sentiments are they not calculated to inspire! And with all descripnoticed the concluding Number of Mr. Thomas tions of men, what object can more sensibly Landseer's admirable "Characteristic Sketches arouse such perceptions, than the assemblage, in one domain, of the most wild, or beautiful, or Mr. John Barrow. Under the modest title of fierce, or powerful of the quadrupeds of either "Note by the Editor," the Number contains hemisphere? Observe how this infant colony, an Introduction, comprehending so animated of which we are especially speaking, has already and picturesque a description of the Zoological been peopled! The majestic rusa, captured in the sultry forests of Bengal, and the elegant auverting to some of the difficulties which have ing deserts of Barbary, have become intimate attended his undertaking, and acknowledging and make their couch with the white rein-deer, the flattering terms in which the work has brought from the ice waste of I all the beautiful the primaries. of Southern Africa; and the patient llama, who has left the snowy sides and precipitous defiles of the Andes, contemplates without terror its formidable neighbours, the wolf of the Pyrenees, and the bear of the stupendous mountains of Thibet. In the immediate vicinity of the sacred bull, whose consecrated life has heretofore been passed in luxurious freedom or insolent enjoyment on the banks of the Ganges or the Jumna-feeds the gaunt and shaggy bison, which crops with sullen tranquillity a herbage more nutritious but less grateful to him than he loved to cull among the stony pastures of the Alleghany range, or of the howling solitudes surrounding Hudson's Bay. Though thousands of leagues have interposed between the arid sands from which they have been imported into this peaceful and common home, the camel of the Thebais, as he ruminates in his grassy parterre, surveys with composed surprise the wild dog of the Tierra del Fuego the ghastly sloth-bear, disentombed from his burrows in the gloomiest woods of Mysore or Canara-and his more lively congener of Russia-the armadillo of Brazil and the pine marten of Norway display a vivacity of action and a cheerfulness of gesture which captivity seems powerless to repress. The elephant of Ceylon, and the noble wapiti of the Canadas, repose providence, of the Great Author of Creation? beneath the same roof; and from his bath, or The physical mechanism of birds, the muscular his pavilion, the Arctic bear contemplates—not his pavilion, the Arctic bear contemplates __not energies of brutes, strike us at first with his native rocks and solitudes, the crashing of wonder, or move us with mingled terror and icebergs, and the Polar seas, alternately lashed delight; but the activity of the human mind into terrific fury or hemmed in by accumulatwill not suffer us long to remain at this point of simple excitement. We involuntarily begin to analyse the properties of animals, the relational properties of animals, the relation work of Numidia or Gundwana; in the loftiest trees of Sumatra; on the mountains of Java; by the rivers of Paraguay and Hindustan; of South America and South Asia; among the jungly banks of the Godavery and the woody shores of the Pamoni, of the Oroonoko, and the Bramahputra-in short, in every sunny clime and region where the rigors of his own winter are not only unknown, but inconceivable. There is something sublime in the mere consideration of the prodigions remoteness from one another of the various points from which these animals have thus been collected; some-countries which surround the Pole, nor the fierce heats of those which lie beneath the Line, or are enclosed between the Tropics neither destructive climates, nor trackless deserts, nor stormy oceans, can interpose obstacles powerful enough to quell the enterprise of man !_that the rocky caverns of the lonelies sea-coasts, and the deepest recesses of inland forests, are insufficient to protect from him the most terrible beasts of prey which inhabit them; —and that, in short, all the kingdoms of nature pay tribute to his sagacity or his power, his courage or his curiosity. This feeling is heightened, amidst the scene we have attempted to describe, by still more numerous representatives of the feathered race. Birds of the boldest wing and brightest hues-the denizens of the woods and the waters - of every variety of plumage, habit, song, and size-from the splendid macaw and toucan to the uncouth pelican and the shapeless puffin—from the gigantic ostrich to the beautiful but diminutive golden wren; in short, all the birds which are congregated in this spot come, literally, from every deer, corner of our globe. The great alpine vulture The may have sailed above the heights of Hobenmishapen but harmless kangaroo of New Hol- linden; the Egyptian vulture have roosted on land is a fellow-lodger with the ferocious gnu the terraced roofs of Cairo, or among the sacred walls of Phylæ; the condor, have built in the ruined palaces of the Incas of Peru; the flamingo or the ibis have waded through the lakes and marshes which surround the desolation of Babylon; the eagle of America have ranged, perhaps daily, over those narrow straits which separate two worlds, and bid defiance to all navigation! The emu has long since tracked the vast interior of that fifth continent whose inland rivers, tribes of mankind, quadrupeds, and mineral and vegetable productions, remain still, to us, sealed mysteries! The crowned crane has drawn its food from the waters of that vast lake of Tschad, in the search for which so many Europeans have perished; the which so many Europeans have persued, the little stormy petrel, borne on the surge, or wafted by the gale, has travelled to every shore that has been visited by the tempests in which it loves to rove; and the wandering stork, like the restless swallow, has nestled, indifferently, among the chimneys of Amsterdam, the camand the sharp-eyed dingo of Australia. Around paniles of Rome or of Pisa, and on the housetops of Timbuctoo. In looking round upon these various birds and quadrupeds of all the regions of our globe-in considering the distant countries of their birth—their strangeness to us in feature or in form—the endless varieties of their instincts, their habits, their affections, their antipathies, their appetites - the several important offices they are destined to perform in what may be called the physical economy of the world,—in observing the powers of offence in some, of defence in others, and the astonishing means which have been supplied to certain classes of them destitute both of one and the other, of procuring their subsistence with equal facility, -it is surely impossible not to ascend to the contemplation of that all-wise and benevolent Power which has called all these creations into being, and thus informed and thus endowed them !

MUSIC.

MISS BRUCE'S SOIREES MUSICALES.

A VERY elegant and fashionable company were present at Miss Bruce's second soirée musicale, on Monday evening, which went off with much éclat; the audience enjoying all the comfortable advantages of a well-furnished mansion, where ment of music. Miss Bruce sang with great taste, and was particularly successful in her execution of the aria of "Dove sono," from Figaro. It is quite unnecessary to employ a word of praise on the never-failing excellencies of Nicholson, Meric, or Donzelli, who combined their powers on this occasion. A nearer view of Madame de Meric only superadds the attraction of beauty to that of harmony. Sir G. Smart presided at the piano-forte with his usual ability. The names announced by Miss Bruce for her third evening, insure to her many visitors, and to them a high gratification.

DRAMA. HAYMARKET.

On Monday, the performances at this theatre commenced for the summer season. The opening play was Richard the Third, in which Mr. Kean, after an absence of pretty nearly a twelvemonth from the London boards, appeared in his favourite part of the Duke of Gloster. To state, as many of our contemporaries do, that Mr. Kean's acting is as powerful as it used to be, is, we humbly conceive, an assertion that cannot be borne out by truth. To an observer who, without looking very strictly into his present performance, is only disposed to be impartial, a great and a melancholy falling off must assuredly be perceptible. It is true, that there is still some remaining energy, some strength of voice, and the fire of the eye is yet unquenched; but disease has wasted his frame, and his bodily weakness, especially about the feet, is so apparent, that a great portion of the latter part of Richard's character,-the tent scene, and the fight with Richmond, in particular, -are but faint and feeble imitations of what they were in the "olden time." We hope, however, that his constitution is yet sufficiently sound to enable him to regain a portion at least of his former strength, and that his performances in a theatre where he may be heard and seen with ease will be profitable to his manager, and creditable to himself. Miss Smithson, who is also a novelty to a London audience, made her début in the Queen; but we are compelled to speak of her in no very favourable terms. Her style of acting is hard, forced, and artificial; and she places an emphasis (and that not in a very agreeable tone of voice) upon certain words, which has an exceedingly bad effect. At the same time we must allow that she is not wanting in dignity, and she is still young enough to get rid of a faulty manner, which she must have learnt on the foreign stages, or picked up in some low provincial theatre. Cooper was the Richmond, animated but boisterous. He should recollect that there is not the same necessity for bawling here as there may be at Drury Lane. The best of the parts were decently filled, considering that this is not professedly a tragic company; but we exhort the stage-manager to look a little after the underlings, and to attend particularly to their pronunciation. It is not pleasant, even to gallery visitors, in the present age of refinement, to hear gentlemen talk of orses and elmets, or to detect them misplacing words or omitting lines and half-lines in abundance.

The farce was Killing no Murder, in which Harley was very entertaining. A new actor also, a Mr. Strickland, from one of the minor theatres, made his first bow. He is something like Barnes of Covent Garden; and, with care and industry, we have little doubt that he will get on in the profession.

Richard. very so-so indeed!

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden, May 30 .- Young's farewell. Though the first scene was dumb-show, I had hoped the deafening tumult would have subsided on Young's appearance; but it lasted even through part of his first soliloquy. He seemed much distressed at his last words being thus wasted; the more so, as he appeared totally unaware of the cause. He put his hand to his ear, to catch, if possible, the expressions of some of the rioters, and made the most whimsically inquiring faces at the fiddlers. It became absolutely necessary that the royal Dane should address the house; and when at last, after a patience on his part which it was excruciating even to witness, he did obtain a hearing, he requested that whoever was inconveniently situated would apply again for their money. "And then the tumult dwindled to a calm," even though not a soul chose to avail himself of Mr. Young's offer.

Queen's Theatre, May 31.—Having heard much of the improvements in all departments of this theatre, I went, and witnessed what follows. Those manufacturers of "harsh discords and unpleasing sharps" par excellence, termed the orchestra, retained their old place, though the opera of The Duenna was the piece performed. To have seen the agony of Vestris whenever these gentlemen moved their fiddlesticks would have much edified you. Her face, whenever they, or the actors, or the scene-shifters, forgot their parts, vividly expressed, "They order these things better at the Olympic." At last there came a trio; and Vestris, after a variety of eloquent looks and gestures at the Paganinis, paused,—tried to go on,—paused, and tried to go on again; and, at last, bursting into a fit of laughter, exclaimed aloud to Dowton, who was on the stage, "O, it's quite impossible, you know!" The house vehemently hissed the fiddlers, who attempted again and again to play something like the desired accompaniment, but at last gave it up in utter despair; the singers first stood still, and then ran laughing off the stage; the act-drop was lowered, and the fiddlers indignantly hissed out of the orchestra. But this is nothing to what followed. In the third act, a change of scene being required, a variety of wings were thrust on and lugged off; but the play came to a dead standstill. No one would come on, and there appeared to be no intention whatever of continuing the performance. The gallery called out to have their money returned; the curtain fell, and the tumult that ensued was almost unexampled for intensity and duration. About twenty minutes elapsed under this state of things. "Manager Hooper—shame—apology—explanation—money,"—were the sounds that predominated, when the appearance of one of the actors before the curtain brought back a comparative quiet. All were agape to hear what the gentleman would say. He said, what the gentleman would say. He said, "Ladies and gentlemen — O!" and instantly hurried out of sight again. This lucid explanation came most fortunately; for the house now began so to roar with laughter that it was impossible they could hiss at the same time. In about ten minutes more, the curtain drew up. Mr. Hooper (the manager) appeared, dressed in an absurd coat for the farce, and began to cry. When he could be heard, he get on in the profession.

On Wednesday, Kean played Shylock. This was greatly better, in every respect, than his that the hitch in the scenery was owing to the of his own faith, are often referred to, and Miss Smithson was the Portia - | inefficiency of the orchestra. He would, however, inquire for and lay before us any further particulars, he said—and vanished. The play floundered on to an end; but the highly satisfactory explanation of Mr. Hooper was all the audience obtained.

Covent Garden, June 4.-Many a customary carelessness and absurdity in acting and stagemanaging has ceased since we began to notice them in December last; but I find that one desideratum is utterly hopeless. Miss Kemble never, never will have learnt to fall correctly. It is literally true, that in Romeo and Juliet, on this night, in spite of all the unpicturesque and sprawling exertions of the wonted greenand-red footman, the curtain descended exactly upon her nose! I entreat the lackey, on the next occasion, not to put the climax to the illusion of the scene by scampering on in this manner. The curtain should be suffered (for once only) to fall in its proper place, and shut the lady out; she should have no alternative but to come to life, curtsey, and walk out; and then, from her dramatic and poetical temperament, there is hope she would pay ordinary, easy, and needful attention for the future. At any rate, she might have a large white line conspicuously chalked upon the green baize.—In Comus, the madlymerry Bacchanals were in demeanour infinitely more like mourners at a funeral; excepting only Abbot and Miss Inverarity, between whom there was some passing good joke kept up throughout, of which, however, the audience were not in the secret. It was the gentleman's humour to ensconce himself behind her in every scene, and, by word or deed, now urge her into the broadest laughter, and now into a wrath which compelled her to chastise him in the most undisguised manner with her thyrsus! The echo to the echo song was an Irish one, i. e. at least twice as forte as the song itself. The whole group of Bacchanals in the last scene huddled white night-gowns over their dresses, to enact the good genii good genii their faces smeared with the lees of wine !"

Surrey, June 5 .- In a melo-drama called The Piedmontese Alps, there is a statue which, stricken by lightning, falls from its pedestal. This statue was either of living flesh and bone, or the electric fluid gave to the stone, in its fall, a most surprising suppleness of limb and pliability of drapery. To be struck down by lightning is not generally to be taught lively gymnastics.

VARIETIES.

Fine Feelings .- " Julia is like the little child, who, on being told her grandmother was dead, and asked what she felt in consequence of the communication, very simply inquired, 'Is it hungry, mamma?' 'No, my dear, not hungry,' returned her mother. 'Oh, then,' said the little girl, 'it must be thirsty.'"—Adventions of hungry,' The said the little girl, 'it must be thirsty.'"—Adventions of hungry had been said to be said

Aimé Bonpland arrived at Buenos Ayres about the end of February, having been released by Dr. Francia, and permitted to leave Paraguay for Europe.

Survey of the Niger .- Mr. William Allen is the individual appointed by the Admiralty to go out at the same time with the Landers and survey the Niger.

Charles Butler, Esq.—We have this week to announce the death of this distinguished have provoked much controversy; but he was rope are now deficient. In the recent controalso eminent as a scholar in the walks of polite literature.

Death of Lord Brandon.—This event took place at Nice, on the 3d of last month. His fordship, who was a clergyman, and rector of the large and lucrative Union of Castleisland, in the county of Kerry, resided for the last two years on the continent, for the benefit of his health. He was head of the old and distinguished family of Crosbie, in that county. He was a man of a superior order of mind, and of great literary attainments. He was very much respected and liked by those who enjoyed his friendship. His affections were singularly warm, and his notions of justice were re-markably rigid. He was a great traveller in his youth, and was distinguished for his singular acuteness and perception. He was originally a barrister; and for the last twenty years resided chiefly at his romantic cottage at the Upper Lakes of Killarney. His title de-scends to the representative of the Crosbies, of Ardfert Abbey. His death occasions a vacancy in the Irish peerage, and gives great church patronage to the Irish government. His lord-ship left an only daughter.—Oxford Herald. To which we may add, that Lord Brandon was for many years a vice-president, and always a zealous friend and supporter of the Literary Fund.

Sir Walter Scott ._ " Last week Sir Walter Sort left this city, intending to return to Abbotsford by way of Florence, Venice, Munich, Stuttgard, Frankfort, Cologne, Holland, and England. On the whole, his residence in Italy has been very beneficial to him; though the effects of the severe paralytic stroke will probably never be wholly removed, as the lameness in his foot was much increased, and he speaks with difficulty. Those who are able perfectly to follow him as he speaks, soon perceive that the intellectual stream still flows in uninterrupted purity, rapidity, and strength. This is also proved by his activity: besides the work which he has already sent home, 'the Siege of Malta,' he is now putting the last hand to a Calabrian novel, 'Bizarro,' which is founded on the extraordinary adventures of a very formidable bandit chief. He greatly regrets the death of Garban here. the death of Goethe, because, as he expressed himself, 'he would have been so happy to see by his own fire-side the powerful genius on whom the world turned. Sir W. received an invitation to Weimar the very week that Goethe died. If he attended only to his health, he would return by sea; but he is drawn by an irresistible longing to the romantic mountains and antique castles that look down into the blue waves of Father Rhine."—

Rome, May 17, 1832.

Value of Public Libraries.—" The president of Harvard University, in a report to the board of overseers, makes this statement : _ ' The library of the university now consists of forty thousand volumes. Nominally it belongs to Harvard University. Virtually, and to every beneficial purpose, it is the property of the commonwealth. Learned men, engaged in useful works in any part of the state, have free access to it for any use connected with the objects of their pursuit. It cannot be questioned, that its destruction would sensibly affect the state of general intelligence and the progress of science in the commonwealth, and create a want of facilities for the diffusion of knowledge, which the wealth and exertions of half a century could not effectually supply. Very many of the works it contains, if lost, could not be replaced. In some of them the libraries of Euversy between the United States and England relative to the boundaries of the State of Maine. maps and works highly important, and, in the opinion of the counsel of the United States, in some respects conclusive in favour of the right of the United States, were found in this library, which could not be obtained elsewhere, either in Europe or America; and as such, the use of them was solicited by the general government, and granted by the corporation, for the purpose of sending them with the American commissioners to Europe, in support of the claims of the United States. By the munificence of private individuals, the department of the library relative to American history is unrivalled, both in extent and completeness. The same may be said concerning the collection of maps and charts. In respect to each of these departments of science, it has no competitor on the continent of America; perhaps none in the world. The use of its treasures is opened with a liberality that is limited only by the necessity which requires them essentially to be at the command of the students in the university, and of the several literary mea or learned associa-tions connected with it, or residing or esta-blished in its immediate vicinity. Specific pro-visions, however, exist, and are daily acted upon, by which persons engaged in useful works, in any part of the commonwealth, are permitted to have the use of any books which are important to their researches, and which cannot be obtained elsewhere. It is scarcely possible for any library to be more truly public han that of this institution.'

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

1 Lit. Gazette Weekin Advertisement. No. XXIII. June 9, 1830.1

A second edition of Montgomery's new poem, the Messiah.

stah.

Illustrations of Political Economy; Ella of Gervaloch, a Tale, by Harriet Martineau.

Sources of Health in Communities, or Elementary Views of Public and Private Hygiene, by Henry Belinaye, Surgeon Extraordinary to the Duchesi of Kent.

The East Indian Sketch-Book, by Mrs. Elton Smith.

The Law and Practice of Elections, as altered by the Reform Act, &c., by C. Wordsworth, of the Inner Temple, Student-st-Law.

pie, Student-st-Law.

A new novel by Cooper, The Baron of Hartenberg; or the Heidenmaner.

Froissart and his Times, the last production of the late Barry St. Ledger, Eaq.

The two concluding volumes of Madame Junot's

Memotra.

A Supplement to the Dictionaries of Webster and Johnson, from the MS. of the late Rev. J. Boucher, by the Rev. J. Hunter and J. Stevenson, Esq.
A second edition of Recollections of Mirabana.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Earle's New Zealand, 8vo. 13e. bds.—The Friend's Library, Vol. I. 1s. 6d. cloth.—Henderson's Scottish Proverbs, 12mo. 7s. 6d. cloth.—Henderson's Scottish Proverbs, 12mo. 7s. 6d. cloth.—Fage's Fractional Calculator, 12mo. 4s. cloth.—La Coquetterie, 3 vols. post 8vo. 11. 7s. bds.—Wilcock's History of Russia, 12mo. 6s. bds.—Downe's Letters from the Continent, 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 1s. cloth.—Scatcherd's Memoirs of Eugene Aram, 12mo. 1s. cloth.—Scatcherd's Memoirs of Eugene Aram, 12mo. 1s. bds.—History of England, by a Clergyman, Vol. III. 12mo. 7s. bds.—Edmond's Life Tables, royal 8vo. 6s. cloth.—The Plain Why and Because, 4 vols. 18mo. 1fs. cloth.—Richard of York, a novel, 3 vols. post 8vo. 11. 4s. bds.—Adventures of Barney Mahoney, by T. C. Croker, fop. 3s. bds.—Whittock's Painter's and Glazier's Guide, 4to. plates, 2l. 14s. bds.—Mude's First Lines of Natural Philosophy, 18mo. 5s. bds.—Leennec on the Stethoscope, 18mo. 3s. bds.—Hints on Wages, Banking, &c. 5vo. 9s. bds.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO GORRESPONDENTS.

The May-flower Wreath must wither unsung, for our poetical hedge has no room. A. C. declined.

We are sorry we cannot insert any of K. E.'s lines.
To our obliging and younger contemporaries, who pay us, their elder compatriot, the compliment of sending their publications, we have to express our thanks. The Entertaining Press we find worthy of its name; the new series of the Polar Star an excellent mclange: and the Comic Magasine, under its new editor Figuro, full of fun and humour, both graphic and literary.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

TICAL SCIENCE, 7, Adelaide Street, West Street.

Newly invented Mode of Generating Steam for EngineraRicem-Gun-Models of Steam-Roset-Envolving Endeder-Ottown
Works of General Interest—A Collection of Peauli Organic Remains, &c.

Open from 10 till 6 daily. Admittance, One Shilling.

TEST of SCOTLAND EXHIBITION WEST of SCOTLAND EXHIBITION of the FINE ARTS...The Fifth Ammal Exhibition of the Works of Living British Artists, under the patroage of the Giasgew Dilettzsail Society, will open in the Society's new Rooms, Bachana Street, on Monday, 9th July. Works of Art issended for this Exhibition will be received from the 11th to the Sthing of Street, By order of the Committee, WALTER BUCHANAN, Secretary. The Works of Art which the Directors hope to be favoured with from London, may be sent, on or before the 23d June, to Mestri. S. Reynolds and Co. Dundes Whatf, Lower Hermitage, London, by whom they will be forwarded to Glasgew.

A YOUNG LADY, a Member of the Betablished Church, who has resided as Governors is a Gentleman's Family for the last Two Years, is decirous of meeting with a similar Engagement.

Address, peet-paid of the Cambon Town.

More Plain from Mr. Wilkia.

Now ready,

THE PENNY WEDDING. Painted by David Wilkie, R.A.; sugraved by James Stewart. Dediested, by express permission, to his Majority, the personner of the original Picture; being the same size, and forming an crast companion to his Blind Man's Best.

rists		12 6
ndia	7	7 0
efere letters	å.	10 0

London: Published by Moon, Boys, and Graves, Printsellers to be King, 6, Pall Mail; and may be had of every respectable rintseller in Town and Country.

Princeller in Town and Conntry.

Also just published.

The Departure of the Israelites from Egypt.

Painted by David Roberts, and beautifully engraved by J. P.

Quilley i forming an exact companion to Martin's Belobarder

Feast. Prints, 28. 28.; Proofs, 36. 18s. 6d.; before letters, 46. 5s.

MUSIC.

Just published, price 74. 6d. half-bound in merocco, MANUAL of PAROCHIAL MANUAL of PAROCHIAL PSALMODY; containing One Hundred and Ferty-two Psalm and Hymn Tanes, by various Authors, suited to the principal Metres in Congrugational Use. Scienced, revised, and hermonised.

By the Rev. JOSEPH JOWETT, M.A. Recter of Silk Willoughby.

Also, by the same Author,

Lyra Sacra, or Select Extracts from the Cathodral Music of the Church of Engined, adapted for One, Two, Three, or Four Voices, with an Accompanisonent for the Organ or Flane-Forty: selected from the Compesitions of Arnold, Battishell, Blakes, Bond, Beyce, Clark, Croft, Farrent, Gresse, Kent, King, Mason, Nare, Parcell, Reynolds, Regers, Welden, Wester, and Wise. By the Rev. Joseph Jovett, M.A. In I valimperial des price id. Ise. beartis, or ff. half-bound smerces.

Musse Solitarise; a Collection of Original Meiodies, adapted to various Messures of Pasina and Hyman, with Words of length, and a full Accompanisment for the Finne-Fects or Organ. By the Rev. Joseph Jovesti, M.A. In 8 vals. price 12s. each.

Philidade by L. B. Seeley and Sona, 169, Floot Street; and seld by all Book and Music-cellers.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

POPULAR ZOOLOGY; comprising DOPULAR ZOULUGY; comprising Memoirs and Anadotes of the Quadrupeds, Birds, and Reptiles, in the Zoological Society's Menageric, with Figures of the more important and interesting i to which is prefixed, a Decriptive Walt reand the Gardens, with Illustrative Engravings: the whole forming an entertaining Mannal of Natural History, and a complete Guide for Vusices.

London: Printed for John Sharpe; Hatchard and Son, Picadilly; Simpletin and Marshall, Stationers' Court; J. Andrews, Old Bond Street; and N. Haltes, 166, Piccadilly.

ST. JOHN in PATMOS; a Poem, by one of the OLD LIVING POETS of GREAT BRITAIN.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Lately published by Longman and Co. Paternoster Row, in 6vo. price 4s.

ASES illustrative of the EFFICACY of various MEDICINER administered by INHALATION of the Traches and Broachial Tabos, attended with discreasing Causel. and in Asthma. ugh; and in Asthma. By BIR CHARLES SCUDAMORE, M.D. F.R.S. &c. &c.

By Sir CHARLES SCUDAMORE, M.D. F.R.S. &c. &c. Already published, by the same Author,
A Treatise on Gout, Gravel, and Indigestion; a Treatise on Renmaisim and Tie Doulearean; and Treatises on several other Medical Subject. Since the publication of his Work on Inhalation, the Author's further experience has felly proved the effects of his Method of Treatment. Its promise is provided in Future of Chronic Beauchitis: it is see very unclaim and charge.

Residence in New Zealand. b. with 7 Engravings, 18s. boards

ARRATIVE of a NINE MONTHS'
RESIDENCE in NEW ZEALAND, in 1877; together with a Journal of a Residence in Tristan d'Acunha, an Island centrically situated between South America and the Cape of Good Hope.

ood Hope.

By AUGUSTUS BARLE,

Draughtsman to His Majesty's Surveying-Ship The Beagle.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

New Works by Washington Irving, the Author of "Granby," &c.
In 8 vals, post 8vo.

LIGHTS and SHADOWS of AMERICAN Life.
Edited by MARY RUSSELL MITFORD.

II.
Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

&c. 2 vois.

"Exhibiting a deep knowledge of 'many-coloured life;' ur usual sagacity in unfolding the aims and purposes of men; an not a little of that ever-welcome power called the dramatic."

Evening Paper.

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. In 2 vols. 8vo. uniform with the "Stetch-Book." Ms. "Yring has here fairly trusted himself 'to the golden shores of old romance,' and yielded to all their influences. He has carried us into a world of marble fountains, moonlight, arabesques, and perfumes."—Literary Gasette.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matilda," and "Yes and No." 8 vols.
"The contrast of the pessant-countees, transplanted from her humbs sphere to the salons of the great in London, and the all-accomplished and highly bred woman of fashion, both of whom are rivals in the love of the same man, is peculiarly striking."—Globe.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

"The production of one of those few writers of the present day, on whose pages the courtly and the high bred look quije in character."—Morning Post.

Stanley Buxton. By the Author of "Lawrie Todd," &c. 8 vols.
"A novel of very considerable power, and exhibiting a deep knowledge of the human beart."—Morning Herald.

Discipline. By Mrs. Brunton.
Complete in 1 vel. with a Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Anthor, by Dr. Breamon, nearly bound and illustrated, price to:, forming the 16th Vol. of the "Standard Novels."

Co.; forming the 16th Yol. or the "Standarn Provens-VIII.

The Prairie. By Cooper. Beautifully em-bellished, from Designs by Pickering, forming the 17th Yol. of the "Standard Novels," will be published on the its of July. Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

12mo. 4s. cloth

THE GOSPEL of St. JOHN, in French, with a Literal Interlineary Translation; also a Free nalation to all the Idioms and obscure Passages: with Notes he Construction of the Language. By W. PENTON, Professor of Languages.

1. A Choice Selection of Fables, with a Literal Interlineary Translation; also a Free Translation to all the Ideoms and obscure Passages, with Notes. 12mo. 2r. 6d. cloth.

2. The French Speaker; or, an Unerring Guide to Speaking the French Language, combining all the Advantages of Grammar, Dictionary, Dialogues, and Exercises, on a Plan hitherto unknown. 12mo. 4r. cloth. 3. The Principles of French Grammar Sim-billion, 10mo. 6d. sewed.

4. The French Genders made Easy.

5. The Child's First Latin Book; being a Selection of Easy, Progressive Latin Lessons, with a Literal In terlineary Translation, and Helps to Parsing. 13mo. Sr. cloth. Leeds: Published by F. E. Bingley; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall, London.

New Road-Book of Ireland.
Price 9c. neatly bound, the 3d edition of EIGH'S NEW POCKET ROAD-BOOK LIGH'S NEW POCKET ROAD-BOOK of Freland, on the Plan of Reichard's Linearnies; containing an Account of all the Direct and Cross Roads, together with a Description of every Remarkable Place, its Curioslies, Manufactures, Commerce, Population, and principal Inns: the whole forming a complete Guide to every object worthy the attention of Travellers. Illustrated with a coleared Map of Iraliand—Squide to the Curiosities of Dublin—a Table of Distance between the Principal Towns—and a Map of the Lakes of Killarey.

Printed for M. A. Leigh, 18, Strand, removing to 491, Strand, 2 doors east of Sedford Street.

A DISSERTATION on the RUINS or reination and Refutation of a Work entitled "Remarks on Volney's Ruins, by W. A. Halis."

By R. J. ROWE.

Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiata? Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.

"If, as is the fact, the majority deceive themselves, and de-ceive themselves with sincerity, it follows that the human mind as readily imbibes faischood as truth: and in that case, how is it to be enlightened?"—Rains, Chapter 14th. London: Longman, Rees, Orma, Brown, Green, and Co.

SERMONS on several Important Subjects

LEMMUNS On Several Important Subjects connected with the Gospel of Christ-Man's Helpiasmes Regeneration—Preaching of the Cross—Justification—Re demption—and Christian Liberty.
By the Rev. ROBERT LOVETT, Minister of Marbord Chapel, Parls, and Chaplain to the Right Hon. the Earl of Rosse.

The Traveller's Pocket Diary and Student's The Traveller's Pocket Diary and Student's Journal, arranged for noting the Occurrances, Appointments, and Employ of every Day for the Period of the Year, suited to those we no put their sociations at home or travels abroad, with an Index and Appendix, ferming complete commenciates book and as introduction on the importance of order. Satisfication of the Tourist-View of France-Tourist Officers of Paris-Statistics of France-Lieuture-Comparison of Crime is England and France-Wines of France and other Countries, with Tables of their Characteristics, &c. By G. G. Bennis. In 19mo. price 44. bound.

Almanach du Commerce de Paris, de la France, et des principales Villes da Monde, sous les Rapports Topographique, Agricole, Industriel, Commercial, et Administratif. Par S. Bottin. A closely printed toyal 8vo. of 1800 pages.

trailf. Par S. Bottin. A company price it. 1s.

*g This is a valuable statistic of the world, an essential companion in the bureau of the merchant, manufacturer, agent, and allow a state of the merchant of the public institutions, libraries, &c.

1V.

Sir Simon League the Traveller, a Poem.

"A Gallic beauty, a Parisian belie, Lay like a nightmare on his troubled heart."—Page 16.
V.

Broken Chains, a Poem. Intended to exhibit the Lights and Shadows of the most exciting period in the Modern History of France. In 8vo. price 3s.

"The very age and body of the time." London, Longman, Rees, and Co.; Paris, G. G. Bennis, 55, Rue Neuve, St. Augustin.

In 1 thick vol. 5th edition, revised throughout, and considerably enlarged, price 15s.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; or, ODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; OT, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of all Diseases, embracing all the modern Improvements in Medicine. Containing also a copious Collection of approved Prescriptions, Medical Management of Children, Rules of Diet, Virtues and Doses of all Medicines, &c. The whole forming a clear and comprehensive Medical Guide for the Use of the Clergy, Pamilies, and Invalids.

By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D. &c.

"We conscientiously recommend it. We shall preserve the volume as the advice of an invaluable friend, to which we can refer in the hour of need, without any doubt of being benefited by its wisdom."—Literary Chronicie.
"In the opinion of a respectable physician, well known in our connexion, it is enriched with much of all that modern practice has ascertained to be valuable, and is not only incomparably superior to Buchan's, but also to every similar work in our language."
"It is altogether deserving of permaneni popularity."—London Weskly Review.
"It is one of the very yeast and most useful books published in modern times."—Southly Olfs.

Published by Simpkin and Marshall, London; seld by all Booksellers.

Also, by the same Author, 2d edition, revised and enlarged, price 8s. 6d.

2. A Treatise on Indigestion; illustrating the Symptoms, Varieties, Causes, and correct Treatment of the prevailing Disorders of the Stomach and Liver; with Practical Observations on some Painful Complaints originating in those disorders, as Tio Douloureux, Gout, Fulness of Blood in the Head, &c.

tiend, &c.

"We sincerely recommend it."—London Medical Journal.

"It is very evidently the result of close attention to, and deep experience in the subject. Mr. Abernethy speaks of it in terms of high praise."—British Magazine, Jan. 1890.

THE UNITED SERVICE JOURNAL

THE UNITED SERVICE JOURNAL for June contains—
Consolations of an Optimist—A Narrative of the Warfare in the Western Islands, up to the Assembling of the present Expeditions, by an Eye witness—Sketches of the War of the French in Spain, in the Year 1832. By a Royalist. No. 9—The Prize Repaired; an Incident of the last American War-Reminiscences of a Subaltern, No. 10—Villa Velha; a Peninsular Reminiscence—Skyranecti, from the unpublished MS. of a Traveller—An Officer's Affidavit—Capt. Bayisaid's Sarvey of the St. Lawrence—Memoirs of the Services of the late Una Alexander Campbell; of the late Major-Gen. Thomas Hayes; and of the late Lieut-Gen. John Hughes—On the Out-pent Dutles of Cavalry, St. Lieut-Cel. Lovell Badcock—Frojects for Marine Railways scross the Islamou of Pansana, and in the Prilab Possessions in North Assay on Tactice—The Siege of Acre, and Military—Foreign Miscellany—General Correspondence—Editor's Fortfolio—Examination at Sandhurst—Parilamentary Proceedings connected with the Navy and Army—Promotions and Appointments—Births, Marriages, Obiteary, &c. &c.

Pablished by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

6th edition, in 8vo. 4s. 6d. boards DDRESS from a CLERGYMAN to his Parishioners. With Morning and Evening

Frayers.

By the Rev. R. VALPY, D.D. F.R.S. &c.

Costenia.

Of Ged—Son of God—Holy Ghost—Trinity—Read the Scriptures—Incarnation of Jesus Christ—Doctrines of Jesus Christ—Resurrection—Redemption—Justification—Paith—Works—Works without Faith—Faith without Works—Unjon of Faith and Works—Merti and Reward—Humility—Influence of the holy Spirit—Repentance—Regeneration, Renewal, Conversion—Delay of Conversion—Our Endeavours—Predestination, Free Will—Of Prayer—Fabilic Worship—Family Prayer—Sacrament of the Lord's Supper—Forgiveness of Injuries—Veneration to the Name of God—Healaity Duites—Exhortation to Piety—Prespect in Life—Use of Time—Death.

Printed and sold by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and may be had of all Booksellers.

2 A smaler edition is printed for family distribution, of which not less than Twelve copies can be had, price $2.64. each.

Baglish Translations of the Classics.

With a biographical Sketch, a Portrait of each Author, Notes, Maps, dc. small Syc. 4s. 6d. each Vol. bound in cloth, VALPY'S FAMILY CLASSICAL LIBRARY; or, English Translations of the most valuable Greek and Latin Classics. No. 20, published June 1st, contains Hesiod, Bion and Moschus, Lycophron, with a Portrait of Hesiod.

thins frestoo, from the management of the Hesiod.

"If you desire your son, though no great scholar, to read and reflect, it is your duty to place into his hands the best translations of the best classical authers."—Dr. Perr.

The Numbers already published contain the following Authors, which may be purchased separately:

which may be purchased separately:

1. Demoethenes
2. Completion of ditto, and Sallata
8 and 4. Xenophon's Anabasis and Orropedia and Orropedia 5 to 7. Herodotus
5 to 7. Herodotus
8 and 9. Virgil 30. Pladar, with Anacron 50. See 11 contain Company Compan

10. Findar, with Anacron

Nos. 31 and 32 will contain Cenar's Commentaries.

Roch Volume averages 350 pages, and is delivered monthly, with the Magazines, on application to any Bookseller.

"From a carrful examination of the volumes new before the public, we do not hesitate to declare our conviction that a mere important or a more laterateing accession than this library to our entrous or well-arranged plan has been proposed, before this time, for placing the treasures of the classic writers in the hands of readers who are unacquainted with the original languages in which they wrote. How easily such a plan could be accomplished—how admirably it could be executed—with what well-founded assurance it might be undertaken, of producing good of every kind—solid instruction with the most ennobling delight—the Wolames before us are at once the example and the proof."—

Monthly Review.

Edited, printed, and published by A. J. Yalpy, M.A. Red Lion

Edited, printed, and published by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

Published by Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. London; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh; and David Robertson, Glasgow. Price 7e. 6d. in cloth, COTTISH PROVERBS, collected and arranged

By ANDREW HENDERSON, Esq.
Member of the Dilettants Society, Glasgow. an Historical and Philosophical Introductory Essay on Member of the Dilettants Society, Glasgow. With an Historical and Philosophical Introductory Resay on Proverbe in general.

By WILLIAM MOTHERWELL, Esq.
Editor of the Glasgow Courier, and Author of "Minetralsy, Editor of the Glasgow Courier, and Author of "Minetralsy, activated more notice than the volume of Scottish Proverbe put forth by Mr. Andrew Henderson."—The Day.

"Mr. Henderson has given to the public a book both amusing and instructive, such as ought "The Scottish Guardian."

"Mr. Henderson's arrangement is new, and we think judicious."—The Broughem.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE. The June Number of this popular Periodical contains about twenty Original Papers by the most Distinguished Witters of the June Number and Article on the Life and Genius of Goethe, accompanied with a Portrait of that eminent man.

Opinions of the Public Press.

Opinions of the Public Press.

"This periodical is decidedly improved under the new super-intendence of Mr. E. L. Bulwer."—Dublis Observer.

"The New Monthly Magazine exhibits potent proofs of the spirit which now presides over its arrangements."—Windoor Exvest.

spirit which now pressures over its arrangements.

"The talent employed upon this excellent periodical cannot fail to make a due impression upon the reading public: it is great, and, what is better, predicted increase with such acceptance."—"The attention Number. If to deserve success be to obtain it, the New Monthly will soon be (if it is not at present) at the head of the periodical of the day."—Sheffield Mercury.

"The new year's Number of the New Monthly is weethy of its gifted editor, whose well-known talents afford the best possible guarantee of continued and sustained excellence."—Estaburgh Charrow.

guarantee of continuou and Bentley, and supplied by Published by Colburn and Bentley, and supplied by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

In 1 vol. 24mo. illustrated by Wood Engravings from Designs by Flaxman and Stothard, Designs by Flaxman and Stothard, RGLISH SONGS, and other small

Peems.

Poems.

By BARRY CORNWALL.

1. Selections from Southey, Verse, 12mo. 5s.

2. Selections from Southey, Prose, 12mo. 5s.

3. Selections from Wordsworth, 12mo. 5s. Edward Mozen, 64, New Bond Street.

A LITERARY CURIOSITY!

Being one of the m most singular productions of the two last centuries, on which have been employed, regardless of expense, apwards 30,000 volumes of rare and curious Works, by the most eminent writers of all ages and countries. Yesterday was published, in 2 vols. 8vo. handsomely half-bound in morocco, with gilt edges,

The Anniversary Calendar, Natal Book, and Universal Mirror.

Intended, principally, as a literary "Birth-day Present."

CRITICAL NOTICES.

"A work of extraordinary research and ability, and of such great utility (as a work of reference), that we are sure it must see find its way into every library and reading-room in the country. The Index is a perfect curious,"—Houthly Review.

"A valuable work of reference, containing much information, of a rare and interesting description."—Examiner.

"It is admirably calculated to be placed on the public table of a drawing room or library."—Athensum.

• For other testimonies in favour of this unique publication, see the Daily and Weekly Press, Magazines, &c. Detailed Prospectuses of the Work may be had of the Publisher, William Kidd, 228, Regent Street.

WAVERLEY NOVELS.—New Edition.
Published this day, price &c. the Thirty-seventh Volume of this Work.
It contains "The Betrothed," being the First of the Tales of the Crusaders, with an Introduction and Notes by the Author, and beautifully Illustrated by Edwin Landseer and A. Fraser.
Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker and Co. London.

Of whom may be had,

1. The Eighteenth Vol. of the New Issue of the Waverley Novels, which commences the Monastery, price 5s.

All the early Volumes of both issues may be had from

2. Captain Basil Hall's Naval Life and Early rages. First and Second Series. 2d edition, 6 vois. 30s. with Voyages. Pirst and Second Series. 3a equium, v vos. engraved Titles.

S. Capt. Basil Hall's Travels in North Ame-vice, in 1887 and 1828. 3d edition, 3 vois. 11. 11s. 6d.; Plates separately, 10s. 6d.

4. Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather. First, Second, and Third Series. New editions, 10s. 6d. each. Also, History of France, 3 vols. 10s. 6d.

5. Destiny. By the Author of " Marriage."

6. Marriage. 3 vols. 3d edition, 11. 1s.

7. The Inheritance. 3 vols. 2d edition, 8. The Cook's Oracle. A new edition,

7. 6d.

Of this popular work upwards of 60,000 copies have been sold.

9. Mrs. Dalgairns' Cookery. A new edit. being the third. 7s. 6d.

Few works of this description have so speedily attained popularity, three editions having been called for in little more than two years.

New Books,
Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street. SIR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PER-SONAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES. The Third and concluding Volume. 8vo. Nearly ready.

11.

Memoirs of Sir James Campbell, of Ardking-las, (formerly Sir James Callander). Written by Himself. In 9 vols. 870. with a Portrait, 24s. "Sir James Campbell is the father of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan. He served during the greater part of the Seven Years' War in fermany as Aide-de-camp to General Mostyn-visited most of the German Couts-had familiar the Visited most of the German Couts-had familiar the James of the Seven virre, the 'Pandemonium,' &c.—held the post of Secretary to the British Embassy at Paris on the eve of the Revolution-journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Pa-risian society during the Allied occupation of France."—Globe.

The Ex-Quera of Holland.

In 1 vol. price 26s. bound,

Mémoires, Romances, et Musique, de Hortense. Duchesse de Saint Lea, Ex-Reine de Hollande; embellished with Twelve Plates of the Scene of the various Romances, beautifully engraved on Steel, from the original Designs of the Duchess; her Memoir, Fortrait, and Fac-aimile.

N.B. As a very few copies of this unique and interesting publication have been printed, those who desire to possess it are requested to send their orders forthwith to their respective Book or Music-seilers.

In 2 vols. 4to. with 31 Views, Plans of Towns, Harbours, &c.

BRITISH DOMINIONS in NORTH America; or, a Topographical and Statistical Description of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nors Scotis, New Youndland, Prince Edward Island, and Cape Breton; with Considerations on Land Granting and Emigration, Statistical Tables, &c. By J. BOUCHETTE, Eaq.

Surveyor-General of Lower Canada, Lieut.-Colonel C.M. &c. London: Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

Topographical Dictionary of Lower Canada,
4to. 1t. 8t. boards.

Mans of the Dictionary

Maps of the Districts of Quebec and Three Rivers, of the District of Montreal, and of Upper and Lower Canada, 20s. each, in Sheets; the Set, 4t. 10s.

Turner's Secred History of the World.
In 8vo. 3d edition, 14s. beards,
THE SACRED HISTORY of the WORLD, from the Creation to the Deluge; attempted to be philosophically considered, in a Series of Letters to a Son.
By SHABON TURNER, P. S.A. and R.A.S.L.
London: I segman, Rees, Otme, Brown, Green, and Co.

SALMONIA; or, Days of Fly-fishing.
By SIR HUMPHRY DAYY.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

By the same Author, printed uniformly with the above, Consolations in Travel; or, the Last Days of a Philosopher, price 6s.

4th edition, comprising the recently created Peers and Baronets, in 2 vols. dedicated, by permission, to His Majesty,

BURKE'S GENERAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE

DURKE'S GENERAL and HERALDIC

DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE of the BRITISH EMPHRE

This New Edition of Mr. Ilurke's popular work, in addition to comprising, exclusively, the whole Hereditary Rank of England, Ireland, and Soutand, exceeding Fifteen every individual interland information is now considerably more copious than that of any similar work hitherto published. The Lines of Decent have likewise been greatly enlarged, and numerous historical and biographical anecdotes, together with several curious and rare papers, have been supplied. The Perenges under discussion in the House of Lords (a new feature in such a work) are minutely detailed, and the claims upon which the respective petition rs to Parliament pray the restoration of suspended honours, are fully explained. To these is annexed a Genealogical Stetio of the illustrious House of Guelph. The Armorial Enalgus have been re-engravel, upon a plan of incorporation with the Letterpress; so that the existing state of each family, with its lineage and arms, will be found all together. Amongst the illustrations is a fine head of his present Majesty, from Sir Thomas Lawrence's celebrated drawing, engraved, by permission, exclusively for this work.

Printed for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street. for this work.

Printed for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

A 2d edition will be published in 1 vol. 8vo. early ne

Recollection will be published in 1 vol. 8vo. early next week, RECOLLECTIONS of MIRABEAU.

"This work is remarkable for justness of thinking and force of language, and abounds with the most interesting and important details."—Times.

"It is one of the most entertaining works of the present century."—Conview.

tury."—Conrier.
"The most amusing and instructive volume that has lately been published. It must undoubtedly take its place amongst the most valuable records."—Quarterly Review.

The Geographical Annual, 1832. Containing 100 Steel Engravings, price, plain, 18s.; finely coloured, $1s. A new issue of 1000 Copies has just taken place.

The Romance of History. The New edition, uniform with the Waverley Novels, is now ready of the Four Series, namely, England, France, Italy, and Spain, at only do. per vol. neatly bound. To be had in complete Sets, or separate Series.

IV. Lives of the Italian Poets. By the Rev.
Henry Stebbing. 2d edition, with numerous Additions, including the Life of the celebrated Ugo Poscolo. 8 rols.
Printed for Edward Buil, New Public Subscription Library, 26, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

THE FIRST BATCH; being Useful
Hints to Radical Reformers how to choose their New Representatives. A Shandyan Pamphlet.
To be had of R. J. Kensfett, Great Queen Street.

Price 11. 8s. boards, and 11. 10s. in silk, illustrated by 55 Vignettes, (26 of which are Landscapes, by Turner),

T A L Y. A Poem.

By SAMUEL ROGERS, E44.

1. The Hunchback. By J. S. Knowles.

th edition, 4s. sewed.
2. The Population Returns of 1831. By J. Rickman, Esq. 10s. cloth.
3. The Maid of Elvar. By Allan Cunningham. 6s. boards. E. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

Price 2s. 6d. bound, cloth extra,

THE VILLAGE POOR - HOUSE.

By a COUNTRY CURATE.

This unpresending little volume deserves a place with Goldsmith's pathetic 'Deserted Village.' It is calculated, perhaps, to be off more real service to the peor than nat justly celebrates, to be off more real service to the peor than nat justly celebrates, are true pictures of the actual state of society in too many party are true pictures of the actual state of society in too many party of this island. Most heartily do we recommend 'the Village Poor-House' to the perusal of the public at large, as a humane, enlightened, and highly poetical production."—Dispetch.

Bmith, Eider, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

In feelscap 8vc. price 7s.

IVES of VASCO NUNEZ DE BALBOA and FRANCISCO PIZARRO. From the Spenish of Don Manuel Josef Quintana.
By Mrs. HODBON,
Author of "Wallace," "The Past," &c.
Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and
T. Cadell, Strand, London.

POLITICAL REFLECTIONS on the PRESENT CRISIS. Addressed to the Author of in Anonymous Work, entitled History of the Restoration, by "Listommed Elett" Translated from the French of Frince Peter.

Printed for W. Blackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cedell, Strand, London.

A THREE MONTHS' TOUR in SWIT
ZERLAND and PRANCE, illustrated by a Map of the Routes to Chamouni, the Bernese Alps, &c. &c. and with Plates descriptive of Moantain Scenery.

By the Rev. WILLIAM LIDDIARD, Author of the "Legend of Einsidlin, a Tale of Switzerland." Smith, Eider, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Family Library.
On the 15th of June will be published, with Engravings, 5. THE TRIAL of CHARLES the FIRST, and of some of the Regicides; with Biographics of Bradshaw, Ireton, Harrison, &c. and with illustrative Notes, Legal and Historical: forming No. XXXI. of the Family Library.

On the sd of July will be published, No. XXXII. being the Second and last Vol. of the History of Venice.

On the lat of August will be published,
No. XXXIII. being Letters on Natural
Magic, by Sir David Brewster.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

In a few days will be published, in a neat pocket volume, cloth boards.

CONSPECTUS of BUTTERFLIES A CONSPECTUS of BUTTERFLIES and MOTHS, with Descriptions of all the Species found in Britain, their English and Scientific Names, the pecular Foods, Habitats, &c. of their Caterpillars, and the Times of their Appearance.

By J. RENNIE, M.A.
Professor of Zoology, King's College, Londo

Professor of Loology, King's College, London.
Also will appear at the same time, uniform with the above, and by the same Author, Alphabet of Insects, for the Use of Beginners; forming the first of a Series of Scientific Alphabets.

* "This little book is intended for these who are desirous of beginning the delightful study of Insects, or who, having begup, find the property of the tendency of the want of a plain sat short outline from of the leading object, and any of the leading objects of the want of a plain sat short outline for proceed."—Author? Profes. Inquiry, by way of basis on which to proceed."—Author? Profes. The Condon: W. S. Orr, Paternooter Row.

Of whom may be had,
Montagu's Ornithological Dictionary. By Professor Rennie. Price One Guines, cloth boards.

New Work by the Author of "The Spy," &c.
Just ready for publication, by Henry Colburn and Richard
Bentley, New Burlington Street.
In 8 vols. post 8 vo.

ENRY MASTERTON; or, the Young Cavaller.

By the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c.

The Baron of Hartenberg; or, the Heidenmaner. By the Author of the "Spy," &c. 3 vols.

ш. The Private Correspondence of a Woman Pashion. 8 vois.

The Third and Fourth Volumes, in 8vo. of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Juest, (Duchess of Abrantes). Comprising the entire Four Volumes of the Paris edition, and forming the Completion of this Work.

The Highland Smuggler. By J. B. Fraser, Esq. Author of the "Kuzzilbath." 3 vols.

The East Indian Sketch-Book. By a Lady.

Fortune Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life. By the Author of "First Love." a vols. VIII.

Froiseart and his Times. By the late Barry St. Ledger, Req. 3 vols.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OPPICE, 7, Wellington Street, Westerion Bridge, Stread, and 18, South Moulton Street, Opi-Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 26, Royal Exchange: S. Marilorough, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Rill: A. Bistic Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinse and Co. Glasgow: and J. Comming, Dublis.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Squore, London.

J. MOYES, 90, Castle Street, Lelcester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 804.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

A Grammar of the Turkish Language: with a Preliminary Discourse on the Language and Literature of the Turkish Nations; a copious Vocabulary; Dialogues; a Collection of Extracts, in Prose and Verse; and Lithographed Specimens of various Ancient and Modern Manuscripts. By Arthur Lumley Davids, Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, &c. &c. Pp. 208. London, 1832. Parbury and Allen; and John Taylor.

WE are informed that the author of this volume has not yet completed his twenty-first year: and, if we were disposed to think very highly indeed of the learning and research which it displays, even had they marked the labour of gray hairs, how much more must we prize and estimate them when we learn that the extraordinary effort proceeds from the verge of boyhood? In a philological point of view, a Turkish Grammar was a great desideratum in our language; but the author has largely increased the obligation by a very able Preliminary Discourse, in which he traces the national history of the Mogol and Tatar tribes, the introduction of their letters, and the progress of their literature. To accomplish this task, he has consulted the best writers of every age, and tongue, and country; and produced, in our opinion, as interesting a work of its class as our libraries can boast - a work replete with intelligence, deformed by no hypotheses or theories, sensible, clear, acute, and, though on a dry subject, exceedingly entertaining.

It so happens that we must consider and exhibit it chiefly in the latter point of view, leaving its grammatical and more recondite instruction to be gathered from its own pages; for, with all Mr. Moyes's excellent typography, we fancy the Ouigour, Jagataian, Kaptchak, and other characters, would puzzle him in composition, and perhaps defer the appearance of our pages over the usual period of publica-tion. We must therefore be content to do what we can, and consign the impossible to abler critics; and we really know some who pretend they can do every thing. Let them take the Kaoudat-kou-bilik, the Texkere's Evlia, or even the more common Osmanli (very like Scotch !), Adgaib al Makhlukat!!

Mr. Davids sets out, after dedicating his book, by permission, to his Sublime Highness Sultan Mahmoud Khan, the Tartar or Tatar name of the Turkish race; from Tatar, a prince and brother of Mongol, or from Tatar, a river; the latter of which we should doubt, since rivers are more likely to derive their names from men or circumstances than to give their names to tribes who inhabit their banks. Be this as it may, however, this nation, the most interesting which has issued from Central Asia. may be denominated, from first to last, and under all its varieties, as Turki, or Turks.

"They present to us (as is finely remarked) materials for the study of the human race.

view them passing through the various gradations which mark the progressive advancement of mankind, until arriving at the highest degree of civilisation that the Asiatic race has ever attained. While the accomplished Osmanlis are making rapid strides towards rivalling the most learned and polished of the European states, their wandering brethren in the farthest north, whose language is the only proof of their relationship, are plunged in the depths of primitive ignorance and barbarism; and these form the two extremities of that extended chain of society and civilisation, of which the connecting links are regularly formed by the various intermediate nations of Turkish origin. The Scythians of antiquity, the Tartars and Turks of later ages, they have influenced the destinies of half the globe. Overturning empires, founding kingdoms, they possessed themselves of some of the fairest regions of the earth. Bending beneath the rushing tide of conquest, the empire of China laid its tribute at their feet. Italy, Germany, France, and all the countries of northern Europe, felt their power. The thrones of Persia, India, Syria, Egypt, and Arabia, were theirs. The dominion of the Khalifs was crushed beneath their feet: and the ruins of the eastern empire formed the foundation of a powerful kingdom, which all the united strength of Christendom could not subvert, and which still maintains a great political consequence in the eyes of modern Europe. But the possession of those arts which do not elevate the man above the brute creation would entitle them to little of our attention. The beasts of the desert might equally have effected the destruction of mankind; and it is only when we view them cultivating the arts of peace, encouraging and protecting literature, and making advances in science and learning, that we discover an object worthy of our contemplation."

We will not enter upon their traditions, or assert that Turk, their great progenitor, was the son of Japhet, thence called by the early Mohammedan writers Abou'l Tûrk, the father of Turk, and the brother of Tchin, the ancestor of the Chinese; -we will not inquire whether they really sprung from a wolf, two trees, or two rivers; but come down at once to (quære) authentic history :-"The fourth in descent from Turk was Alingeh Khan. In his reign, the nation for-got the faith of their ancestors, which is represented as a pure Theism, and became idolaters. He had two sons, Tatar and Mongol; and it is from these princes that the tribes which they governed took their names. From Alingeh Khan until the eighth descendant of Turk, we read of nothing very remarkable; but the birth of Oghuz, which is fixed at 2824 B.C., seems to be the commencement of the national traditions of the Turks. The birth of this illustrious descendant of Turk was preceded by the most astonishing prodigies. At the age of one year, when Kara Khan, his father, was about to give him a name, in the presence of the chief declaring aloud that his name was Oghuz. In his cradle he was a believer in the Unity of the Deity; and refused to receive the nourishment of his mother until she had professed the same faith. Kara Khan, infuriated that his son should renounce his idols and worship an Invisible Being, gave orders that he should be surrounded and taken prisoner while hunting. Oghuz received information of his father's intentions; and some of his friends having come very opportunely to his assistance, Kara Khan was overthrown and killed by an arrow. These friends, from the timely assistance they afforded him, Oghus named Igour or Ouigour, signifying 'auxiliaries' or 'assistants.'"

Other circumstances led him to give names to other parties; and these have descended as the appellations of countries and their inhabitants through succeeding centuries, which it is unnecessary for us to trace. The following reminds us of Rasselas :-

" In the reign of the thirteenth descendant of Turk, the kingdom was entirely destroyed. The son and nephew of the prince, with the remnant of their people, escaped from the fury of their enemies, and fled for safety into the most inaccessible fastnesses, the wild goats acting as their guides. Having, with the greatest difficulty, succeeded in gaining the summit of the mountains, they discovered an immense valley, abounding in fertility, but only accessible by a very narrow defile or rawine, through which a man could scarcely pass. Tempted by the security this valley offered. the princes there made a settlement; and one by one their followers entered the defile. In the space of 450 years, during which the Turks remained in this valley, they became a great people: its limits were no longer equal to their subsistence or ambition. Determined on quitting their retreat, they attempted to pass their bar-riers; but the same impracticable rocks which denied access to their enemies from without, equally precluded egress from within. ravine by which they entered had been closed by some convulsion of nature : it was no longer visible, and all attempts to overcome the difficulty which opposed their passage proved fruitless. By some accident, however, it was at length discovered that the mountains in a certain part were of little thickness, and formed principally of iron ore. A daring spirit conceived the idea of procuring an opening by means of fire: innumerable bellows adding fury to a pile of blazing wood and fuel, accomplished his design, and a crown rewarded his advice. Under Bertezena, their new chief, the Turks sallied forth from their valley; and the neighbouring kingdoms were not long in ignorance of their existence and power."

How curiously does the ancient mythology of all the nations blend! "One of the most interesting relics of the ancient Turks is the Tchagh, or Cycle of Twelve Animals, of which either the Ouigours or a kindred nation - the Kirghis-were the inventors. This cycle was composed of the names of twelve animals; Emerging from a primitive state of society, we men of his kingdom, he anticipated him by which have been preserved by Uloug Beg, a descendant of Timour, who lived in the fifteenth century. They are as follow:

The Mouse.
The Ox.
The Leopard.
The Hare.
The Dragon.
The Serpent.
The Horse. Kesku, Ot, Bars, Taushkan, Loui, Yilan, Yunua, Kui, Pitchin, Dakouk, or The Fowl-The Dog-Yunud, The Lamb. The Ape. The Dog. It, Tonghouz,

The Chinese, the Mongols, the Tibetians, the Japanese, the Persians, and the Mandshus, have all adopted this famous cycle; and, in translating the names into their own languages, have carefully preserved the order of the animals. To these animals not only are the years of the cycle regularly appropriated, but each day, and even the hours, have some of their characteristic attributes, real or fictitious, assigned to them. With the assistance of this cycle we are enabled to discover and correct errors in the chronology of the eastern nations.

"The language of the Turkish race, which is at present spread over so extensive a portion of the earth, is spoken by nations, for the most part, independent of each other, of very different grades in the scale of civilisation, and whose relations with surrounding people have differed according to their relative positions. The Turkish language, acted upon by such varieties of situation, at present consists of ten divisions or dialects—the Ouigour, the Jaghataian, the Kaptchak, the Kirghis, the Turcoman, the Caucaso-Danubian, the Austro-Siberian, the Yakoute, the Tchouvache, and the Osmanli. These divisions of the Turkish language comprise all the dialects which are at present known to exist; and one or other of these is spoken by almost every nation between the Mediterranean and the frontier of Chinabetween the utmost extremity of Siberia and the borders of India. In Egypt, in the states of Barbary, in the Levant, at the court of Tehran, and in the northern and western provinces of Persia, the Turkish is the ruling language. In the widely-extended dominions of the Sultan, throughout the greater part of Tatary, and the extent of Siberia, the Turkish language, in one or other of its dialectical variations, is the mother tongue of the inhabitants; and whether the relations of diplomacy, the transactions of commerce, or the inquiring eye of science, prompt our intercourse with these countries, a valuable and almost indispensable requisite is a knowledge of the Turkish language. The dialect of the Turkish called Ouigour may be considered as the most learned of the ancient Turkish idioms; and being the language of a people who possessed the art of writing from an ancient period, and who early cultivated literature, it presents an interesting object, in examining the language and literature of the Turkish race. The Ouigour is still the language of the inhabitants of the countries between Kashgar and Kamoul; and the learned M. Klaproth has given a vocabulary of eighty-seven words, which he obtained from the mouth of a native of Tourfan, whose mother tongue was the Ouigour. differences existing between the Ouigour dialect and that of the Osmanli are, for the most part, such as the relative situation of the two people would lead us to expect.

"Of the Ouigour MSS. at present existing, the Bodleian may boast of the possession of one; the Bibliothèque du Roi contains two; and a ceiving that it was the code of laws of Tchingis Khan. Sir William Jones was equally missubject. M. Langles came nearer the truth, when he stated the characters to be similar to the Mongol; but erred, in imagining he re-cognised, in the formula which is prefixed to Mandshu languages. The MS. which has given rise to these various conjectures is, in fact, Ouigour, both in characters and language; and the specimen given by Hyde consists of the formula with which Mohammedan works usually commence, the title of the book, the division of the work into ten parts, and an account of the contents of each as far as the sixth. The words written on the margin are 'Bakhtiar Nameh,' the title. The writing of this MS is perhaps the most beautiful we possess. It consists of 294 pages in folio; and the characters and proper names are written in red. The style is simple and unaffected, but perfectly destitute of ornament; and the frequent tautological repetitions and pleonasms with which it abounds, shew that exactitude of expression was more the aim of the author than elegance of composition. The subject of the Bakhtiar Nameh is well known from the Persian version: the events are probable, and well contrived; and, as a work of fiction, after the model of the East, it is not often surpassed. But though this may give it no claim to a great attention at the hands of the learned, yet to the philologist, as a specimen of a little-known language, it is far from being destitute of interest.—The MS. of the Bibliothèque du Roi is a folio, consisting of 231 leaves, beautifully written in Ouigour characters, and contains two works on the subject of Mohammedan Theology—the Miradg, or History of the Ascension of Mohammed; and the Tezkere'i Evlia, the Legends of the Mussulmen Saints. The date of the transcription of these MSS. is A.H. 840 (1436 A.D.); and they are probably some of the earliest literary efforts of the new converts in their adopted faith. Neither of these works can be considered as of great interest, except in a philological point of view. They offer no specimen of the literature of the Ouigours themselves; as the transcriber tells us, in his preface, that the Miradg is a translation from the Arabic, and the Teskere'i Evlia from the Persian. The grammatical principles of the Ouigour in these works are, however, unchanged, and present the same simple dialect to which we have before alluded.-The MS. of the Kaoudat-kou-bilik, or 'Science of Go-vernment,' sent by Von Hammer of Paris, is of very superior interest to any of the pre-ceding. As a specimen of the original litera-ture of its age, this work is most curious. From a passage which is found in the manuscript, it appears that this work was composed about A.D. 1069; corresponding to the beginning of that bright period when the Seljukians were masters of Iran, and Alp Arslan was seated on the throne. Its transcription is dated A.H. 843, corresponding to the year 1459 of the Christian era."

The account of the more polished literature third was sent from Vienna to Paris, about the of the Osmanli is equally interesting; and we that those who among the chiefs of the empire year 1823, by that learned Orientalist, Von select a translated specimen of it from the who agreed with Khalil Pasha sought to per-

The MS. of the Bodleian appears | Tadg al Tavarikh (Diadem of Histories), of to be the most ancient of these. The date of the transcription is A. H. 638, answering to of Murad III., and the prince of Ottoman 1434 A.D. It was from this MS. that Hyde gave an engraved specimen, consisting of the faithful and elegant account of the Turks, first page; which he misnamed Khitaian, con- from their earliest epochs down to the year A.D. 1526, the end of the reign of Selim II. The style of Saadeddin is considered among the taken in regard to this MS.; the writing of most beautiful specimens of Turkish prose; which he stated to be evidently a bad Cufic; and the narrations of events, and the reflections and the work a Mendean one, on some religious of the author, are given with a fidelity and justice that are astonishing, in a country where the freedom of the pen would be supposed to be but little tolerated. This, however, is a feature common to many of the Ottoman annalist, the work, words belonging to the Mongol and some of whose comments on the acts of government hardly seem the birth of subjects of despotism. The Tadg al Tavarikh forms the commencement of the national annals of the Osmanlis; and it is rather surprising that it should not have been chosen as the first of that series of public historians which has issued from the imperial press of Constantinople; and it is to be hoped that it will not long be suffered to remain in manuscript.

"The following is his account of that interesting event, the siege of Constantinople. After relating the unsuccessful negotiation between Palseologus and the sultan, he thus proceeds:—'The besiegers and the besieged pursued their labours; they were under arms from break of day until the sun, the golden-winged bird of heaven, ceased to be visible in the terrace of the horizon. At length the Modens placed their cannon, of which we before spoke, in an effectual position, and threw up their entrenchments. It was to the Arabs and janissaries that the sultan confided this work The gates and ramparts of Constantinople soon became like the heart of an unfortunate loverthey were pierced in a thousand places. flames which issued from the mouths of these instruments of warfare, of brazen bodies and fiery jaws, cast grief and dismay among the miscreants. The smoke, which spread itself in the air and ascended towards the heavens. rendered the brightness of day sombre as night; and the face of the world soon became as dark as the black fortune of the unhappy infidels. In liberating the arrows like ambassadors from the bows, the enemies, without guardian angels, were made to hear the information conveyed by the sentence of the Koran, 'Wheresoever ye be, death will overtake you.' The balistas incessantly projected stones towards the rash defenders of the towers and walls, who experienced the effects of the menaces in the holy book: 'You shall beat them with stones, which contain the sentence of those they reach They were sent to the profundity of hell, to confirm the decree of the Judge of the Tribunal of Fate. Nevertheless, the bullets of stone from the artillery of the infidels overturned the bulwarks of the existence of numerous Moslems, and the field of battle was filled with martyrs. Two great vessels, whose elevated masts towered toward the heavens, came on the part of the Franks, full of artifice, and worthy of hell-fire, to bring succour to the Greeks. The miscreants who were on board these vessels threw themselves into the place, and strove to fill up the gaps and breaches with which the fortifications were covered, and to repulse the warriors of the faith. The besieged, confident in this passing success, like a tortoise who quits his shell, shewed their heads beyond the ramparts, applying themselves to vociferating reproaches on the Moslems. It was then sity of making peace and departing; but this hero, who had a natural aversion to timid and indiscreet counsels, disdained the perfidious advice of these men who taught evil. With firm foot in the place of combat, the Moslems, according to the advice of the faithful Ulemas and Sheiks, continued to precipitate into the pit of death great numbers of the rebels against heaven who defended the place. The Doctor Ahmed Kurani, the Sheik Ak Shemseddin, and the Vizir Zagtus Pasha, who partook of the sentiments of the sultan, opposed peace and conciliatory measures; saying, that to withdraw their hand from the lappet of the robe of Victory would not be fulfilling the resolutions they had made; and relating to the troops the promise of the prophet_' Greece shall be conquered'-pointed out to them how necessary it was to use all their efforts to verify his sentence.

The greatest combat is that which will take place at the conquest of Constantinople;' and the Moslams, prepared to abandon life in the sight of religion, night and day illumined the field of battle with the lightning of their swords; yet the Beauty, enchantress of victory, did not display her radiant countenance. The prudent monarch assembled the chief of his warriors, and thus addressed them : _ ' This side of the place is rendered impregnable by the depth of the fosse, strengthened by every possible means of defence : we cannot, without excessive loss, cross this fosse; and the courier of thoughts cannot even surmount the solid ramparts beyond. The walls encircle the city on three sides: if we only attack it at a single point, we shall have great difficulty in conquering; besides, victory would cause the destruction of a great part of our people: we must therefore find some means of attacking the place by sea.' An immense chain was extended across the strait which separated Constantinople from Galata, which rendered the passage of vessels through it impossible. find an expedient against this, the chiefs in vain made the coursers of thought traverse the desert of reflection; till at length the conquering King of the World conceived the design of drawing the vessels of the Moslems from the for tress which had been built, and to bring them as far as the port behind Galata. Although the execution of this project must be put among the number of things almost too difficult to be accomplished, yet, by Divine assistance, it was performed with ease. By the surprising skill of their best mechanics, the Moslems were enabled to draw their vessels, large as mountains, out of the sea, upon the land; and having rub-bed their keels with grease, they made them glide along the earth, through hill and vale, and launched them on the waves which bathed the ramparts of the city: they afterwards set up a bridge upon these vessels, and formed en-trenchments on them. The priests had been incessant in their endeavours to sustain the courage of the besieged, at the same time that they consoled them: 'The taking of Constantinople is impossible, said they; for the astrological predictions of our books shew that our city can never be conquered, except when a king shall make his vessels traverse the land. with sails displayed. But when this wonder was presented to their eyes, they knew that their ruin was accomplished: the words expired in their mouths, and the fire of despair gnawed their hearts. The unclean emperor having learned that the fortifications which were on the side of the sea were also attacked. was nigh losing his reason: nevertheless, he grief overcame him, and he hastened to fly nation and the fancy themselves, as to put a suade the victorious monarch of the impossibi-lity of gaining Constantinople, and the neces-applied himself to repair the walls, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other; but the Grecian soldiers not being sufficient for this purpose, he ordered the Frankish army to repair the ramparts situated to the south of the Adrianople Gate. The principal Greeks were indignant that the guarding of this place had not been confided to them, who had the greatest interest in defending it, and that it should be left to strangers. Thus discord insinuated itself among the besieged, which occasioned wrong orders to be given for the direction of these troops of error. The Osmanlis were not long in perceiving this; and, regarding their lives as merchandise of a vile price, mounted to the assault with intrepidity, by the breaches which were to the south of the Adrianople Gate. They got beyond the ramparts, when the advanceguard of darkness appeared from the western horizon; and soon the stars of night were the witnesses of the superiority of the brave Moslems. On this, the just and valiant monarch commanded his victorious army to put lanterns, or lighted tapers, on the heads of pikes and lances; and, until the planet of the fourth heaven should cast his rays upon the earth, to continue the combat, in order to give no repose to the despicable infidels, nor to allow them time to repair their breaches. According to the imperial command, the light of the flambeaux and lamps illumined the front of the city and its environs, which became like a plain covered with roses and tulips. The Moslems, in this night, united the double merit of combat and prayer. With the blood of the martyr they purified the stains of their sins. Soon the sun shone forth from the western darkness; and having put to flight the legions of stars by the arrows and darts of his rays, the crafty general of the Franks mounted the ramparts, in order to repulse the cohorts of the faith. At this moment, a young Moslem, taking the cord of firm resolution, threw himself like a spider upon the walls, and, having vigorously employed his sword like the crescent moon, at one blow sent forth the soul of the infidel from his body, like an owl from its impure nest. On beholding this, the Franks hurried themselves into the road of flight; and, like an impetuous torrent, they hastened towards the sea, to regain their ships. It was then that the Moslems, binding round them the girdle of ardour, and, like the lion in pursuit of his prey, disregarding the rain of arrows, stones, bullets, and shots continually pouring on them, crowded towards the breaches, assured that they were the gates of victory. 'The dust of the combat was raised even to the skies, and covered the vault of heaven as a veil.' The swords reposed not an instant: the darts and arrows incessantly pierced the breasts of the rebel troop. The Ottomans soon raised the standard of victory on the walls of Constantinople; and proclaimed with the free tongues of their swords, the Surats of 'Triumph,' and of 'the Ramparts.' The defence of the place slackened; and the good news expressed in the words of the Koran, 'Verily our army shall obtain victory!' gave confidence to the Mussulman troops, and filled them with holy enthusiasm. The Greek emperor, however, surrounded by his bravest soldiers, was in his palace, situate to the north of the Adrianople Gate: he sought to defend the avenues against the Moslem warriors; when suddenly he learned that those who raised the excellent standard of the holy word had gained the interior of his palace. He knew, then, that his good fortune was reversed:

from his habitation. While regretting his unhappy fate, this man, whose abode was soon to be the Shades, exclaimed, 'Where is a place of refuge?' He discovered a few of the faithful, who, full of confidence, were occupied in pillage. At this, the fire of hate filled his dark soul, and, rushing upon those unsuspecting Moslems, his scythe-like sword gathered the harvest of their lives. One poor soldier of this band, who was only wounded, bathed in the blood which poured from his wounds, and full of anguish, awaited the approach of death.

The Greek monarch, beholding this miserable man, raised his sword to take his last breath. In this moment of despair, the wretched man, aided by the Divine assistance, dragged this enemy of the faith from his saddle adorned with gold, and cast him on the dark earth, making his warlike cimeter descend upon his head. This exploit, which solaced the sufferings of the good Moslem, caused those who followed the emperor to fly. With death alone before their eyes, they fled far from the place of combat : not one remained in the field; none dared put hand to sword. In the mean time, the Moslems opened the gates of the city; and the troops, the asylum of victory, who were without, began to enter with the puissant monarch. With his permission, the fortunate troops pillaged the city three nights and three days, feeding the eye of their hopes with the sight of the Grecian beauties. That metal which is a source of misfortune to fools, which gives reputation and pre-eminence to men unknown in the world, was the portion of those who ex-changed the wares of this life for the capital of eternal existence. The third day, the heralds of the sublime court made known the will of Mohammed, absolute as destiny: this was, 'That the soldiers should cease from pillage, remaining peaceful, and doing no more injury to any one. This august command having been executed, the swords were consigned to their sheaths, and the bows to the corner of rest. By the care of the fortunate monarch, the dust of combat was allayed, the sword of war suspended, the arrows were thrown aside, and the bows were broken. By his noble efforts, the profession of the Mussulman faith, and the five-times-repeated cry of the religion of the prophet, were heard, instead of the de-testable sound of the bells. The churches of Constantinople were despoiled of the vile idols which defiled them: they were cleansed from the abominable impurities of the Christian ceremonies. The ancient customs were entirely changed; many temples and chapels of the Nazarenes, by the placing of the Mihrab and the pulpit of the faithful, rivalled the sublime Paradise. The luminous rays of Islam dispelled the dark shadows of wickedness."

With this poetical description of the siege of Constantinople we close for this week, but reserve some varieties for another No.

English Songs, and other small Poems. By Barry Cornwall. 12mo. pp. 228. London, 1832. Edward Moxon.

THE writer of the following poems has, for some years past, abandoned verse-writing, for graver and (to him) more important occupations. He has, however-influenced by motives with which he need not trouble the readerallowed some of the MSS. remaining in his portfolio to be printed. The time is not very favourable to productions of this sort; but -'Le printemps reviendra!' The days for relishing poetry can never be utterly at an end: we may as well hope to extinguish the imagifinal stop to the love which poetry (their off-spring) has so long excited. When 'the spring shall return, the author hopes that a few of these verses will find favour with the public; upon whose kindness and courtesy he throws himself, as a writer of verse, for (he believes) the last time."

Such is the introduction to a little volume full of heauty and music. Its association is with all fair things — an early violet, a sudden with all fair things—an early violet, a sudden blush, a singing bird, falling rain, and falling sunshine! as if poetry were, in sooth, but the embalming of some lovely memory. One marked and delicious characteristic of this writer is his lingering youthfulness: he has not gone on his way till all has become barren; he has not shaken from his worldly and weary feet the dust over every green place; there still is

"A spirit within him, which arrays
The things he looks upon with colourings Richer than roses." *

The charm of early years, when sympathy is so ready—for it is as yet unbent by the weight of our own sorrows—or ere hope has become all selfish-when we love the spell of "old romance," and we are alive to the beautiful, because it is in our own feelings, -such is the charm of his poetry; it belongs to that period when, to use his own exquisite words,

"Fancy, ever mother of deep truth, Breathes her dim oracles o'er the soul of youth."

Pathos, beauty, and tenderness, are the three graces that wait upon his lute. These, however, are general characteristics, for the present volume has many bold and spirited varieties. "King Death," "The Sea," "The Stormy Petrel," and "Wine," are four as fine and as varied lyrics as any that live in our consists; but to analyse is often to destroy, memory; these, however, must be familiar to and we only say, fortunate are they to whom every reader, and Neukomm's music is their some "still sweet music" is not lacking in their noble and fitting companion. We must there-later years. fore submit to choose a favourite among the following, unless we deem preference to one injustice to another.

The Return of the Admiral.

The Return of the Admiral.

"How gallantly, how merrily
We ride along the sea!
The morning is all sunshine,
The wind is blowing free:
The billows are all sparkling,
And bounding in the light,
Like creatures in whose sunny veins
The blood is running bright.
All nature knows our triumph:
Strange birds about us sweep:
Strange things come up to look at us,
The masters of the deep:
In our wake, like any servant,
Follows even the bold shark—
Oh, proud must be our Admiral
Of such a bonny barque!
Proud, proud must be our Admiral, Oh, proud must be our Admiral
Of such a bonny barque!
Proud, proud must be our Admiral,
(Though he is pale to-day,)
Of twice five hundred iron men,
Who all his nod obey;
Who've fought for him, and conquer'd—
Who've won, with sweat and gore, Nobility! which he shall have When'er he touch the shore.
Oh! would I were our Admiral,
To order, with a word,—
To lose à dozen drops of blood,
And strait rise up a lord!
I'd shout e'en to yon shark, there,
Who follows in our lee,
'Some day I'll make thee carry me,
Like lightning through the sea.'
— The Admiral grew paler,
And paler as we flew:
Still talked he to his officers,
And smiled upon his crew;
And he looked up at the heavens,
And the looked down on the sea,
And at last he spied the creature
That kept following in our lee,
He shook—'twas but an instant—
For speedily the pride
Ran crimson to his heart,
Till all chances he defied:

* Sicilian Story.

. Sicilian Story.

It threw boldness on his forehead;
Gave firmness to his breath;
And he stood like some grim warrior New risen up from death.

That night, a horrid whisper Fell on us where we lay, And we knew our old fine Admiral And we knew our old fine Admiral Was changing into clay; And we heard the wash of waters, Though nothing could we see, And a whistle and a plunge Among the billows in our lee! Till dawn we watched the body In its dead and ghastly sleep, And next evening at sunset, It was slung into the deep! And never, from that moment, Save one shudder through the sea, Saw we (or heard) the shark That had followed in our lee!"

The Wild Cherry-Tree.

"Oh, there never was yet so fair a thing,
By racing river or bubbling spring,
Nothing that ever so gaily grew
Up from the ground when the skies were blue,
Nothing so brave, nothing so free,
As thou, my wild, wild Cherry-tree. Jove! how it danced in the gusty breeze!
Jove! how it frolicked among the trees!
Dashing the pride of the poplar down,
Stripping the thorn of his hoary crown!
Oak or ash—what matter to thee?
'Twas the same to my wild, wild Cherry-tree. Never at rest, like one that's young,
Never at rest, like one that's young,
New to the winds its orms if fung,
Shaking its bright and crowned head,
Whilst I stole up for its berries red—
Beautiful berries! beautiful tree!
Hurrah, for the wild, wild Cherry-tree!

Back I fly to the days gone by,
And I see thy branches against the sky;
I see on the grass thy blossoms shed,
I see (nay, I taste) thy berries red,
And I shout—like the tempest, loud and free, Hurrah, for the wild, wild Cherry-tree!" There is to us something singularly touching in "the Little Voice," though, critics as we are, we should be puzzled to tell in what the charm

"Once there was a little Voice, Merry as the month of May, That did cry 'Rejoice! Rejoice!' Now—'tis flown away!

Sweet it was, and very clear, Chasing every thought of pain: Summer! shall I ever hear Such a voice again?

I have pondered all night long, Listening for as soft a sound; But so sweet and clear a song, Never have I found!

I would give a mine of gold, Could I hear that little Voice,— Could I, as in days of old, At a sound rejoice!"

Here is another of a different character.

The Blood Horse

The Blood Horse,

"Gamarra is a dainty steed,
Strong, black, and of a noble breed,
Full of fire, and full of bone,
With all his line of fathers known;
Fine his nose, his nostrils thin,
But blown abroad by the pride within!
His mane is like a river flowing,
And his eyes like embers glowing
In the darkness of the night,
And his pace as wift as light.
Look, how 'round his straining throat' And his pace as swift as light.

Look, how round his straining throat

Grace and shifting beauty float!

Sinewy strength is on his reins,
And the red blood gallops through his veins;
Richer, redder, never ran

Through the boasting heart of man.

He can trace his lineage higher

Than the Bourbon dare aspire,—

Douglas, Gusman, or the Guelph,
Or O' Brien's blood itself! He, who hath no peer, was born
Here, upon a red March morn:
But his famous fathers dead,
Were Arabs all, and Arab bred,
And the last of that great line,
Trod like one of a race divine!
And yet he was but friend to one,
Who fed him at the set of sun,
By some lone fountain fringed with green:
With him, a roving Bedouin,

He lived—(none else would he obey Through all the hot Arabian day)— And died untamed upon the sands Where Balkh amidst the desert stands?

And again, a variety of much fancifulness.

"I would I were the bold March wind,
The merry, boisterous, bold March wind,
Who in the violet's tender eyes
Casts a kiss, and forwards flies.
Yet, no! No slight to the O Constancy! O Constance

I would I were the soft west wind,
The wandering, sighing, soft west wind,
Who fondles round the hyacinth bells,
Then takes wing—as story tells.
Yet, no! No slight to thee'
O Constancy! O Constancy.

No; rather will I be the breeze
That blows straight on in Indian seas;
Or scents, which, in the rose's heart,
Live and love, and ne'er depart.
Love, Love, for ay to the:
O Constancy! O Constancy

We must pass over many lyrics that quite fulfil the poet's own definition.

" Song should breathe of scents and flowers; Song should like a river flow; Song should bring back scenes and hours That we loved—ah, long ago!"

though we must pause to mention one very happy epithet: he calls a falcon "the Arab of the air." Neither can we find room for a beautiful ballad, "The Fight of Ravenna;" but must proceed to some splendid dramatic fragments. Our only regret is that they should be fragments: we have not forgotten the deep and melancholy beauty of Mirandola. We should in despite of these "last pages," like to see another tragedy by the author of Maroian Colonna. We hope it will not be like his own exquisite definition of happiness, that

"Gay to-morrow of the mind Which never comes."

But now to the fragments: A Blush.

Look, look! the summer rises in her cheeks!
A blush, as hot as June, comes flooding o'er
Her too proud paleness. Burning modesty
Warms all her brow, and Beauty, quite abash
Droops her twin stars to earthward."

The Intellect strengthened by Study.

The Intellect strengthened by Study.

"A. If I do this, what further can I do?

B. Why, more than ever. Every task thou dost Brings strength and capability to act.

He who doth climb the difficult mountain's top,
Will, the next day, outstrip an idler man!

Dip thy young brain in wise men's deep discourse—
In books, which, though they daunt thy wit awhile,
Will knit thee, i' the end, with wisdom."

Nothing perfect.

Norming perfect.

Scorn not our verse, because it might soar higher. What's perfect on poor earth? Is not the bird, At whose sweet song the forests ache with love, Shorn of all beauty? Is the bittern's cry As merry as the lark's? the lark's as soft As the lost cuckoo's? Nay, the lion hath His fault; and the elephant (though sage as wisday) May grieve he lacks the velvet of the pard."

Questions to one restored from Death

"Sit down beside me,—thou who hast left so lately
The calm dark regions, for this fretful world,—
Come back to sorrow, like the unthinking bird
Who seeks once more its cage. Sit down beside me;
And tell me what dim dreams have fallen on thee,
And what blank aspects and unbodied things
Thou met'st, in thy pale march! Didst thou not see The—dead? Methinks I saw them once. Some ware there

The—dead? Methinks I saw them once. Some we there
By their own serpent passions stung to death;
Some whom too little love, or too much care,
Made white as winter; pining skeletons,
Whom hunger turned to stone; mad parents, oh!
Who watched, for aye, some little corse in vain;
A ghastly brotherhood, who hung together,
Knit firm by misery and some common wrong!

Reproof to one who has no ear.

Reproof to one who has no ear.

"L. I see small difference
'Tween one sound and its next. All seem a-kin
And run on the same feet ever.

I. Peace! Thou wan'st
One heavenly sense, and speak'st in ignorance.
Seest thou no differing shadows, which divide
The rose and poppy? 'Tis the same with sounds.
There's not a minute in the round of time,
But's hinged with different music. In that small span Between the thought and its swift utterance,—

Ere silence buds to sound,—the angels listening Hear infinite varieties of song! And they who turn the lightning-rapid spheres, Have flown an evening's journey."

An ancient Pile.

Look straight before you. Thus, as now you see it, You pile hath stood, in all its stony strength, Through centuries forgotten. Ruinous Time, The outrageous thunder, and all wasting storms Have striven to drag it down; yet, still it stands, Enduring like a truth, from age to ago."

A Princess's Dishonour.

She was a princess, but she fell; and now Her shame goes blushing through a line of kings."

One delicate touch, and we conclude :-

"A lady should not scorn
One soul that loves her, howe'er lowly it be.
Love is an offering of the whole heart, Madam,
A sacrifice of all that poor life hath;
And he who gives his "all," whate'er that be,
Gives greatly, and deserveth no one's scorn."

An interesting introduction is prefixed, written with a true feeling of poetry; and we now leave this most musical little volume to the public, which ought to be both grateful and gratified.

Fitzgeorge. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Effingham Wilson.

WE have heard of the History of England being put into verse, with only a little twisting and turning for the sake of the rhyme: further than that no tax was laid on the invention of the compiler. The work before us is constructed much on the same principle, Fitsgeorge being only the history of George IV. put into a novel. Every fact is historical (or what common Fame, that common liar, has given out as such); so that the author has had no trouble to form plot or devise incidents—these were ready to his hands in Croly's Life and Times of his late Majesty: he had only to find romance and wit. The romance is, making Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Fitzherbert, and Queen Caroline, angels of injured innocence—romantic enough, forsooth !—and the wit consists in calling Pitt Mr. Graves, Brougham Birch, and Sheridan Drury Borrowman—at least we suppose it was meant for such. As for the lovemaking scenes, they are too absurd: the lady exclaims, "Excellent man!"—the cavalier, "Most excellent woman!" Truly this is grammar rather than passion—the superlative degree doing the sentimentalest. There are some bits of dialogue, &c. whose antithesis and arrangement might have been tolerated in a moral essay some fifty years ago; but the whole book is a miserable failure, written in an ill-natured and prejudiced spirit.

proof, we subjoin a sample:—
"Presently came to him the intelligence that the Lady Louisa had claimed the title of Lady Fitzgeorge, and had sent intimation that it was her immediate intention to come over to England, and to demand the honours and immunities belonging to her rank. The person who brought this sad intelligence to Fitzgeorge was an apothecary, and had been accustomed to sights of sorrow and sounds of grief; but he said afterwards, that he had never witnessed so sad a sight as that of Fitzgeorge when he communicated this intelligence to him. He first looked red with anger, and then looked pale with fear; then nearly fainted away. Fortunately a bottle of brandy, by the merest accident in the world, happened to be standing at his side; and the judicious apothecary consiwipe it with the palm of his hand), he lifted up his eyes to the ceiling, which was very elegantly painted, and said, 'D—n it!' He did not mean to damn the ceiling or the brandy, but the return of his wife. The apothecary was so shocked at Fitzgeorge's profaneness, that he also took a glass of brandy out of mere fright, scarcely knowing what he did. When master and man were both primed, they sat down seriously to deliberate what was best to be done. 'Take another glass, doctor,' said Fitzgeorge. The doctor did so; and the Hon. Augustus (whom, by the way, we should now call Lord Fitzgeorge) did the same."

Eheu, jam satis! This is the wretched stuff

we see puffed and bepraised in the majority of the periodicals that have noticed the work since it affronted the public taste by its pretensions and stupidity. For its accuracy, it gives a dialogue between Queen Caroline and Birch her lawyer, for whom she sent to meet her on the continent - whither, it so happens, he never went.

La Coquetterie; or, Sketches of Society in France and Belgium. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. T. and W. Boone.

WE have heretofore made it a rule to avoid the dénouements of novels in our reviews, lest we might defraud our fair friends of a pleasure by anticipating the winding up of the fiction; and if we depart from our system in the present instance, it is simply because the tale can excite no interest, and the very end may as well be quoted as any other part. It runs thus :--

"At the appointed hour the brides were handed to the carriages in waiting; and, proceeding to the church, in little more than half an hour Emma was embraced by her father, and greeted by the name of de Clifford, and Rosa (pressed in the affectionate arms of her mother,) by that of Monteith. They returned home for the purpose of changing their dresses, when Rosa, again kissed and embraced by her father and mother, set off with Monteith for Baynham Abbey, and de Clifford and Emma to a villa which he had engaged for six weeks in the neighbourhood of Richmond."

Of course, this very particular book is writ-ten by a female woman. Another brief example may be given :-"I cannot say I admire that rainbow dress, or gaze d'iris, as you call it, of Miss de Clifford's,' said Monteith. 'I like nothing changeable, and a rainbow is proverbially so. should, therefore, have preferred a dress with-out that variety of colour.' 'But you know,' replied Rosa, 'time must and does change us all. Now, here you have a colour for our different ages; pink for youth, that beautifully blends itself into a lilac, which marks the quiet period of middle age, and here it again blends itself with sober green, to shew the colour most appropriate to the latter part of life, for I believe we ladies never acknowledge old age.'

From which we gather that "gaze d'iris" of piuk, lilac, and green, is of rainbow colours a discovery never made by the philosopher, who, unhappily, cannot discover one of the dent in the world, happened to be standing at his side; and the judiclous apothecary considerately and kindly urged him to drink two or three glasses, by which he was happily prevented from absolutely swooning. When he had swallowed the brandy, and smacked his lips, and wiped his mouth with the back of his hand (for he was too much of a gentleman to volumes, whose only "taking bit" is their title, which, however, indicates little of their contents; for the author has about as much idea of a coquette, as the donkey playing the lap-dog had of grace. In truth "La Coquetterie," as here depicted, without point or piquancy, is as little dangerous as possible in reality, and as little entertaining as ennui in description.

> A Proposal for the Erection of a General Record Office, Judges' Hall and Chambers, and other Buildings, on the Site of the Rolls Estate; together with some Particulars respecting the Suitors' Fund. By C. P. Cooper. 8vo. pp. 118. London, 1832. Baldwin and Cradock.

> THE laudable proposition made and enforced in this convincing essay is dedicated to Lord Dover; from which circumstance we trust we may infer that his lordship, as one of his majesty's commissioners on the public records of the kingdom, is not averse to lend the design his powerful aid and countenance. Should it be so, his acknowledged taste, as much as his high influence, will give it an impetus that may enable us to see, for once, a beneficial national undertaking carried into effect, in a way worthy of the object, and neither marred by jobbing, nor frittered away in folly.

A plan of the Rolls Estate prefixed shews us a large space of ground in Carey Street, and between the lower parts of Chancery and Fetter Lanes, which Mr. Cooper suggests might be most advantageously appropriated to this desirable purpose. He then points out the insecurity of places where records of the utmost importance are now kept, and demonstrates the expediency of having these national treasures collected and arranged under one roof, as in the Register Office at Edinburgh. Upon these points there can, indeed, be no difference of opinion; and whether for legal, or historical, or other uses, it is evident that a well-executed and well-appointed structure of this kind would be of immense value. Independent of the causes always existing to enforce the step, we are informed that there are now peculiar reasons to recommend it.

"That some general or partial measure is necessary, is now universally admitted. The commissioners of woods and forests have just given notice that the immense masses of records belonging to the King's Remembrancer's Office, and to the court of Common Pleas, now deposited in the eastern wing of the King's Mews, must be removed before Lady-day 1833; and King's College is impatient to take possession of the cellars under the eastern wing of Somerset House, in which the Pipe-rolls, the most valuable records after Domesday, have been so long suffered to moulder; and all attempts to induce the ordnance to remove the magazino for gunpowder deposited in the vaults of Casar's chapel, in which the most precious of the Chancery records are preserved, have proved abortive."+

It is not convenient for us to enter into the details of Mr. Cooper's proposal. Suffice it to say, that it contemplates erecting the necessary buildings without expense to the public, by an application of part of the Suitors' fund, leasing property, and other judicious means. Should there be too little room for the prodigious mass of records which have accumulated for ages, he suggests the depositing of historical and antiquarian papers, which are rarely, if ever, wanted for legal purposes, in their proper habitat, the British Museum, and not to be mixed up with writs of subpoenas and quominus.

Altogether, we beg to recommend this volume to the particular attention of the public. Should it provoke discussion in any quarter, it must tend to good; and sure we are that the author deserves the warm thanks of the country for having brought this matter forward, and advocated its adoption by such irresistible facts, calculations, and arguments.

While we are pointing public gratitude to Mr. Cooper, we feel that we are bound to make some excuse for our own neglect of a more elaborate and very able work of his production, which has been on our table for several weeks. We allude to his Account of the Public Records. a work full of historical literature, and curious from its multitude of miscellaneous and antiquarian notices. Much of its information has been hitherto inaccessible; and we take upon ourselves, however briefly for the present, to say that it is a publication of the most valuable character.

Earle's Travels. [Second Notice: conclusion.]

ONE cannot tell what sympathy may exist among savage natures; but we could not help being struck, whilst reading our own extracts from Mr. Earle's volume of the horrible cannibal atrocities of the New Zealanders, by the contemporaneous accounts in the newspapers of the murderous acts of Cook at Leicester. It seemed as if, mutato nomine, Atoi had sent his soul into the body of an English bookbinder, and that the unfortunate Mr. Paas stood exactly in the position of an Indian Ocean slave. The recklessness and butchery, the dismembering and burning, presented a similar scene on the antipodes of the earth; only the cannibal did not add the accomplishment of drinking spirituous liquors to that of smoking, as it appears was the case with his more civilised rival. God has done much for man-it is man himself, whether in a social state of high refinement, or in the depth of barbarian ignorance, who fills this beautiful creation with woes and evil. Even in New Zealand, Mr. Earle thus describes the land disfigured by such revolting crimes :-

"In whatever direction I travelled, and at this time I had crossed the country in various directions several times, the soil appeared to me to be fat and rich, and also well watered. From every part of it which the natives have cultivated, the produce has been immense. Here, where the finest samples of the human race are to be found, the largest and finest timber grows, and every vegetable (yet planted) thrives, the introduction of European grasses, fruits, &c. &c. would be a great desideratum. Were this done, in a very short time farms would be more eagerly sought after here than they now are in New South Wales. All the building, together with the National Gallery, to be erected building, together with the National Gallery, to be erected on the site of the late Mews at Charing Cross; presenting an extended front of 500 feet, facing the noble and extended front of 500 feet, facing the noble and extensive area which the removal of the old buildings from St. Martin'a Lane to the College of Physicians presents at the confluence of the Strand, Cockspur Street, and Whitehall Street. Mr. Wilkins has been appointed the architect to carry this great undertaking into execution.—Newspapers.

Newspapers.
2 vols. 8vo. Baldwin and Cradock.

and disposing of detached portions of the Rolls fruits and plants hitherto introduced by the characteristics. While the natives of missionary establishments have succeeded wonderfully. Peaches and water-melons now were in full season: the natives brought baskets full of them to our door every day, which they exchanged with us for the merest trifles, such as a fish-hook, or a button. Indian corn was likewise very abundant."

Of the people themselves, our author, as we have observed, is disposed to draw a very favourable picture :-

" There are (he tells us) only two classes of people-chiefs and slaves; and as consanguinity constitutes a high claim, the eldest son of a large family, who can bring the greatest num-ber of warriors of his own name into the field, is considered the chief of that district or tribe; and as he, by reason of his followers, can take possession of the greatest number of prisoners or slaves, he becomes the ruling man. Every other man of his tribe considers himself on an equality with him in every thing, except that he shews him obedience, and follows him to battle. Each is independent in his own family, and holds uncontrolled power of life and death over every individual it contains. They seem not to exercise any coercion over the younger branches of a family, who are allowed unbound-ed liberty till the girls have sweethearts, and the boys are strong enough to go to war. They are kind and hospitable to strangers; and are excessively fond of their children. On a journey, it is more usual to see the father carrying his infant than the mother; and all the little offices of a nurse are performed by him with the tenderest care and good humour. In many instances (wherein they differ from most savage tribes) I have seen the wife treated as an equal and companion. In fact, when not engaged in war, the New Zealander is quite a domestic, cheerful, harmless character; but once rouse his anger, or turn him into ridicule, and his disposition is instantly changed. A being, whose passions have never been curbed from infancy, and whose only notion of what he conceives to be his right is to retaliate for an offence with blood, must naturally form a cruel and vindictive character. Such these islanders seemed to us on our first visiting them. The sight of beings so extraordinary (for thus we Europeans must have appeared to them) excited in their savage minds the greatest wonder; and they thought we were sent as a scourge and an enemy; and though Cook, one of their earliest visitors, adopted every method his ingenuity could devise to conciliate them, yet, as they never could thoroughly understand his intentions, they were always on the alert to attack him. Hence arose the horror and disgust expressed formerly at the mere mention of the name of 'a New Zealander.' I have often tried in vain to account for there being such a decided dissimilarity between the natives of New Holland and New Zealand. So trifling is the difference in their situation on the globe, and so similar their climates,-both having remained so long unknown to the great continents, and so devoid of intercourse with the rest of the world, that one would be led to imagine a great resemblance must be the result. But the natives of the former seem of the lowest grade—the last link in the great chain of existence which unites man with the monkey. Their limbs are long, thin, and flat, with large bony knees and elbows; a projecting forehead, and pot-belly. The mind, too, seems adapted to this mean configuration: they have neither energy, enterprise, nor industry; and their curiosity can scarcely be excited. A few exceptions riosity can scarcely be excited. A few exceptions delighted with my drawings, partice may be met with; but these are their general a portrait I made of him. He copie

island are 'cast in beauty's perfect n children are so fine and powerfully n each might serve as a model for a the Infant Hercules: nothing c the graceful and athletic forms of th the rounded limbs of their youn; These possess eyes beautiful and eloc a profusion of long, silky, curling he the intellects of both sexes seem of: order; all appear eager for improve of energy, and indefatigably indust possessing amongst themselves several are totally unknown to their neighbo

Mr. Earle's account of a brother amused us; and we copy it in the he will entertain our readers :-

"The art of tattooing has been 1 such perfection here, that whenever seen a New Zealander whose skin is mented, we have admired him. It upon as answering the same pu clothes. When a chief throws off hi seems as proud of displaying the ornaments figured on his skin, as s exquisite is in exhibiting himself i fashionable attire. It is an essenti warlike preparations. The whole of trict of Ko-ro-ra-di-ka was preparir approaching war. Their canoes, powder, and balls, increased daily; a ingenious artist, called Aranghie, carry on this important branch of which was soon placed in requisition the mighty men in the neighbourh one by one, under his operating he this 'professor' was a near neighbou I frequently paid him a visit in his and he returned the compliment wh had time to spare. He was consider countrymen a perfect master in the tooing, and men of the highest rank portance were in the habit of travel journeys in order to put their skins : skilful hands. Indeed, so highly works esteemed, that I have seen ma drawings exhibited even after death. bour of mine very lately killed a chief been tattooed by Aranghie, and, ap the artist's work so highly, he ski chieftain's thighs, and covered his car with it. I was astonished to see v boldness and precision Aranghie dre signs upon the skin, and what beaut ments he produced; no rule and could be more exact than the lines a he formed. So unrivalled is he in h sion, that a highly-finished face of a c the hands of this artist, is as greatly New Zealand as a head from the har Thomas Lawrence is amongst us. It gratifying to behold the respect the pay to the fine arts. This 'profe merely a kooky or slave, but by skill a try he raised himself to an equality greatest men of his country; and as e who employed him always made l handsome present, he soon became wealth, and was constantly surrounde important personages as Pungho Pu ky Ruky, Kivy Kivy, Aranghy To &c. My friend Shulitea (King Ger him every day the choicest things from table. Though thus basking in the shine of court favour, Aranghie, lil genius, was not puffed up with pri success, for he condescended to come tea with me almost every evening.

were returning from here direct to England, I piercing cold. The prospect was altogether time against us all; but we finally conquered would certainly bring him with me, as I look very sublime, and filled the mind with awe! him, and added his body to our other prize. upon him as a great natural genius. One of the important personages who came to the village to employ the talent of our artist was a Mr. Rocky Rocky, (and he was always very particular in remembering the Mister); he brought four of his wives with him, leaving six more at home, (polygamy in New Zealand being allowed to any extent). One of this man's wives was a little girl not more than ten years of age, and she excited a great deal of interest amongst us, which when he discovered, he became very anxious to dispose of her to any of us. He importuned us incessantly on the subject, saying she was his slave, and offered her in exchange for a musket."

These extracts having sufficiently illustrated Mr. Earle's well-drawn pictures of New Zealand, which, it may be observed, strictly confirm the descriptions of Captain Dillon, that have appeared in the Literary Gazette, we shall now revert to Tristan d'Acunha, and conclude our Review with a few selections of his narrative relating to that interesting island. We may premise that he calls the "Governor" Glass, and states, from his report, that he was a native of Roxburgh, where his mother was an "comment snuff and tobacco vender;" but as Roxburgh is only a very inconsiderable hamlet, we must presume that Governor Glass's boast of family distinction at home partook a little of the ideal. A hunt in this island possesses very ble on account of their feathers, my companions original features; and we copy it before Mr. made dreadful havoc amongst, knocking on the Pierce Egan lays hold of it for his Sporting Magazine, (with which he is always so obliging as to inform our ignorant minds).

"Being a fine morning, accompanied by two of the men, I determined to ascend the mountain. As several parties had before gone up, they had formed a kind of path, at least we endeavoured to trace the same way; but it requires a great deal of nerve to attempt it.

The sides of the mountain are nearly perpendicular; but, after ascending about two hundred feet, it is there entirely covered with wood, which renders the footing much more safe; but in order to get to the wood, the road is so dangerous, that it made me almost tremble to think of it; slippery grey rocks, and many of them unfortunately loose, so that when we took hold, they separated from the mass, and fell with a herrid rumbling noise; here and there were a few patches of grass, the only thing we could depend upon to assist us in climbing, which must be done with extreme caution, for the least slip, or false step, would dash one to atoms on the rocks below. By keeping our eyes constantly looking upwards, and continuing to haul ourselves up, by catching firm hold on this grass, after an hour's painful toil, we gained the summit, where we found ourselves on an extended plain, of several miles' expanse, which terminates in the peak, composed of dark grey lava, bare and frightful to behold. We proceeded towards it, the plain gradually rising, but the walking was most fatiguing, over strong rank grass and fern several feet high, with holes concealed under the roots in such a way, that no possible cau-tion could prevent our occasionally falling down into one or other of them, and entirely disappearing; which caused a boisterous laugh amongst the rest; but it frequently happened, while one was making merry at the expense of another, down sunk the laugher himself. A death-like stillness prevailed in these high regions, and, to my ear, our voices had a

up with clouds of silvery brightness, contrasted their vapour, and, passing rapidly away, gave us only casual glances of the landscape; and, on the other hand, the sterile and cindery peak, with its venerable head, partly capped with ally burning, to heighten the sublimity of the earth round it; after the young one is hatched, it has to remain a year before it can fly; it is entirely white, and covered with a woolly down, which is very beautiful. As we approached them, they clapped their beaks, with a very quick motion, which made a great noise. This, and throwing up the contents of the stomach, are the only means of offence and defence they seem to possess; the old ones, which are valuahead all they could come up with. birds are very helpless on the land, the great length of their wings precluding them from rising up into the air, unless they can get to a steep declivity. On the level ground they were completely at our mercy, but very little was shewn them; and in a very short space of time, the plain was strewn with their bodies, one blow on the head generally killing them instantly. The object of my comrades for taking this dangerous and fatiguing journey, was neither to procure the feathers of the albatross, nor to admire the sublime scenery. Goats, of which there are thousands on these plains, were the ostensible cause of their coming; and a very fine dog was with us for the purpose of running them down. We soon surprised a flock, which made (as they invariably do) for the peak; but our dog soon separated one, which we caught, killed, and left on the plain, while the dog ran after others. A very large

*Pive months after, on a second visit, Mr. Earle relates: "These birds were still sitting on their nests, and had never moved away from them. They remain there for a year before they can fly, and during that long period they are fed by the mother. They had greatly increased in size and beauty since my first visit to them. The semblance of the young bird, as it sits on the nest, is stately and beautiful. The white down, which is its first covering, giving place gradually to its natural grey plumage, leaves half the creature covered with down; the other half is a fine compact coat of feathers, composed of white and grey; while the head is of a dazzling, silvery white. Their size is prodigious, one of them proving a tolerable load. Upon skinning them, on our return, we found they were covered with a fine white fat, which I was told was excellent for frying, and other culinary purposes; and the flesh was quite as delicate, and could scarcely be distinguished in flavour from lamb. Hesides our abarross, the dogs caught some small birds, about the sise of our partridge, but their gait was something like that of the penguin. The male is of a glossy black, with a bright red, hard crest on the top of the head. The hen is brown. They stand erect, and have long yellow legs, with which they run very fast; their wings are small and useless for flying, but they are armed with sharp spurs for defence, and also, I imagine, for assisting them in climbing, as they are found generally among the rocks. The name they give this bird here, is simply 'cock,' its only note being a noise very much resembling the repetition of that word. Its flesh is plump, fat, and excellent eating."

and seemed to enter with such interest into the strange, unnatural echo, and I fancied our black he-goat was selected, which gave him bat-On the one side, the boundless horizon, heaped My two companions were now quite delighted with their success; and though they had to with some of darker hue, enveloping us in carry these heavy carcases for a considerable way over the plains, not a murmur was heard from either: when they had got them to the edge of the precipice, we took out their insides, and stuffed them with fern, then tumbled them clouds, partly revealing great patches of red down, and they reached the bottom without cinders, or lava, intermingled with the black much difficulty; occasionally they rested a morock, produced a most extraordinary and dismal ment on some projection, but the weight finally effect. It seemed as though it were still actu- cleared the bushes and rocks, and the bodies were found by us on reaching the level. After scene. The huge albatross appeared here to spending a most fatiguing and exciting day, dread no interloper or enemy; for their young we got safely down at night; the men perfectly were on the ground completely uncovered, and the old ones were stakking around them. This there, and I equally so with the number of my bird is the largest of the aquatic tribe; and its sketches. They informed me, that the very plumage is of a most delicate white, excepting last time they had ascended the mountain, on the back and the tops of its wings, which are their return, one of the party got too close to grey: they lay but one egg, on the ground, the precipice, without being aware of it, and the precipice, without being aware of it, and where they form a kind of nest, by scraping the fell down several hundred feet; they found the corpse the next day, in a most miserably mangled state. They interred it in the garden, near their settlement; and placed at the head of the grave a board, with his name and age, together with an account of the accident which caused his death, and a pious reader, that it happened on a Sunday,—a caused his death, and a pious remark to the dreadful warning to Sabbath-breakers. people all say, they never more will ascend the mountains on that sacred day; indeed, from all I have seen of them, they pay every respect to the duties of religion which lies in their power."

The annexed is also an interesting piece of natural history.

"12th...This day we visited what they call a 'penguin rookery.' The spot of ground occupied by our settlers is bounded on each end by high bluffs, which extend far into the sea, leaving a space in front, where all their hogs run nearly wild, as they are prevented going beyond those limits by those natural barriers; and the creatures who, at stated periods, come up from the sea remain in undisturbed possession of the beaches beyond our immediate vicinity. The weather being favourable, we launched our boat early in the morning, for the purpose of procuring a supply of eggs for the consumption of the family. We heard the chattering of the penguins from the rookers long before we landed, which was noisy in the extreme, and groups of them were scattered all over the beach; but the high thick grass on the declivity of the hill seemed their grand establishment, and they were hidden by it from our view. As we could not find any place where we could possibly land our boat in safety, I and two more swam on shore with bags tied round our necks to hold the eggs in, and the boat with one of the men lay off, out of the surf. I should think the ground occupied by these birds (if I may be allowed so to call them) was at least a mile in circumference, covered in every part with grasses and reeds, which grew considerably higher than my head; and on every gentle ascent, beginning from the beach, on all the large grey rocks, which occasionally appeared above this grass, sat perched groups of these strange and uncouth-looking creatures; but the noise which rose up from beneath haffles all description! As our business lay with the noisy part of this community, we quickly crept under the grass, and commenced our plundering search, though there needed none, so profuse was the quantity. The scene altogether well merits a better description than I can give, thousands and hundreds of thousands of these little two-legged erect monsters hopping around us, with voices very much re-sembling in tone that of the human; all opening their throats together; so thickly clustered in groups that it was almost impossible to place the foot without despatching one of them. The shape of the animal, their curious motions, and their most extraordinary voices, made me fancy myself in a kingdom of pigmies. The regularity of their manners, their all sitting in exact rows, resembling more the order of a camp than a rookery of noisy birds, delighted me. These creatures did not move away on our approach, but only increased their noise, so we were obliged to displace them forcibly from their nests; and this ejectment was not produced without a considerable struggle on their parts; and, being armed with a formidable beak, it soon became a scene of desperate warfare. We had to take particular care to protect our hands and legs from their attacks; and for this purpose each one had provided himself with a short stout club. The noise they continued to make during our ramble through their territories the sailors said was, ' cover 'em up, cover 'em up.' And, however incredible it may appear, it is nevertheless true, that I heard those words so distinctly repeated, and by such various tones of voices, that several times I started, and expected to see one of the men at my elbow. Even these little creatures, as well as the monstrous sea elephant, appear to keep up a continued warfare with each other. As the penguins sit in rows, forming regular lanes leading down to the beach, whenever one of them feels an inclination to refresh herself by a plunge into the sea, she has to run the gauntlet through the whole street, every one pecking at her as she passes without mercy; and though all are occupied in the same employment, not the smallest degree of friendship seems to exist; and whenever we turned one off her nest, she was sure to be thrown amongst foes; and, besides the loss of her eggs, was invariably doomed to receive a severe beating and pecking from her companions. Each one lays three eggs, and after a time, when the young are strong enough to undertake the journey, they go to sea, and are not again seen till the ensuing spring. Their city is deserted of its numerous inhabitants, and quietness reigns till nature prompts their return the following year, when the same noisy scene is repeated, as the same flock of birds returns to the spot where they were hatched. After raising a tremendous tumult in this numerous colony, and sustaining continued combat, we came off victorious, making capture of about a thousand eggs, resembling in size, colour, and transparency of shell, those of a duck; and the taking possession of this immense quantity did not occupy more than one hour, which may serve to prove the incalculable numbers of birds collected together. We did not allow them sufficient time, after landing, to lay all their eggs; for, had the season been further advanced, and we had found three eggs in each nest, the whole of them might probably have proved addled, the young partly formed, and the eggs of no use to us; but the whole of those we took turned out good, and had a particularly fine and delicate flavour. It was a work of considerable difficulty to get our booty safe into the boat - so frail a cargo -with so tremendous a surf running against us. However, we finally succeeded, though not without smashing a considerable number of the eggs."

A few days after, our artist had a study of some very odd and pretty sitters.

the settlers call a pod of sea elephants. At this particular season these animals lay strewed about the beach, and, unless you disturb them, the sight of a man will not frighten them away. I was determined to get a good portrait of some of them, and accordingly took my sketch-book and pencil, and seated myself very near to one of them, and began my operations, feeling sure I had now got a most patient sitter, for they will lie for weeks together without stirring; but I had to keep throwing small pebbles at him, in order to make him open his eyes, and prevent his going to sleep. The flies appear to torment these unwieldy monsters cruelly, their eyes and nostrils being stuffed full of them. I got a good sketch of the group. They appeared to stare at me occasionally with some little astonishment, stretching up their immense heads and looking around; but finding all still, (I suppose they considered me a mere rock,) they composed themselves to sleep again. They are the most shapeless creatures about the body. I could not help comparing them to an overgrown maggot, and their motion is similar to that insect. The face bears some rude resemblance to the human countenance; the eye is large, black, and expressive; excepting two very small flippers or paws at the shoulder, the whole body tapers down to a fish's tail; they are of a delicate mouse colour, the fur is very fine, but too oily for any other purpose than to make mocassins for the islanders. The bull is of an enormous size, and would weigh as heavily as his namesake of the land; and in that one thing consists their only resemblance, for no two animals can possibly be more unlike each other. It is a very curious phenomenon, how they can possibly exist on shore; for, from the first of their landing, they never go out to sea, and they lie on a stormy beach for months together without tasting any food, except consuming their own fat, for they gradually waste away; and as this fat or blubber is the great object of value, for which they are attacked and slaughtered, the settlers contrive to commence operations against them upon their first arrival, for it is well ascertained that they take no sustenance whatever on shore. I examined the contents of the stomach of one they had just killed, but could not make out the nature of what it contained. The matter was of a remarkably bright green colour. They have many enemies, even in the water; one called the killer, a species of grampus, which makes terrible havoc amongst them, and will attack and take away the carcass of one from alongside a boat. But man is their greatest enemy, and causes the most destruction to their race: he pursues them to all quarters of the globe."

But we must now bring this eventful story to a close; and we do so with the author's account of a remarkable coincidence, -a circumstance worthy to attend his adventurous career. After many vain attempts, he succeeded in getting off the island, and on board an English vessel; and he thus concludes:-

"I was almost overcome with the various sensations that came crowding on my mind,humble thanksgiving to the Almighty,-sincere gratitude to Glass and his companions for their unremitting kindness, notwithstanding all the trouble I had given them; and now feeling that I was about to part from them for ever, without its being in my power to shew my gratitude, except in words. Added to all this, were the attentions and generous treatment I was then receiving from entire strangers. A most extraordinary circumstance must wind tions worthy of farther publicity.

"I saw," says he, " for the first time, what up this eventful story; which, if recorded in a romance, would be thought unnatural. Conversing, the following day, with Captain Cooling, and telling him of my extreme anxiety respecting the welfare of my friends, of whom I had not heard for so long a period, and the anxiety I should still have to undergo, as one more year must be spent in uncertainty, before I could possibly receive letters from England, I found him to have been late lieutenant on board his majesty's ship Adventure, commanded by my brother Captain W. H. Smyth; that he had sailed with him for several years, during the time he was making his well-known survey of the coasts and shores of the Mediterranean, undertaken by command of the Lords of the Admiralty. He informed me, that previous to the ship's having been paid off at Woolwich, a breakfast had been given on board by my brother, at which my mother, sistersin short, all those for whom I was most deeply interested -had been present; and that he had seen them all in good health and spirits only a few weeks before he left England!

As our enterprising author has set forth again, though we cannot, like the sportive historian of Gilpin, wish we were where he is to see, we do sincerely hope that we shall hear from him again, and have another book as entertaining as the present.

Gathered Flowers. Chiefly from the Works of British Poets. London, 1832, Hamilton, Adams, and Co.; Liverpool, D. Marples.

This is a charming little volume, a sort of floral dictionary; and affixed to each flower are divers poems and quotations, in which poetry has embalmed its beauty: for example, the daisy collects Wordsworth's, Burns', and Montgomery's poems; beside several more brief allusions in other writers. We copy Jonson's exquisite lines, as the best proof of the good taste directing this selection :—

"Here she was wont to go; and here! and here!
Just where those daisies, pinks, and violets grow:
The world may find the spring by following her;
For other print her airy steps ne'er left.
Her treading would not bend a blade of grass,
Or shake the downy blow-ball from his stalk!
But like the soft west wind she shot along,
And where she went the flowers took thickest root,
As ahe had sowed them with her odorous foot."
Sad Shepherd.

We fancy the idea of this pretty little work must have been taken from a similar production, only on a larger scale, for which we were indebted to Transatlantic taste, published some two or three years since.

The Rose of Four Seasons: a Selection of Pieces in Prose and Poetry. Chiefly for Young Ladies. By the Editor of the " Parting Gift." Pp. 215. Same Publishers.

A COLLECTION, part good, part bad, and chiefly stolen: Mrs. Hemans, James Montgomery, &c., are life-buoys floating a little horde of small unknowns.

An Indian Tale, and other Poems. By Benjamin Gough. 18mo. pp. 189. London, 1832. Wilson.

THE author tells us, in his preface, that his work has been perused in manuscript by several eminent literary characters, from all of whom the most liberal and flattering criticisms have been received; he also says, that many of the minor pieces have already been printed in various periodical journals: — with which two gratifying circumstances he must be content, as far as we are concerned; for we can neither join in the flattery, nor consider his producthe Human Heart. By the Rev. W. Sewell, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford, &c. 8vo. pp. 444. London, 1832, Rivingtons; Bohns; Oxford, Talboys.

Parochial Sermons on particular Occasions. By the Same. 12mo. pp. 311.

ORTHODOX in his principles, and imbued with humane feelings, which teach him forbearance and liberality in his views of mankind, both in relation to their duties towards each other and towards their Creator, Mr. Sewell has given us in these two volumes of sermons strong proof of his ministerial industry and Christian earnestness. The first is of general application, and, with good sense and affectionate reasoning, illustrates the bearing of revelation upon our happiness in this world, independently of historical facts and intellectual arguments. The main principle is an appeal to our consciences, and the internal evidences of truth which we perceive to be implanted in our own minds. The style is that of an accomplished scholar, the sentiments those of an estimable man, the opinions those of a true believer. The second volume consists of addresses of a more peculiar order, having been preached at a small parish church on particular occasions: they breathe loyalty to the throne, and enforce the golden rule in all the relations of life to which they apply.

Lay Testimony to the Truth of the Sacred Records, extracted from Works of celebrated Men, &c. 12mo. pp. 280. Hamilton, Adams, and Co.

A MISCELLANEOUS collection of extracts, and all of a good moral tendency; but we will venture to say, that not one-half of them support the title-page. They are mostly opinions, pre-cepts, general thoughts—by no means a " testimony" to the truth of Scripture.

The Church of God; in a Series of Sermons. By Rev. R. W. Evans, &c. 8vo. pp. 389. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Mr. Evans displays more imaginative than reasoning powers in this volume. The bent of his mind seems to be towards evangelism; his style is flowing, and the whole sincere and scholar-like.

Introduction to Goldsmith's Grammar of Geography. By J. Dowling. pp. 62. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

FOR junior pupils, an extremely well-arranged little manual. It contains nearly 500 questions and answers, and all of them pertinent and instructive.

A Legend of another World. 12mo. pp. 267. London, 1832. S. Low, J. Maynard.

Ir any body in this world can comprehend the meaning of this legend of another, we confess we are not one of the number. It is something about the inhabitants of Venus, the eveningstar; but seems to be more derived from the influence of the Moon.

A Brief Description of Thirty-two Ancient Greek Vases, &c. 8vo. pp. 104. London, J. Bohn.

This account of some of the most remarkable of Mr. Campanari's vases, exhibited in Leicester Place, and mentioned in the Literary Gasette reports of the proceedings of the Royal Society of Literature, will be found very interesting to the archeologist and Greek classic.

Sermons on the Application of Christianity to | How so much of Athenian reference came to series of my Traditions. This legend he had be entombed in the Roman territory at Vulci, we cannot even surmise; but it is enough to say, that these pictured remains tend to throw a curious light upon points connected with the mythology, literature, and customs of Greece.

> Achmet's Feast, and other Poems. By Richard Bird, B.A., Mag. Coll. Cambridge. Pp. 200.
> Longman and Co.; Drake, Birmingham; > Mozley and Sons, Derby; T. Wilson and > Sons, York.

DICKY Birds are naturally made to sing; and if trained in Mag. College, why, they are likely to sing the sweeter, even though hatched through a Drake at Birmingham. Our present Dicky Bird belongs to no particular class of warblers with which we are acquainted: if not a genius, he is a genus of himself, and pours out a strain of melody, to which belong many notes either altogether novel, or such as only the mocking-bird could catch. Of a beautiful girl, we hear

"Her lips they were as a scarlet thread,"rather poor kissing; but her sister made up for it, as she had

" the purest neck of ivory That language can express."

A third had " a flittering form;" but our bard is more peculiarly happy in a direct address to L. E. L.

"Tis strange to tell,
That L. E. L.,
Though savouring much of Satan's dwelling;
E. is between,
But is not seen,—[Why?]
These L's, all other L's excelling,—
A paradise the maid could make
Of any L she chose to take.
But, why the devil, I should ask,
When having such a plessent task. But, why the devil, I should ask, When having auch a pleasant task, A poetess, whose soul is fiame, Should take up such a brimstone name? This is the answer always given—
She sounds of hell, but she is heaven!

Perhaps this entire poem will, without our going about the bush, be reckoned quant. suf. of the bird we have in hand.

The Frugal Housewife. By Mrs. Child. 8th Edition. Hints to Persons of Moderate Fortune, Receipts, &c. Pp. 176. London; Tegg, Hailes, Bowdery and Kerby. Glasgow; Griffin and Co.

A very economical manual, with many a useful piece of advice in all that concerns families. Yet, shough so frugal, there is a jolly frontispiece, with a sirloin roasting, and hares, ducks, turkeys, fowls, game, and we cannot tell what besides, "tout pour la tripe."

Wyld's General Atlas of Modern Geography. London, J. Wyld.

TWENTY-FOUR maps in a neat portable volume, and a useful companion to the reader who needs occasional reference. It is weak in the geography of the Pacific Ocean and Australia. The style is distinct and clear.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Literary Gazette.

SIR,-In the introduction to vol. xxxvii. of the Waverley Novels, just published, containing "the Betrothed," Sir Walter Scott has done me the unexpected honour of alluding to my Traditions of Lancashire, in a manner that makes me proud of the distinction, and grateful for the way in which it is conveyed.

He says, too, that his tale was, in some measure, constructed on the legend of "Mab's Cross," the subject of the third tale in the first heard in his earlier years, and had he known its capabilities, he should, in all probability, have made it more especially the scene and subject of one of his own inimitable novels.

But my object in writing to you is not to solicit praise either for Sir Walter or myself: my motive is to correct some, perhaps trifling, inaccuracies in the detail, which I am sure the illustrious author will pardon me for noticing.

He says, "I am permitted by my noble friends, the lord and lady of Haigh-hall, to genealogy." Then follows a copy of the document, page xiv. "Introduction to the Betrothed."

Through the kindness of the noble earl I have had the family roll in my possession, and can speak to the general accuracy of the extract as given by Sir Walter Scott. One important omission, however, appears. In my copy it is written as follows, "beinge 10 years away in the holy wars." In the former, "beinge 10 yeares away in the wares." I think my copy is correct, more especially as the generally received tradition in the neighbourhood is, that Sir William Bradshaigh went to the "holy wars. I would just add, that this document appears to have been emblazoned and compiled from more ancient records at the period of Dugdale's visitation; and the tablet alluded to, appended to the name of Sir William Bradshaigh in the original genealogy, is in Roman characters, and not in old English, as printed in the "introduction to the Betrothed."

But it seems altogether unaccountable that Dugdale should give it as a "tradition of undoubted verity," when a very slight exa-mination of dates would have assured him that one main point in the narration was incorrect.

The following extract from the introduction to the tale of "Mab's Cross," will, I hope, in some degree, rectify this blunder.

"That Sir William was at the 'holy wars' must, it is evident, be a corruption of the story, seeing he was born about the year 1280; ten years after the last of these unfortunate expeditions. The first Crusade was undertaken by Peter the Hermit, 1095; a second, by Louis VII. of France, 1145; a third, under Richard I. of England, 1190; a fourth, under Philip II. of France, 1204; a fifth, under Louis IX. against Egypt, 1248; and the last, under Louis IX. against Tunis, where he lost his life, 1270. Consequently, the perpetration of these 'holy' murders, which it is supposed were to the amount of two hundred millions of human beings, without the acquisition even of Jerusalem to the church, must have ceased on the birth of our 'pilgrim.' That he was at the wars, however, is pretty certain; but they were nearer home. The machinations of that powerful noble, Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, together with the disastrous campaign of Edward II. against the Scots, are sufficiently important events to account for the long absence of Sir William Bradshaigh, who is supposed to have been taken prisoner during these unhappy troubles."

I hope I may be excused in pointing out another expression which seems to create a little confusion as to the locale of the place. It is said in page xv. "introduction to the Be-trothed,"—" Mab's Cross is still extant. An old decayed building is said to have been the place where the Lady Mabel was condemned to render penance by walking hither from Haigh-hall, barefooted and barelegged, for the per-formance of her devotions. This relic, to which an anecdote so curious is annexed, is unfor-

* Traditions of Lancashire, 1st Series, vol. i. p. 46.

the building referred to, now pulled down, was tube for the combustion of explosive gases. the ancient chapel at Haigh hall, from which, This invention, consisting of a brass cylinder, as the story goes, Lady Mabel Bradshaigh about four inches long and three quarters of issued in penitential attire, once every week an inch in diameter, is filled with equal lengths during the remainder of her life, to make a of the finest brass wire, which are wedged pilgrimage to the Cross, about two miles disclosely and forcibly together by a pointed rod

Pray excuse my trespassing on so large a portion of your valuable room, but I knew no other medium where the information could be so well and so extensively circulated.

I am, &c. Rochdale, 7th June, 1832.

JOHN ROBY.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

Mr. Edwards on the various and successive improvements in the practice of lithotrity, and the instruments required in its operations. Baron Heurteloupe himself addressed the auditory on the same subject. It is not from indifference to the observations of these scientific persons that no report appears in our columns, beyond our several notices in preceding Gazettes. The subject, painfully interesting and ably handled by Baron Heurteloupe and Mr. Edwards, is only fit to appear in detail in a medical or surgical journal. Mr. Faraday produced a new fowling-piece, possessing a curious principle in percussion, which he briefly explained. This gun is the invention of Mr. Wilkinson, conjointly with Mr. Moser, who has obtained a patent for it. The principle consists in the a introduction of the priming into the barrel, few seconds. Some very interesting models of and firing it in that situation at the top of the powder. The priming, being fixed in the wadding or shot cartridge, is struck by a fine steel pin which passes through a sheath or tube surrounded by the gunpowder; and the advantages are, that no operation of priming is required, that being done in the act of loading; there is no flash or smoke; it is perfectly water-proof, and not liable to miss fire; and the whole charge of powder must be ignited, in consequence of being fired from the top and exactly in the centre.... As this was the last evening meeting for the season, Mr. Faraday took occasion to advert to the success which had distinguished it, and called upon the members to treasure up their exertions for the next year.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

In addition to our notice of the distribution of prizes in our last (which was of necessity brief, in consequence of our distance from the chairman), we have to record, among the most important proceedings, that the gold Isis medal was given to Mr. J. W. Green, for his improvement in framing and flooring of ships. The chairman declared himself happy in being able, from his professional knowledge, to add his testimony to the utility of this invention. Mr. W. Kennish received the gold Isis medal for his method of concentrating a ship's broad-side. The large silver medal and 15t. were presented to Mr. Lane, for a very ingenious instrument for describing spirals. The gold Ceres medal was awarded to Dr. Wallich, superintendent of the Botanic Garden at Cal-would very much tend to make us acquainttunately now ruinous."

ed with the means of procuring it. The
From the foregoing it would appear, that the large silver medal was also conferred on ruined building was at or near the Cross; but Mr. J. Hemming. for the invention of a safety tant, standing just outside the gate called Standriven through the centre of them. The indishgate, in Wigan, and which erection still terstices between the wires are in effect conbears the name of "Mab's Cross." permit the gas to pass freely through, but by their cooling and conducting power effectually prevent the recession of flame. The spaces between the wires are infinitely smaller than the apertures in the finest wire gauze, and the tubes possess the decided advantage of unbroken continuity; hence the decided superiority of this instrument over the old safety chamber, which is filled with layers of wire gauze. Above sixty prizes were awarded for subjects in the Fine Arts, many of which were of considerable merit; and the young artists on receiving their honours were goodnaturedly complimented by the gallant chairman.

NEW EXHIBITION ROOM, ADELAIDE

STREET, STRAND.

OF this institution we had the satisfaction to participate in the private view on the evening of Monday week, when a numerous company of artists, men of science, &c., was invited. The exhibition consisted of models, and other This subjects connected with art and science. Mr. Perkins's steam-gun was one of the most curious articles; __firing, if it may be so termed, stream of nearly one hundred bullets in a steam-boats were also shewn, in a well-contrived reservoir, to explain Mr. Perkins's improvement in paddle-wheels, which renders steam-vessels applicable to canal navigation. In this Gallery mechanics and artists are invited to exhibit and compare their inventions and improvements, which the public can also inspect; and we have no doubt it will prove a means of facilitating improvement in many objects of practical science.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

Anniversary Meeting. - Right Hon. C. W. W. Wynn in the chair. The report of the council for the past year announced an increase in the number of members elected since the last anniversary as compared with the year pre-ceding; but, at the same time, lamented the loss of many valuable members by death within the same period; amongst whom were especially noticed Sir James Mackintosh, C. Butler, Esq., Capt. Trant, Col. Mark Wilks, and other distinguished men. After some minor details, the report concluded with a sketch of the Society's prospects, which were considered highly favourable. The auditors' report on the treasurer's accounts for 1831 was read by Col. Doyle; from which it appeared that, owing to a deficiency in Mr. Huttmann's accounts, the balance against the Society at the end of 1831 was 1371. 5s. 4d. The auditors estimate a balance in favour of the Society at the end of the present year of about 100%: on the 1st instant it cutta, for specimens of Indian woods collected was 1371. 12s. A report of the proceedings of and described by him. The chairman remarked, that many species of Indian timber Sir A. Johnston, as chairman of the committee, in this comprehensive expect were the following :- 1. information concerning the introduction of steam navigation, with reference to an inland communication across the continent of India, from Assame to the Indus; 2. the art of printing among the natives of the East; 1 the compilation of a maritime code for the various people who navigate the eastern seas; 4. an examination of the various forms of government established among the Hindus themselves; 5. the assistance to be derived in the prosecution of the Society's researches from the different societies established in India. Sir Alexander concluded by a sketch of the progress of oriental literature in Europe, and the evidences of the increasing interest which it has excited. The president then addressed the meeting in reference to the state and prospects of the Society; and particularly dwelt upon the late election for the Sanscrit professorship at Oxford, and the honourable conduct of Mr. Haughton, the honorary secretary to the So-Haughton, the honorary secretary to the Society, in withdrawing from the contest to secure the election of Mr. Wilson; a point which, by the by, was also adverted to by Sir A. Johnston. Lords Amherst and Bexley, Sir H. Wilcock, W. B. Bayley, Esq., Colonel Bowler, Col. Doyle, H. Ellis, Esq., and J. Shakespear. Esq., were elected members of council, in the room of the Duke of Somerset, Lord Kingsborough, Sir J. Malcolm, Colonel Broughton, Charles Elliott, Esq., J. Hodgson, Esq., R. Jenkins, Esq., and Col. Thompson. Mr. Graves C. Haughton was elected secretary in the room of Col. Broughton: no other change in the officers. It was resolved, on the recommenda-tion of the council, that the number of foreign members should be limited to fifty; and the anniversary should in future be held on the second Saturday in May.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY. [Sixth Notice.]

No. 600. Remains of the Temple of Abousembal, in Nubia, made from a Camera Sketch taken on the spot in the year 1824. J. Lamb. Curiosities like this must be always acceptable to the fire-side traveller, who wishes to know what is done abroad, and yet to keep at home in a whole skin. Here we are presented with the half-buried sphinx, no longer propounding its riddles to puzzle or betray, but preaching from its sandy bed a lesson on the wasting hand of time-defying the utmost efforts of human labour, or human skill.

No. 641. The Troth-Plight between Ravenswood and Lucy Ashton. H. Corbould.—We select this beautiful composition from several others after the Novels of Sir Walter Scott, by the same artist, for the purpose of expressing our regret that their situation precludes us from the pleasure of a nearer inspection of them; satisfied as we are that the skill of Mr. Corbould would appear to equal advantage in all.

Nos. 632, 643, 644. J. Constable, R.A.—
Under these numbers we have a church, a mill, and a farm-house, making a trio of rural associations at once picturesque and pleasing. Need we add, that they sparkle and glitter with the dew of Mr. Constable's pencil? Indeed, as water-colours, so they ought.

No. 639. Portrait of Mrs. Peter la Touche. A. E. Chalon, R.A.—This, with other pleasing and elegant portraits in its neighbourhood by the same able artist, goes as near the wind as possible, without entirely violating that rule of might be advantageously used in our naval delivered an able and interesting speech ex-architecture, and this collection he considered planatory of the report: the heads embraced out a background. Certain we are that the drawing in question would have been benefited by some support of that kind, which might also have been made to diversify the composition.

No. 638. The Falls of the Machu, North Wales—a Study from Nature. J. Byrne.—A study from nature, no one can doubt; and a dashing one, perfectly in character with the rushing water which gives to the scene its travagant. They are, however, only faithful, name, and to the artist his subject. We have seen many waterfalls, but none that have exhi- traordinary dancers. bited more of the picturesque.

No. 645. A Portrait. Mrs. Wright .- Distinguished alike by its unassuming title, and by its excellence.

No. 654. Portrait of Sir Roger Greisley, Bart. O. Oakley.—We are glad to see the portrait of this author by the hand of an artist, the finished execution of whose works is no less admirable than their fidelity.

No. 622. Coronation, 8th Sept. 1831—a Sketch. G. Jones, R.A.—Rather the ghost of a coronation. It is true that, with his usual skill, Mr. Jones has imparted to it a good effect of chiaroscura; still

"Tis something-nothing!

No. 633. An Evening Scene. J. Varley .-A brilliant little drawing. Subjects of this description are Mr. Varley's forte:

"We like to cope him in these evening fits, For then he's full of matter."

No. 652. Portrait of Charles Edward Jerningham, Esq. Mrs. Gent, late Miss Daniell. Taste and skill are the characteristics of this and other drawings in the room by the same fair artist.

No. 657. Portrait of John M. Lamb, Esq. F. Cruikshank.—We know of no artist whose works have more rapidly gained upon us by their advance towards excellence than those of Mr. Cruikshank. His miniatures have all the solidity of paintings in oil, with a delicacy of execution which, though indispensable, is not always found in this class of art. In proof of our assertion, we may refer to No. 776, Portrait of a Gentleman.

The miniatures, though not diversified, as on some former occasions, by subjects of imagination or fancy, are sufficiently varied in character, costume, and accessories; and, in many instances, evince great ability. Our limits will not allow us to particularise them further than by pointing out, by the number, and the name of the artist, some of the most prominent; viz. No. 695, M. Haughton; No. 696, Miss F. Corbeaux; No. 751, A. Robertson; No. 720, W. Egley; No. 721, W. J. Newton; No. 727, S. J. Rochard; No. 729, F. T. Rochard; No. 769, A. E. Chalon, R.A.; No. 774, M. E. Cole; No. 847, Mrs. J. Robertson; No. 899, W. J. Newton; No. 906, Miss E. Jones; No. 910, S. Lover; No. 916, S. J. Rochard; No. 911, W. C. Ross; Nos. 924 and 925, J. M. Scrymgeour; No. 926, W. Bone; No. 934, Mrs. C. G. Godwin, H.; &c. &c. &c. † by pointing out, by the number, and the name

[To be continued.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Sketches in the King's Theatre. Levasseur del. Nos. I. and II. Ackermann.

To persons who have not seen Signor Samingo and Madame Brugnoli, in L'Anneau Magique, the sketches under our notice may appear ex-

La Musique. Drawn on stone by R. J. Lane, A.R.A., from a picture by George Hayter, M.A.S.L., &c. Dickinson. BEWITCHING! The fascination of a rattlesnake can be nothing to that of such eyes!

liews of the High Street, Lymington. Sketched by B. Ferrey; drawn on stone by L. Haghe, Grove, Lymington.

Two picturesque views of that picturesque

The Study: The Toilet. Drawn and engraved by T. Woolnoth. Ackermann. PRETTY compositions, in every sense of the expression.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XVI.

Very Original Poetry.

Camberwell, June 12, 1832.

SIR,—As a specimen of native genius, permit me to enclose you the immortal lays of William Shepherd, of Walworth,—worth a thousand Ettrick Shepherds! I hope you will do justice to his inspirations, that so much talent may not be lost to his country. I am, Mr. Editor! a constant reader and sincere admirer of genuine poetical merit.

[We copy the poems from a printed work, entitled "W. Shepherd's Poetry, 1826," and extending to eight pages. Ed. L. G.]

" A Reflection.

Sister spirit, sweetly blest, With you Jesus celestial rest; Oft I reflect, when you were here, That I had not been more your guardian care, Your flowery youth cut off so soon, Like a rose in full bloom; Thy fair flesh to mould is gone, In resurrection morn shall rise a spiritual bloom."

" The greedy Snake.

Crystal stone, so clear and bright,
Snake's eyes are as bright,
In his sneaking sight—
Poor frog will, and will bite.
Then he hears him crawling on;
Foor frog will cry and jump along.
At length he gets him in his guts,
And cannot digest, he ate so much.
At length a man, with a fork to catch,
Poor snake got kill'd for eating much."

" The Land for the Dead. The dead I feel within me; The dead I feel within me;
I rise to be no more:
But the blest body thou hast giv'n me,
Shall rise and be restor'd.
But land shall be but given,
And Cain shall inherit most.
If I am safe in heaven,
That love can ne'er be lost." woods and groves I secret mourn,

" A peaceful Contemplation.

In woods and groves I secret mourn,
My God I'll praise, in view a happy morn—
The college learned, the gift so bright,
Thy unknown strength stupendous might;
The bird's neat nest its young doth feed;
The cunning spider on its web will creep.
But there are nets
On lands will creep,
And some will sigh and some will peep.
A wounded spirit, a sobbing heart;
When thy celestial birth receives.
To understand thee—
Is to have thy inward teaching;
Thy inward spur rouses the Covetous and spoils his goods.
Let groves and woods in silence break,
As well the birds with their notes,
Tell thy salvation.
Alas! remote, my weary legs I'll move;
While distant pleasure reflows again,
And the refrigerant love I receive—
Wheter was a stream of the silence of the second of the silence of the silenc

While distant pleasure reflows again, And the refrigerant love I receive—
What can avail my sin!
An idol fondly plays,
But thy authority within,
In poetry the deep things of God may keep—
With thee I'm blest, thy incarnation so deep.
Let me my heart sob to thee,
That gave himself for one so foul as me;
Their echo rebellion, fierce their way,
The frown of Heaven their souls hang on,
Inwrapt the covering, so thick woven, close Around them sticks:
None other but Almighty can rend.
Blest sun, whose rising was not seen with Its warm rays, when the Lord took Passion of his sacred body, but early Dawn, or while it was yet dark, to Dwell with his Father in his kingdom."

"The Kinzdom is within You.

" The Kingdom is within You. The authority comes, and reveals His will: with bright'ning rays Discloses himself as one, no other Discloses himself as one, no other Than God can be, and with Passion comes to revive, inwardly Digest, to teach, and lead into truth Centuriate, the immortal word Framed by thee. Thy will be done With pen or tongue, Not cryptic, but open thy Cribration, better than Egypt's wealth, Adunation sin.
Reveals his power undoubted, Light with iron strength irresistible, Death ceases: Deity contemns sin, A theme of undescrib'd palpitation of facts laid down in hostile light, Undertook and done, no other Than Almighty:
To secure thee in heaven;
Thy soul seduced thy paradise, Lost all by a traitor intense."

"Hesperus Unseen.

" Hesperus Unseen. In ancient of days When Adam lived, To consign to him He never had; Some super arises. Some super arises,
To instruct and renew,
With aids to resuscitation,
What procatarctic
Never saw centuple,
Thy arise revives, and Makes the uncivilised
Become a Ciceronian."

From the variety of style, the powers of imagination, and the originality and genius displayed in these unequalled compositions, we (thanking our friendly correspondent for fa-vouring us with them) beg to preserve them in our page of Garrick Club Papers for ever, as models for the inspired and aspiring bards and bardesses of our age .- Ed. L. G.

MUSIC.

MR. ELIASON'S CONCERT.

On Thursday, at the King's Theatre Concertroom, Mr. Eliason's annual concert took place, and was sustained by much of the highest musical talent now in London. Nourrit, Tam-burini, Haitzinger, Pellegrini, Mad. Schræder Devrient, Mile. Schneider, Giubulei, Miss Osborne, and other popular singers, gave the vocal pieces with great beauty and effect; while Mr. Eliason himself, on the violin, Field, Mrs. Anderson, &c. &c., were equally delightful in the instrumental parts. The bill of fare

^{*} Mr. Scrymgeour is distinguished among the others for a new style in art. His portraits are on a small scale, and painted in oil on copper, so that they are the fittest things in the world to be set in bracelets, clasps, or other articles in which love or affection so often wishes to preserve the likenesses of those who are dear, or lost.

† We neglected, in noticing the productions of Mr. H. P. Bone, to mention that this deserving and able artist had been appointed enamel painter to the Queen, for whom he had just finished a very superboopy, in enamel, after the whole-length portrait of her Majesty by Sir William Beechey. Mr. Bone has also received the appointment of enamel painter to the Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria; and every friend of the arts will rejoice in these distinctions conferred upon the son of an academician, whose works have so often commanded the public admiration, and who shews himself not unworthy of treading in his father's footsteps.

tions, which were certainly very well chosen.

KING'S THEATRE.

MR. MASON has nobly redeemed his pledge to the public. Much as report had led us to expect, we confess that the representation surprised and gratified us beyond our expectations.

The director has done ample justice to the composer; and an opera more completely appointed in every department we never had the good fortune to witness. That the production of the opera may prove beneficial to Mr. Mason, in a pecuniary point of view, is our hearty wish; but the sum of money lavished upon it (about 6000%, we have heard), together with the lateness of the season, render it probable that the spirited director will not enrich his treasury by it. He has, however, the satisfaction of knowing, that in the production of such sterling operas as the Fidelio, the Frieschütz, and Robert le Diable, he has given a new direction to the musical taste of the British public, and that he has successfully achieved that which his predecessors wanted either the will or the spirit to attempt.

The story of Robert le Diable is known to our readers through the medium of the English versions produced at our own theatres; and we do not hesitate to say, that the performance of Mayerbeer's music, in a garbled and mutilated state, was a disgrace to our national houses. It would be impertinent to institute a comparison between the genuine opera and the Drury Lane and Covent Garden imitations. It is a high gratification to have heard the whole of the opera in a complete state, as it was represented at Paris; but we must confess, that, to please the taste of an English audience, the opera should be curtailed; -a judicious direction of the pen and the scissors would more assuredly keep alive the enthusiasm of the audience. The music is of the highest order, and far superior to the Crociato of the same composer. Though Mayerbeer's long residence in France, and the fact of Robert le Diable having been written expressly for a French audience, had led us to expect an exhibition of the Parisian style of music in general, we were agreeably surprised to find that this opera partook of a far higher order of composition. It is of the serious character, and carries an abundance of rich harmony and tender melody.

In the cavatina sung by the Princess Isabel, in the second act, En vain j'espère, Cinti was delightful; and the continuation of the scene between Cinti, Meric as Alice, and the chorus, was perfect and beautiful. We thought the duet between Cinti and Nourrit, Avec bonte voyes ma peine, tamely sung; but that which followed, Mon cœur s'élance et palpite, was eminently successful. The triumph of Cinti was, however, in the fourth act, in the appeal to Robert-Robert, toi que j'aime. It was the best air of the evening, and Cinti delivered not only the air, but the sentiment, in a finished and touching manner: her acting deserves high praise.

The principal parts were sustained by Nourrit, Cinti, Levasseur, and Meric; the three former having appeared in their respective characters at Paris. It is said, that M. Mayerbeer endeavoured to suit their parts to their individual talents. Nourrit possesses a tenor of the best quality; and if it wants something in compass, he fully compensates for it by an was much altered; but the company did not in the falsetto he is equalled only by Donzelli. sion. He thus delivered the celebrated fare-appear to be the less pleased by the substitu- He is evidently a perfect musician, and his well: style partakes both of the French and the Italian. So excellent is his acting, that it drew down applause not often heard within the exclusive walls of the King's Theatre. Levas-seur, as Bertram, has an elaborate and difficult part to sing; his bass voice is deep and rich. but it does not possess the metallic of Porto. We should like to see more energy in his acting. De Meric acquitted herself to perfection. It is impossible, by verbal description, to do justice to the cloister scene. With such a tempter as Heberle, who would not have snatched the mystic branch? The closing scene, which represents the cathedral at Palermo, is gorgeous and beautiful. We invite and advise all our readers to visit the King's Theatre, to witness the performance of this most deservedly successful opera.

ADELPHI.

MATHEWS, like a snow-ball gathering power as it rolls on, seems with every new performance to identify himself more perfectly, if possible, with the various characters he assumes. and to flash out his wit and drollery with increased effect. We laugh till astonishment almost supersedes laughter, and we feel our minds at the same time occupied with a sense of wonder at the versatility and truth of representation which has been passing so rapidly before us. The exhibition is, indeed, altogether extraordinary; and we heartily love to enjoy it with the well-pleased crowds whom it nightly attracts.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Haymarket, June 6. Merchant of Venice. It is not because errors are common, that they are venial; and till it is proved that learned doctors of Padua wore women's white petticoats conspicuously beneath their black robes, and that their clerks wore ladies' back combs, Miss Smithson and Mrs. Ashton are as guilty in costume as most other Portias and Nerissas.

Strand Theatre, June 7 .- In the midst of one of the new pieces, there arose a bustle in the pit, which anon grew into a general con-sternation: the men shouted out "Fire!" the ladies shrieked their shrillest and their longest, and the house filled with smoke. A hurried rush took place to all available exits, and the assurances and earnest gesticulations of the actors on the stage were unheard and unheeded. At last, Mr. Chapman, entering among the mingled group of persons dressed for some four different pieces, succeeded in gaining a hearing from such of the audience as remained. He declared that the alarm was groundless, and had been raised by some enemy to the house. About half resumed their seats; but the other, with a caution similar to that expressed by Pat relative to the gun—" charge or no charge. she may go off!"-thought the open street a safer place than even a theatre not on fire.

Haymarket, June 8. Othello.—The city of Cyprus was a strange one, or fie upon the scene-shifters! The city-gates being opened wide, displayed the interior of an elegant drawing-room, which, on their next unfolding, soon after, had vanished away, and given place to a dead stone wall. One of Miss Smithson's principal actions was the unwearied disentangling of a long ornament hanging from her waist, which was ever catching in her flounce, and which once, on the occasion of her rising from a kneeling position, looped her dress up

"O now for ever Farewell the tranquil mind, farewell content!

Othello's occupation 's gone!"

I only put one line of stars, as the eight, which there ought to be, might occupy too much of your space. I am sorry to add, that several of the audience called out "Shame!" and "Shameful!"

Covent Garden, June 11. - Keeley, in The Quaker, having inadvertently reversed a proverb, was ashamed to conclude it, and so died off as thus: "A bird in the bush is better than two in the ha 'In one scene, Mrs. Keeley and Miss Romer appeared over a garden-wall; and on their exit, in the scene immediately previous, some stage-director called out in an almost Stentor voice, "Now, ladies, ladies, do go and place yourselves behind the wall!"—On its being announced that Mr. Braham, since he had been in the theatre, had heard that Madame Stockhausen was too ill to sing her song as advertised, the gallery commenced an uproar, which was not allayed the whole evening. As if it were nothing to sustain the parts of Steady, Artabanes, and Mungo, they called on him to sing "The Bay of Biscay" and "God save the King," in default of Madame's song. Miss Shirreff, who came on to sing an advertised song, was literally yelled off the stage. Bartley then made his appearance, in a frock-coat, dirty boots, and a white face, and began to abuse the gallery, calling them "unreasonable, indecorous, and uncourteous," and expressing his wonder what could ail them. Hereon he got well hissed; but on understanding that Braham's presence was requested, he turned the tide with a little well-timed waggery, observing, that Braham had undertaken to perform as much as was possible for a Christian—that he would not come forward, as he was then dressing for Mungo, and would not sing "The Bay of Biscay," as he had already sung till he was black in the face. The gallery then seemed bent upon having Braham forward with his face half-blacked, and accordingly they a second time yelled Miss Shirreff off the stage. Mr. Sheridan Knowles then appeared, to recite "Lochinvar;" and, having twice got half through the first line, advanced and held a long discourse with the audience, whereof they heard not one syllable, and at last hurried off in despair. Bartley again came forward, and said, that if "God save the King" would silence the house, it should be sung; and that Braham, in addition to his other exertions, would of the stage-manager, as he endeavoured to catch the sense of the house, sounded shrilly out from the tumult, and always elicited roars of laughter. A bill was handed to him, and he was given to understand that Mr. Parry's song was desired. "My good people," said he, "Mr. Parry will sing immediately, if you will only let him!" Now came two footmen, with Mr. Parry's harp and stool. Mr. Parry entered, sat on the latter, and tuned the former; and then, finding all attempts to gain a hearing hopeless, bowed and made his exit; and the footmen re-entered, and carried off the harp and stool. Mr. Bartley then appeared in high excitement, and literally screamed out to be heard, but in vain:—the house would have nothing but Braham, with his face half-blacked! As the ear of the house was evidently not to be gained, an experiment was next made on its compass, he fully compensates for it by an her leg in the manner of a Grecian statue. eye; and a footman was sent on to hold up a extraordinary management of his voice; and Kean was most zealously decorous on this occaBraham will sing 'The Bay of Biscay' at the not suffer the reproach of permitting want and end of the farce." In a momentary calm that unhappiness to cloud the latter days of the rare ensued, Mr. Bartley ran on, and "entreated" that Miss Shirreff might be allowed to sing her song, and once more led her forward : when the gallery, in the most heroic manner, hooted the lady a third time from the stage. The curtain, which had been raised and lowered between every one of these attempts and appeals, now remained up, and, amid the din, a few notes of the overture to the farce were heard. They ceased. The farce commenced, and was acted and sung in dumb-shew - till the gods, seeing how palpably they were fighting against themselves, by slow degrees grew tired of their foolery. So much time had been lost in the rioting, that no one would have stayed but for the purpose of seeing whether Braham would actually sing "The Bay of Biscay" dressed as Mungo. The farce ended, and he did! and an absurder effect was never witnessed-" The Bay of Biscay" by a nigger! What resource had we but to imagine him the black cook of the ship whereof he sang? While the house was emptying, and till the boxes were covered and the lights extinguished, the gallery continued calling out for Miss Shirreff, Mr. Knowles, and Mr. Parry! So long a story as this requires a moral, and here it is:--places of rational entertainment should contain accommodation for the rational only - i. e. theatres should be built without galleries.

VARIETIES.

The Procession of the Flitch of Bacon. prospectus, headed by a very clever etching of the subject, has been issued by Mr. James Watt, who proposes to engrave this, Stothard's well-known and appropriate companion to the Canterbury Pilgrims, in line, upon copper. From even the slight specimen before us we augur well of this design; and having always been great admirers of its predecessor, we shall look with impatience for a work worthy to be placed by the side of it.

Pun.-At a musical entertainment, the other day, where they were toasting the most famous singers, one of the party proposed a bumper to Veluti. "Veluti in speculum!" exclaimed a punster, and it was drunk accordingly.

The Ettrick Shepherd .- Something like what it would have been judicious to have done while the Ettrick Shepherd was among us in London, is now proposed; namely, to publish a volume of his poetry by subscription. Messrs. Murray and Duncan have handsomely come forward to conduct this undertaking, and have chosen the Queen's Wake for republication, at the charge of a guinea. We learn with sorrow, from the prospectus they have issued, that Mr. Hogg has been plunged into severe pecuniary distress in consequence of the failure of his booksellers; so that a liberal support is now absolutely requi-site to save him and his interesting family from ruin. Sure we are, that even in these agitated and hard-hearted times such an appeal on behalf of a man of genius will not be made in vain; and we call on the hundreds of high rank and great wealth, who enjoyed the Shepherd's original and entertaining society whilst in the metropolis, to help him in the hour when all his humour and hilarity must be turned to grief and bitterness. A more deserving case could not occur. Misfortune has overtaken not only an honest and worthy man, but a favoured son of song, who has exalted himself from the lowest rank of life by the force of his native talent, and reflected honour on the lasting literature of his country. Few such examples produce, as yet, of these labours, which are are found in the history of any people: let us rather languidly carried on.

individual whose claims are now submitted by, and to the friends of, worth and genius!

Cambridge Phil. Soc. — A meeting of the Philosophical Society was held on Monday; Dr. F. Thackeray in the chair. A memoir, by J. Hogg, Esq., was read, containing descriptions of the classical plants of Sicily, founded on personal observations of the author, and compared with the mention of them found in ancient authors,-Theophrastus, Dioscorides, Pliny, and the poets Theocritus and Moschus. Professor Henslow exhibited drawings illustrative of his memoir on the classification of mignonette. Professor Cumming performed a series of experiments illustrative of Mr. Faraday's recent discoveries in magneto-electricity. The anniversary meeting was held on Tuesday, when the treasurer's accounts were read and passed, and officers elected for the ensuing year.

President of the Royal Society .- On Saturday last H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex gave another of those evening parties of which we have spoken with so much admiration; from the beneficial effects we consider them likely to produce, under such high auspices, on the intercourse of able men, and in promoting the best interests of science, the arts, literature, and general refinement.

St. Alban's Abbey. —At a meeting on Wednesday it was stated that it would require 15,000% to repair this venerable fabric. It is a large sum; but we trust it will be, as it ought to be, produced, either by general subscription or out of the public purse. In the meantime several hundred pounds were raised to execute some minor repairs, which the condition of the building exigently requires.

Newsmen's Union .- Among unions of a less meritorious and useful class, we are glad to see that the metropolitan newsmen, a very respectable body, whose business imperatively needs much accommodation and activity, have got a new news-hall in the Savoy. It is wonderful to observe how they have contrived to expedite their thousands of journals daily, with hardly a mistake or accident; and this establishment will, we trust, tend to their ease and comfort.

The Annual Ladies' Basaar, for the benefit of the Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear, was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, at Mr. Jenkins's nursery-ground in the Regent's Park. Unfortunately the weather proved any thing but propitious on the first day; but the second in some degree made up for it, and there was present a pretty sprinkling of beauty and fashion, and some of the highest rank, uniting the characters of artisans and merchants for the benefit of their suffering fellow-creatures. The arrangements were very complete, both as to eatables and music.

The Freedom of the Press !- "You remind me of an anecdote I have heard. Mr. Wood, the singer, finding himself abused by a particular paper, sent the editors a five-pound note, with his compliments, stating his uneasiness under the severity of their criticism, and requesting more leniency in future. It was complied with; the paper complained of, became his advocate, and asserted boldly, 'he had vastly improved of late, through attention to their wholesome suggestions."—Letter from Mr. Wilmot. See our Notice to Correspondents.

Rome. - A triangular marble pedestal has been found in making the excavations in the Forum. It is ornamented with Bacchantes, and with a bust, also in marble, is the only

Jeremy Bentham, Esq. - Among the many deaths of distinguished literary men, whose loss we have of late had to record, we last week omitted the decease of Mr. Bentham, at the age of 84. On political and legal subjects Mr. Bentham was a very voluminous writer, and his fame is widely spread over the whole habitable globe. In his earlier days he travelled much, and was the friend of Brisot and Sir S. Romilly. Agreeably to his will, his body has been publicly dissected and lectured upon.

New Periodicals .- It seems to us that the English people will certainly have themselves alone to blame if they do not get Penny Wise in the present generation. We this week acknowledge the receipt of "Asmodeus in London," with a fine paper edition, at double price, to display his political caricatures of the poor Tories.—No. I. of the "Political Investigator," a radical paper, is also on our table, contending for the abolition of the rights of primogeniture as aristocratic, the sweeping away of tithes, a free trade in grain, and a thorough reform in the law.—The "Schoolmaster at Home," No. I. has also reached us, contributing its share of picture and letter-press, attacks upon old abuses, eminent persons, and existing institutions.
With this increasing influx of cheap guides, we repeat it, the nation must become penny wise: we have nothing to say to the end of the Reform Fly. - The Scots fishers on the Tweed (their newspapers tell us) have invented a fly-hook for trouting, called the Reform Fly, in consequence of having a yellow Broom coloured body and Grey wings, and reported to be so killing that the fish cannot resist it. The anti-reformers talk of trying an Orange-peel hackle, and a (Winchelsea) Finch wing.

Horticultural Fets. - It is stated that the intention of spoiling the gardens by a fête has this year been abandoned; so that a crowd of snobs will have no opportunity of feeding like the wild beasts at the Zoological, getting tipsy on champagne, and in all probability wet to the skin.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Lit. Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXIV. June 16, 1822.]

[Litt. Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXIV. June 16, 1838.]

An Essay on the Ministry of Local or Lay Preachers, &cc., by Wm. Robinson.

A Lithograph Fac-simile of Bishop Heber's Hymn, "From Greenland's ley mountains;" accompanied with an Historical Anecdote.

A Memoir on Suspension Bridges, abroad and at home—the History of their Origin and Progress; and also an Account of Experiments on the Strength of Iron Wires, Bars, &c., by C. S. Drewry.

A Compendium of Civil Architecture (Question and Answer), by Robert Brindley, Introduction to Botany, by John Lindley, Esq.

A Revolving Table for finding the Terminations, Tense, Mood, Volce, &c. of Greek Verbs, from a design by Thomas Castle, Esq., of Cambridge.

A Specimen of a new History of London, Westminster, and Southwark, to be published in Monthly Numbers, is before us. It has two Engravings, and is fairly printed; we do not see it stated how many Numbers are likely to complete the Work.

printed: we do not see it stated now many Numbers are likely to complete the work.

A Defence of the Rev. Edward Irving from the charge of Blasphemy, by James Fraser.

The Doctrinal Letters and Sacramental Meditations of Dr. Doddridge.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

The Music of Nature, with curious and interesting Illustrations, by William Gardiner, 8vo, 18s. cloth.—
Slaney's British Birds, 13mo, 4s. 6d. cloth.—Laennec on the Sicthoscope, 18mo, 3s. bds.—Treatise on the Millennium, 13mo, 3s. bds.—Treatise on the Millennium, 13mo, 3s. bds.—Dalton's Prayers, 13mo, 2s. 6d. cloth.—Manual of Religious Instruction, 12mo, 6s. bds. Scenes in Our Parish, Second Series, 13mo, 5s. bds.—The Doomed, 3 vols. post 8vo, 1l. 7s. bds.—Gliphi's Hints on Landscape Gardening, 8vo, 3ts. bds.—Gliphi's Hints on Landscape Gardening, 8vo, 3ts. bds.—David's Turkish Grammar, 4to, 1l. 8s. bds.—Fitzgeorge, 3 vols. post 8vo, 1l. 1ls. 6d. bds.—Rowbotham's Lectiones Latinae, 13mo, 6s. 6d. bound.—Popular Zoology, royal 18mo, 1l2 wood-cuts, 7s. 6d. cloth.—Henry Markerton, 3 vols. post 8vo, 1l. 1ls. 6d. bds.—Speeches and Writings of Lord Brougham and Vaux, 6cc., 8vo, 7s. 6d. bds.—Lube on the Gold Standard, 8vo, 5s. cloth.—English Songs, by Barry Cornwall, 18mo, 6s. 6d. bds.; 1% mor.—Hind's Manual of Veterinary Art, 12mo, 5s. cloth.—Dailey's Return of the Victors, 8vo, 6s. cloth.—Beauties of Crabbe, 1 vol. fcp. 8vo, 4s. 6d. bds.—Gough's Poems, fcp. 5s. cloth.—Whewell on the Free Motion of Points, 8vo, 10s. 6d. cloth,—Hansard's Debates, Third Series, Vol. VIII., royal 8vo. 65th and last vol. of Session 1831), 1l. 4s. bds.; 1l. 7s. 6d. hf.-bd.—Caunter's Sermons, 8vo, 12s. bds.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

May.		From 38. to 65.				Barometer.
Thursday		From	38.	to	65.	29.57	to	29-45
June. Friday · · · ·	1		43.		59.	29-56		29-61
Saturday	2		35.		68.	29-66	••	29.84
Sunday			49.	••	69.	29.76	••	29.54
Monday			49.		63.	29.46	Stati	onary
Tuesday			48.	••	63.	29.46	to	29.53
Wednesday			45.	••	61.	29.46	Stati	onary

Wind variable, N.E. and S.W. prevailing. Except the 2d inst., generally cloudy, with frequent

Rain fallen. 225 of an inch.

June.	Thermometer.				Barometer.
Thursday 7	From	43.	to	5 9.	29.49	to	29.51
Friday 8	• • • •	40.		62.	29-57	••	29-69
Saturday 9	• • • •	44.	• •	65.	29.76	••	29.70
Sunday 10		40.		63.	29.75	••	29.83
Monday · · 11		41.		67.	29-81	••	29.70
Tuesday . 12		43.	٠.	69.	29-60	• •	29-46
Wednesday 13	· · · · ·			70.	29-46	••	29-49
Prevailing win	d S.W.	and :	S.E.

Except the 13th cloudy; rain every day, thunder on the 7th, 9th, and 10th.

Rain fallen 1 inch and -6 of an inch. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Edmonton. CHARLES H Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

Extracts from a Meteorological Register kept at High Wicombe, Bucks, by a Member of the London Meteoro-logical Society. May 1832.

Thomas and atom	Highest	77.800	4100
T Her mornedat-	Lowest	77.00	1046
			10th
	Mean
Barometer-	Highest	30:18	10th.
	Lowest	20.02	lst.
	Mean	29.70537
	Complex 10

Number of days of rain, 13.
Quantity of rain in inches and decimals, 2:73125.
Winda.—2 East.—1 West.—6 North.—5 South—1 Northeast.—0 South—east.—3 South-west.—13 North-west.
General Observations.—More rain fell than in any May during the last ten years, excepting in 1824 and in 1830; yet the barometer was higher than since 1829, and the range greater than usual for the month. The mean tenerature was lower than since 1826; but the maximum was eight degrees higher than last year, and than the usual extreme of May, having been exceeded only once in the last ten years, viz. in 1820. About 2 P.M. on the 18th a very heavy shower of hall fell, but it was of short duration. Thunder was heard twice in the month, on the 17th and 99th—on the former day attended by lightning, and the storm lasted from half-past 3 until near 7 P.M.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have to acknowledge the letter of Mr. R. Wilmot, of Peascod Street, Windsor; and are sorry that our notice of his "Ardent, a Tale of Windsor Forest," three weeks ago, should have thrown the writer into such dudgeon. We had mishaid or misapplied his former letter, bespeaking our favour, or we assure him we should have taken into consideration the claim of five children, and another coming pretty well forward; for we have so strong affections towards large families, that a knowledge of their existence always inclines us to be merciful towards the literary sins of their parents. But, pour encourager les autres, we take this opportunity of setting Mr. Wilmot right on two or three points in his letter. We rejoice that the sale of his work is good, and that it is highly approved among persons "exalted for rank and talent." This may console him for not having the copy he sent us back: "we make it of his work is good, and that it is highly approved among persons "exalted for rank and talent." This may console him for not having the copy he sent us back: we make it a rule to return no books. Mr. W. is astonished that we should form an opinion of a publication in a week, which it cost him the leisure of years to produce. Now this is absurd: suppose it took a mechanic three years to make a watch, it would be very hard to declare that nobody should tell what o'clock it was by it, unless they looked at the dial for thirty-six calendar months. If Mr. W. read and improved himself by the Gazette, he would see that we are clever enough to dispose of a dozen of works, at least, every week in the same very summary but no less able manner. Again, Mr. W. confesses it was "doubtless an error in judgment to send a copy, unless accompanied by a twenty-pound note;" and since he acknowledges the part of the sum of the sum of the property of the corror, we shall not punish him more severely for so gross and foolish an omission. We are glad that the author expects better things from the Quarterly; and hope he went the right way to work with our esteemed, and in that case more fortunate, contemporary; and if he feels remorae for his shabby treatment of ourselves, we shall be well disposed to view the oversight in the light of a bet lost—and so double or quits for the amount against the favourite, next Thursday, at Asset I

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

LITERARY FUND.—The Annual General year at the Star and Garier, Richmond, on Wednesday, the Stof of June; and the Chair will be taken for the transaction of business at Two o'Clock.

J. B. NICHOLS,
GEO. CROLY,
WM. FALLOPEILD,
The Members of the Society will afterwards dine together, when the company of any Nobleman or Gentleman who may reclaim interest in the objects of the Institution will be welcome and agreeable. Gentlemen who intend dising are particularly requested to apprise Air. Shows, at the Chambers of the Society, 4, Lincoln's Inn-fields, on or before Monday the 18th Inst. June 1, 1852.

RAND EXHIBITION ROOM for illustrating WORKS of PRACTICAL SCIENCE, No. 7, Adelaide Street, Lowther Arcade, West Strand.
Newly invented Mode of Generating Steam for Engines, and of Evaporating Pluids for various Manufactures—Steam-Gung discharging a Volley of Balls such Half Hour—Revolving Rudder—Models of Steam Boats, moving on Water—Fossil Organic Remains—Other Objects of general Interest and Amusement.
Open daily from 10 till 6. Admittance, One Shilling.

MECHANICAL PERSPECTIVE; or,
Descriptions of an Instrument for Sketching from Na-M EUHANICAL PERSPECTIVE; Or, Descriptions of an Instrument for Sketching from Nature, accurately and conveniently, every kind of subject; and of a Machine for Brawing in Perspective Architectural, Mechanical, and other Objects, from Ground-Plans and Elevations. 26 edit.
By FRANCIS RONALDS, Esq.
Bold by R. Hunter, St. Paul's Churchyard; Taylor, Architectural Labrary, Holbern, &c.
The Instruments themselves may be seen at Mr. Cary's, 181, Strand; Messrs. Holzapfiel, 64, Charing Cross, &c.

Just published, by R. Ackermann, 95, Strand,
A PAIR of highly-finished PRINTS, the STUDY and the TOILET. Drawn and engraved by T. Woolnoth, Engraver to H. R. H. the Duches of Kent. Size, 6] inches by 4½. Price of Prints, 5s. each; Procis, 7s. 6d.

TERMAN SPA, BRIGHTON PARK.

The Pump Room is now open for the Beason, till November. Hot Mineral Waters, Carlabad and Ems; Cold Mineral Waters, Spa, Pyrmont, Rger, Marienbad, Saltzer, &c. The efficacy of the Mineral Waters of this Establishment, in many obstinate Chronic Diseases, has been fully established, under the observations of several eminent Physicians; and their beneficial influence in divesting also the Cholera of its fatal ontequences, was amply proved at Moscow, during the late epidemic.

London Agents for the sale of the Bottled Waters—Mesers. J. and G. Waugh, Chemists to their Majesties, 177, Regent Street; and T. Lucas, Chemist, 63, Cheapside, of whom the Prospectus may be had, gratis. YERMAN SPA, BRIGHTON PARK.

MUSIC.

TO PIANO FORTE PLAYERS.—His "O PIANO. FOR TE PLAYERS.—His

Majesty's Patent has been granted to Lieut.-Colosed Hawker for his invention of Hand-Moulds to preserve a correct position while passing the thumb, and to give extraordinary facility and strength of disger on the Plano-Forts. This invention has been honoured with Certificates in its favour by the late illustrious Clementi, by Messra J. B. Cramer, John Field, Mescheles, Auguste and Herri Bertini, H. Grisbach, and may other eminent Professors.

Bold by J. Dean, 149, New Bond Street; Collard, 95, Cheapside; and Chappell, 50, New Bond Street.

Price St.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE THIRD VOLUME of this WORK, (with a Map of England and Wales), may now be had, in boards, price ??

The 37th Number was published on the 1st of June, price 6d.; and the succeeding Numbers will appear every Two Months. Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pali Mall.

The last New Novel. VOIS. foolscap 8ve. 24s.
VONTARINI FLEMING, a Psychological Autobiography.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

New Work on Geology, by De Luc.
In 8vo. price 13t. boards,
In 8vo. price 13t. boards,
In 8vo. price 13t. boards,
of the EARTH, addressed to Professor Blumenbach, containing Geological and Historieal Proofs of the divine Mission of Moses.

of Moses.

By the late J. A. DE LUC, F.R.S.

Professor of Philosophy and Geology at Göttingen.

To which are prefixed, Introductory Kemarks and Illustrations; together with a Vindication of the Auther's Claims to original Views respecting Fundamental Points in Geology.

By the Rev. HENRY DE LA FITE, A.M.

Of Trinity Cellege, Oxford; and Meraber of the Royal Society of Literature.

Printed for J., G., and F. Revington, St. Pani's Churchyace, and Waterlop Place, Pall Mall.

M edition, with Plates and Weedcare, 126.

ALMONIA; or, Days of Fly-fishing.

By SIR HUMPHRY DAVY.
John Murray, Albamarie Street.

By the same Author, printed uniformly with the above. Consolations in Travel; or, the Last Days of a Philosopher, price 60.

In demy 8ve. price 4s.

CARACALLA; a Tragedy, in Five Acts, founded an the Events of Roman History.
London: R. Groombridge, 5, Panyer Alley, Paternoster Rew;
J. Andrews, Bond Street.

In 1 vol. 8 to. with numerous Engravings, price 11. beards,

PRACTICAL HINTS on LANDSCAPE

GARDENING, with some Remarks on Domestic Architecture, as consected with Scenery.

By WILLIAM S. GILPIN, Esq.

Printed for T. Cadell, London; and W. Blackwood, Edinburgh.

Price 1s. No. I. of a new edition of

PNGLISH BOTANY. The Size demy

Bro.: each No. to contain Five Plates, partly coloured.

The Descriptions will be given when they amount to a Sheet.

Fablished by the Proprietor, C. E. Sowerty, No. 2, Mead Place, Westminster Read; and may be had of all Bookselbers.

In 1 vol. 13mo. price 6s. boards, with a Memoir of the Author, and Portrait, the 11th edition of azemplifying Female Virtues.

FEMALE SCRIPTURE CHARACTERS,

By Mrs. KING.

London: Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul:
Churchyard, and Waterloe Place, Pall Mall; and seld by Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly.

formons for each Sunday in the Year. In 2 vois. 8vo. price 1/. 1s. boards,

A POPULAR COMMENTARY on the BIBLE, in a Series of Sermons, following, in the Othe General Series of Sermons, following, in the Othe General Service on Sundays. Designed for Parish Churches, or for reading in Private Families.

By JAMES PLUMPTRE, B.D.

Vicar of Ureat Gransden, Huntungdonshire.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Faul's Churchysrd, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall. POPULAR COMMENTARY on the

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE of the United Kingdom, with the New Peers and their Arms. In Polis II. St.

Debrett's Baronetage, including the New Barenets, with their Arms. S vols. II. St.

Printed for Rivingtons; Clarkes; Lengman and Co.; T. Codell; J. Richardson; Booker; J. M. Richardson; Baldvin and Co.; Roboley; Hatchard and Sen; Hamilton and Co.; Patury and Co.; E. Lloyd; W. Pickering, B. Hodgson; J. Templeman; Houlstone; and T. Egertan't Executor.

In 8 vols. 8vo. price II. 4s. boards, the 4th edition of AN HISTORICAL VIEW of the RISE of its Principles and Reasonings. In a Series of Sermons prached for the Lecture founded by the Hea. Robert Beyle, in the Parish Church of St. Mary Le Bew, London, from the Year 180s to 180s. By the Right Rev. WILLIAM VAN MILDERT, D.D. Printed for J., O., and P. Rivington, St. Paal's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, London: J. Parker, Oxford; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge.

In 18mo. price 7s. boards,

PRACTICAL EXPOSITION of ST.

PAULS EPISTLE to the ROMANS, in a Series of Lectures. With an Appendix, containing Remarks on certain leading Terms, a Tabular Analysis of the Evistic, dc.

By the Rev. THOMAS PARRY, M. A.

Archdescon of Antigna, in the Discress of Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands; and late Fellow of Ballhol College, Oxford.

Printed for J. G., and F. Blvington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author Parochial Sermons, preached in the West Indias, with Three consulonal Sermons. Svo. 10s. 64.

In 18mo. price 7s. boards, the 9d Volume of THE YOUNG CHRISTIAN'S SUNDAY EVENING; or, an Easy Introduction for the Reading of the Bible. For the Use of Children.

By the Author of "The Infant Christians" Frist Catechism."
Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Pani's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

Of whom may be had. The First Volume, price 4s.

On the list of March was published, price 6s. the Twenty-second Number of

Number of

THE BRITISH CRITIC—QUARTERLY

THEOLOGICAL REVIEW—and ECCLESIASTICAL

RECORD.

Contents.—Theological Library, Le Bas's Life of Wicitf—Life and Writings of Archdencon Daubeny—The Church and its Endewments; Dealtry's Charge and Hais's Essay—Faris and its Entorical Scenes—Biblop of Chester's Exposition of the Gospets of the Reformation—Sermons; Burton, Bradley, Maithy, Jones, Chandler, and Beason—State of the Discoses in Engised and Wales—Proceedings of the Universities.

Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloe Place, Pati Mail.

Popular Works of Fiction In 8 vols. post 8vo.

THE YOUNGER SON.

"We believe the celebrated Trelawney (the friend of Lord Byron) to be the author of this work, and that it embodies a considerable portion of the events of his earlier life."—Literary Gazette.

II. Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea.

edit. 3 vois.

"The adventures of the young scion of nobility, together with the amusing anecdotes related of the highest personages in the renim, not excepting royally little, are of a nature to excite great curiosity."—Sun. TIT.

Sir Ralph Esher. By Leigh Hunt. 3 vols.

"A very life-like picture of the chief actors and acts of the great drama of the stirring times of Charles II."—Athensum. ıv.

The Opera. By the Author of "Mothers and Daughters." 3 vols.

The Bravo. By the Author of "The Spy,"

&c. 3 vols.

"The interest is most dramatically excited and sustained, and the scenes invested with that vivid reality which constitutes the great charm of Mr. Cooper's narratives."—Literary Gasetis.

Alice Paulet. By the Author of "Sydenham." VII.

Bogle Corbet. By John Galt, Esq. Author of "Lawrie Todd."

"As a fictitious auto-biographer, Mr. Galt surpasses every writer, certainly of this day, and perhaps of any time."

Speciator.

The Water Witch. By the Author of "The

The King's Own. By the Author of "The Naval Officer."

"An excellent novel."—Edinburgh Review.

"The author may take his place at the head of the Naval Novelists of the day."—U. S. Journal.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentiey, New Burlington Street.

Price 4s. sewed, a new editir (being the 4th), revised and

Price 4s. sewed, a new editic cheing the 4th), revised and corre of COMPENDIC STREATISE on the ELEMENTS of PLANE TRIGONOMETRY, with the Method of constructing Trigonometric Tables.

By the Rev. B. BRIDGE, B.D., F.R.S., Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge.

In this fourth edition several material alterations have been made, including an entirely new arrangement of the subject.

Printed for T. Cadeli, Strand, London; Deighton and Stevensen, Cambridge; and Parker, Oxford.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

A Treatise on the Elements of Algebra. Tth edition, 8vo. 7s. in boards

2. A Compendious Treatise on the Theory and Solution of Cubic and Biquadratic Equations, and Equations of the Higher Orders. Syo. 6s. in boards.

3. A Treatise on the Construction, Properties, and Analogies of the Three Conic Sections. 8vo. 5s. boards.

4. A Treatise on Mechanics; intended as an Introduction teathe Study of Natural Philosophy. 1 large volumes a second studies of the second seco

Lloyd's Pield Sports, &c. h considerable additions, in 8 vols. 8vo.

2d edition, with considerable additions, in 2 vols. 5vo.
with numerous Phates,
IELD SPORTS of the NORTH.
By L. LLOYD, Esq.
"One of the most valuable productions ever given se the sporting world."—Evening Paper. H.

Travels in Greece and Albania. By the Rev. T. S. Hughes. 8vo. edition, in 2 vols. with numerous Additions and 23 Illustrations.

"The most perfect and best digested book on Greece which has yet been published."—Courier.

111.

Narrative of a Journey through Greece in 1230. By Captain Trant. In 1 vol. 8vo. with Plates.
"Not only the latest, but the most intelligent and best-authenticated work we have seen relative to the existing situation of Greece."—Literary Gazette.

IV.

IV. The Historical Traveller. By Mrs. Charles Gore. In 2 vots. small 2vo. Consisting of a Series of Narratives connected with the most curious epochs of European history, and with the phenomen of European countries, expressly designed for the use of young persons.

Sir Arthur Brooke's Travels in Spain and Morocce. S vois 800 with Plates.

"The facilities the suthor commended both in Spain and Morocce enabled bim to describe scenes which cannot fail to arrest the stiention in an extraordinary manner."—Chronicie.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Barlington Street.

Mrs. Markham's New Work. In 2 vols. 12mo. price 10s. 6d. in cloth, NEW CHILDREN'S FRIEND, consisting of Tales and Conversations.

of Tales and Conversations.

By Mrs. MARKHAM,
Anthor of the Histories of England and France.

We conscientiously recommend Mrs. Martham to our juvalie readers, as likely to interest and improve them.—Liference.

rece. London: Longman, Ross, Orme, Brown, Gross, and Co.

The 4th edition, considerably enlarged, price list bound,
THE SCOTTISH TOURIST and

THE SCOTTISH TOURIST and ITINERARY; or, a Guide to the Scenery and Antiquities of Scotland and the Western Islands, with a Description of the principal Steam-Boat Tours. Illustrated with numerous Plates and Maps.
Published by Stirling and Kenny, Edinburgh; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. and J. Duncan, London.
The Publishers beg leave to submit the following Testimonials (among others) in favour of this edition:—
"One great advantage lies in its accuracy, and the evident stamp it has of being, in most instances, the oil bying of personal observation: we therefore can recommend it with perfect confidence as a travelling companion on which the tourist may rely, and also as an excellent book for the parlour-table."—Edinburgh Observer.

and also as an exceisent book for the parioux-table.——annowing Observer.

"No part of the scenery of Scotland is overlooked; but, on the contrary, an accurate account is given of all its most romantic regions, whether belonging to the highlands or lowlands. There is no land like our own land, and there is not a more delightful guide-book in any language than the Scottish Tourist and Itinerary."—Edbourgh Liverary Journal.

"The far-famed Mr. North, whose opinion is a host of itself, alluding to the third edition of 'the Scottish Tourist,' says it is 'manifectly compiled by an intelligent editor.' This must be looked upon as a powerful expression of Maga's approbation."

"We do not hesitate to recommend 'the Scottish Tourist,' thas improved, as the most useful book of the kind with which we are acquainted."—Caledonian Mercury.

Where also may be had.

Where also may be had,

1. A Map of the Picturesque Scenery of olland. Price 2s. 6d. neatly done up; or coloured, and in a se, 8s. 6d.

3. A New Travelling Map of Scotland.
Price 2. 6d. neatly done up; or coloured, and is a Case, 3s. 6d.
3. Routes illustrative of the Scottish Tourist, constructed and engraved on a New Plan, expressly for that Work. Price is.

The Mother's Book, by Mrs. Child. Printed at the Chiswick Press, in duodecimo, pri-

THE MOTHER'S BOOK.

Author of "the Frugal Housewife," "the Girl's Own Book," &co.
The 4th edition, revised and corrected.

The 4th edition, revised and corrected.

Testimonies in favour of this excellent book:

"We are so much in love with this modest, plain, practical, and judicious publication, that we hope to see it ere long in the hands of every mother who would rear her child in the way is should go."—Scotman.

"Of all the books on education, this is unquestionably the best."

Scot Times.

Second Times.

Second Times.

In a second was bearing commendations to the publishers."—

Literary Gesette.

"We conscientiously and warmly recommend the Mother's Book' to all who have the superintendence of young children."—

Atherana.

Many more testimentals equally favourable might be quoted in commendation of this most valuable work: the Publisher trusts the above will be sufficient to induce every mother who really loves her offspring to purchase the work and profit by its maxims. London: Printed for Thomas Tegg, No. 73, Cheapside; N. Halles, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; and sold by all Booksellers in the Kingdom.

NOWLEDGE for the PEOPLE; or, the Plain Why and Because.

By JOHN TIMBS, Editor of "Laconica."

In 4 vols. each complete in itself, 4s. sach in cloth.

Domestic Science—Origins and Antiquities

Sports and Pastimes. 1 vol.
Zoology. 1 vol.
Popular Chemistry—Mechanics—Arts and

Botany - Mineralogy and Geology - Meteorology. 1 vol.

Or in 16 Parts, 1s. each.

's Excellent—worth double the money: the information it contains has been derived from works, which, taken altogether, are doubtless fifty times its price.*—Magazine of Natural History.

8. Low, 46, Lamb's Conduit Street; and all other Bookvellers.

Family Library, No. XXXI. With engravings, &.

THE TRIAL of CHARLES the FIRST. and of some of the Regicides; with illustrative Note Lagal and Historical. John Murray, Albemarie Street.

In 1 large 18me, vol. neatly bound, price 6s. 6d.

Latin Literature; being a Cheice Collection of Amesing and Instructive Picese, in Prose and Verse, elected from the most celebrated Latin Authors. In Four Parts. Part I. An instriburar, literal, and free translation; Part II. A Posite translation, and an ordo with a literal translation; Part III. The original Latin, and an ordo with a literal translation; Part IV. A translation of the most difficult words and phrases. Preceded by an Introductory Grammar, and interspersed with verious Grammatical Notes and other Explanations. Adapted for Schools and Frivate Students.

By J. ROWBOTHAM, F.R.A.S. London,

"We recommend this book to tutors, which, by its additional facilities for construing, is a great improvement on Wanestrocht." Sunday Times, 30th May.

See also Literary Gazette, 26th May.

London: Published by Effingham Witson, 88, Hoyal Exchange.

Mr. Gough's Poems. Price be.

AN INDIAN TALE, and other Poems.

By BENJAMIN GOUGH.

"With much true poetical feeling, and a bold and varied diction, even his faults are those of a man of talent, and his beauties are of a very superior order indeed. His 'Indian Tale' is a most fascinating story."—Sunday Times.

London: Edingham Wilson, 86, Boyal Exchange.

In 8 vols. 8vo. price 11. 14s. 6d. boards, the 5th edition, with numerous and important Corrections, of

ISCOURSES and DISSERTATIONS on and SACRIPICE, &c. &c.

By the Late WILLIAM MAGE, D.D. F.R.S.

Printed for T. Cadeli, Strand, London; W. Hlackwood, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, Curry, Jun. and Co., and Millikin and Son, Dublin; J. Parker, and J. Vincent, Oxford; and Deightons, Cambridge.

In 1 vol. foolecap, price 4s. 6d.

BEAUTIES of the Rev. GEORGE

"The volume before us contains many of his beauties. We cannot but award great praise to the collector of these as a judicious selection."—Album Wreath. London: Published by Effingham Wilson, 88, Royal Exchange.

Price 1s. post 8vo. embellished with a View of St. Robert's Cave, Knaresborough, MEMOIRS of the celebrated EUGENE LA ARAM, who was executed for the Murder of Daniel Clarke, in 1789; with some Account of his Family, and other Particulars, collected, for the most part, Thirty Years ago.

By NORKISSON SCATCHERD, Esq.

Author of the "History of Morley," Hall Court;

J. Heaton, and J. Baines and Co. Leeds; and all Booksellers.

OUDON'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA of COTTAGE, FARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE, problishing in Monthly Parts, price 5s. each.

Part I. originally published at 10s. is now reduced to 5s.; but those who have purchased it at the former price on returning the Cover through their Booksellers, will receive Part II. gratis, and a new Cover for Part I.

Part II. will appear July 2. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co. Part II.

Mrs. Child's Frugal Housewift.

Price 2s. in boards, or 2s. 6d. bound, with an Allowance to the Nobility and Gentry who are desirous of distributing the Book among their poor Neighbours.

THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated

THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated to those who are not ashamed of Economy.

Author of the "Mother's Book," the "Little Girl's Book," &c. "Economy is the poor man's revenue—extravagance the rich man's ruin. The eighth edition, newly arranged by the author, to which is now added, Hints to Persons of Moderate Fortune, &c. This little work is reprinted and published at the suggestion of a highly distinguished Member of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

London: Printed for Thomas Tegg, Cheapside; N. Hailes, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; R. Griffin and Co. Giasgow; and W. P. Wakeman, Dublin.

Meadows's French Pronouncing Dictionary.
Beautifully printed, price 7s. in cloth, or 7s. 6d. bound, a new Besulfally printed, price 7s. in cloth, or 7s. 6d. bound, a new TRENCH and ENGLISH PRONOUNG. CING DICTIONARY, on the Basis of Nugent. In Two Paris.—I. French and English; S. English and French; with the New Words in general use, Principles of French Fronunciations, and an abridged Grammar.

By F. C. MEADOWS, M.A.

Of the University of Paris.

"Mr. Meadows performance does him infanite credit, and is an honour to Glasguer of the French language cannot comult a better oracle."—Liferary Gastets.

Glasgow: Printed at the University Press, for Thomas Tegg. Chespaide, London; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and W. F. Waksman, Dublin.

Rev. Hugh J. Roor's Works. Price Se. 1

THE COMMISSION and CONSEQUENT DITIES of the CLERGY, in a Series of Discourses, preached before the University of Cambridge, in April, 1896. B.D. Extistian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. Printed for J., G., and F. Elvington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Waterioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Waterioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Fail Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge and Materioo Piace, Paul Mail Mat

m may be had, by the sa Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

1. Eight Sermons preached before the University of Cambridge, at Great St. Mary's, in 1830 and 1831. To which is added, a Reprint of a Sermon preached before the University on Commencement Sunday, 1835. 890. 79.

2. Christianity always Progressive; being the Christian Advocate's Publication for the Year 1839. 8vo.

3. The State of Protestantism in Germany Described; being the Substance of Four Discourses preached before the University of Cambridge, in 1835. The 3d edition, enlarged, with an Appendix rove. let.

 A few Copies of the Appendix remain, to be had separately, price 2s. 6d.

4. A Letter to the Lord Bishop of London, in Reply to Mr. Pusey's Work on the Causes of Rationalism in Germany; comprising some Observations on Confessions of Faith and their Advantages. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

5. Brief Remarks on the Dispositions towards Christianity generated by prevailing Opinion and Pursuits; being the Christian Advocate's Publication for the Year 1830. Svo.

OURCES of HEALTH and DISEASE in COMMUNITIES; or, Elementary Views, destined to shew the Importance of the Study of Hygiene, to Legislators, Heads of Families, &c. By HENBY BELINAYE, Surgoon Extraordisary to H. R. H. the Duches of Kent, &c. &c. Printed for Treuttel and Wuytz and Bicher, $0, Soho Square.

UNION OF MR. MOORE WITH MR. CAMPBELL

METROPOLITAN, THE

THOMAS CAMPBELL, ESQ.

AUTHOR OF "THE PLEASURES OF HOPE," &c.

The PROPRIETORS of "THE METROPOLITAN MAGAZINE" have the gratification to announce that its pages will in future be enriched by contributions from the pen of THOMS MOURE, Esq., Author of "Lalla Rookh," &c. In addition to those of the Editor, THOMAS CAMPBELL, Esq., and that with the productions of these eminent authors will be saited by communications of the first writers of the day on all subjects of literary and national interest.

As the announcement of the above fact will doublets occasion a great interest in the aircady extensive circulation of "The Metropolitan," it is recommended that those whe are desires a commencing the work should without delay forward their orders to their respective booksellers in town or country.

The following distinguished writers have already engaged as contributors :-

The foliocing distinguished
Thomas Campbell, Esq. Author of "The Pleasures of Hope," &c.
Thomas Moore, Esq. Author of "Lalla Rooth," &c.
James Montgomery, Esq. Author of "The World before the Flood," &c.
The Author of "Tales by the O'Hara Family."
The Author of "Retches of the Irish Ear."
William Stabely, Esq. Author of "Oberon," &c.
Captain Marryat, R.N. Author of "The King's Own."
Allan Cunningham, Esq. Author of "Lives of the Painters," &c.
J. Frazer, Esq. Author of "A Tour in the Himala Mountains."

John Lander, Esq. Author of "Travels in Africa."

John Lander, Esq. Author of "Travels in Africa."

James Hogg, Esq. Author of "The Queen's Wake," &c.

Charles M'Farlane, Esq. Author of "Constantinople in 1888."

Lady Morgan, Author of "France," italy," &c.

Miss Mitford, Author of "Our Village," &c.

The Hon. Mr. Norton, Author of "The Undying One," &c.

The Author of "Dems by Delta."

The Author of "Poems by Delta."

The Author of "Clavering's Auto-Blography."

Besides many other distinguished writers whose productions have appeared anonymously, Reviews of New Works, Fine Arts, Literature, Music, the Drama, &c. &c. &c.

The Number for July 1st will contain:-

The Number for July 1st will contain:

I. An Eastern Tale in Prose and Verse, by Thomas Moore, Esq.

II. An Ode to Germany, by Thomas Campbell, Esq.

III. Memoirs of the late Sir James Mackinsoh, by Thomas Campbell, Esq.

IV. A Poetical Article by the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

V. Quekery, by Lady Morgan.

VI. Feter Nimple, by the Author of "Newton Perster."

VII. Neromancy in Egypt, by C. M. Parlane, Esq.

VIII. The Acc of Clubs, by the Author of "Tales by the O'Hara Family."

IX. On the Abblitton of the Navy Board.

X. Chit Chat.

XI. Clarering's Auto-Biography.

XII. Grand Juries in Ireland.

XIII. The Tower Hamlets Bill.

XIV. South America, by H. Mawe, Esq. Author of "Travels in South America."

XVI. The Currency Question.

XVII. The Tomb of the Brave.

Reviews of New Works, the Drama, Fine Arts, Music, &c. &c.

Reviews of New Works, the Drama, Fine Arts, Music, &c. &c.

The following are extracts from some of the many critical notices which have already appeared on the work:

"A union of very clever men may produce a work that people must buy; and such men are likely enough to join under the banners of a name that adds lastre to periodical literature. The ground on which Mr. Campbell starts is independence; his intentions are good, his public views liberal, his spirit energetic and manly: "Speciator, are happy to find that the opinion which we rentured to express on the first Number of this promising periodical has been so generally and unequivocally participated in by our critical contemporaries. These voluntary testimonists in its favour constitute an undertained proof of its excellence." Dublin Cont.

"The delicacy of sentiment, the taste and purity of language which pervade all the values of the property of the pages of this Magazine." New Fork Mercantile Absentium.

"The Metropolitan is one of the richest funds of entertainment and of genuine tellent we have made all find tealled." Alfred.

all; and we cannot anticipate, from the success of this valuable miscellany, greater pleasure than entertainment the Metropolitan."—United Ringdom.

"We may aver; with great truth, that we have seen no magazine which, for really talonted writing, surpasses the Metropolitan."—United Ringdom.

"The work is ably supported, by names with which the reading public are familiar, and whose assistance must ensure the success of any undertaking in which they may espectore propert Telegraph.

Saunders and Otley. Conduit Street. London; Bell and Beadding Edilabeths and Versillands.

Saunders and Otley, Conduit Street, London; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and J. Wakeman, Dublin.

Trapid sale of the first edition of the new poem entitled. The Mestah," by the Author of the "Omnipresence of the eity," the publisher has to apologise for the delay of a few days, hen a second edition will appear.

June 9, 1883. THE MESSIAH.—In consequence of the when a second edition will appear.

June 9, 1883.

Opinions of the Press.

"I'The Messiah' is, in our judgment, equal to any of Mr.

Montgomery's productions, and a lasting monument to his fame.
To soothe and elevate the soul is the least of the commendations we can bestow upon it; for there is not a page that can full to purify the heart, and raise the spirits beyond the vicitations of mortal life."—Litterary Genetic
"The Messiah is to be a present a strong the site of the control of the control of the control of the chief of the control of the chief prophets who preceded his appearance;
but the poet chiefly lays out his strength in delineating the meet spirit, the god-like humllity, the remarkable endurance, and final atonement of the Saviour; and it cannot be denied, that he has retained the sentiments, and caught, on many occasions, the spirit of the olden days."—Athencum.

John Turill, British Magazine Office. 250. Rezent Bireet. London.

John Turrill, British Magazine Office, 250, Regent Street, London.

Hooker and Greville's Icones Filicum.
In 2 vols. follo, with 240 plates, price, plain, 15t.; or half-bound in russia, extra, 18t. 16e.; coloured, 28t. 4e.; or half-bound in russia, extra, 27t.

FIGURES and DESCRIPTIONS of HAVIORES and DESCRIPTIONS of PERNS, principally of such as have been altogether unnoticed by Botanists, or as have not yet been correctly figured.
By W. J. HOOKER, LL.D.
Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow, and Fellow of the Royal, Antiquarian, and Linnman Societies of London;

London;
And R. K. GREVILLE, LL.D.
Fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies of Edinburgh, and of the Linnean Society of London.
Printed for Treutiel and Wartz and Richter, 20, Soho Square.

7th edition, much enlarged, in a neat pocket volume, bound, price 4s. 6d. THE TOURIST'S FRENCH COM.

THE TOURIST'S FRENCH COMPANION, consisting of Familiar Conversations on every Topic which can be useful to the Continental Traveller or to the Pupil; together with Models of Letters, Notes, and Cards, occasionally used: the whole exhibiting the true Fronunciation of the French Language, the Silient Letters being printed in Italic throughout the Work
M. DE ROUILLON.
The dition, much enlarged.
London: Seld by Longman and Co.; Baldwin and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; Handled Darton: Simpkin and Marshall;
W. Darton: Hamilton and Co; and Souter: Mozley and Son, Derby; and Jahn Staoy, Norwich.

New Work by the Author of "Darnley," &c.
Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley,
New Burlington Street.
In 3 vols. post 8vo.

HENRY MASTERTON; or, the Young Cavaller.

By the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c.

Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry St. Ledger, Beq. 3 vols.

III. Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

&c. 3 vols.

"Having, in his former novels, given an amusing exposition of most of the varieties of male character in high life, the author of 'Granby' has here exhibited a gallery of female akteches,—the leading laddle of the reign of William IV."—Morning Post.

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon, Author of the "Sketch-Book." 2 vols. 8vo. uniform with the "Sketch-Book." 84s.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Ma-

tilds, &c. 3 vols.

"The contrast afforded by the peasant-countess, transplanted from her humble sphere to the salons of the great in London, and the all-accomplished, highly bred woman of fashion, both of whom are rivals in the love of the same man, is peculiarly striking."—Globe.

Lights and Shadows of American Life.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

"The production of one of those few writers of the present day, on whose pages the courtly and the high-bred look quite in character."—Morning Post.

Just published, price 6s. 6d. bds., and 10s. elegantly bound in morocco, illustrated by Wood Engravings from Designs by Flaxman and Stothard, ENGLISH SONGS.

By BARRY CORNWALL.
1. The Hunchback. By J. S. Knowles.

4th edition, 4s. sew

2. The Maid of Elvar. By Allan Cunningham. 6s. boards.
3. The Population Returns of 1831. J. Rickman, Esq. 10s. cloth. E. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

New Works

Just ready for publication, by Henry Colbura and Richard

Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In 3 vols. post 5vo.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE of a WOMAN of PASHION.

The Highland Smuggler. By J. B. Fraser, Esq. Author of the "Kuzzilbash," &c. 3 vols-

111. The East Indian Sketch-Book. By a Lady.

Fortune Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life.
By the Author of "First Love." Svois.

Reform Act.
On Saturday, June 16, will be published, in fooleap 816, fam: 4 a neat pocket volume, price 21.66.

N ACT to AMEND the REPRESENT-

A N ACT to AMEND the REPRESENT.

ATION of the PEOPLE in ENGLAND and WALD.
With the several Schedules annexed thereto, containing Farm of all the Lists and Notices required to be given to or pullished by Overseers of the Poor, Town Clerks, and Returning (fiftence by Persona claiming to vote under the new Qualification or by Persona claiming to vote under the new Qualification of the Containing to the Containing of the Containing to the Containing (fiftence that the Containing to the Containing (fiftence that the

In a few days will be published, in i vol. fro.

LECTURES on the INSUFFICIENCY of Influence of Christianity, delivered in the English (hapf it
Rome, during the Sundays of Advent 1839, and of Lest 1839.

By the Rev. RICHARD BURGESS, Chaplain,
London: Frinted for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Parli
Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Fall Mail.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPS, it the LITBRARY GAZETTB OFFICE, 7, wellingten State, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Streit, suiter Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Reyel Reskert, I. Mariborough, Aw Maria Lane, Ladget Hill; A. Eth. Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Roberton, and Altium and Co. Stagoow: and J. Cumudag, Dublin.—Agril of America, O. Rich, 13, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOVER. So. Cont. S. Cond.

J. MOYES, 26, Castle Street, Leleuter Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 805.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Works of Lord Byron: New Edition. Vol. VII. 12mo. London, 1832. Murray. THE success which has hitherto attended the collective edition of Lord Byron's life and prose writings, will not, we are persuaded, suffer any diminution on the appearance of this first volume of his poetical works, brought out under the same responsibility, and constituting a part of the same series. On the contrary, we have, in perusing it, been continually asking ourselves, how it could have happened that so little justice should have hitherto been done to those compositions, on which the main fame of the illustrious deceased must ever depend. On reflection, however, it is intelligible enough that some time after the death of the author must in all cases elapse, before the materials for fitly and adequately expounding his poetical works can be collected. It is not until the bad consequences of their being imperfectly understood, are forced, by a considerable tract of observation, on the persons themselves familiarly acquainted with the circumstances under which they were written, that the public can hope for such disclosures as, when made, add doubly and trebly to the general value of the monuments of genius. Thus it has been with Lord Byron. It is only now that his personal friends and relatives have felt it due to him, to drop the little squeamishnesses of delicacy, and lay open their stores of recollection. Byron has taken his place of recollection. Byron has taken his place as a great English classic. Eight years have elapsed since his untimely death; and his intimates and connexions are at length enabled to view him, and his history, and his works, at a sufficient distance; and, looking forward to posterity, to perceive the propriety of recording, while they may, the details, without which, much of what should be known must needs remain impenetrable to the unborn millions destined to rejoice

" That Byron's language is their mother tongue."

We must congratulate the publisher on the ready zeal with which the family and friendly associates of Lord Byron have come forward on this occasion. The private letters and dia-ries of the noble poet were not all in Mr. Moore's hands, when he drew up his memorable " Notices;" and it is obvious that many such materials have, for the first time, been brought forth for the service of the volume now before us, and, we presume, of the others that are to follow it. We must also congratulate him on the industry and good taste which have been applied to the utilization of the precious materials thus placed at his disposal. But of this our readers will draw a fair augury for them-selves from the scope and style of the editorial advertisement, which we shall quote at length.

"At the distance of eight years from Lord Byron's death, in arranging his poetical works for this the first complete and uniform edition of them, it has been resolved, after much consideration, to follow, as closely as possible, the order of chronology. With a writer whose places do not prominently connect themselves with the actual sequence of his private history, another course might have seemed more advisable; but, in the case of one whose compositions reflect constantly the incidents of his own career, the development of his sentiments, and the growth of his character—In the case of a Petracth, a Burns, a Schiller, or a Byron,—the advantages of the plan here adopted appear unquestionable.—The poetical works of Lord Byron, thus arranged, and illustrated from his own diaries and letters—(to many of which, as yet in MS., the Editor has had access)—and from the information of his surviving friends, who have in general answered every inquiry with prompt kindness—will now present the clearest picture of the history of the man, as they must ever form the noblest monument of his genius. Besides the juvenile miscellany of 1807, entitled Hours of Idleness, and the sattre of English Baria and Scotch Reviewers, first published in 1809, the present volume embraces a variety of Occasional Pieces, many of them now first printed, written between 1807 and the summer of 1810. Its contents bring down, therefore, the poetical autobiography of Lord Byron, from the early days of Southwell and Harrow, to the time when he had seriously entered on the great work which fixed his place in the highest rank of English literature. Here the reader is enabled to take 'the river of his life' at its sources, and trace it gradually from the boyish regions of passionately tender friendships, innocent half-fanciful loves, and that vague melancholy which hangs over the first stirrings of ambition, until, widening and strengthening as it flows, it begins to appear discoloured with the bitter waters of thwarted affection and outraged pride. No person, it is hoped, will hesitate to confess that new light is thrown on such of these places, as productions of Lord Byron's genius, than any of those with which, in justice to him and to his reader, they are thus interwoven.—Composed entirely of verses written between the ages of fiften and twenty-three, this volume, even considered in a mere literary point of view, must be allow

In the principles of editorship thus laid down we entirely coincide; and we are bound to add, that the manner in which they have been applied, and the contents of the present volume, meet equally our approbation. The light now thrown on the early history of Lord Byron, both as a man and as a poet, is extraordinary.

The communications of his friends, hitherto silent, have enabled the editor to fill up blanks, and explain allusions, which lend a wholly new interest to those "occasional pieces" in which the great poet exercised his growing powers; but they have done more than this. They have, from the stores of their private albums, or escrutoires, supplied a whole body of early poetry, superior to any thing that had hitherto appeared under the dates to which their composition is referred. Why poems so much above those included in the Hours of Idleness should not, although written before 1809, have been comprised in the publication so entitled, the editor professes himself unable to guess. We think we can help him. The pieces of this period now for the first time made public, referred so closely to the personal feelings of the author, that the very same cause which rendered them infinitely better than those which he was willing to put forth at that time, made him shrink from including them in his little volume. They were indeed "confessions," and the time for such was not as yet come.

The superiority of these new pieces will be The superiority of these new pieces will be sufficiently attested by one or two specimens. The first we quote is entitled "Lines to an Oak at Newstead," and the editor's note explanatory, is as follows:—

"Lord Byron, on his first arrival at Newstead, in 1798, planted an oak in the garden, and nourished the fancy, that as the tree flour-ished, so should he. On revisiting the abbey, during Lord Grey de Ruthven's residence there, he found the oak choked up by weeds, and almost destroyed; — hence these lines. Shortly after Colonel Wildman, the present proprietor, took possession, he one day noticed t, and said to the servant who was with him, 'Here is a fine young oak; but it must be cut down, as it grows in an improper place.'-'I hope not, sir,' replied the man; ' for it's the one that my lord was so fond of, because he set it himself.' The Colonel has, of course, taken every possible care of it. It is already inquired after, by strangers, as the Byron oak,' and promises to share, in after-times, the celebrity of Shakspeare's mulberry, and Pope's willow."

"Young oak! when I planted thee deep in the ground, I hoped that thy days would be longer than mine: That thy dark-waving branches would flourish around, And ivy thy trunk with its mantle entwine.

Such, such was my hope, when, in infancy's years,
Outhe land of my fathers I reared thee with pride:
They are past, and I water thy stem with my tears,—
Thy decay not the weeds that surround thee can hide.

I left thee, my oak, and, since that fatal hour,
A stranger has dwelt in the hall of my sire;
Till manhood shall crown me, not mine is the power,
But his, whose neglect may have bade thee expire.

Oh! hardy thou wert — even now little care Might revive thy young head, and thy wounds gently near:

But thou wert not fated affection to share—
For who could suppose that a stranger would feel? Ah, droop not, my Oak! lift thy head for a while; Ere twice round you glory this planet shall run, The hand of thy master will teach thee to smile, When infancy's years of probation are done.

Oh, live then, my Oak! tower aloft from the weeds That clog thy young growth, and assist thy decay, For still in thy bosom are life's early seeds, And still may thy branches their beauty display.

Oh! yet, if maturity's years may be thine,
Though I shall lie low in the cavern of death,
On thy leaves yet the day-beam of ages may shine
Uninjured by time, or the rude winter's breath.

For centuries still may thy boughs lightly wave O'er the corse of thy lord in thy canopy laid; While the branches thus gratefully shelter his grave The chief who survives may recline in thy stade.

And as he, with his boys, shall revisit this spot, He will tell them in whispers more softly to tread. Oh! surely, by these I shall ne'er be forgot: Remembrance still hallows the dust of the dead.

And here, will they say, when in life's glowing prime, Perhaps he has pour'd forth his young simple lay, And here must he sleep, till the moments of time Are lost in the hours of Eternity's day."

Some charming little stanzas "To a ladv who presented the author with the velvet band which bound her tresses," are of a still earlier

"This band, which bound thy yellow hair, Is mine, sweet girl! thy pledge of love; It claims my warmest, dearest care, Like relics left of saints above.

Oh! I will wear it next my heart;
'Twill bind my soul in bonds to thee;
From me again 'twill ne'er depart,
But mingle in the grave with me.

The dew I gather from thy lip Is not so dear to me as this; hat I but for a moment sip,
And banquet on a transient blins:

This will recall each youthful scene, E'en when our lives are on the wane; he leaves of Love will still be green When Memory bids them bud again.

Oh! little lock of golden hue, In gently waving ringlet curl'd—

By the dear head on which you grew,
I would not lose you for a world."

We think still more highly of a piece entitled "The Adieu," written in 1808, under the impression that the author would soon die; but we have not space for the notes, which clear up all its allusions.

s allusions.

"Adieu, thou Hill! where early joy
Spread roses o'er my brow;
Where Science seeks each loitering boy
With knowledge to endow.
Adieu, my youthful friends or foes,
Partners of former bliss or woes;
No more through Ida's paths we stray;
Soon must I share the gloomy cell,
Whose ever-slumbering immates dwell
Unconscious of the day.
Adieu, my boorn Remai Fanes.

Unconscious of the day.
Adieu, ye hoary Regal Fanes,
Ye spires of Granta's vale,
Where Learning robed in sable reigns,
And Melancholy pale.
Ye comrades of the jovial hour,
Ye tenants of the classic bower.
On Cama's verdant margin placed,
Adieu! while memory still is mine,
These scenes must be effaced.

These scenes must be emaced.

Adieu, ye mountains of the clime
Where grew my youthful years;
Where Loch na Garr in anows sublime
His giant summit rears.
Why did my childhood wander forth
From you, ye regions of the North,
With sons of pride to roam?
Why did I quit my Highland cave,
Marr's dusky heath, and Dee's clear wave,
To seek a Sotheron home?

To seek a Sotheron home?

Home of my sires! a long farwell—
Yet why to thee adieu?
Thy vaults will echo back my knell,
Thy towers my tomb will view:
The faitering tongue which sung thy fall,
And former glories of thy hall,
Forgets its wonted simple note;
But yet the lyre retains the strings,
And sometimes, on Æolian wings,
In dying strains may float.
Fields which surround von nustic of

In dying strains may float.
Fields which surround you rustic cot,
While yet I linger here,
Adicu! you are not now forget,
To retrospection dear.
Streamlet! along whose rippling surge
My youthful limbs were wont to urge
At noontide heat their pliant course,
Plunging with ardour from the shore,
Thy springs will lave these limbs no more,
Deprived of active force.
And shall! hore format the same.

Deprived of active force.

And shall I here forget the scene
Still nearest to my breast?
Rocks rise, and rivers roll between
The spot which peason blest;
Yet, Mary, all thy beauties seem
Fresh as in lowe's hewiching dream,
To me in smiles display'd:
Till slow disease resigns his prey
To Death, the parent of decay,
Thine image cannot fade.

And thou my friend! whose senties

Thine image cannot fade.
And thou, my friend! whose gentle love
Yet thrills my bosom's chords,
How much thy friendship was above
Description's power of words!
Still near my breast thy gift I wear,
Which sparkled once with Feeling's tear,
Of love the pure, the sacred gem;
Our souls were equal, and our lot
In that dear moment quite forgot;
Let Pride alone condemn!

Let Frice alone condemn:
All, all, is dark and cheerless now!
No smile of love's deceit
Can warm my veins with wonted glow,
Can bid life's pulses beat:
Not e'en the hope of future fame
Can wake my faint, exhausted frame,
Or crown with fancied wreaths my head.
Mine is a short inglorious race,—
To humble in the dust my face,
And mingle with the dead!

Or Eame, thou soddess of my heart

And mingle with the deat.

O, Fame! thou goddess of my heart,
On him who gains thy praise
Pointless must fail the spectre's dart,
Consumed in glory's blaze;
But me she beckons from the earth,
My name obscure, unmark'd my hirth,

My life a short and vulgar dream:
Lost in the dull, ignoble crowd,
My hopes recline within a shroud,
My fate is Lethe's stream.

My fate is Letter's stream,
When I repose beneath the sod,
Unheeded in the clay,
Where once my playful footsteps trod,
Where now my head must lay;
The meed of Pity will be shed.
In dew-drops o'er my narrow bed,
By nightly skies, and storms alone;
No mortal eye will deign to steep.
With tears the dark sepulchral deep.
Which bides a name unknown. Which hides a name unknown.

Forget this world, my restless sprite, Turn, turn thy thoughts to heaven: There must thou soon direct thy flight, There must thou soon durect thy highes if errors are forgiven.

To bigots and to sects unknown, Bow down beneath the Almighty's throne;
To Him address thy trembling prayer!
He, who is merciful and just,
Will not reject a child of dust,
Although his meanest care.

Father of light! to Thee I call, My soul is dark within: My soul is dark within:
Thou, who canst mark the sparrow's fall,
Avert the death of sin.
Thou, who canst guide the wandering star,
Who calm'st the elemental war,
Whose mantle is yon boundless sky,
My thoughts, my words, my crimes forgive;
And, since I soon must cease to live,

Instruct me how to die. Of the annotations in this volume we have spoken highly; but, of course, it is impossible to quote many of them, without transcribing also the verses they illustrate. One specimen must suffice: it refers to a very interesting subject, and is appended to the following touching lines in a piece entitled "Childish Recollections."

"Stern death forbade my orphan youth to share
The tender guldance of a father's care:
Can rank, or e'en a guardian's name, supply
The love which glistens in a father's eye!
For this can wealth or title's sound atone,
Made, by a parent's early loss my own!" &c.

For this can wealth or title's sound atone,
Made, by a parent's early loss my own!" &c.

"In all the lives of Lord Byron hitherto published, the character of the poot's father has been siluded to in terms of unmitigated reprobation, for which the ascertained facts of his history afford but a slender pretext. He had, like his son, the misfortune of being brought up by a mother alone; Admiral Byron, his father, being kept at a distance from his family by professional duties. His education was completed at a foreign millitary academy—not, in those days at least, a very favourable school; and from this, on receiving a commission in the Coldstream Guards, he was plunged, while yet a boy, into all the temptations to which a person of singular beauty, and manners of the most captivating grace, can expose the heir of a noble name in our luxurious metropolis. The unfertunate intrigue, which has been gravely talked of as marking his character with something like horror, occurred when he was hardly of age. At all events, as Captain Byron, who died in his thirty-fifth year, could have, had no influence in determining the course of his son's education or pursuits, it is difficult to understand on what grounds his personal qualities have been made the theme of discussion, to say nothing of angry vituperation, either in memoirs of Lord B., or reviews of those memoirs.
Some unworthy reflections upon the subject were hazarded in a blographical sketch of the noble poet, prefixed to a French translation of one of his works, which appeared very shortly before he left Genoa for Greece; and the remarks which these drew from the son at the time, will probably go far to soften the general impression respecttor the present man who had forwarded the offensive tract from Paris has not hitherto heen printed, and was probably the last he wrote before quitting litaly, we make no apology for the length of the following extract:—

"Genoa, 10th Julp, 1833.

"As to the Essay, &c. I have nothing to object to it, bably the last he wrote before quitting taily, we make no apology for the length of the following extract:—

'Genca, 10th July, 1823.

'As to the Essay, &c. I have nothing to object to it, with regard to what concerns myself personally, though naturally there are some of the facts in it discoloured, and several errors into which the author has been led by the accounts of others. I allude to facts, and not criticisms: but the same author has cruelty calumniated my father and my grand-uncle, but more especially the former. So far from being 'brutali, he was, according to the testimony of all who knew him, of an extremely amiable and consequently the reputation of a good officer, and showed himself such in America. The facts themselves refute the assertion. It is not by 'brutality' that a young of facer of the Guards seduces and carries off a marchiones, and marries two hericesses. It is true that he was a very handsome man, which goes a good way. His first wife (Lady Conyers, and Marchioness of Carmarthes) did not die of grief, but of a malady which she caught by having imprudently insisted on accompanying my father to a hunt, before she was completely recovered from the accounchment which gave birth to my sister Augusta. His second wife, my respectable mother, had, I assure you, too proud a spirit to bear with the ill usage of any man, no matter who he might be; and this ahe would have soon proved. I should add, that he lived a long time at Paris, and was in habits of intimacy with the old Marshal Biron, Commandant of the French Guards, who, froz the similarity of names, and Norman origin of our family, supposed that there was some distant relationship between us. He died some years before the age of forty; and whatever may have been his faults, they were certainly not those of harshness and grossness. If the notice shoule reach England, I am certain that the passage relative to my father will give much more pain to my sister even than to me. August and I have always loved the memory of our father as much as we loved each other; and this at least forms a presumption, that the stain of harshness was not applicable to it. If he dissipated his fortune, that concerns us alone, for we are his heirs; and till we reproach him with it, I know no one else who has a right to do so. As to the Lord Byrom who killed Mr. Chaworth in a duel, so far from retiring from the world, he made the tour of Europe, and was appointed Master of the Stag-hounds, after that event; and did not give an society until his son had offended him, by marrying in a manner contrary to his duty. So far from feeling any remorse for having killed Mr. Chaworth, who was a spassion, and celebrated for his quarrelacene disposition, he always kept the sword which he used upon that occasion in his bedchamber, and there it still was when he died it is singular enough, that when very young, I formed a strong attachment for the grand-niece and heirens of Mr. Chaworth, who stood in the same degree of relationships myself to Lord Byron; and at one time it was thought so myself to Lord Byron; and at one time it was thought have taken place. This is a long letter, and principally about my family; but it is the fault of my benevolent blographer. He may say of me whatever of good or evil

The English Bards and Scotch Reviewers have received very elaborate cura in this edition. Twenty-four years have passed over our heads since that satire first appeared; and many of the men and things alluded to have, of course, fallen into the sear and yellow leaf of oblivion. The satire is now equipped with a series of notes, which bring down the infor-mation required to the necessities of the present hour; and the half-forgotten heroes who were mixed up with the Dei majorum gentium, are embalmed quite as carefully as their station required. Miles Peter Andrews, Esq., M.P. for Bewdley — "Hoarse Fitzgerald," poor fellow! and a score more, may now depend upon being appreciated by posterity.

We are, by the by, much pleased to hear that Byron's famous letter to the Editor of Blackbrood's Magazine, which was thought to have been lost for ever, has cast up at length. It is a defence of Don Juan, and will therefore form an appropriate appendix to that extraordinary production; —a splendid dedication of which, to the Poet Laureate, has also been recently discovered; and will, no doubt, grace the same volume of the series. Two exquisite engravings adorn this livraison. The Plain of Troy, after Turner, is poetry itself.

might have been; man's only business is, with | is that security, and dwindles away where there | and caps and aprons for our workmen. what is, and with what may be. We confess is not, we may make the fact and the reasons we are not among those who look upon intelligence as Lucifer in disguise; neither do we consider that ignorance is innocence, or even content. We firmly believe that people will act the better for thinking—that thought is most likely to be awakened by reading-and that the more books are placed within every one's reach, the greater will be the general advantage. It was a happy expression which called the press a fifth element. It is so; but called the press a fifth element. It is so; but like earth, air, fire, and water, it is wrought to benefit or injury according to the way in which it is employed. Every book, pamphlet, or periodical, now published, involves a serious responsibility. Reading has become, and every day will be more the councilor of a particular will be more the councilor of a particular will be more the councilor of a particular will be more than the councilor of a particular will be more than the council of a particular will be more than the council of the way in which it is employed. day will be more the occupation of a portion of every man's time; and as that reading is ill or well directed, will be the consequences on that man's mind. It has been well said, that bad publications are only to be counteracted by good; and when we consider the multitude of worthless, or worse, idle or injurious works continually coming forth, like weeds in a fertile soil, too much attention cannot be bestowed, nor too much honour given to the writer whose efforts blend utility, judgment, and interest. To this rare and invaluable class belong the small volumes before us. We have no hesitation in saying, that they appear to us as extraordinary productions as have ever emanated from the pen of a woman. Admirable in intention, no less admirable in execution, they unite the most opposite merits: the dialogue is dramatic, the narrative full of attraction, the reasoning obvious, the style clear if not elegant, the matter treated most important, and the subjects such as involve our every-day concerns. If any think this eulogium overcharged, we refer them to the pages themselves; and having acknowledged their excellence as a whole, we proceed to point out particular merits; and first let Miss Martineau explain her own plan. After some judicious remarks on Political Economy, with an acknowledgment of the slight inducement offered by the works which professedly treat of it to the general reader, she thus proceeds to state her own plan :--

"The works already written on Political Economy almost all bear a reference to books which have preceded, or consist in part of dis-cussions of disputed points. Such references and such discussions are very interesting to those whom they concern, but offer a poor introduction to those to whom the subject is new. There are a few, a very few, which teach the science systematically as far as it is yet under-stood. These too are very valuable; but they do not give us what we want-the science in a familiar, practical form. They give us its history; they give us its philosophy; but we want its picture. They give us truths, and leave us to look about us, and go hither and thither in search of illustrations of those truths. Some who have a wide range in society and plenty of leisure, find this all-sufficient; but there are many more who have neither time nor opportunity for such an application of what they learn. We cannot see why the truth and its application should not go together,—why an explanation of the principles which regulate society should not be made more clear and interesting at the same time by pictures of what those principles are actually doing in communities. For instance: if we want to teach that very well understood by stating them in a dry, plain way; but the same thing will be quite as evident, and far more interesting and better remembered, if we confirm our doctrine by accounts of the hardships suffered by individuals, and the injuries by society, in such a country as Turkey, which remains in a state of bar-barism chiefly through the insecurity of property. The story of a merchant in Turkey, in contrast with one of a merchant in England, will convey as much truth as any set of propositions on the subject, and will impress the memory and engage the interest in a much greater de-gree. This method of teaching Political Eco-nomy has never yet been tried, except in the instance of a short story or separate passage here and there. This is the method in which we propose to convey the leading truths of Political Economy, as soundly, as systemati-cally, as clearly and faithfully, as the utmost pains-taking and the strongest attachment to the subject will enable us to do. We trust we shall not be supposed to countenance the practice of making use of narrative as a trap to catch idle readers, and make them learn something they are afraid of. We detest the practice, and feel ourselves insulted whenever a book of the trap kind is put into our hands. It is many years since we grew sick of works that pretend to be stories, and turn out to be catechisms of some kind of knowledge which we had much rather become acquainted with in its undisguised form. The reason why we choose the form of narrative fs, that we really think it the best in which Political Economy can be taught, as we should say of nearly every kind of moral science. Once more we must apply the old proverb, 'Example is better than precept.' We take this proverb as the motto of our design."

No one can deny the advantages of this plan; experience teaches by facts, and so should the writer. The first tale is "Life in the Wilds." It depicts the struggles of a little band of settlers, thrown almost literally upon their natural resources. The Bushmen have entirely destroyed their property. The necessities and advantages of labour, the advantages of individual exertion and general co-operation, are all placed in the most forcible light. The next is "The Hill and the Valley." It gives the history of an iron foundery, from the beginning of its labours to their cessation : the consequences of over-supply, the necessity for a provident onlooking, the beneficial results, are the material. It is the theory of the manufacturing interest made obvious by practice. "Brooke and Brooke Farm" does the same by the agricultural question. "Demerara" is a true and forcible picture of the disadvantages of slavery; shewing the necessity of general interest for general stimulus, and that the planter is a sufferer from his own system. "Ella of Garveloch" is the last — we almost think the best: as a mere story, it is one of the most touching we ever read; and the question of rent, its justice and its expediency, being one of such daily recurrence, is of extreme importance. Each of these stories being a harmonious whole, the cause leading to the act, and the consequence following, it is no ordinary difficulty to give an idea by selection. The dialogue between two of the settlers in "Life in the Wilds," is an excellent specimen of Miss Martineau's accurate deductions:

"' We have clothing, for flax grows in the have furniture, for there is plenty of timber in the woods to make tables and chairs. We have 'Stay,' interrupted his friend, 'you are getting on too fast. All these things are likely to become ours, I grant you; but before we can call them our own - before they become wealth to us, something must be added which we have not yet taken into consideration. You forget that there is no wealth without labour; and labour must be applied before the commonest productions can become wealth. 'True,' replied the captain. 'The flax must be gathered, and dried, and hackled, and woven, before it will make a shirt; and the animals must be caught, and a great deal of labour be spent upon their skins, before they become fit for clothing or bedding; and the timber must be felled and sawn, and the pieces put skilfully together, before we possess it in the form of tables and chairs. But surely the case is dif-ferent with food, of some kinds at least. There is fish in the pond and fruit on the tree, ready made for man's use. Man spends no labour on the fruit that grows wild in such a climate as this; and yet we daily find that it is wealth to us.' 'I beg your pardon,' said Mr. Stone... there is the labour of gathering it. An orange is of no use to any man living, unless he puts out his hand to pluck it; and as for the fish in the pond - think of the carp that Hill told us of this morning. They are no wealth to us till we can catch them, though the pool is within reach, and they belong to nobody else. 'We should have had them by this time if we had but got a net,' said the captain. 'The net is one thing wanting, certainly,' said his friend, 'but labour is another. If the net were now lying ready on the bank, we should be no better for the fish, unless some one took the trouble of drawing them out of the water. I do not say that unassisted labour will furnish us with all that we want; but I do say that nothing can be had without the exertion of getting it—that is, that there is no wealth without labour.' 'True,' said the captain. 'Even the manna in the wilderness would have been of no more use to the Hebrews than the carp in the pool to us, if they had not exerted themselves to gather it up. Food was never yet rained into the mouth of any man.' 'And if it had been,' said Mr. Stone, 'he must have troubled himself to hold back his head and open his mouth; so you see what conclusion we come to, even in an extreme case.' 'But with all our labour,' said the captain, 'how little we can do in comparison with what is done for us! Labour may be necessary to make the productions of nature useful to us; but how much greater are the powers of nature in preparing them for us! To look back no farther than to-day, the antelope could not have been food for us unless human hands had prepared it; but how much was done beforehand! It was nourished, we know not how, by the grass it fed upon; it was made, we know not how, fit food for our bodies; and our bodies were so formed as to be strengthened by this food. Neither do we understand how fire acts upon the flesh so as to make it tender, or even how wood, in its turn, nourishes the fire. All that human labour has done was to bring together the wood, and the fire, and the animal, and then to eat the food prepared. Nature did the rest.' 'The case was the same with little Betsy's treat of honey,' added Mr. Stone: 'the earth, and the sir, and the dew, had nourished security of property is necessary to the pros-perity of a people, and to shew how and in what proportion wealth increases where there to make us cloaks or beds, or tanned for shoes so that they could gather and store the honey, and the hollows of the tree so made as to hold Then again, the rushes, and the twigs, and the leaves, were all fit for the use Betsy made of them: her business was to bring them together in a particular manner, so as to make a basket. And thus it is in every case. And even where we seem to make the materials, we only bring together simple materials to make compound ones. We say that the materials of a rush basket are not made by human labour, but that the materials of a paper basket are made by human labour; but though paper is made of linen rags, those rags are made of flax which grows out of the ground: so that nature still works at the bottom.' 'In the same way,' said the captain, 'we say that the material of a hare-skin waistcoat is not produced by human labour, but that the velvet one of a gentleman of fashion is altogether made by human hands; but still nature works at the bottom, as you say, for velvet is woven of silk spun by a worm. 'True,' said Mr. Stone; 'and thus far only is the labour of man appointed to go. He works with nature, and his only way of doing so is by motion. He moves her materials together, but how they act upon one another he does not know. You put your torch of wood into the flame, and it blazes; Robertson lets the seed fall into the ground, and it sprouts; he pulls up a root, and it withers. Hill applies certain herbs to a wound, or gives certain medicines, and his patients are cured; or, if they die, he does not know how to prevent it. Fulton dips and rubs his leather in a certain preparation of bark, and it becomes soft and fit for use; his mother puts flour and salt and barm together. and the dough works; she places it in a great heat, and it becomes fit for food. So man brings materials together; but nature first furnishes them, and then makes them act upon one ano-'It seems but little that man can do,' said the captain, 'but yet that little is all-im-portant to him.' 'Since it is necessary to him,' portant to him.' 'Since it is necessary to him,' said Mr. Stone, 'it becomes great; and indeed it may be said that there are no bounds to what man can do, since there seem to be no bounds to the powers of nature. Look what has been done! There may have been - I doubt not there was _ a time when the founders of nations could do nothing more than gather the wild fruits of the earth, and find shelter in caves; and now, the successors of these very men produce merchandise, and build ships, and rear splendid buildings, and make roads over mountains, and do a thousand things which would have appeared miracles to their forefathers; and all this time, the wisest men are aware that labour may be employed in a multitude of ways of which we yet know nothing.""

We next select the observations on machinery.

" I see clearly, and I suppose the most ignorant person in the settlement sees, how useful machinery is in a case like ours, where the great object is to save labour. But are those in the wrong who dislike the extensive use of machinery in countries, such as England at the present day, where the great object is to find employment for labour? 'Clearly wrong, in my opinion,' replied her husband; 'because, till the human race reaches its highest point of attainment, there must be always something more to do; and the more power is set at liberty to do it, the better. Till all the arts and sciences are exhausted, till nature has furnished the last of her resources, and man found the limit of his means of making use of them, is wanted, and it is our duty to make the utmost possible saving of it. 'I remember,' said because your trade is flourishing more than it work of many men, or that which it would being a power of which man is the machine; and I see how it must be for man's advantage to economise this power to the utmost. But I cannot reconcile this with the evils caused by the introduction of machinery where labour is abundant.' 'I do not deny the evil,' replied her husband; 'but I see that the distress is temporary and partial, while the advantage is lasting and universal. You have heard of the dismay of those who got their living by copying manuscripts, when the art of printing was introduced.' 'Yes; and that many thousands now are maintained by printing to one who used to copy for bread. The case is the who used to copy for bread. The case is the same with cotton-spinning, I know. Where one was employed to spin by hand, hundreds are now maintained by spinning with machinery; and thousands of times as much work is dear, shews that the principle is a good one; and if, in any other case, it appears not to be good, we may be pretty sure of finding that the blame lies __not with the principle __ but bably be careless and indolent. In such a case, with some check or other which interferes I should have no more pleasure than you in with it. Such checks are imposed by the surveying our establishment, if indeed such a bad policy of some governments, and by the one could exist. 'You are the first iron-mawant of union between the different parts of ter, the first master of any kind, whom I ever society. While the race at large has still so heard declare that both parties in such a conmany wants and wishes ungratified, it ought to be an easy thing for any quantity of labour which is turned away from one kind of work appears to me more evident. How many classe to find employment in another. That it is not have you been accustomed to consider concerned easy, is the fault of the constitution of society, and we should be far from remedying the evil by repressing the principle and restricting the about him. 'You unite in yourself the fone-power of labour.' 'So you think that if labour tions of capitalist and labourer,' replied Mr. had its free course all over the world, machinery might be extended to the utmost perfection without doing any thing but good to the whole 'Yes; for if all men had followed your mode of the race?' 'I do: and I see yet further life to this day, there would have been no ironevil in restricting the use of machinery in any one country; that it invariably increases the amount of distress on the very spot. Since no comparison with what it is, and there would power on earth can stop the improvement of machinery in the whole world at once, it does nothing but mischief to stop it in any one place. Wherever it is done, that place is thrown back in the race of competition, and will soon suffer under a failure of demand for its productions and manufactures; because, by the aid of machinery, they can be furnished more cheaply elsewhere?' 'Then the only thing to be done is to open as many channels to industry as possible, and to remove all obstructions to its free course?' ' Just so .- Those in power should do this by pursuing the 'letting alone' course of policy; and private individuals, like you and me, my dear, can do no more than form right opinions, and when we are sure of them, spread them. We can only influence by forming a fraction of that mighty amount of power-public opinion.'"

This question is treated again in "The Hill and the Valley;" and the conversation in which it occurs is so interesting, that we will give the whole.

"'There appears to me not less beauty in the mechanism of society than in the inven-tions of art.' That is, you, being a master, like to survey the ranks of slaves under you.'
'Not so,' said Mr. Wallace, mildly; for he was not inclined to resent the petulance of the old man. 'There is no slavery, no enforced labour, no oppression, that I am aware of, in our establishment. Masters and men agree upon measures of mutual service, and the exertions his wife, 'what the captain said about labour | ever was before, and labour is scarce, and your people are well paid; but they will not long be contented. When prices fall and wages must come down, they will discover that they are slaves.' 'Never,' replied Mr. Wallace, 'for this reason: there is no bond of mutual interest letween master and slave, as there is between the capitalist and the free labourer. It matters nothing to the slave, whether his master employs his capital actively or profitably or not; while this is the all-important consideration between the free labourer and his employer. It is the interest of our men and ourselves that the productiveness of our trade should be increased to the utmost; that we should turn out as much work as possible, and that therefore we should improve our machinery, divide our labour to the best advantage, and bring all our processes to the greatest possible perfection. All our 'Such a result in any one case, my labourers, therefore, who understand their own interest, try to improve their industry and skill: while, if they were slaves, and their lot did not depend on their own exertions, they would proin production?' Armstrong laughed, while he pointed significantly to himself, and then looked Wallace; 'but yours is, I am happy to say, an uncommon case.' You are happy to say Yes; for if all men had followed your mode of work, nor any other sort of manufacture in existence, and life would have been barbarous in have been few in comparison born to enjoy it You would yourself have been a sufferer. You would have had no spade and no scythe, no bucket for your well, no chain for your bucket, no newspaper in the morning, and no Farmer's Journal in the afternoon. Since you owe all these things, and a thousand others, to the co-operation of capitalists and labourers, my dear sir, it seems rather ungracious to despise such a union." 'Well, sir, you shall have it you own way. How many classes of producers to you reckon?' 'Speaking of manufacturing produce, I reckon two_the two I have mentioned; and I never listen to any question of their comparative value, since they are both re-cessary to production. 'I should have thought labour more valuable than capital, said Mrs. Wallace, 'because it must have been in operation first. The first material must have been obtained; the first machine must have been made, by labour.' 'True. Capital bwes its origin to labour; but labour is in its turn assisted and improved by capital to such a degree, that its productiveness is incalculably increased. Our labourers could no more send shiploads of bar-iron abroad without the help of the furnace and forge, and machinery supplied by their masters, than their masters without the help of their labour. Then the more valuable this capital is, the more abundant the material wrought, the more perfect the machinery, the better for the labourer. And yet all do not think so.' 'Because those who take one man a long time to do, may be viewed | families to divide the paternal property, and as hoarded labour. as hoarded moour. This, being set to work in addition to natural labour, yields a greatly increased produce; and the gains of the capillundred acres, and his two sons may do well talist being thus increased, he employs a yet larger portion of labour with a view to yet one hundred is divided among five children, further gains: and so a perpetual progress is made.' 'Not without drawbacks, however,' said Armstrong: 'do not forget the consequent failure of demand.' 'That is only a temporary evil: for when the market is overstocked, prices fall; and when the price has fallen, more people can afford to buy than bought before, and so a new demand grows up. If printing and paper-making, for in-stance, were still unknown, we should have no newspapers; if the machinery were very imperfect, they would be so expensive as to be within reach of none but the wealthy; but, as the produce of both arts is abundant and therefore cheap, we find newspapers in every ale-house; and if it were not for a duty, which has nothing to do with their production, we should see them lying in many a cottage window. Thus the public are equally obliged to the owners of printing presses and their workmen. These workmen are obliged to the masters whose capital sets them to work; and the masters are obliged to their men for the labour which sets their presses going. All are gainers by the co-operation of labour and capital."

It is impossible for any chain of reasoning to be more simple or more complete, more adapted to every capacity; and we beg to remind our readers that the assertions made in discourse are each developed in the course of most interesting narratives. The following instances value our own advantages till we measure them with the drawbacks upon others. We have often thought a most valuable book might be made, by contrasting the position of the English farmer, peasant, artisan, &c., with those in similar positions in other countries.

"'I have seen more misery than I could easily give you an idea of, and that, too, in Languedoc, a province of France, there are mountains which are cultivated to the very top, by means which no one dreams of here; but those who cultivate them are miserably poor, because each possesses a piece of ground which can never, by the best management, be made to maintain a family. I have seen people carrying earth in baskets, on their backs, to the top of a mountain which was of itself too rocky for any thing to grow upon it.' 'That puts me in mind, said the sergeant, 'of what I have heard about China. The people there are too numerous for the produce of the land, and therefore many are in the lowest depths of poverty. I am told that it is no uncommon thing there for a man to take possession of a ledge of rock which cannot be got at but by his companions letting him down by a rope from the mountain-top. They let down bas-kets of earth to him, which he spreads to a sufficient thickness, and then sows his rice, and he and his neighbours share the produce. There he hangs, poor creature! in the heat of the day, toiling on the burning rock, to raise a quantity of food which would not be thought worth the trouble of a day's work in England. 'But,' inquired a neighbour, 'why do they spend their labour in any such way? There must be some better means of getting their bread.' 'In such a case as that in Languedoc, of which I was speaking, said Joe, the people are attached to the soil, from its

This, being set to work in hence arises all this poverty. A man with a and then again among their five children, it becomes too small to be tilled with any advantage. And yet these young folks are deceived by the notion of having landed property; and they marry when the land is divided into roods, as readily as if they had a fine estate.' "

From "Ella of Garveloch" we shall try to select a portion of the story, or we indeed do but imperfect justice to our author. Ella is a Highland maiden, who has for years been as a mother to her younger brothers; one of whom is, to use the touching and expressive Scotch phrase, an innocent. She and the elder one are speaking of paying their rent. Ronald all this while,' said Angus to the control of the contr

 I should like to make Archie do it for once. Do you think we could teach him his lesson!' 'I will not have him tried,' said Ella, decidedly; Archie is not made to hold a money-pouch, or to have any worldly deal-'Yet he brings in what helps to fill 'And how innocently! It is his love for the things that God made that makes him follow sport. The birds are his playmates while they wheel round his head, and when he takes them on the nest he has no thought of gain; and evil be to him that first puts the thought into him! He strokes their soft feathers against his cheek, and watches the white specks wandering through the water like snowflakes through the air. He does not look beyond the pleasure to his eyes and to his heart, and he never shall; and gold and silver are not the things to give pleasure to such an eye and such a heart, and he shall never know them. Then he can never know how much he owes you, Ella, for the care you take of him. He little guesses how you have spun half the night to make his plaid, and won money hardly to find him a bonnet, and all the toil of your fishing, and grinding, and baking.' 'And why should he? He loves me, and all the better for not knowing why. He wears his plaid as the birds do their feathers; he feels it warm, and never thinks where it came from. He finds his barley-cakes and fresh water in his cave as lambs find clover and springs in their pasture. I see him satisfied, and like that he should love me for what costs me no toil-for singing when he is heavy, and for wearing what he brings me when he is merry. When he lays his hot head in my lap, or pulls my skirt to make me listen to the wind, I value his love all the more for its not being bought.''

Again, in speaking of him to the landlord:—
"When we lived northwards, we always had three places at least where we might burn, according as the wind was; and if it so happened that the smoke would blow towards the cottage, Ella used to take Archie, and sometimes my father, to a place in the rocks where they might sleep in their plaids.' 'And no great evil,' said Ella, 'in summer nights when the red twilight gleamed on the peaks till mid-night. I shall do it again when the wind is perverse, and the kelping must go on. The worst of it is that Archie loves sleep no better than I on such nights.' 'Is he frightened at being away from home?' 'O no! but he watches the fires till they smoulder. If it is calm for a few minutes, so that the tall flame the people are attached to the soil, from its can shoot up from among the smoke, you might being their own. It is the custom there for think you saw that very flame in his eyes. board. It will save us a circuit if we push

He is ever on the watch for such fires,' said Fergus. 'It was but lately that he pointed to the northern lights, one clear evening, and told me that kelping time was come again over told me that keiping time was come again over the sea.' 'Why do you not carry him some-where out of sight of the fires?' asked the laird; 'does he know the purpose of the re-moval too well to be satisfied?' 'He does, your honour; and, more than that, he must not he crossed in his love of what is beautiful to the eyes that God gave him. God has given him pleasures of his own, and he shall never be stinted in them by me."

We shall preface the last scene, by observing that Ella was just on the point of marriage with Angus; and we must say, we think her avowal of long-hidden affection the very

" Your sister's wheel has never stood still all this while,' said Angus to the lads. shames us for being so idle. What shall we do next?' All bustled about upon this hint, and Ronald and Fergus made haste to their outdoor employments, supposing that Angus would accompany them. After letting them go out, however, he softly closed the door, and returned to Ella's side. He found no great difficulty in removing her feelings of displeasure at his long silence, when it was in his power to prove that he had indeed not been silent while he could persuade himself that he had encouragement to write. When Ella heard that he had been working for her all these five long years __ that he had supported his hopes upon their tacit agreement when they parted — that he had re-turned for her sake alone, having no other tie than the natural love of country; when, moreover, he declared his willingness to settle in this very place, and adopt her sisterly cares as his own; — when he kissed Archie's forehead, and promised to cherish him as tenderly as herself, Ella had nothing to say. She shed tears as if she had been broken-hearted, instead of finding healing to a heart sorely wounded; and the only thing Angus had to afflict him, was the thought how much each had suffered. 'They that have called me proud and severe, said Ella, when she began to return his confidence, 'little knew what a humbled spirit I bore within me, and how easily I feared I should forgive at the first word. They little guessed, when they bid me not be so careful and troubled about whatever happened, that all these things were like motes in the sunbeam to me, compared with the hidden thoughts from which my real troubles sprang. When they half laughed at me and half praised me to my father, as being like a mother to these growing lads, they did not know that it was because I spent on them the love I could not spend as a wife, nor how glad I was that my cheek withered, and that years left their marks upon me, that I might fancy myself more and more like their mother indeed. If you see me grow young again, and be made sport of like a girl by these tall youths,' she continued, smil-ing through her tears, 'you will have to an-swer for it, Angus. Will you take the venture? You were ever the merry one, however, and my part was to be grave for us both. Are we to play the same part still, to keep the brothers in order?' "

We shall only premise that it is the wedding jaunt they are speaking of.

"' Take care of yourself and Archie till the morn, said Ronald, 'and then be up with the sun—bright may he shine!—and see us cut across the sound; and be sure ye await us at off from the quay now,' said Fergus; 'since we have to bear down due south some way, and we can easily carry the boat over the bar. Angus thought the same. Just as they were hoisting the bark on their shoulders, the young Murdochs came up; Rob to ask a passage a little way down the sound, and the girls to keep Ella company for a while. 'Archie is in his merriment to-day,' said one; 'he has scarce ceased dancing since he heard the music.' 'He knows what is doing now,' observed the other; 'see him climbing to the top to see them push off.' The girls and Ella then walked slowly up the path from the beach to a point whence they might watch the boat set off, and trace it for a considerable way. It was a bright and serene afternoon; there were no rough gales abroad, and the swell of the sea was no greater than in the calmest days of that The air was so clear, that the mountain lights and shadows were distinctly visible. as their peaks rose one behind another on the eastern horizon. Within the shadow of the Storr the water was of the deepest green, while beyond, long streaks of glittering light extended from island to island, and grew broader as the sun descended. The little boat pushed off from the quay in good style, with two pair of oars, the three boatmen of Ella's household having waved their bonnets and cheered before they stept in, in honour of the spectators. It was necessary to pull strongly and evenly till they should have crossed the rapid current which flowed round the Storr: but Rob, heedless of this, and remembering that he had not cheered and waved his bonnet, suddenly started up. threw down his oar, destroyed the balance, and unset the boat. What shrieks rang from rock to rock, as the bark tumbled in the current. and the rowers were borne, in spite of their struggles, down, down, far and fast, by the sweeping waters! Ella clasped her hands above her head, and uttered no sound after the first shriek. Her companions ran hither and thither with loud lamentations. The people at the farm did what these girls should have done; they ran down with all speed to desire Murdoch to get out his boat. 'There's one safe!' cried Meg; 'the rock is but just above the water, but he is sitting upon it.' 'O God!' groaned Ella, 'save me from praying which it may be!' Another soon appeared on which t may be: Another soon appeared on the same point; but nothing could yet be seen of the other two. Archie had beheld all this, and more: he could overlook Murdoch's proceedings also from his pinnacle. He was strongly wrought upon; for no one understood better the signs of emotion, whether or not he understood the cause. He acted with rapidity and strength, as if suddenly inspired by reason; but, alas! his energy could only manifest itself in the way of imitation. The moment he saw Murdoch's boat hastily launched, he ran down to his 'floating-place,' as he called it, rolled his cask into the water, and got into it. Murdoch alone saw him standing up and waving his bonnet, before he reached the eddy, which could not but be fatal to him. The cask came up again, empty, and floated round the point, as Archie had no doubt foreseen it would, and as Archie had no doubt foreseen it would, and at length arrived within Fergus's reach, and was the means of saving him. He clung to it, not aware of the nature of the friendly support, till taken up by Murdoch's boat. The two till taken up by Murdoch's boat. The two who had reached the rock were Angus and Ronald; and Rob had had his wits so sharpened

she alone being ignorant of what had happened at the Storr. When she joined her brothers on the beach, they stood a moment aloof from her embrace, with countenances in which there was as much of solemn compassion as of grief. Angus was down upon his face; Murdoch alone uttered a few broken words. It was some time before she could comprehend or would believe what had happened; and then she was the only one who retained her self-command. An expression of unspeakable anguish passed over her countenance as Fergus mourued that he had been saved by Archie's loss. 'Nay, Fergus,' said she, 'let us leave it to Him who guides us, to shew whose life had best be taken, and whose left. God knows I strove for this before I knew His pleasure; and now that we do know it, let us question neither the purpose nor the means. Let us devoutly bless Him that you are here.' While Angus took her home, the neighbours dispersed in search of the body, which could not, however, be found, and was supposed to have been carried by the current far out of reach. When all had gone home for the night, and her companions had for some time retired to hide their grief, or to forget it for a while in sleep, Ella stole out alone, and passed the night among the rocks; a night whose natural beauty was worthy to succeed to that of the day that was gone. It was light; and this it was which. giving the faint hope of recovering the body, took Ella abroad. The red lights of the west had not wholly vanished when the gray dawn began to glimmer, while, in mid sky, the stars twinkled as if in rivalship of the sparkles below. The sea was, as it often is in that region, highly luminous; and as Ella sat watching the eddy within which Archie had sunk, her eve marked, and not without pleasure even now, the gleam which broke on the crest of every wave, and was scattered in showers of sparkles as far as the spray could reach. There she was found by Angus at day-break. 'You have not been in his cave?' said he. ' No,' replied Ella. ' I will go there first when you and the lads have left me.' 'Left you! and when will that be?' 'In a few hours, I hope,' she replied, smiling. 'I must see that Archie is still honoured by being kept apart from that in which he had no share. The business of our days went on without him while he lived, and it shall go on now, if it were only to shew that he bore no part in it. You must perform your promises to our neighbours, Angus, and discharge their business, and then you can come back to me with an easy mind.' will,' replied Angus; 'and I will not ask you while the state of Archie beneath the cross beside my father. This will either be done or given up before your next voyage, and then I will go. For some hours of the morning of their intended marriage day, Angus and Ella were wandering along the shores, engaged in the most melancholy search in which eye and heart can be employed. At length Angus pointed to a sign which could scarcely be misunderstood. He had observed an osprey winging its flight for some distance over the sea, and now per-ceived that it was joined by another, and that both were hovering as if about to stoop. Endeavouring to scare them with cries, he hastened by the plunge, as to perceive that he had better not leave hold of the oar he had clung to at first. He, too, was taken up; so that Ella believed ing the object of their search. Archie lay, as that all had come safe out of this awful peril, if asleep, on a beach of fine sand, still grasp. The others are Hans Egode, Klernander, Hosker, &c.

ing the bosom of his plaid, which contained the gathered treasures of the day. - Long were those weeds and feathers kept as memorials of Archie's pleasures: they were Ella's only hoard. Angus returned from his first vovage with the lads in safety, and in time to lav Archie's head in the grave. This done, Ella acknowledged that no duty remained to prevent her fulfilling all her promises. She accompanied him the next week to Oban, and re-turned his wife."

We need scarcely point attention to the various talent displayed even in this extract the uncommon mixture of clear reasoning and of deep pathos. Miss Martineau has all Miss Edgeworth's happy management of circumstances and their consequences, her rectitude of principle, her penetrating judgment, and her constant moral aim; but she has farther—a warm sensibility, a feeling for natural beauty, a richness of imagination, and a meek and earnest sense of religion. We know no library in which her works are not worthy to have place; and to the general class of readers their value is incalculable: for, to use Madame de Stael's fine expression, "There are ages to come for the good that truth will work;" and the truth is here set forth in a most attractive, yet most simple form.

How very highly we think of what she has done, the devotion of so large a portion of the Literary Gasette to five tiny volumes, of about 140 pages each, will testify. We were much struck by the first which appeared; and if we waited to wast it towards deserved popularity by our best report, it was only to see if similar excellence would mark its successors. We can now safely pronounce of the whole design and its execution, that they are admirable.

Select Library, Vol. VI.: Lives of Eminent Missionaries. By John Carne, Esq. 12mo. London, 1832. Fisher, Son, and Co.

WE have mentioned this volume as forthcoming, in our Literary Notices, and we are glad now to speak of it from the perusal of several of the memoirs which it presents to the public—namely, those of John Eliot, and C. F. Swartz; from which we can safely infer that these Lives of Eminent Missionaries will be, as they richly deserve, eminently popular. Mr. Carne has entered into the fine and pure spirit which animated the good men whose labours and adventures he records in an appropriate style; and he displays their religious feelings and seal, without cant and without exaggeration. Thus his narrative is at once simple and interesting: it leads the reader along, his mind in the true tone for partaking in the incidents related, and gradually improved by the self-devoted example placed before his eyes in the humble and apostolic missionary.

Until the whole volume has been under consideration, we abstain from farther opinion; and only sustain what we have fairly said, by a quotation descriptive of the early proceedings of John Eliot, who in the summer of 1631 embarked for New England, and reached Bosoftentimes at that period," when steam was undreamt of. In 1646, having studied their language, and nobly prepared himself for the task, he set out on his mission to the wild Indians. A town was built, and civilisation advanced rapidly.

"It must be admitted (says Mr. Carne) that this people of the wilderness surrendered many feelings, and even passions, that were very dear to them. Could any influence less than a made up by this death; but the young man course had subsisted between them. His applidivine one, induce them to yield the love of revenge, of war, of cruelty; the stealthy march through the forests, where scarcely a broken branch or a crushed leaf betrayed their footstep: the ambush, the surprise, the tomahawk and its deadly work: what were walled towns, and matted floors, and peaceful meals, to the burning and delicious excitement of this wild and savage life? The only obedience the chief of the Rechabites required of his people in the Scripture, was to drink no wine, and to live in tents in the wilderness, and never in walled towns; an artful blending of a bitter with a welcome thing-for the sweetness of a wandering and unfettered life would make the loss of wine a light privation: to this day (for their descendants still exist) they have never broken their vow. And who can persuade an Arab to leave his deserts and dwell quietly, even in a palace? But Eliot went forth to assail all that was dear to these stern and gloomy men. It was like Christian in the 'Progress' loosening the bars and bolts of the dwelling of Despair and Cruelty, and rushing forth at once into light and freedom. In the heart of the savage there lived also some noble and redeeming qualities; he could be faithful, even unto death, to the friend or the stranger who had dwelt beneath his roof, or sat under the shadow of the same tree. He could be generous also: could endure all tortures, rather than shew weakness or fear. 'An instance of this occurred,' says Bossu, 'when the French were in possession of New Orleans: a Chactaw, speaking very ill of them, said the Collapissas were their slaves; one of the latter, vexed at such words, killed him with his gun. The nation of Chactaws, the greatest and most numerous on the continent, armed immediately, and sent deputies to New Orleans to ask for the head of the murderer, who had put himself under the protection of the French. They offered presents, to make up the quarrel, but the cruel people would not accept any; they even threatened to destroy the village of the Collapissas. To prevent the effusion of blood, the unhappy Indian was delivered up to them: the Sieur Ferrand was charged with the commission. The Indian was called Tichou; he stood upright in the midst of his own people and of his enemies, and said, 'I am a true man, that is, I do not fear death; but I pity the fate of a wife, and four children, whom I leave behind me very young; and of my father and mother, who are old, and for whom I got subsistence by hunting.' (He was the best hunter in the nation.)

He had hardly spoken the last word of this short speech, when his father, penetrated with his son's love, rose amidst the people, and spoke as follows:—'It is through courage that my son dies; but, being young and full of vigour, he is more fit than myself to provide for his mother, wife, and four little children,-it is therefore necessary he should stay on earth to take care of them. As to myself, I am near the end of my career; I am no longer fit for any thing: I cannot go like the roebuck, whose course is like the winds, unseen; I cannot sleep like the hare, with my ears never shut: but I have lived as a man, and will die as such, —therefore I go to take his place.' At these words, his wife, his son, his daughter-in-law, and their little children, shed tears round the brave old man: he embraced them for the last time. The relations of the dead Chactaw accepted the offer: after that, he laid himself on the trunk of a tree, and his head was cut off of Massasoit; and though he felt not the same his death. The distresses of the Indians, the with one stroke of a hatchet. Every thing was regard or esteem for his son, a friendly inter-encroachments of the English on their settle-was obliged to give them his father's head: in taking it up, he said to it, ' Pardon me thy death, and remember me in the country of spirits. All the French who assisted at this event were moved even to tears, and admired this noble old man."

Speaking of Eliot himself, Mr. C. quotes Mather, and proceeds, "Eliot, Mather quaintly writes, 'was on such ill terms with the devil, as to alarm him grievously with the sound of his voice, when it rung, like a silver trumpet, through the silent forests and wastes, so as to draw the people from all sides to him.' His influence over their minds was certainly astonishing; and the 'simplicity of his intentions, the ardour of his spirit, and his dependence on Divine aid, were, no doubt, not a little assisted by the appearance of the outward man: and his eloquence and power in preaching increased. perhaps almost unconsciously to himself. To a man of strong imagination, these sermons in the wilderness borrowed 'wings, and light, and glory,' from the scenery around. If Wesley's discourses were observed to possess more vigour and beauty when he stood on the rugged shores of Cornwall, with the wild rocks and the wilder waves on every side, much more did Eliot's, when he spoke in the bosoms of the eternal forests of America, or on the shore of her mighty rivers. No man could tell of the things of immortality,' in such scenes, with the wave, the boundless plain, the awful gloom of the forests, like that of the shadow of death —the dark, solemn, and listening circle of warriors around-without feeling his fancy kindle, and his heart burn within him; how then felt Eliot, who wept night and day that he might bring the Indians to God ?"

From the success of his labours. Eliot received the title of " Indian Evangelist," and a society was instituted at home to assist " the propagation of the Gospel in New England." Mechanics were sent out to instruct the savages in the useful arts. Eliot translated and printed the Bible in their language; and the Psalter had great influence upon them. But we cannot here trace the variety and extent of his persevering efforts for more than the quarter of a century. "In the year 1674, the number of towns and settlements, in which in-dustry, comfort, good order, and the best instruction, were established, amounted to more than twelve, when an unforeseen event happened, that threw a cloud over all his prospects. This was the war in which the colonists of New England were involved with Philip, son of Massasoit, the celebrated chief, and, for the last years of his life, the firm friend of the English. 'O, thou sword of the wilderness, when wilt thou be quiet ?' says Mather, forgetful that it was bared by the aggressions of the settlers, as well as by the fierce and restless spirit of the Indian prince. Ever since the foundation of the colonies, the former had conducted themselves, says more than one divine of the period, with great kindness to their heathen brethren. The truth of this assertion is very doubtful. The missionary took no part in the disputes, save to urge his countrymen to forbearance and peace.

"Ere matters came to a fatal extremity, and all the evils of war were let loose on his settlements, Eliot did his utmost to turn them aside; he saw that many of his people would inevitably be involved with one party or the other. His town of Pakeunit was very near Mount Hope; he had visited the latter during the life cations to the colonists for peace being fruitless, he resolved to try them also on the former. A few miles only distant, the encampment of the Indians around their Mount was distinctly visible from Pakeunit; and Eliot, with two or three of his people, went to have an interview with the chieftain. Philip respected his character, though he disliked his proceedings, for he had always treated his mission with contempt and slight; among the warriors, however, both of his own and other tribes, were many who had heard Eliot preach, and had re-ceived him beneath their roof. The interview was without any success; the spirit of the Indian was made up to the desperate struggle, and all that could be done was to beseech him to spare the settlements of the converts. The contrast between the two men must have been sufficiently striking. Philip was in the prime of life, with a frame nerved by early hardship, and the usages of savage warfare, in which he was very expert; he was dressed like his chiefs, save that he wore a silver-laced tunic, or coat, and that his arms were more rich; his chief ensign of dignity was his princely, yet cruel and gloomy features, where the thirst of re-venge was stamped. The frame of the missionary was not bowed even by seventy years, though they had turned his hair white; the leathern girdle was about his loins that he always wore, and the simple apparel that he loved; he stood among these fierce and exasperated men as calm and fearless as in his own assembly at Naticke: he could not but foresee the devastation about to be let loose on the land; that the fire and the sword would waste all his pleasant places, and scatter his converts; and he returned with a heavy heart to his home."

Eliot lived to the age of ninety, and to repair many of the evils caused by this war, the accounts of which are most characteristic and deeply interesting. "When he could no longer leave his dwelling, the ruling passion was strong to the last; he caused a young Indian, in his primitive ignorance and darkness, to dwell with him, and, as life ebbed away, he occupied himself in teaching him passages from the Scripture, with as much ardour and diligence as if a chief of the desert was before him. A fever, with which he was attacked, compelled him to lay aside this employment, and he lay in the extremity of his sufferings. On one who had known little pain till the age of ninety, this known little pain till the age of ninety, this bodily agony fell heavily; but he said that death was no more to him than sleep to a weary man. 'The evening clouds are passing away,' he said; 'the Lord Jesus, whom I have served, like Polycarp, for eighty years, forsakes me not. O, come in glory! I have long waited for that coming; let no dark cloud rest on the work of the Indians; let it live when I am dead.' Ere his voice failed for ever, the last words it uttered were, 'Welcome! Joy!' and his toils were finished at nearly the age of ninety; what was yet a greater mercy, with a mind strong and unclouded to the close. His death produced a powerful impression in New England; it fell like a sudden surprise and alarm on the people, though they must have long looked for it. 'Bereaved land,' says a long looked for it. 'Bereaved land,' says a writer of the time, 'where are thy tears at this ill-boding funeral?' How hard it was to find a spirit like his, was quickly seen. It is much to be lamented, says the historian, that the zeal with which this work of mercy was conducted during his life, greatly diminished after his death. The distresses of the Indians, the trial.' These things existed during his life; but his talents, his unquenched enthusiasm, and exalted faith, mastered them all.'

We have only to add, that the volume contains also accounts of early missions to Tranquebar, Moravian missions, and other matters which cannot fail to make a strong impression on the public. The events are often so romantic, that the whole possesses a charm to attract even the reader for amusement, while the Christian world will be edified, and all improved by a familiar acquaintance with these striking travels and proceedings of very extraordinary men; and Mr. Carne has given himself a new and lasting claim to our gratitude by devoting his talents to so excellent a work.

Palgrave's Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth.—Saxon Period. 4to. Parts I. and II. Murray.

MR. PALGRAVE, by the extract from Locke, which he has adopted as a motto, informs us, that by commonwealth he means " not a democracy, or any form of government, but an independent community;" and then proceeds to discuss the constitution of the community of England. "Political events," he says, "generally occupy the first station in the pages of the historian; political institutions the second; with judicial policy and jurisprudence the third and last: but the character of the people mainly depends on their laws, and it is utterly impossible to obtain a correct view of the general administration of the state, unless we fully understand the spirit which pervades the community, and regulates the daily actings and doings of mankind." To all this we cordially adhere, and fully admit the truth, that legal history best illustrates political history, and that without a knowledge of the former, we can conceive but an erroneous idea of the latter.

Mr. Palgrave's first Part consists of twentyone chapters, in which he gives the results of his investigations and researches, with his opinions. The second Part is an appendix of proofs and illustrations, consisting of original documents, with comments upon them. The work has been five years in the press!—a period which has produced portentous events. A second volume is promised, in which is to be discussed "the further progress of the commonwealth to the accession of the House of Stuart, when, with the exception of the jurisdiction of the council, the constitution may be said to have settled into its present form.". We make no attempt to analyse and expound the very great mass of information collected in this volume respecting the political institutions of ancient Europe, the Celtæ, Belgæ, Welsh, Anglo-Saxons, Germans, Danes, Frisians, Swedes, Jutes, Angles, Franks, as well as the Goths and Visigoths of Italy and Spain; - all of which the indefatigable author has brought under the reader's consideration with great learning and industry, in such a way as will certainly add much to his reputation as an antiquary and historian.

The following panegyric on the English constitution is well put: — "In the fairest and most intelligent countries of Europe, the attainment of a form of government assimilated to the English constitution, is either earnestly desired or has been successfully carried into The most splendid consequence of victory is the power of compelling a subject nation to adopt the laws and customs of the con-ments, and several other things of a painful na-ture, brought the missionary ardour to a severe stained triumphs which England has thus gained by the voluntary submission of her enemies, her rivals, and her friends?" Page 7. This was written in 1828; since which England herself has been busied with the subject of improving or changing these boasted institutions

Mr. Palgrave has certainly convinced us, though it rather seems not himself, that the witenagemot was not a legislative council, and that no legislative assembly, either hereditary or delegated, ever existed amongst our Anglo-Saxon ancestors; the Saxon kings might, and did, no doubt, consult their witan, or council, their wise men or nobles, as the absolute monarchs of Europe do their privy council: but no evidence has hitherto been adduced that those nobles had any inherent or any other legislative power, but what the will of the sovereign gave for the occasion. We therefore think Mr. Palgrave appears to have been influenced by the common patriotic infirmity of Englishmen, to whom their free and glorious constitution is " so much an object of veneration, and almost idolatry, that they cannot be satisfied to seek its origin amongst sources similar to those from which have sprung the institutions of other nations, but must search for it in the clouds and mists of antiquity, and the camps of their northern ancestors,—and, indeed, any where but in its true locality, and therefore have been led into a labyrinth of contradictions and anomalies."

In the Proofs and Illustrations, p. ccxviii. et seq., are given copies of certain Anglo-Saxon charters, with the names of the witnesses; to these, as side-notes, are attached "consent of the witenagemot," "confirmation of the witenagemot,"and similar remarks—as if the author wished to infer that the consent or confirmation of the witenagemot was necessary to legalise these charters. The same might, we think, be said of the Norman charters, the His testibus, W. Canc. J. Thess, &c. &c.; yet hitherto no one has dreamed of considering these as any thing more than witnesses to the execution of the charter. and of the genuine character of the document. In p. ccxxiii. is a grant of Æthelred, Basileus of Britain A.D. 999, granting Cerne to the church of Abingdon, at the prayer of the great men, "precatu optimatum meorum," which is translated "at the prayer of the witam;" and at the end of the document is the side-note "confirmation of the witam," opposite the names of the witnesses.

" His testibus consentientibus quorum inferius nomina karaxuntur. Ego Æthelred Rex Anglorum hoc taumate agiæ crucis roboravi. Ego Ealfric Dorobernensis ecclesiæ archiepiscopus ejusdem Regis benevolentiam subscrips. Ego Ealdulf Eboracensis ecclesiæ archipræsul hilari vultu consensi. Ego Ælfheah præsul sigillum sancti crucis impressi. Other bishops corroboravi, consolodavi, confirmavi, dejunxi, annotavi, subscripsi, acquievi, consignavi, non renui, conclusi. Ego Ælfthrida mater ejusdem regis fautrix extiti. Ego Æthelstan filius ejusdem regis non interdixi." Then follow the Then follow the signatures, Ego Uulfgar gaudens dictavi, Ah-bas, four other abbots, and six ministers. We really cannot see the grounds on which Mr. Palgrave concludes these parties to be the witenagemot. The bishops and abbots would, with delighted countenances, approve of a grant to the church; but better evidence than these surmises-for they are nothing more than surmises-must be adduced before the legislative character is admitted; and we confess we are not satisfied that such conclusions should have document of historical value transcribed.

been drawn from such premises by any one so able and so accustomed to weigh the effect and import of evidence as Mr. Palgrave.

It appears a favourite hypothesis with Mr. Palgrave, that the Saxons derived from the conquered Britons a knowledge of the imperial Roman institutions; though we doubt much whether this theory can be sustained. At the time of the Saxon invasion the Britons were comparatively a civilised and Christian people; but we learn from Bede, that the Saxons for two centuries after were almost altogether illiterate, and received their Christianity and letters from Ireland; for what is called the Saxon character is substantially the same as that used in the most ancient Irish MSS.; and, indeed, is in use with the Irish to the present day. Our opinion is, that the Saxons nearly, if not entirely, extirpated the British race in the parts which they conquered, and despised them too much to adopt their manners or laws in any respect. Had the conquerors amalgamated with the conquered, it is almost impossible but that a part of the learning and acquirements of the Roman British people must have been imbibed by the succeeding generation of the conquerors; yet we find from Bede they were sunk into the lowest state of ignorance and illiterate barbarity.

Those parts of Mr. Palgrave's work which explain customs, and the peculiar administration of the criminal and municipal law of the Anglo-Saxons, are of great research and value; with, perhaps, a little want of arrangement, and a disposition to draw some conclusions rather fancifully and which the premises do not warrant. This, in the midst of the learning and industry every where so apparent, is, however, the only point against which the hypercritical antiquary can insinuate an objection. In all the rest, Mr. Palgrave is deserving of the highest praise, and his work of the utmost public consideration. The original documents he has printed as proofs are extremely curious and valuable, and throw light into many dark recesses which have bitherto eluded, and al-The narrative of most defied, investigation. the suit of Richard de Anesty for the recovery of the lands of "William my Uncle," most graphically exhibits the manner of administering the laws, as well as the state of society, in the reign of Henry the Second; it is, however, too long for us to extract. The controversy between the Abbot of Battle and Hillary, Bishop of Chichester, is also full of interest and valuable information. The laws of William the Conqueror in the Latin text, now first published from the Harleian MS. No. 744, in juxta-position with the French copy from the Holkham MS. No. 228-are also of great worth and importance; as is the summary of Anglo-Saxon history, or tables of the succession of the Anglo-Saxon, Danish, Pictish, and Scottish princes, which will greatly facilitate the acquirement of the true history of those times: without such help it could scarcely be accurately understood.

We are, indeed, but just now beginning to ascertain the true history of the early periods of our national existence. The ponderous tomes published by the Record commission have demonstrated that the history of England still remains to be written; and although they have, we believe, cost the nation much more than they ought, and may not have been executed as perfectly as they might have been, yet we trust they will not be altogether abandoned, but that the new commissioners will, with due economy and circumspection, at all events, have every

Mr. Palgrave's second volume will embrace the period in which Sir William Betham, in his work which we reviewed in last year's Gazette, has treated of the origin and progress of the constitutional legislature of the United Kingdom. In our No. 738 (p. 166), convinced of the justness of the views of that gentleman, we expressed our belief that his work would become a class-book; we therefore feel no small self-complacency that our prophecy has been so soon fulfilled. J. S. Park, Esq., the learned and judicious professor of law at the King's College, in his lecture on the 6th of January (to whose own production we also so lately referred), told his class, that from the reports of the Lords' Committees on the dignity of the peerage, and the recent publication by Sir William Betham, "he thought they would gain a clearer conception of the real character of the early periods of the constitution than from any other existing publication on the subject."

To this we have now to add all the mass of intelligence for which we are indebted to Mr. Palgrave's labours: intelligence which is of that sterling kind that it may be for ever resorted to with advantage when questions connected with our ancient national history are investigated.

Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry St. Leger, Esq. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

This is a pleasant collection of tales from

Froissart, that most naïve and amusing of historians. To these are prefixed introductions, taking modern views of those ancient times, and pointing out their errors. The arrangement of the work has been intrusted to Mr. Beazeley, who has evidently bestowed much pains and industry on his task. But while we admit the crimes that disfigured the period, and the necessity of guarding the mind against being dazzled by the romance of chivalry, we also think the writers before us have run into the opposite extreme. While setting forth the horrors of war, they do not sufficiently remember that war was then a necessary evil, and that while the sword was the only protection, it was a natural consequence that it would be rendered even undue honour. Again, it is true that the professors of chivalry often did not act up to their own principles; still, those principles were all that subdued or softened the spirit of the time. We have made no extract, as we take it for granted that the majority are familiar with the Chronicles of Froissart; and shall only recommend these volumes to our juvenile readers. They will find an immense mass of information most agreeably ar-

Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, held at Philadelphia, for Promoting Useful Knowledge. Vol. III. New Series. 4to. pp. 511. Philadelphia. Published for the Society.

As this is the only volume of the Transactions of this Society which we have seen, we cannot speak of its general transactions, except in so far as we may judge from the single specimen before us, the contents of which belong partly to the physical and partly to the moral sciences. The papers are nineteen in number, and of the following description :-

"Experiments to determine the Comparative Quanti-ties of Heat evolved in the Combustion of the Principal Varieties of Wood and Coal used in the United States for

"A Grammar of the Language of the Lenni Lenape,

" Description of Eleven New Species of North American Insects.

"Description of Six New Species of the genus Unio.
"On the Geographical Distribution of Plants.

"An Account of some Human Bones found on the Coast of Brazil, near Santas.

"Some Observations on the Moulting of Birds.

"Experiments made on the Poison of the Rattlesnake.
"On the Motions of Solids on Surfaces, in the Two Hypotheses of Perfect Sliding and Perfect Rolling, with a particular Examination of their small Oscillatory Motions.

Conchological Observations on Lamarck's Family of Naiades. " Some further Experiments on the Poison of the Rat-

"Some surface Experiment of the Family of Naiades, "Description of a New Genus of the Family of Naiades, including Eight Species, four of which are New. "Remarks on the Use of the Maxillæ in Coleopterous

" Description of a New Species of the Genus Astacus.
" Notice of an Anatomical Peculiarity observed in the Structure of the Condor of the Andes (Vultur gryphus,

"On the Construction of Eclipses of the Sun.
"Description of a Fragment of the Head of a New Fossil Animal, discovered in a Marl Pit near Moorestown,

New Jersey.
"Description of a New Genus and New Species of Ex-tinct Mammiferous Quadruped."

This list exhibits the nature of the inquiries on which our American brethren are engaged; and most of the papers display both philosophical ability and assiduous investigation-the only foundations for just deductions and useful knowledge.

Mr. Isaac Lea's memoir on the genus Unio is of considerable merit as an essay on natural history; and was, we think, noticed very favourably in the Edinburgh Journal of Science. The Indian grammar is also a curious contribution to our philological stores; but we must be content with general praise, seeing that these papers defy extract or illustration in our usual manner.

Illustrations of Aristotle on Men and Manners, from the Dramatic Works of Shakspeare. By J. Esmond Riddle, M.A. Pp. 134. Oxford, Parker; London, Rivington.

An elegant classical exercise in a modest dress. Translations of the Greek quotations would make such a little volume as popular as it is delightful; and an extension of the design might be one of the most interesting publications that can be conceived. Then would not the comparison be between only two mighty minds, but an inexhaustible record of the truth and force with which human nature had assimilated genius in all times and tongues. But who could do this?

Popular Zoology; comprising Memoirs and Anecdotes of the Animals in the Zoological Society's Menagerie, with Figures, &c. &c. 18mo. pp. 391. Hatchard and Son; Simp-kin and Marshall; Andrews; N. Hailes. WHEN we say that this volume is printed for John Sharpe, we have assured readers that it is an extremely neat and handsome perform-The embellishments by Williams are ance. excellent, though, in some instances, a little formal; the text amusing; the whole a pleasing guide to the Gardens; and, as far as it goes, a good manual of natural history.

The Mother's Medical Guide, &c. By the late R. Bradford and H. C. Bradford, M.R.C.S. &c. 8vo. pp. 76. London, 1832. Hatchard. In a country where excellent medical advice can every where be obtained, no consideration should, in our opinion, lead a mother to trust to herself for the removal of many of the severe complaints which are disposed of in the is from an American book, and deserves circulittle work before us,—as if the human frame lation in both countries.

could be breathed upon, and its evils dispelled. These considerations originate in pure humanity and philanthropy; but we are sorry to find, independently, that the advice given by the author for the treatment of many diseases, though in a few cases good, is almost always quite inadequate and incomplete; and we really cannot lend ourselves to instilling any kind of confidence, which, being founded in error, might be productive of mischief.

Tales and Novels. By Maria Edgeworth. Vol. III. Moral Tales, Vol. III. London, 1832. Baldwin and Co.

This pretty volume is worthy of its predecessors; and we must say, that library is incomplete which is without this elegant edition of so valuable a writer.

Byron's Narrative of the Loss of the Wager; with an Account of the great Distresses suffered by Himself and his Companions on the Coast of Patagonia, from the year 1740 till their Arrival in England in 1746. Pp. 219. London, 1832. Leggat and Co.

WHAT a favourite this book was of ours, and we doubt not of every juvenile reader into whose hands it may have fallen! No wonder it should have taken such hold on Lord Byron's mind: the poet, who clung with imaginative fondness to the honour bequeathed by his ancestors, would obviously be doubly impressed by the heroic bearing of the gallant admiral, when that admiral was his own grandfather. A taste for nautical adventure is a striking peculiarity in many of his poems; and to the pages before us this taste may fairly be ascribed. This edition is very neat, and brought out at a most judicious time, when every thing that can throw light on our great poet's mind must be of interest to the public. It will be an interesting companion to Murray's beautiful edition.

Selections from the Speeches and Writings of Lord Brougham. 8vo. pp. 259. London, Ridgway. THE Selections are very good, and afford fair grounds for estimating the various and com-manding talents of the eminent man from whom they emanated on many important occasions. The memoir of Lord Brougham prefixed, we are sorry to say, is very erroneous; as may be found by comparing it with the corrected sketch in Fisher's Portrait Gallery: for instance, it is here stated that Mr. Brougham went with Lord Hutchinson to St. Omer's, in June 1820, to negotiate with Queen Caroline; which is not the fact, though repeated in all previous biographies which we have seen.

Lindley's Guide to the Orchard and Kitchen Garden. 8vo. pp. 601. Second Edition. London, Longman and Co.

WE are glad to meet with a new edition of this valuable work, which contains all that the cultivator of fruit and vegetables can desire to know.

An Offering of Sympathy to Parents bereaved of their Children, &c. 18mo. pp. 228. London, Simpkin and Marshall; Derby, Mozeley and Son.

A WELL-MEANT compilation of original and selected matter, to anticipate, in some measure, the effect of time upon the afflicted mind. It

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE last meeting of the session took place on Wednesday week; the president, Mr. Murchison, in the chair. The Earl of Munster and others were admitted fellows.

Observations on the London clay of the Highgate Archway, by Mr. N. T. Wetherell, were read; and the remainder of the evening was occupied in the description of certain splendid remains of a Megatherium, collected and brought home by Mr. Woodbine Parish, late chargé d'affaires at Buenos Ayres, and found on the Rio Salado, about eighty miles distant from that place. A memoir, explanatory of the bones of this huge edentatous animal, by Mr. Clift, pointed out many parts, particularly the tail, as occurring among these remains, which are wanting in the well-known skeleton at Madrid. In the discussion that followed, the Rev. Dr. Buckland gave a very instructive exposition of the supposed habits of this giant of the edentata, — shewing that, while the bulk of many of its limbs far exceeded that of the corresponding parts of the elephant, the animal, judging from its osteology, was closely related to the sloth and to the ant-eater. Numerous other fossil remains were exhibited; and the most remarkable donation was a cast of the Plesiosaurus dilichodeirus, presented by Mr. Edward Hawkins, being the most perfect specimen of this species of Saurian which has ever been discovered. In allusion to the zoological subjects that were brought before the Society, all of which had been so ably expounded by Cuvier, the president took occasion to express the deep sense entertained by all geologists of the irreparable loss they had sustained in the death of that illustrious naturalist. The first Wollaston gold medal was exhibited, and the execution of the bust by Mr. Wyon highly approved. The rooms were crowded; and the Society adjourned till November.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

A. B. LAMBERT, Esq. in the chair. Read supplementary observations to the paper on the fecundation of Orchidea and Asclepiadea, already laid before the Society by Mr. Robert Brown. At the last meeting for the session, held on Tuesday evening, there was read a description of two species of fresh-water fish, not hitherto characterised, from Lancashire, by Mr. Yarrell, whose great knowledge of ichthyology is well known to the scientific world. One of these species is the graining,—a fish allied to the dace, but differing in its more slender form and colour, besides other characters. It has been noticed by Pennant, but neither named nor described by him; and Mr. Yarrell has therefore proposed for it the name of Leuciscus isabellinus. The other species is entirely new, and for it he proposes the appellation of Azurine, from its prevailing blue colour, and the systematic name of Leuciscus caruleus. The former is found in considerable plenty in the streams which fall into the Mersey below Warrington, and also in those which ultimately form the river Alt. The latter appears to be of much rarer occurrence, having been observed only in the township of Knows-For specimens of both species Mr. Yarrell is indebted to Lord Stanley, president of the Society. Flowering specimens of the Fuchsia, flowered gooseberry (Ribes speciosum), were exhibited from Mr. Lambert's collection were exhibited from Mr. Lambert's collection THE festival of this Society was celebrated a at Boyton House, Wilts; and a plant, in full few days ago at the Thatched House Tavern, flower, of the curious genus Francos appendi- St. James's; the Right Hon. C. W. W. Wynn, the windows of the Library will furnish much culata, was also exhibited from the Clapton the president, in the chair, supported by the Don, were likewise read.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

H. R. H. the President in the chair. Several papers were read; the first was an account of certain experiments with the magnetic needle on the western coast of Africa, by Captain Belcher, R.N. The author notices those frequent and sudden changes in magnetic intensity which take place in the neighbourhood of rocks of volcanic origin. In some cases, the needle suspended horizontally ceased to vibrate. The second was a curious paper on the substance called the "false tongue" in foals. This is a mass of coagulated albumen, found under the natural tongue; it has long been considered as a panacea by some, while others imagined it possessed talismanic powers: it is peculiar to the horse, and drops off soon after birth. The author is of opinion, that the absence of the substance causing a want in the mouth, the animal is directed to the teat as a substitute. The third paper was an account of the ornithorynchus, or duck-billed quadruped of New Holland,—one of the most remarkable of the mammalia class. The author notices the opinions of Shaw, Blumenbach, Cuvier, St. Hilaire, and, more recently, those of our clever countryman Sir Everard Home. As there are instances on record of birds hatching the egg in the belly and bringing forth the living bird, it may be assumed that the ornitho-rynchus is similarly characterised. It partakes more of the bird than of the quadruped. The titles of a number of other communications were read; amongst them there was one entitled "Hourly observations of the barometer, by Mr. Hudson;" a paper of great importance, from the valuable data it affords. Mr. Sadler, M.P., Lieut. Stratford of the Astronomical Society, and several other gentlemen, were introduced, and took their seats for the first time as fellows. The meetings were adjourned over the long vacation.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

MR. HAMILTON in the chair. Mr. Faulkner of Chelsea exhibited an impression of the great seal of John, Lord Mowbray, temp. Edward II. _a fine specimen of the baronial seals of that period. The arms of his maternal ancestors Clare and Braose) are introduced on the reverse, on banners placed on each side the shield of Mowbray. It was accompanied by a descriptive letter from Mr. John Gough Nichols; who also communicated a refutation of the late Mr. Hamper's conjecture on the inscription of the Croyland boundary stone, and a correction of the same gentleman's explanation of that on the seal of Kenilworth Mr. Knight communicated a description of Roman and other antiquities, of infinite variety, and the remains of the Roman road of Watling-street, discovered in making excavations for the New London Bridge and its approaches, illustrative of several drawings and plans exhibited by him. Mr. Ellis read a continuation of letters addressed to Lord Burleigh on the subject of the printers' monopolies, and complaining of infringements of patents and copyrights. Adjourned till November.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

nursery. Descriptions of both plants, by Mr. warm friends of the Institution; among these were Earl Munster, Sir Alexander Johnston, and many others. The tonets and sentiments were in connexion with literature me science: - the Oriental Translation Fund, the Asiatic Societies of Paris, of Calcutta, and a Bombay, &c.: the health of the chairman, and of Mr. Haughton the honorary secretary, who officiated as vice-chairman, were likewise given. as was that of Mr. Mackenzie, the son of the author of the "Man of Feeling." Mr. Mackenzie's health was very warmly received, and he acknowledged the honour in that unassuming manner for which his celebrated father was so remarkable.

The paper read at the last meeting was an account, by Col. Sykes, of the traditions, antiquities, and natural history of Hurrechundurgur, a hill fort situated above the ghauts, about fourteen miles N.N.W. of Joonur. Colonel Sykes first visited it in 1818, and a second time in 1828. Its antiquities are chambers cut in the rock, tanks, and temples originally dedicated to Siva, but subsequently used for the worship of Vishnu. The hill is entirely of the trap formation. After describing its natural productions, the author details some observations on its temperature at the top, in a village at its foot, and at Poona, several miles distant, of which a table is annexed to the paper.

The anniversary meeting of the subscribers to the Oriental Translation Fund takes place to-day.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY. (Seventh and concluding Notice.)

In the Library, besides the architectural examples intended for the adept, there are some painted for the general eye, and the pictorial character of which is therefore subject to our notice ; as

No. 968. An Idea of the Staircase leading to the Gates of Heaven. From Milton's Paradia Lost. J. Gandy, A.—In our admiration of the fine talents which Mr. Gandy has frequently evinced, and in our regret at the neglect which those talents have experienced, we yield to none: but in the present instance we are bound by justice to say that he has allowed his imagination to run riot, and that, instead of the sublime he has stumbled upon the ridiculous.

No. 992. Architectural Ruine, a Vision. Sir J. Soane, R.A .- A clever drawing, with a rich and harmonious tone of colour; but not possessing much of the "visionary."

No. 996. Pompeian Fragments. T. Scandrett. Brought together with great skill; and interesting from their form and variety in both character and tone.

No. 1025. Sketch of an Idea from the Iphigenia in Tauris of Euripides. J. Gandy, A.— Such ideas satisfy the mind, and are no less pleasing to the sight.

No. 1095. Monument. G. G. Wyatville.— As laconic in its title as it is simple and imposing in its effect.

No. 1099. View of the approved Design for a Chapel, to be erected at Kensall Green, for the General Cemetery Company. H. E. Kendall.Independently of its architectural merits, the construction of the building, and the scenery by which it is surrounded, render it highly attractive as a work of art. As a burial-place, the contemplation of it will excite other associations.

To the lovers of numismatic compositions, gratification. Among other beautiful specimens of this art are—No. 1048, Impressions from a pair of Medal-dies for the Winohester pressions from the Great Seal of England, B. College prixe-medal, S. Clint; No. 1049, Im-Wyon; No. 1054, Medallic Portraits of Lord Brougham and Vaux—an impression from a die, from a Bust by E. H. Baily, Esq. R.A., A. J. Stothard; No. 1080, The Coronation Medal, the Royal Academy of Arts prixe-me-dal, and the Botanical prixe-medal of the Society of Apothecaries of London, W. Wyon, A.; No. 1084, Three Intaglio Gems: Portraits of His Majesty, the Duke of York, and the Marquess of Anglesey; with impressions of the same; the property of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, J. De Veaux.

The Council-room contains several beautiful models of churches, public buildings, mansions, &c.; one of the most striking is, Model of St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, Miss Bessemes.

We will now conduct our readers into the Model Academy, with a previous assurance that they will there meet much that will delight them. One of its principal features is

No. 1171. Statue in Marble of the Right Hon. George Canning, executed, by Subscription, for his Friends and Admirers in Liverpool; and to be erected in the Town-Hall. F. Chantrey, R.A. - Certainly one of the most dignified statues that have ever appeared in this place. Its character and bearing seem to supersede the necessity of any thing decorative or orna-mental in costume. Elevated and self-collected, the lamented orator and statesman gathers round him his simple robe; the folds of which aid the composition, while they do not encum-ber the figure. We are not aware of the situation in which it is proposed to place this noble statue at Liverpool; but we are quite sure that a single inch higher than that in which it now stands will be injurious to its effect.

No. 1214. "'Tis only Nature lulled to Sleep." E. H. Baily, R.A.—From the upright we are called to the recumbent by as charming a model as ever met our admiring eyes. From the head to the extremities it is one line of grace and beauty; but every other fine quality which it possesses is surpassed by the expression of the countenance, to which the epithet "divine" may be applied with as much justice as to any of the most celebrated productions of ancient art. Since his "Eve," Mr. Baily has never executed so interesting a subject.

No. 1177. Statue to the Memory of Field-Marshal Earl Harcourt, &c. &c., to be placed in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. R. W. Sievier. — There is an identity (if we may use the expression) in this statue which must give it a high value in the eyes of all who knew the venerable original. The robes are well disposed, and are not of a character unsuitable to sculpture.

No. 1178. The Gipsy, a Status in Marble. R. Westmacott, R.A. Mr. Westmacott has given to his figure an elevation of sentiment more suited to a Grecian nymph than to one of the erratic tribe. It is, however, an admirable specimen of his taste and skill.

No. 1187. Venus and Cupid. J. Dinham. A circular sketch, tastefully composed, and well deserving of becoming a finished work.

No. 1211. Midsummer Night's Dream. W. Pitts.-A whimsical, and by no means an unsuccessful, essay of the artist's talents in the ludicrous. Puck, upon his mushroom throne, looking down with glee upon the minikin sprites by whom he is surrounded, ferms altogether a clever group.

No. 1112. Massacre of the Innocents. E. G. Papworth. No. 1138, A Group from the Murder of the Innocents. (This group obtained the gold medal at the last distribution of premiums at the Royal Academy.) S. W. Arnald.—Whatever the merit of these and similar compositions, they are not subjects for the public eye; and can be viewed by the artist or amateur only as academic exercises

No. 1159. Duncan's Horses. J. G. Lough. —An exceedingly spirited group, well calculated, in combination with Mr. Lough's former works, to shew his powers in the representation of energetic action.

No. 1172. The Cymbal Player, a Statue in Marble. R. Westmacott, jun.—We admire the fair proportion of this youthful figure, rather than the action, which is neither natural, nor in conformity with good composition.

No. 1225. Model of part of a Monument erected to the Memory of the late Earl of Pom-fret, at Easton, Northamptonshire. E. H. Baily, R.A.—Though not very novel in form and attitude, this grave and contemplative figure displays the taste and the fine feeling which generally distinguish Mr. Baily's works.

No. 1132. Statue of a Supplicating Virgin. L. Macdonald.—Although strongly imbued with the sentiment of the antique, Mr. Macdonald has nevertheless given to this sweet figure the air of an original composition.

Among the busts distinguished for character or execution, are No. 1146, Bust of the Earl of Harrowby, W. Behnes; No. 1147, Bust of John Crabb, Esq., J. Ternouth; No. 1150, Bust in Marble of his Majesty, J. Francis; No. 1166, Marble Bust of Lady Ashley, T. Campbell; No. 1169, Marble Bust of the late Dr. Bell, Founder of the Madras System of Education, S. Joseph; No. 1179, Model of a Bust of a Young Lady, E. H. Baily, R.A.; No. 1181, Bust of Admiral Sir Richard Keatts, W. Behnes; No. 1183, The Lord Augustus Fitsolarence, T. Sharp; No. 1185, Bust in Marble of the Earl of Essex, J. Francis; No. 1199, Marble Bust of a Lady, R. Westmacott, jun.; No. 1204, Bust of the Marquess of Bristol, W. Behnes; No. 1208, Bust in Marble of Colonel Wyndham, 10th Regiment of Mussars, J. E. Carew. These, with No. 1216, Statue of a Child, S. Grimsby; No. 1220, Sons of Beilby Thompson, Eq., M.P., R. J. Wyatt; and No. 1213, Model of part of a Monument about to be seected at Milbrook, near Southampton, to the Memory of a Lady, E. H. Baily, W. Behnes; No. 1183, The Lord Augustus ampton, to the Memory of a Lady, E. H. Baily, R.A.; and several by Turnerelli; are among the principal attractions of the sculpture depart. ment of the Royal Academy.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Picturesque Memorials of Salisbury. No. III. Ir the embellishments of this pleasing topographical publication make no pretension to the higher qualities of art, they are at least curious, simple, and unaffected.

Practical Hints upon Landscape Gardenina: with some Remarks on Domestic Architects as connected with Scenery. By W. S. Gilpin, Esq. 8vo. pp. 228. London, Cadell; Edinburgh, Blackwood.

THE name of Gilpin is inalienably associated with the improvement of English landscape and picturesque beauty, whether limited to the garden and ahrubbery, or extended over large tracts of country. Nor will the present work, by an inheritor of that name, detract from its

E. mentary point than his able predecessor, Sir the Uvedale Price; and consequently his book may be consulted from first to last, from original idea to finish, by every one engaged in laying out and decorating grounds, in improving houses, and in spreading over distance the charms of varied scenery.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

MORNING POST ADVERTISEMENTS.

SIR WALTER SCOTT has hitherto been considered unrivalled in his descriptions of scenery; but a rival to his talents has lately started up, in the person of Mr. George Robins, and chiefly in the columns of the Morning Post. Week after week, landed property "lives in description, and looks green in song;" parks are un-paralleled in perfection; and villas are equally domestic and delightful. But the imagination of the poet-auctioneer soared last Monday week to such a height, in describing the domains of " the respected proprietor of Greenway Mansion," that we should not fulfil our profession, of taking a general view of literature in the Gasette, did we not notice this effusion. After stating that all tourists must retain a lively recollection of some of the scenery's " imposing features," he proceeds : " To such he feels that no apology will be due for this endeavour to extend the publicity and great renown of Greenway's famed bay; nor will he be charged by those who have partaken of this great treat, with having too highly coloured the landscape that is to follow. To do it justice, and yet avoid the charge of making the picture too vivid, is by no means an easy task; and, conscious of the feeble hand that has to portray many of the beauties of this fairy land, it may in truth be stated that he approaches the task with almost fear and trembling. The mansion in its outward form is chaste and uniform; but it does not manifest the extraordinary comfort and good taste that prevails within. It is placed in a park of much natural beauty; its spreading foliage, and the delightful and rare inequality of the grounds, are protected on one side by hills of a fearful height; while the other extends to the almost impervious woods and plantations, which gently recline to the water's edge. It is apprehended that there is no parallel case, where the stately oak is seen feathering to the ground, and, as it reaches the shore, proudly defying the wintry winds or summer heat. The healthy appearance of the woods is a pretty strong symptom indicative of health, and consequent longevity; and it may be added, that East Indians, and invalids disposed to pulmonary attacks, will find this abode a very great solace. The cli-mate yields not in its influential powers to the south of France. The woodland scenery within this demesne extends itself in all directions, and is diversified by so much hill and aided by distant and mountain scenery, where the verdure is conspicuous to the mountain top, that it will not fail to re-mind the beholder of the beauty and wildness of Switzerland; while the River Dart, flowing in placid beauty, pursues its irregular and cironitous course, and winds in so many varied forms about this earthly paradise. Indeed, so perfect is the illusion, that it really puts on the appearance of enchantment rather than reality. The Yacht Club would recreate amid this splendid scenery, and yet be ever and anon pursuing their aquatic amusements; and for credit. On the contrary, we find it practical, a grand regatta, the bay of Greenway affords judicious, temperate, and ruled by a fine and the most irresistible claims. Little has yet sound taste. The author begins at a more element of the manion custom forbids a lengthened panegyric; it will suffice to say, that a nobleman, or retiring banker or merchant, will possess within this abode every thing that the most fastidious can desire. In fine, it would be to encounter a severe task to find out a comfort that is not conspicuous here. Salmon weighing 20 lbs. are frequently caught on this shore "!!!

From the poetry of natural, we proceed to that of artificial life: a sale at the Pantechnicon is thus announced. "Costly assemblage of furniture in the taste of Holland. It may be invidious to compare the present style of England with the varied taste of Holland; but it is respectfully suggested, that the march of improvement, however dormant in other matters connected with our Dutch friends, is at least conspicuous here. It is, however, preferred that ocular demonstration be sought in preference to the imperfect praise of the individual to whom this property is consigned; and he therefore submits it to their decision, with an assurance that the company assembled will be the sole arbiters of their fate, and at such prices as they may in their wisdom think fit to give."

We must select a few other specimens of our author's talents from the sheet of the Morning Post, daily devoted to their exercise. It is modestly insinuated that the mansion house of Greenham Manor "may not pretend to all the consequence of Compton Castle, but it claims to partake all the qualifications essential to constitute a gentlemanly The residence in the neighbourhood abode. is known as the abode of hospitality and comfort. The property is in the very heart, or, what may be better understood, is in the Garden of Somerset. But even this is not all: the river Tone flows through this delightful little domain, quietly pursuing its irregular course, and not unfrequently (in time of need) affording most salutary and refreshing aid to the meadows contiguous. In fact, the only difficulty that could present itself, would be to discover what advantages it does not possess, and that to an eminent degree."

A tone of amiable candour pervades the next advertisement, recommending Dr. Munro's residence. It is stated that for twentythree years it was found to be "fully equal to afford all the legitimate wants of Dr. Munro's extensive family." Next its dignity is vindicated; for "it should be observed. that this delightful place was never required for the doctor's professional pursuits; but it must not be disguised, that much of internal as well as external decoration will be required ere this unpretending but HAPPY SEAT OF QUIETUDE AND REPOSE will harmonise with the views of a family of importance." had nearly omitted one great recommendation, that "it is most delightfully placed within one short mile of Bushy, thus participating in all the agrémens of that social village, and sufficiently removed, so as not to be within the reach of any of the inconveniences arising from a too friendly intercourse"!!!

We regret that our limits forbid our doing justice to the deep feeling with which Mr. Robins paints his gratification at having "the good fortune to be directed by the executors of the Lady Eleanor Butler and Miss Ponsonby to offer for unreserved competition, THE LITTLE PARADISE, so long hallowed as the abode of friendship!" We have only space for the gravel-walk. "The wavy and shaded gravel-walk which encircles this Elysium is enriched with curious and rare shrubs and flowers. It is nothing IN EXTENT, but every Turkish styles of architecture."

• We had forgotten a "Classic Cottage" on the bank of Father Thames (Walsh Porter's we believe), which unites the "Greek, Roman, Gothic and Egyptian, and Turkish styles of architecture." gravel-walk which encircles this Elysium is thing in grace and beauty, united with a great variety of foliage!"

Such is the eloquence and the poetry with which the columns of the Morning Post abound! We have often admired the talents of Mr. Bull how in prospective The Democrat seemed Mr. Attwood put into a novel - and how Chantilly excited the public mind to such a state of feverish curiosity, that really "serious con-sequences were expected." We have admired the versatility of Mr. Warren, who presses all things into the service of his blacking, from the Emperor of Russia and his Cossacks to the cat and her kittens; but Mr. Robins takes a higher flight of poetical sublimity; and we conclude by applying to him the old epigram: ---

"The power of Nature could no farther go — To make a third she joined the other two."

N.B. Why is the river Dart like a dissipated young man? Because "it pursues irregular courses." We throw this out as a hint to our author.

FRANCE.

Population of France. ... In France the census of the population is taken once in five years; and successive operations have proved, that it is one of the countries in which the increase is the slowest. The census of 1827 shewed an augmentation of about 1,400,000 inhabitants above that of 1822. The total returns in 1827 were 31,858,394: the census of 1832 giving a total of 32,560,934, the increase appears to be 702,540, which shews that the ratio of increase was but half in its intensity in these last five years; and yet it was already lower in France than in almost any other part of the civilised world. If this decrease were to continue, we should in ten years see the population of France retrograde, while it was advancing in all other parts of Europe. It is already in a state of relative retrogradation. The examination of the official statements for each province in particular, will shew that in the last five years seven departments have established a diminution, instead of an increase of population. They are Calvados, Cantal, Ile-et-Vilaine, Maine-et-Loire, La Manche, Mayenne, and La Seine.

The official population of all those departments in 1827 was
It is reduced in 1832 to 3,753,813 - 3,637,197 116.616 Diminution

Of which the department of the Seine has lost 78,000 inhabitants, and La Manche 20,000. The enormous falling off in the department of the Seine may be accounted for, at least in part, by political events. By the late official returns of the population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, it appears that the population may be stated in round numbers at 25,000,000; and if no change takes place in the elements which determine the actual movement of the population in the two countries, many years will not pass before the narrow territory of Great Britain, little fa-voured as it is by nature, will maintain as many, and more, inhabitants than the vast and fertile region occupied by the French nation. We have just seen the decrease in the population of the department of the Seine, that is to say, of Paris, in the last five years; that of London, on the contrary, which in 1821 was only 1,275,000 inhabitants, is now 1,530,000,—an increase of 20 per cent.

Statistics of France.

Net revenue of all financial property

Excess of raw productions, or revenue of all the agents of cultivation, including the land produce used, as horses, cattle, wool, &c.

francs. 1,531,508,000

3,118,770,000

Revenues, salaries, or profits of all the agents of commerce and of mamufac-tures, including all professions except-ing those paid by the government

1,746,511,00

Total of the general revenue before the levy of the taxes, octrois, &c. Population of the kingdom taken at 6,396,789,000 32,252,000

The sum total of the revenue, equally divided among the population, would give, therefore, to each individual 198 france, and 33 centimes per annum; or 54 centimes per diem, if the whole revenue were not subject to the taxes. As this sum is not equally distributed, we may, in order to represent all the shades of affluence and indigence, divide the population into twelve classes, of which the first six contain only 2,252,000 individuals, and the second six 30,000,000, viz.

Classes.	No. of Persons.	Total Revenue.	Perbeac per ann
_			fr. c	fr. c.
1	152,000	608,000,000	4,000 0	10 96
2	150,000	375,000,000		6 85
3	150,000	150,000,000	1,000 0	2 74
4	400,000	240,000,000	600 0	1 64
5	400,000	160,000,000	400 0	1 10
6	1,000,000	350,000,000	350 0	0.96
7	2,000,000	600,000,000		0 82
8	2.000.000	500,000,000	250 0	0.69
9	3,500,000	700,000,000	200 0	0.55
10	7,500,000	1,125,000,000		0 41
11	7.500.000	900,000,000	120 0	0 33
12	7,500,000	688,789,000		0 25
	32,252,000	6,396,789,000

From this summary, we see that 224 millions of persons, forming the last three classes, are reduced to provide for all the wants of life with 8 sous, 64 sous, and 5 sous per day respectively. We should find it difficult to conceive the possibility of this, were it not proved that 74 millions of Frenchmen eat little or no bread; that barley, rye, flummery made of buck-wheat, chestnuts, pulse, a moderate quantity of potatoes, and water, are the only subsistence of that part of the population, which has no fuel but stubble and furze. Fixing the sum strictly necessary at 50 centimes (10 sous) per day, there would be wanting 1,400,529,000 france as the sum total of the revenue.

NEW VARIETY IN THE HUMAN SPECIES. WINKELMAN had perceived that the ear was invariably placed much higher in the Egyptian statues than in the Greek; but he attributed this singularity to a system in Egyptian art, of elevating the ears of their kings, in the same way as the Grecian artists had exaggerated the perpendicularity of the facial angle in the heads of their gods.

M. Dureau de la Malle, on his visit, in May 1831, to the Museum at Turin, so rich in Egyptian monuments, was particularly struck with this peculiarity in all the statues of Phta, Meris, Osymandyas, Rhamses, and Sesostris.

Six mummies recently arrived from Upper Egypt were at that time under examination, and afforded him the means of ascertaining whether this special character of the higher situation of the orifice of the ear really existed in the sculls of the natives of the country. He was much astonished to find in these, as well as in many other sculls from the same place, of which the facial angle did not differ from that of the European race, that the orifice of the ear, instead of being, as with us, on a line with the lower part of the nose, was placed on a line with the centre of the eye. The head in the region of the temple was also much depressed, and the top of the scull elevated, as compared with those of Europe, from one and a half to two inches. It is somewhat strange that this observation has hitherto escaped the notice of so many savans and travellers who have traversed Egypt. As a striking corroboration of so singular a conformation, which may not inaptly be considered the Egyptian type, and a new variety in the Caucasean race, M. Dureau cites as an example M. Elias Boctor, a Copt, native of Upper Egypt, who has been twenty years in Paris, and is a professor of Arabic. He was well known to M. Dureau, who had constantly remarked the great elevation of his ears, which indeed had the appearance of two little horns. The Hebrew race resemble the Egyptians in many respects. M. Dureau examined and found that the ears of M. Carmeli, a Jew, professor of Hebrew, although not placed so high as in the mummies or Copts of Upper Egypt, were still very remarkable as compared with those of the natives of Europe.—Revue Encyclopédique.

DRAMA.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, June 11 .- The first night of Robert le Diable, Bertram could not get the earth to open and swallow him, in spite of all his efforts. Finding his stamping on the trap-door of no avail, he quietly walked out of sight, making a most lame and impotent conclusion to the interest of the drams. The nuns here are worse contrived than at any of the other theatres; for, previous to their animation, when they are supposed to be mere statues, they all conspicuously exhibit satin sandalled shoon, flowing ringlets, and well-rouged cheeks!

Haymarket, June 18 .- Owing to some botching in the last scene of Hamlet, all the concluding incidents were huddled together and transposed in a most edifying manner. The Queen did not know when to drink the poison, or Laertes when to fall; and Kean was therefore obliged to keep on fencing so much longer than he intended, that he became utterly exhausted, and instead of impetuously rushing to kill the King, with the words,

"Then, venom, to thy work! Here, thou incestuous, murderous, damned Dane! Follow my mother!"

he literally spoke them, leisurely hobbling along the stage, and using his sword as a walking-stick. The King stood quietly and coolly looking on, and waiting to be killed, with a heroism more exemplary than characteristic. In the closet scene, nothing can be more absurd than to observe that the Queen has just stuck a miniature in front of her, for the sole purpose of having it pulled off by Hamlet; and yet it is almost always done. I had expected better of you, Mrs. Glover, though I say, with Hamlet, "Ay, madam, it is common."

Haymarket, June 18.—In the first scene of Hamlet, after the disappearance of the Ghost, Mr. Younge, as Horatio, gave the last line thus,

" This spirit, dumb to him, may speak to us." Again, in relating to Hamlet the appearance of the Ghost, he rendered it thus,

Armed * * Cananas t" cap-a-pee; omitting the words "at all points exactly;" and in the next sentence gave the following very curious reading:

"Thrice he walked,
By their opprised and fear-suppressed eyes."

little further on,

"Yet once methought,

It did address
Itself to motion, as it would speak;"

King's Theatre, June 10 .- Robert le Diable. never remarkable for clearness of plot, was rendered yet more hopelessly obscure by the omission of two of the acts. The parts of Isabelle and Raimbaut, and all the incidents connected with them, were passed over, owing to one of the thousand and one fracas with the manager. A tissue of absurdities was of course the consequent effect. The concluding incident was again lost, owing to the non-attention of the powers below, and Levasseur again coolly made his exit at a side-scene. Is the difficulty of opening a trap-door so very great, as to warrant this constant flying in the face of Mons. Scribe's intentions? In the last scene of Semiramide. Madame Grisi, having been killed, could not remain comfortable for the life of her. She continued giving fair and futile trials to every variety of position in which a person can lie, till the fall of the curtain. Imagine the divertisement of Daphnis et Cephise without Heberle -the stalk without the rose-the pin without the diamond! Mademoiselle, I am told, on having completed her saltations and gyrations as the lady abbess, felt suddenly incapacitated for further exertion; and was stretched on a sofa, crying with all her might, when she should have been coquetting with Albert for the wreath.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.

THESE gardens opened with fine weather on Monday, and presented several novelties, including a Gothic building with windows looking into cosmoramas of Bristol on flames, London Bridge, &c. Among the entertainments was a new operetta by Messrs. Fitzball (author), and Bishop (composer), in which Mrs. Keeley, Mrs. Waylett, Miss Coveney, Stansbury, Bedford, Templeton, Williams, and others, appeared. As improved Vauxhall seldom tempts us to endure late hours, and a fatiguing multitude of sights and sounds, we speak only by report when we repeat, that the evening's amusements give satisfaction to the visitors.

VARIETIES.

Modest Merit .- Madame Cinti Damoreau, after receiving a thousand guineas for her performances at the Opera, would not play in Robert the Devil for a hundred guineas on Tuesday night; so that the piece had to be lopped. The house was well filled notwithstanding, and the spirited manager is exerting himself to find a good double.

omitting the words "lifted up its head, and." In fact, Mr. Younge appeared to have forgotten his part, or to have learned it very carelessly throughout.

In act first, scene fourth, a very odd "effect" took place. When the Ghost appeared to Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus, it beckoned to Hamlet, and left, or rather I should say, attempted to leave the stage back wards; but in so doing, it came full butt against the wing, and there stuck with one leg and one half the body in front of, and the head and the other half of the body behind the wing, to the amasement of the audience and the actors, more particularly of Marcellus, who was very much inclined to laugh; no doubt, at finding that the Ghost was not the airy phantom he had thought.

In act second, scene second, Mr. Kean, in the last sentence but one, rendered a passage thus:

"Yea, and perhape,

"Yea, and perha
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,

Abuses me to damn me;" omitting the line,

" As he is very potent with such spirits." And again, in act third, scene third,

"Look here upon this picture and on this," he omitted the line immediately following,

"The counterfeit presentment of two brothers." I was very happy to find, that the absurdity of the grave-diggers five waistcoats, which has been so long to-lerated, is at last omitted: Mr. Harley took off but one.—From a Correspondent.

Phenomenon On Tuesday last, after a very heavy storm, an extraordinary phenomenon was observed at the Buckhold wood, Lydart, Troy Park, and other places in the neighbour-hood of Monmouth. The ground and trees were covered with myriads of live snake-like insects, quantities of which were collected by different persons. They are six or seven inches in length, about the thickness of a horse-hair, white, and quite transparent .- Monmouthshire Merlin. It is a pity we have not more accurate descriptions of these insects; to ascertain, if possible, whether they are the result of meteo-rological changes, or are merely brought from the earth in consequence of the rains.—Ed. L.G.

The Story-Teller, No. I .- Another contemporary periodical, very cheap, and holding five selected tales, with an original introduction. We more than doubt the right of republishing in this way what belongs to others; but if tolerated, this is a nice publication; and an embossed cameo likeness of Sir W. Scott, given with it, is worth more than its price.

Sign-Painting. - Sixty or seventy years ago the trade of sign-painting gave employment to many of our best artists, and was, indeed, generally a part of the profession. Since that period fine signs have been less in fashion, and the task of executing them has devolved on inferior artisans. We observe in a New York Journal, that a Bull's-head, one of the earliest productions of West, and which has hung there about 70 years, was lately purchased by an English gentleman, and is destined for our Royal Academy. On this subject we may notice, that the Goat in Boots, at Little Chelsea, on the Fulham road, is said to have been painted, in one of his tipsy freaks, by George Morland; and the Queen's-head, which we saw the other day at Epsom, in a whim, by Harlow. The latter is curious from having the back of the head on one side and the face on the other. Harlow is reported to have given great offence to Lawrence by putting " T. L., Greek Street," to this performance, as if done by the future president, against whom he at that period entertained some pique.

Courtship of the late Dr. R. ._ " Dear sir, I am so sorry I cannot accept your kind offer, as I am already engaged: but I am sure my sister Ann would jump at it. Your obliged, Eliza L.".—." Dear Miss Eliza, I beg your pardon, but wrote your name in mistake: it was Miss Ann I meant to ask : have written to her per bearer. Hoping soon to be your affectionate brother, J. R."—The Dr. and Miss Ann were married, and, as they say in the fairy tales, "lived very happy all the rest of their lives."

Extravagance Extraordinary .- " I am sure Frank will come to the workhouse," said a well-known banker: "did you ever see such waste? He has crost all his t's, and dotted all his i's!" We recommend this to Mr. Hume. Retrenchment of unnecessary ink might be carried into effect on a large scale in the public Emigration.—Whilst we, in England, are, as it may happen, recommending emigration to New Holland, the Cape, Canada, or other colony, it is amusing to read in the French Recueil Industriel the writer's advice to persons who wish to go to Africa and settle at Algiers.

Earthquake ._. " The Montreal Courant of Jan. 25, says: A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city on Sunday night last, between eleven and twelve o'clock. The motion resembled the shaking of a steam-boat whose machinery agitates her much; it continued for about four seconds, and was accompanied with an indistinct noise. This was the same time at which the earthquake at Ogdenshurg, of which we published an account on Tuesday, was felt."

Preservation of Seeds .- The vitality of seeds, secluded from light and heat in the bowels of the earth, is preserved, as may be shewn in many instances where soil is dug up after having been at rest for ages. Mr. Charles M. Willich has therefore suggested, that in order to preserve a uniformity of temperature, seeds for long voyages should be packed in cases surrounded by a layer of dry charcoal, or any non-conductor of heat .- Gardener's Magazine, June 1832.

St. Alban's Abbey .- We are glad to notice, from the advertisement in the newspapers, that the voluntary subscription at the meeting for the preservation of this venerable fabric, amounted to nearly a thousand pounds, headed by two hundred given by the Bishop of London.

Relief of Persons imprisoned for Small Debts. The advertisement of this Society states, that in one year, 1831, it had released from prison two thousand and eighty debtors, at the charge of 5,227/.; and since the 2d of May last it had effected the discharge of one hundred and eleven debtors, of whom ninety-three-had wives and two hundred and eight children, whose liberation cost 3241.!!! Could all the oratory of the most eloquent speaker that ever rose in parliament draw so dreadful a picture as this of savage barbarity in a civilised and Christian land, and of the horrid state of the laws where such things can exist? In last year alone above two thousand persons immured within the walls of a gaol, taken from the sphere of industry and usefulness, harrassed by legal harpies, and burdened with cruel and ruinous expenses; and all for what the sum of less than two pounds ten shillings for each. has, after all their sufferings, finally satisfied! And within the last few weeks four hundred and twelve human beings, the parents of ninety-three families, and these innocent families, rendered destitute for what 3241. settledi. e. fifteen shillings a-head for such a mass of misery!! Can we contemplate this, and think of the unrelenting cruelty which sought such vengeance, of the expense which must have flowed into the pockets of pettifogging and villanous attorneys out of the distresses of these distressed creatures, and of the laws which but, through them widely, to the community at large, and not be filled with feelings of equal methodological journal, 1832. astonishment, disgust, and horror?

Epigram.

How aptly, Scotland, does thy honoured name Sound its own glory in the lists of fame!

When all the laurel'd past avails thee not, Still blaze immortal as the land of Scott.

London, June 18, 1832.

JOHN S. CL John S. Clark.

Saying of Isabella Andreini .- Il cuore incostante rassomiglia allo specchio, che riceve ogni impressione, ma che non ne ritiene nessuna.

The inconstant heart has but the mirror's lot, Takes all impressions, but retains them not.

LITERARY NOVELTIES. [Lit. Ganetie Weekly Advertisement, No. XXV. June 23, 1839.]

[Lit. Genetic Weekly advertisement, No. XIV. June 23, 1823.]
Entomology in Scotland.—The great attention which has been bestowed for many years on the entomology of England, where there is scarcely a single city without one or more assiduous collectors, renders the fact the more remarkable, that in the northern portion of the island this delightful study should have made so slight a progress. This may partially be owing to the want of a proper elementary work of a sufficiently compendious nature to guide the student through the difficulties of a subject somewhat encurabered by the complexities of an unsertiled system of nonsentiatures and arrangement. At is latended, in some measure, as it is announced, to supply this deficiency by a work entitled Entomologia Edinousis, now in preparation by Mr. James Wilson, F.R.S.E., author of "Illustrations of Zoology," dcc, and Mr. James Duncan. The first volume of this publication is now, we hear, in a forward state, containing the generic characters and detailed specific descriptions of the Coleoptarous insects found in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh, combined with a general history of their localities, economy, and metamorphoses. An ample l'itroduction promises to present a general view of the class Insects, pointing out its distinctive attributes and relations to the other great divisions of the animal kingdom, and including an account of the animal kingdom, and including an account of the animal kingdom, and including an account of the animal structure, physiology, geographical distribution, &c. of the extensive order, to a portion of which the descriptive part of the first volume exclusively relates. An explanation of generic and specific nomenclature, and of such technical terms as it may be necessary to employ, is to be given in a familiar form, so as to render the subject readily intelligible without reference to any other work; and a few plates added, to illustrate the peculiarities of structure. All the species hitherto detected in Scotland, with their localities, have been carefully registered, that they may form materials for a future Fesure. Scotland, with their localities, have been carefully registered, that they may form materials for a future Fauna Innectorion Scotica. The amount of species described (comprised in upwards of 200 general will necessarily involuce the general history of the leading groups in British entomology; and as most of these are likely to occur in other parts of the country, the utility of the volume will not be confined to the district specified, but will apply to any portion of the British empire; removing the chief obstacles with which students of entomology in this country, now become numerous, have had to contend.

contend.

A Manual of the Baronetage of the British Empire.
History of Charlemagne, by G. P. R. James, Eag.
A new edition of Baylon on Rents, &c. with Additions.
Hlustrated with numerous designs, a Narnative of the Excursion to Herne Bay, on the day of the opening of the Pier; with a full account of the Procession, Diners, &c. Supplement to Loudon's Hortus Britamicus. Fifteen Months' Pilgrimage through untrodden tracts f Khuzistan and Persia, in a Journey from India. By

J. H. Stocqueler, Esq.
Lives of Emment Missionaries. By J. Carne, Esq., Author of "Letters from the East;" forming Vol. VI. of the Select Library.

the Select Library.

The Poetic Negligée.

Devon and Cornwall Illustrated; from Original Drawings by Thomas Allom. With Historical and Topographical Descriptions by J. Britton and E. W. Brayley.

Part 1. of Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland Illustrated; from Original Drawings by Thomas Alkem-

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Forman's Natural Philosophy, 8vo, 5e. bds.—Family Library, Vol. XXXI. Trial of Charles I., 18mo, 5e. cloth.—Knight's Sermons on the Lord's Prayer, 12mo, 3e. 6d. bds.; ivo, 5e. cloth.—Rev. R. P. Beachcroft's Four Sermons, 18mo, 2e. 6d. bds.—Little Mary grown older, 18mo, 2e. 6d. cloth.—New Reform Act, 18mo, 2e. 6d. sewed.—Jones's Progress of Truth, &c. 18mo, 5e. cloth.—The Family Topographer, Vol. II., 18mo, 5e. cloth.—The Family Topographer, Vol. II., 18mo, 5e. cloth.—Cooper's Proposal for a General Record Office, 8vo, 6e. cloth.—Froisart, by the late Barry St. Leger, 3 vols. post 8vo, 14. 12. 6d. bds.—Bishop of Chester's St. Luke, 2 vols. 12mo, 9e. bds.; 1 vol. 8vo, 9e. bds.—Edinburgh Cakinet Library, Vol. VIII. British India, Vol. II., 18mo, 5e. cloth.—Bernard's Creeds and Ethics of the Jews, 8vo, 14. 1e. hd.-cloth.—Remember Me, Second Series, 38mo, 4e. slik.—Babbage on the Economy of Manufactures, 18mo, 6e. cloth.—Dr. A. B. Evans's Sermons, 8vo, 12e. bds.—Sallust, by M. E. Allen, royal 18mo, 10e. 6d. bds.

June.	June. Thermometer.			r.	1 Barometer.
Thursday 14	From				29-56
Friday 16	••••				29-06
Saturday 16	••••	51.	••	70.	29-96	• •	20-03
Sunday 17	••••	51.	••	73.	30-03	Stati	onary
Monday · 18	• • • • •	63.	••	77.	30-04	• •	30-06
Tuesday . 19	• • • • •	50.	••	74.	30-06
Wednesday 20	1	51.	••	74.	29-96

Prevailing wind S.W.
The 14th, 15th, and 20th, cloudy—rain at times on the 14th, 15th, and 17th; otherwise generally clear.
Rain fallen 325 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS. Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 82″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. Edmonton.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ON It is particularly requested that all communications for the Literary Gasette be addressed to the Editor; as, in consequence of personal addresses, which are not opened in cases of temporary absence, delay is frequently incurred, and still more frequently hurry occasioned late in the week; both of which are very inconvenient.

R. S. T. declined.

We are informed by Mr. Moser, that the principle in igniting the powder of the patent gen, electibed in our last, is a Prussian invention; and only the mechanical arrangement of the gun due to the patentees.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of PAINTERS of WATER COLOURS is now open, at their Gallery, Pall Mr. East. Open each day from Nine till Duak.

ch day from rvine with a land of the Admittence, 1s.—Catalogue, 6d.
R. HILLS, Secretary.

WEST of SCOTLAND EXHIBITION EST OI SUUTLAND EXHIBITION of the FINE ARTS.—The Fifth Annul Ethibmes of the Works of Living British Arrists, under the parcease of the Glasgow Dilettiand Society, will open in the Society's seven and the Society's seven and the Society's seven and the Society's seven and the Society seven and the Society of the Society

TRAND EXHIBITION ROOM for TRAND EARIBOTTON KOOM to Illustrating WORKS of PRACTICAL SCIENCE, No. 7, Adelaide Street, Lowther Arcade, West Street, Newly invented Mode of Generating Steam for Engines, and of Evaporating Fluids for various Mannefactures.—Steam-Gr., discharging a Volley of Salls each Half Hour.—Revolving Reder —Models of Steam-Boats, moving on Water.—Fossil Organic E-mains—Other Objects of geoscal Inserved and Assusement. Open daily from 10 till 6. Admittance, One Shilling.

CALE of MR. REINAGLE'S PICTURES

ALE OF M.R. REINAGLE'S PICTURES

deferred to 57th, 38th, and 39th of June.

Mr. EDWARD FOSTER respectfully acquaints the Pable, that the Saie of the sphesidd Collection of Fictores of R. E. Ecnaple, Eq. R.A. at No. 56, Upper Charlotte Street, Fitzry Squar, advertised for 80th and 12st instant, is unanovidably defaured to Fith, 88th, and 39th, in consequence of Accet Races. The Ver will be continued every day until the Saie, and Catalogues my be had, at 1s. such, on the Fremises, and at Mr. Faster's Office, 54, Fall Mall, and 14, Otwek Street, 50th Square.

HEAP BOOKS .- To be sold, together or separately, the Works of E. L. Bulwer, Author of Peham, &c. — James, Author of Richelien — Gratten, Author of Highways, &c.—Theodore Hook, Author of Maxwell—Gieg-Banim — Lester—Galt—Copper—Walter Scott—Capt. Marraim Rt. Goro—Lady Burry, Morgan, &c. The whole is considerably under half-price, and warranted the best editions.

at editions.

May be seen at Mr. Carvalho's, Wholesale Bookselier, 167, Fleet Street.

BOOKSELLER in IRELAND. UURSEDINER IN IRELIAND.

WANTED, an Assistant to a Beshreiter and Sentiner in Ireland. He must have been accustomed to the Retail Trafe, both Statissery and Beskelling, be conversant with Accounts, of good Address, and regular in his habits and conduct.

Letters only, addressed "Ireland," may be left at Mr. Maribecough's, Are Maria Lance, Ludgate Street.

MUSIC.

Just published, in 1 large vel. Sve. 18s. in cloth,

THE MUSIC of NATURE; or, an Attempt to prove that what is passionate and pleasing in the Art of Singing, Speaking, and Performing upon Musical Instruments, is derived from the Sounds of the Animated World. With carions and interesting Illustrations.

By WILLIAM GARDINER, Editor of the "Lives of Haydn and Mezart." Lendon: Lengman, Bem, Orme, Revern, Green, and Co.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

New Work by the Author of " Barnley," &c. In 3 vote. past 8vo.

HENRY MASTERTON; or,
the Young Cavalier.
By the Author of "Darmiey," "De L'Orme," &c. TI.

Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. 2 vols.

Lights and Shadows of American Life.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Ma-

Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

Also, just ready,
The Prairie. By Cooper.
With a new Introduction by the Author, neatly bound sed illustrated, price 6s. forming the 17th Volume of the Standard ovels.
Printed for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Digitized by Google

Better Library, Vol. V.
In 1 vol. with a Portrait of the Author, Vignette Title, Map, Woodcats, &c. price 6s.
TEWART'S VISIT to the SOUTH SEAS, during the Years 1839, 1830. Edited by the Rev. WILLIAM ELLIS.

Select Library, Vol. VI. price & July let, will be published, Lives of Eminent Missionaries. By John Carne, Esq. Author of "Letters from the East."

London: Fisher, Son, and Co.

ON the ECONOMY of MACHINERY and MANUFACTURES.

By CHARLES BABBAGE, Esq. A.M.
Lucasian Professor of Mathematics in the University of Cambridge; and Member of several Academies.
London: Charles Knight, Pall Mail Esst.

Parts I. II. and III. of a highly embellished edition, in imperial 8vo. price 9s. 6d. each, and with India Proofs of the Engrav-tings. 16s. each ings, 164. each.

ALTON and COTTON'S COMPLETE

ALTON and COTTON'S COMPLETE
ANGLER, with Illustrations by Thomas Stothard, Faq. R.A. and James Inklyp, Beq.; and original Memoirs and Notes by Sir Harris Nicolas.
This edition will contain not less than fifty Illustrations, engraved in the first style upon copper, from designs made expressly for the work; and also accurate views of the soenery. The Portraitures of the Fish are from Paintings by James Inskipp, Esq.
Two Portraits of Walton will be given, one from the Painting by Houseman, and the other from a Picture by Mr. Inskipp.
The Work; it is expected, will not exceed Twelve Parts.

 For the purpose of illustration, a very limited number of preof impressions of the engravings upon India paper, before the writing, will be taken off, quarto size, price 16s. each Part. For these, early application is necessary.

Manual for Emigrants.—Foolscap 8vo. 1s. 6d.

STATISTICAL SKETCHES of UPPER CANADA, for the Use of Emigrants.
By a BACKWOODSMAN.
1. Capitalists—2. Provisions—3. Forwarding of Settlers—4.
Purchase of Land; Climate—5. Field Sports—6. Travelling—7. Soil—8. Lumber Trade—9. Religious Sects.—10. Odds and Ends.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Spiendid Bosenical Works, by Mr. H. C. Andrews. *

HEATHERY; or a Monograph of the Genus Erica. 6 vols. royal 800. containing 300 Figures, beautifully and accurately coloured, 12s. 10s.

2. Roses; or, a Monograph of the Genus Rosa. 2 vols. royal 4ts. containing nearly 150 Figures, beautifully and accurately coloured, 12/.

3. Geraniums; or, a Monograph of the Genus Geranium. 2 vols. royal 4to. containing nearly 150 Figures, beautifully and accurately coloured, 96.9e.

4. Botanist's Repository for New and Rare Plants. 10 vols. 4to. containing 664 Figures, faithfully coloured, price 367.

price 36f.

5. Coloured Engravings of Heaths. 4 vols.
follo, containing 328 Figures, most beautifully and accurately coloured, with Descriptions in Latin and English, 32f.

*a, The foregoing Works have been in course of publication for a strice of years, and are new completed. The drawings were an mate from living plants, by Mr. Andrews, and coloured ander an mate from living plants, by Mr. Andrews, and coloured ander admitted but haspection: their fidelity and accuracy have been admitted but haspection: their fidelity and accuracy have been admitted but have been a completed this country and on the Conservant with the works, both in this country and on the Conservant with the works but very few remain. Those gentlemen with have not completed their copies are requested immediately to be see, as hereafter it will be impossible to make them up.

All Applications to be forwarded to William Pickerting, Chanossy Lane, London.

Dr. Henry's Chemistry.
In 2 large vols. 2vo. with Ten Copper-plates, and numerous Woodcuts, wrice 11. 14s THE ELEMENTS OF EXPERIMENTAL

CHEMISTRY.
By WILLIAM HENRY, M.D. F.R.S. &c..
The Eleventh edition, comprehending all the recent Diago
London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradeck.

A complete Law Library.
In 15 vols. royal fire, price 14. 14s. 6d. each Vol.
PRACTICAL and ELEMENTARY ABRIDGMENT of the CASES argued and determined in the Court of King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, and at Nisi Prius, and of the Rules of Court from the Restoration in 1009, &c. &c.

1000, &c. &co.

By CHARLES PETERSDORFF, Esq.

Of the Inner Temple, Berrister-at-Law.

London: Baidwin and Cradock; and Henry Butterworth.

"The Sets of this important work are bound up in the following manner, viz. in boards, at 1/. 11. &c. per volume; in strong canvass, to resemble law-binding, price 1/. 13e.; and in law-call and iettered, 1/. 14e. &d.

Third Edition, with Additions.
In 19mo. 5s. in boards,
THE PARENT'S POETICAL ANTHO-LOGY; being a Selection of English Poems, primarily designed to assist in forming the Taste and the Sentiments of Young Readers, and classed under the following heads:

Hymns
Scriptural Pieces
Scriptural Pieces
Religious and Moral Pocus
Odes and Lyrical Pieces
Elegiac Poems
Elegiac Poems
Sonneta

Elegiac Poems.

Epitaphs

Printed for Longmen and Co.; J. Richardson; Baldwin and Cradeck; J., G., and F. Rivington; Whitsaker and Co.; Simplin and Marshall; and J. Souter.

Presents for Youthful Readers.

The following attractive Works for the Embertainment and Instruction of Young People, are done up in a style saltable for Presents, and are recommended as a very superior class of pablications for Juvenile reading.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradon' D. C. W. I. S. C. P. A. S. C. P. A. S. C. W. I. S. C. P. A. S. C. P. S. C. P. A. S. C. P. S. C. P. A. S. C. P. A. S. C. P. S. C. P. A. S. C. P.
London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

WISS FAMILY ROBINSON; Or,

Adventures of a Pather and Mether and Four Sons in a Desert Island. The 8th edition, ornamented with 12 Engravings, 12me. price 7s. 6d.

The Life and Surprising Adventures of Ro-binson Crasce, with a Biographical Account of Daniel Defoe, written expressly for this edition. A new edition, complete in 1 vol. 19mo. beautifully printed by Whittingham, and ornamented with 49 very superior Woodcuts, from Drawings by W. Harvey.

Tales from Shakspeare, by Charles Lamb. new and elegant edition, with Twenty-two superb Cuts, from esigns by Harvey, and finely printed by Whittingham, in 1 vol. mo. price 7s. 6d.

Austin Hall; or After-Dinner Conversations between a Father and his Children, on Subjects of Amuson and Instruction. 18mo. illustrated with fine Engravings, 5s.

and lastraction. Ismo-litustrated with the Engravings, so.

A Discourse on the Objects, Advantages, and Pleasures of Science. A new edition, in foolicap 8vo. illustrated with fine Engravings, price 5v.

• This fascinating little work, but without the fine illustrative Engravings given in this edition, forms the Pirst Number of the "Library of Useful Knowledge."

Description of more than Three Hundred Animals, with numerous fine Cuts, elegantly printed by Whittingham, 19mo. New and enlarged edition, price is.

Stories of Old Daniel. 12mo. the 10th edit.

much improved, price 6s. Ellen Cameron, a Tale for Young Ladies.

Ellen Cameron, a Tale for Young Ladies. Pine Plate, from a Drawing by Harvey, 15mo, price 5s.

Keeper's Travels, with fine Engravings, after Drawings by Harvey. 14th edition, 18mo, price 6s.

Guy's Pocket Cyclopedia; or, Epitome of Universal Knowledge. The 10th edition, extensively improved, with namerous appropriate Cuts, 18mo, price 10s. 6d.

Stories from the History of Italy. By Anne Manning. With fine Frontispiece and Vignette by Harvey, 18mo, price 7s. 6d.

A History of France in familiar and enter-

18mo. price 7s. 6d.

A History of France, in familiar and enter-laining Language, for Young People. By Mrs. Moore. 2d edit. 18mo. Six Engravings, price 7s. 6d.

The Market St. The Market St. Manners and In-

Sketches of the Domestic Manners and Inedition, 19mo. 7s. 6 tations of the Remans. New edition, 12mo. 7s. 6d.

A History of the Roman Emperors, ornameted with Portraits and Mape, 12mo. 7s. 6d.

Essays on the Institutions, Manners, &c. of actent Greece. By H. D. Hill, D.D. 2d edition, 12mo. 7s. &d.
Tomkin's Select Poetry. A new edition, in

The Parent's Offering. By Caroline Bar-

Sandford and Merton, a new and improved tion, complete in 1 vol. fine Engravings, 18mo, price 7s. cd.

Mrs. Leicester's School; or, the History of overal Young Ladies, as related by themselves. The 9th edit. th fine Frontispiece, 18mo, price 4s.

th fine Frontispiece, 12mo. price 4.

Bucke's Entertaining English Grammar, the buttetions given in Classical English Grows. 12mo. price 2c.

Columbus, Cortez, and Pizarro; or, the Disvery of America, and the Conquest of Mexico and Peru. For the Entertainment and Instruction of Youth. 12mo. Any of the price Portions sold separate, price 5s. 6d. each. Edgeworth's Parent's Assistant.

nplete in I Dr. Aikin's Evenings at Home. A new and improved edition, by his Son, complete in 4 wels. Hens. price 10:

Joyce's Scientific Dialogues, with numerous Cuts. A new edition, in 6 vols. Hens. price 18:

Edgeworth's Harry and Lucy concluded, in Conversations suitable to Young People desirous of Useful and Scientific Knewledge. 4 vols. Hens. 24 edition, price 17:

M'Chilech's Commercial Biolismery.

In a closely princed low-volume of 1163 sages, with large Maps, 18. i.o., boards, with parchament back.

A DICTIONARY, PRACTICAL, and COMMERCE and COMMERCE AVIGATION.

It has been the wind the Market of the test of this work that it should be the steme of the property of the test o

ses. London: Longman, Ross, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

The Second Volume of THE FAMILY TOPOGRAPHER, By SAMUEL TYMMS, Containing a compendious Account of the ancient and present State of the Counties of Cornwall, Devenablie, Dornetshire, Hampshire and the Jaie of Wight, Somewretshire, and Wittehlire, Hampshire and the Jaie of Wight, Somewretshire, and Wittehlire, is just published, price 5s. in foolecap two. with Six Maps.

Vol. I. contains Essex, Hertfordshire, Kent, Surrey, and Sussex, and is illustrated with Five Maps, price 5s. "For its utility and entertainment; it will form a very necessary appendage to every family library."—Sussex, Advertiser.

"A work which every way merits our approbation."—Literary Gazette.

ctis.

abilished by J. B. Nichels and Son, 23, Parliament Street; and may be had of all Country Booksellers.

The Tes Trade

The Trade.

In 8to, price St., sewed,

THE PAST and PRESENT STATE of the TEA TRADE of ENGLAND, and of the Centiments of Europe and America; and a Comparison between the Connumption, Price of, and Revenue derived from, Tea, Coffee, Segar, Win, of of, and Revenue derived from, Tea, Coffee, Segar, Win, Sp. R. MONTGOMERY MARTIN.

Late of H. M. Shipe "Leven" and "Barracests." and Member of the Astatic Society of Bengal, &c.
Leadon: Farbury, Allen, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

MR. DON'S NEW WORK on GAR-DENING and BOTANY, embellished with numerous Woodcuts.

The Eleventh Part was published on the 1st of June, price Gs.
(to be continued monthly).

F. Rivington; J. and W. T. Clarke;
Longman and Go.; T. Cadell; J. Richardson; Jeffery and Son;
Baldwin and Cradock; J. Bocker; J. Booth; Harvey and Darton; S. Ragster; Sherwood and Co.; Harding and Lepard;
J. T. Setchel; Whittaker and Co.; Simpkin and Marshall; and E. Hodenon.

E. Hodgson.

The First Volume, with a Glossary and Index, may be had complete, price 2l. 12s. cloth boards; and the Second Volume is nearly ready.

A Prospectus of the Work may be obtained through any Bookseller.

History and Treatment of the Horse. Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. In a handsome 8vo. vol. price 8s. 8d. bound in cloth and lettered,

In a handsome 8vo. vol. price 2s. 6d. bound in cloth and ketered,

THE HORSE, with a Treatise on Draught, and a copious Index. Illustrated and embellished with more than 100 Engravings on Wood.

Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

2 0 This volume contains every thing relating to the Natural History and Economy of the Horse, viz. Its general History, various Breeding, general Management, and the Medichnes used in Veterinary Practice, &c.

Robinson Crusoe, with W. Harvey's Embellishments. new edition, the whole work complete in I vol. 12me. beautifully princed by Whittingham, and ornamented with 49 very superior Woodcuts, from Drawings by W. Harvey, price &.

THE LIFE and SURPRISING ADVENTURES of ROBINSON CRUSOE, of York, Mariner, with a Biographical Account of Daniel Defoe, written expressly for this edition measures by the market of the second of the s for this edition.

This impression has been carefully printed from the most authentic and correct editions of this fascinating work.

Of all the Cruses we have seen, we like this the best. The engravings are charming in design, and admirably executed. They are just the sort of illustrations which such a volume deserves; and if any thing can increase the popularity of Robinson Cruses, they are well calculated to do so.—Literary Gazette, Aug. 1824.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradeck, Paternoster Row.

New Work for Scriptural Reading.

In 18mo. price 3e.

PROGRESSIVE SELECTIONS from the BIBLE, with Explanatory Notes, for the Use of Childrem. In Three Parts.
Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

THE APOSTOLICITY of TRINITARIANISM; or, the Testimony of History to the positive Antiquity and Apostolical inculcation of the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

Trinity. By GEORGE STANLEY PABER, B.D.

Master of Shuburn Hospital, Durham, and Prebendary
In the First Book the of Salisbury.

In the First Book the of Salisbury.

In the First Book the of Salisbury.

In the Become Book are produced to the Contract of the perfectly harmebilding, lines of evidence.

In the Become Book are noticed the Objections which affect the Risterical Part of the Question.

Printed for J., G. and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterice Place, Fall Mail.

Min Edgeworth's letest Work for Young People. In 4 vols. 18mo. price 17s. neatly half-bound,

HARRY and LUCY, concluded; being the Lakesta mere 17001, COMPRISED 1801 Still Lake Part of Rest Jaccons.

"Looking merely at the literary merits, this is a delightful book considered with a view to its object, it is a very important one Min Edgworth, in her "Harry and Lexy," makes use of fitches at the vehicle of instruction. This is no new undertaining, but it the most successful we have ever met with."—Lookin Edge.

By the same Author The Early Lessons, in 4 vols. price 11s. half-Rosamond; being a Sequel to Rosamond in the Early Lessons. 2 vols. price 5c. half-bound.

Frank; being a Sequel to the Story of Frank in the Easly Lessons. 2 vols. price 5c. half-bound.

The Parent's Assistant; or, Stories for Children. A new edition, complete in 3 vols. lime. with fine Engravings on Steel, from Drawings by Harvey. Half-bound, price 10d.

Little Plays for Children; being a Continuon of the Parent's Assistant. 18me. Ball-bound, price 2s. 6d.

Poetry Explained. 18mo. half-bound, price

Readings in Poetry. 18mo. half-bound, 8s. Comic Dramas. 12mo. boards, price 7s. Essays on Practical Education, 3 vols. 12mo.

lds. dd. boards. London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row-

THE JURIST; or, Quarterly Journal of Jurisprudence and Legislation, No. VII. Price &.

Baldwin and Cradock, London.
The principal Contents of this Number are:—i. On the Exclusion of Exidence—2 Historical Hustrations of English Law, No. 1. The Judges. 3. Changes in French Law—4. History of Law Reform—5. The Barrister, No. 2—6. Memours of Aubry Gentill—7. Austin's Lectures on Jurisprudence—8. Wakefield on the Punishment of Death—9. Parliamentary Papers, Intelligence, &c.

The Numbers of the Jurist will appear regularly, on the 1st of July, November, January, and April.

Price 6s. handsomely bound, with a Plan of London, and Map of the Environy, or, 9s with the Addition of 108 Views. A New edition, carefully revised, T EIGH'S NEW PICTURE of LONDON, Plan for viewing London in Eight Days.

Presenting a luminous Guide to the Stranger on all Subjects connected with general Information, Business, or Amusement; to which is subjected, a Description of the Eaviron, and Plan for viewing London in Eight Days.

* The work is also solid with the Addition of 24 Plates of Cocurres, price 12s.; and with Rowlandson's Costumes also, price 15s.

London: S. Leigh, 18, Strand: and Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

Of whom may be had, a Variety of Descriptive Guides for the Use of Travellers on the Continent, viz.

1. Planta's New Picture of Paris, price 9s.

2. Reichard's Descriptive Road Book of

3. Boyce's Belgian and Dutch Traveller,

4. Romberg's New Picture of Brussels, &c. 5. Schreiber's Traveller's Guide to the Rhine,

6. Reichard's Itinerary of Germany, 12s.

7. Ebel's Traveller's Guide through Swit-

8. Reichard's Itinerary of Italy, 10s. 6d. 9. Vasi's New Picture of Rome and its Environs, 182.

10. Vasi's New Picture of Naples and its

11. Reichard's Itinerary of Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Russia, 7s.
12. Reichard's Itinerary of Spain and Portugal, 7s.

The last New Novel. ONTARINI FLEMING, a Psychological Autobiography.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Corrected to May 1, 1839.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE of the United Kingdom, with the New Peers and their Arms. In 2 vols. 1l. 8s.

Debrett's Baronetage, including the New Baronets, with their Arms. 2 vols. 1l. 8s.

Printed for Rivingtons; Clarkes; Longman and Co.; T. Cadell; J. Richardson; J. Booth; J. Booter; J. M. Richardson; Baldwin and Co.; E. Bagster; R. Rocher; Harchard and Son; Hamilton and Co.; Parbury and Co.; E. Lloyd; W. Pickering; E. Hodgson; J. Templeman; Houlstons; and T. Egerton's Executors.

The Mother's Book, by Mrs. Child.

Printed at the Chiwick Press, in duodecimo, price 4s. 6d. bound,

THE MOTHER'S BOOK.

Author of "the Frugal Housewife," the Girl's Own Book," &c.

The 4th edition, revised and corrected.

Testimonies in favour of this excellent book:—

"We are so much in love with this modest, plain, practical, and judicious publication, that we hope to see it ere long in the hands of every mother who would rear her child in the way it should go."—Scotfman. ould go."—Scotsman.
"Of all the books on education, this is unquestionably the best."

"We tend our hearty commendations to the publishers.
Literary Gazette.

We conscientiously and warmly recommend ' the Mother's ok' to all who have the superintendence of young children."—

Athereum. Many more testimonials equally favourable might be quoted in commendation of this most valuable work: the Publisher trusts the above will be sufficient to induce every mother who really loves her offlyring to purchase the work and profit by its maximum. London: Printed for Thomas Tegg, No. 73, Cheapside; N. Hailes, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; and sold by all Booksellers in the Kingdom.

Family Library, No. XXXI. With engravings, 5s.

THE TRIAL of CHARLES the FIRST, and of some of the Regicides; with illustrative Notes, Legal and Historical.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Price 1s. post 8vo. embellished with a View of St. Robert's Cave, Manareborough,

MEMOIRS of the celebrated EUGENE
Clarke, in 1789; with some Account of his Family, and other Particulars, collected, for the most part, Thirty Years ago.

Author of the Nittory of Mortley, for Author of the Nittory of Mortley, for London: Simpkin and Marshall, Stationery Hall Court;
J. Heaton, and J. Baines and Co. Leeda; and all Booksellers.

Meadows's French Pronouncing Dictionary. Beautifully printed, price 7s. in cloth, or 7s. 6d. bound, a new Beautifully printed, price 7s. in cloth, or 7s. 6d. bound, a new TRENCH and ENGLISH PRONOUN-CING DICTIONARY, on the Basis of Nugent. In Two Parts-1. French and English, 3. English and French; with the New Words in general use, Principles of French Pronunciation, and an abridged foranimy.

By F. C. MEADOWS, M.A.

"Mr. Meadow's performance does him inimite credit, and is an honour to Glasgow and its University. Simple and able in every respect, the student of the French language cannot consult a better oracle." — Literary to actific.

Glasgow: Printed at the University Press, for Thomas Tege. Cheapoids, London; R. Guiffin and Co. Glasgow; and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

The 2d edition, in it vols its optice lie each vol. boards.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the First Invasion of the Romans.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the First Invasion of the Romans.

By John Ling ARD, D.D.

The ments of Dr. Long and a bigh class. He generally discusses controverted facts with candour, a cuteness, and perspectively the selects, in generally admissions, are accessed as the selects of generally admissions of the selects of general controverted facts with candour, a cuteness, and perspectively the selects of general controverted facts with candour, a cuteness, and perspectively the selects of general controvers. He selects with a controvers of the selects without profixed or controvers. We shall presently give some extracts which display Dr. Longard's powers of historical narration in a very few our description. We shall presently give some extracts which display Dr. Longard's powers of historical narration in a very few includes and the following extract will do full minteresting nature, as it relates to events among the most remarkable that occurred in that period,—the obstance that we will be found that the control of the profixed of the selection of the place of the selection with the well-inverse account of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Athens by Thucydides."—Edinburg as count of the place at Ath

The French Language acquired mithout a Tracker.
In 8vo. price 12. nearly done up in canvass and lettered, the 5th edition, thoroughly revised and corrected,
A GUIDE to the FRENCH LANGUAGE, especially devised for Persons who wish to study the Elements of that Language without the Assistance of a Teacher.
By J. J. P. LE BRETHON.

A Key to the Exercises in the above Work; A Key to the Exercises in the above Work; by means of which any person of a mature understanding may acquire the Elements of the French Language practically, as surely as if a professed teacher was sitting by his side; and with a very superficial knowledge of it, may teach it to others. Directions are given in the Key to parents not accustomed to teach language, who wish to instruct their children with the assistance of this book, how they must proceed.

a So much esteemed is this very classical work on Teaching Language, that Two founds the second size of the process of the book of the process of the second size of the second siz

New System of Chemistry.
In 2 very large and closely printed vols. 200. with Woodcuts, price 21. 22.
A SYSTEM of INORGANIC

CHEMISTRY.

By THOMAS THOMSON, M.D.
Regius Professor of Chemistry in the University of Glasgow,
P.R.S. &c.&c.

Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, London; and William Blackwood, Edinburgh.

Also, recently published, by the same Author, in 8vo. price 16s. boards,

1. An Outline of the Sciences of Heat and Electricity. (Being Vol. 1. of the General System of Chemistry, by Dr. Thomson.)

2. An Attempt to Establish the First Principles of Chemistry by Experiment. By the Same. In 8 vols. 8vo. price 1/. 10s. in boards.

Price 6d.

PHE MORAL CONSCIOUSNESS of MAN; or, the Power, Goodness, and Wisdom of God, a manifested by Evidences of Design in our Moral Nature.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

DUCKS IN THE PRESS.

Dr. Lardaer's Cabinet Library.
On July 8, in small 8vo. price 5s. Vol. II. of

MILITARY MEMOIRS of FIELD

MARSHAL the DUKE of WELLINGTON. 2 vols.
By MAJOR MOYLE 6HERER.
Being the concluding Volume of "The Cabinet Library," which consists of which consists of Sy W. Wallace, Esq.
Annual Retrospect of Public Affairs of 1831. 2 vols.
Historical Memoirs of the House of Bourbon. 3 vols.
Military Memoirs of Wellington. 2 vols. By Major Sherer.
London: Longman, Ress, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In a few days will be published, in 19mo, price 6s, boards, the Second Volume of POINTS of DOCTRINE and RULES of DUTY.

and RULES of DUTY.

By the Rev. R. PARKINSON, M.A.

Of St. John's College, Cambridge; Perpetual Curate of Whitorth; and Lecturer in Divinity at the Clerical Institution, St. Bees.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

The 2d edition of the First Volume, price 6s.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopadia.
In menthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth.
On July 2, being Vol. XXXII. of the above, Vol. III. of HISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL,

On Aug. 1, History of the Western World, Vol. II.—Usuel States, concluded. Pablished June 1, History of Switzerland, in 1 vel. London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

THE Seventh Volume of Mr. Murray's first Complete and uniform edition of the Works of Lerd Brembellished with Two splendid Engravings, from Decomplished with Two splendid Engravings, from Decomplete and a Fac-simile of Lord Byton's original pescilose on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms, will be published on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms, will be published on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms, will be published on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms, will be published on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms, will be published on the let of June 1988 one of his earliest Porms.

SOURCES of HEALTH and DISEASE in COMMUNITIES; or, Elementary Views, designed to the Importance of the Study of Hygiene, to Legalism.

they the Importance of the Study of Hygiene, to Legimen, Heads of Families, &c. By HENRY BELINAYE, By HENRY BELINAYE, Surgeon Extraordinary to H.B. H. the Duchess of Kent. &c. &c. Printed for Treuttel and Wurtz and Richter, &Q. Soho Squar-

On the lat of July will be published, Part II. of the XTRACTOR and POLAR STAR MAGAZINE, containing an immense Assemblar with most valuable and complete Articles on all Subjects.

"We hesitate not to say that it is a very excellent work, micretainly the cheapest we know in these days of cheap partitions."—Kigin Courier.

"A very excellent melange."—Literary Gazette.

Published every month, price 2s. and in weekly Numbers, office, No. 1, price 6d. every Saturday.

Office, No. 1, Newcastle Street, Strand; and sold by Surphit and Marshall; and by all Booksellers and Newzmen throughest the Isingdom.

New Works
Just ready for publication by Henry Colburn and Bichted
Bentley, New Burlington Street.
In 8 vols. post 8vo.

THE HIGHLAND SMUGGLER.
By J. B. FRASER, Esq.
Author of the " Kuzzilbash," &c.

II.

Excursions in India, comprising a Walk over the Humalaya Mountains, to the Sources of the Jumas and the Ganges. By Captain Thomas Skinner, 31st Regiment. 3 rost

"Wherein of antrea vast, and deserts life, Rough quarries, rocks, and hills, whose heads touch bester. It was my hint to speak." 111.

Fortune Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life. By the Author of "First Love." 3 vols.

Private Correspondence of a Woman d Fashion. 8 vols.

The Third and Fourth Volumes of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Junet, (Ducket of Abrantes). Completing that interesting Work.

THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE for July. the new Management, will contain upwards of Twesters the new Management, will contain upwards of Twester of 27 Articles, among which are Christopher North and the Cocker—Specimens of Death, No. 1.—The Borough-menager—The lime Colar—The Deputy Moralist — France—The Paim Fored of Ortiz—Cuba—Russian Literature—with many other interested and important Papers.

ADY BLESSINGTON'S JOURNAL of LADY BLESSINGTON'S JOURNAL of her CONVERSATIONS with LORD BYRON with pear in the forthcoming Numbers of the New Month) Magniss.

And those who desire to possess Copies on the day of price tion, should send their Orders immediately to their respects Booksellers.

"The character of the New Monthly is greatly improved use its change of editor. It has contained papers of considerably primanent value, which at the same time have had much protest attraction. The regular supply of articles is superior, and the superiodical is decidedly injuried to the New Monthly in any of its contemporaries."—Spectator.

"This periodical is decidedly improved under the new superintendence of Mr. E. L. Bulwer."—Dublin Observer.

"The New Monthly Magnazine exhibits potent practical the spirit which now presides over its arrangements."—Mondey Experience of the protest content of the pro spirit which now pressure were its arrangements.

press.

fall to make a due impression upon the reading public. It is refulled in the second of the reading public is in the second of Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Suret

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, in the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Sect. Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 18, South Moulton Stret, Oxistrost; sold also by J. Chappell, 28, Rogal Richard. Mariborough, Ave Maria Lane, Landgate Rill: A. Soit. Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and think and Co. chappell, and J. Cumming, Dablin.—Agril of America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leien ster Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 806.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

History of the War of the Succession in Spain. By Lord Mahon. 8vo. pp. 394. London, 1832. Murray.

NOTHING is so often given in vain as warning, and but for this obstinacy in human nature history would be invaluable; for what is history but a succession of warnings? Take the pages that now lie open before us, The War of the Succession in Spain, what is it but a great moral lesson, wrought out with all dramatic effect; ambition the first cause, misery and bloodehed the circumstances, and failure and uselessness the consequence? No one can be blind to the conclusion, that if the war had never been undertaken on the part of England, at least all the life and wealth might have been spared to more profitable employ, and the con-clusion been nearly the same. Had Philip been permitted to ascend the throne of Spain in peace, the natural and inevitable opposition between the interests of that country and of France would have led to as much disunion as effectually to put an end to all the fear entertained of their united power: soon indeed did war break out between the two houses, though so nearly connected in blood. A great absolute power bears within itself the germs of dissolution: how enormous was the power bequeathed by Philip to his posterity; how rapidly did that power sink into weakness! and yet against the Spanish dominion England never acted but on the defensive. We confess we are among those who look upon Marlborough's victories as brilliant inutilities. Not that we would detract from the well-merited fame of that superb commander; for, once embarked in the war, victory became equally glorious and necessary. We are aware that we differ in this opinion from our author, who says,—"The unpopularity of William at this period, from the treaty of partition, extended to all the measures he proposed: he was thwarted by his parliament; and its leading politicians, though startled at the overgrown power of France, seemed to think that by denying, they could diminish the danger. In Holland, also, he was but feebly supported in his military views by a rich and thrifty people, so much attached to their possessions, and so much afraid of hazarding them in any war. that their own wealth became, in fact, one of the resources of the enemy."

But when we look from the beginning to the conclusion of the war-see how much was suffered and how little gained, we cannot but advocate a more pacific policy. Our limits, however, are too narrow for a discussion involving such a variety of opinion; and we must proceed to do justice to the delightful and efficient volume which now demands our praise. It is a great improvement on its pre-decessor, both as regards the interest of the interference in continental politics. The materials have been collected with obvious industry, and from sources now first laid open to the public. Lord Mahon states: "In writing this work, I have (besides the usual printed authorities) carefully consulted the MS. papers and correspondence of General Stanhope, who was, at one period, commander of the British army in Spain, and afterwards first lord of the Treasury in England. These papers fill no less than fifteen or sixteen folio cases, and serve not only to communicate new facts, but to throw light upon others that were doubtful or imperfectly known." To this great merit of information, we must add an animated and dramatic style of narration, deductions equally just and clear, and a multitude of remarks drawn from passing events, whose neatness of expression enhances their truth of thought. We shall proceed to extracts as various as the scenes they depict.

High honour of the Spaniards. — " I know your ministers,' said, one day, to Harrach the Conde de Mancera, the ablest of the Spanish statesmen at this time, and a zealous par-tisan of Austria: 'they will so mismanage matters, that in the place of the archduke we shall have some other prince proclaimed at Madrid; we shall swear allegiance to him; and if we have once sworn, no circumstance, no consideration will make us faithless to our new king, however reluctantly acknowledged.'

True but common historical picture.-" They looked forward with a hope to a new dynasty and new system: it could not be worse than the old, and, moreover, to an injured people a mere change of oppressors often seems a relief from oppression."

Miserable state of Spain. "To remedy these evils, the first requisite was money; but the finances were, if possible, in a still more wretched condition. The taxes were so high, that the price of the wine brought into Madrid for one real was raised by duties to five; but precisely because the taxes were so high they had ceased to be productive, and had crushed beneath their weight both cultivation and commerce. Almost every article of manufacture was imported from abroad. The South American mines, however rich, could afford no lasting wealth to a country thus destitute of industry; and, according to a common remark, their gold was to Spain no more than food is to the mouth, which gives it a passage, but derives from it no immediate strength or nourishment. The traders of Genoa and Hamburgh, the Dutch and English manufacturers, these, and not the Spaniards, were the real lords of Potosi and Peru! At Madrid the treasury was often unprovided for even the most pressing demands; long arrears were due; and the want of pay sometimes reduced Anne are recent, and doubly attractive as being noply and peculation were all powerful; and, at the commencement of the system of British to aggravate the public poverty, a spirit of to aggravate the public poverty, a spirit of waste and extravagance prevaded every department. It will be found that those individuals deriving their chief income from mines -whose yearly produce is uncertain and varying, and seems rather to spring from fortune than to follow industry—are usually careless, unthrifty, and irregular in their expenditure. The example of Spain might tempt us to apply the same remark to states."

Detached Observations.

"His governor, the Duke of Beauvilliers, used to declare, that during his whole charge his pupil had not given him one moment of vexation or uneasiness; and this he thought high praise_but it is praise never yet deserved by any thing but the youth of mediocrity!"
"One of the first signs of approaching revolution in a people, is a readiness to receive, and an inclination to credit, any rumours of a

"It is one of the most common weaknesses of mankind to revere collectively those whom they despise as individuals."

"Men often complain of short memories; yet how seldom do they forget even the slightest circumstance of even the slightest injury!"

"To weak minds, all undertakings seem easy at a great distance."

"One of the surest marks of a great mind is the confidence with which it knows how to inspire others."

"The frailties of great men form the comfort and delight of fools.

Speaking of the popularity which greeted the Duke of Anjou, —" In strength and spirit he seemed far superior to the late king, in dress he was the same; and thus he doubly pleased the multitude, which usually contrives (and this is true of every country) to shew itself, at the same time, extravagantly eager for novelty, and extravagantly fond of ancient prejudices."

Fine Character .- "At this time the captaingeneral of Andalusia was Don Francisco del Castillo, marquis of Villadarias, a man of remarkable zeal, energy, and talent. A soldier from early youth, he had risen to the highest military rank with as much reputation as can be gained in a period of national decline. Thus, for instance, he had been obliged ten years before to surrender Charleroy to the French; but had made a most courageous defence, and held out till his garrison was reduced from four thousand five hundred to twelve hundred men. Worthy of his country in her brightest, faithful to her in her darkest, days, he seemed as it were a survivor from those old times when the Spanish armies were the best and most successful in the world. With a natural genius for military enterprises, he had deeply studied his profession; he understood it decessor, both as regards the interest of the subject treated, and its treatment. The Life of Belisarius belonged to a period whose colours are faded, like old tapestry; but the times of reigns clogged the action of government; mohis chivalrous sense of honour, his forgetfulness of self (the last quality which common minds can attain or even understand), are still remembered at Seville; and an anecdote which tradition has preserved will not be the less welcome to an Englishman, if it brings Sir Philip Sydney to his mind. In one of his battles. Villadarias, most severely wounded, was carried from the field to the rear of the engagement; and the surgeons quitting all inferior patients, crowded round to attend the Marquis. Gasping with pain, and hardly able to make himself heard, the noble Spaniard yet waved them aside, and pointing to a common soldier, who lay bleeding beside him, 'Dress that wound first,' he said; 'it seems worse than mine.' In short, (to use the words of the most eloquent of the French writers, when speaking of his friend Altuña,) he was 'one of those lofty spirits whom Spain alone brings forth, but of whom she now brings forth too few for her glory.' The obscurity into which his name has fallen is a natural consequence of his frequent reverses; but strongly shews the misery of those evil times, when no exertions can retrieve a broken army and a sinking state; when failure and disaster seem inevitable; and when want of means is mistaken by posterity for want of skill."

Noble trait .- " Amongst the other attempts at Darmstadt to draw the Andalusian chiefs from their allegiance, he had made one on Don Felix Vallaro, commander of the cavalry, whom he had formerly known in Catalonia, but who, far from listening to his proposals, laid them immediately before Villadarias. He did not. however, succeed in thoroughly removing the suspicions of that general; and as they were riding forward together, during the charge, 'Ya der comes voor friend Darmstadt,' said Villadarias, sarcastically, looking to the English as they disembarked. Stung to the quick, the high-minded young officer made no reply, but, setting spurs to his horse, dashed into the thickest of the fight, and in a few moments found the death he sought on the enemy's bayonets. His bloody corpse, left upon the field, afforded a sad proof of his loyalty, and was the only answer he deigned to make to any imputation against it."

Spanish honour..... The admiral perceived that the scabbard was thrown away on both sides, and that he must remain an exile for life should his party not prevail. Stripped of all his domains, he knew the importance of money to him in such circumstances, and how much his means of subsistence, or at least of respect, amongst strangers, would depend on its possession. Yet, with the true Spanish sense of honour, he instantly sent back to Madrid the large sum which had been paid him for the expenses of his embassy, and which he would not consent to use for any other purpose."

Excess of loyalty .- " To his surprise, his demand was agreed to by the Portuguese officer as soon as he learnt that the King of Spain stood in person before his walls; and he even added many apologies for the discharge of his guns! 'I was not aware,' he said, 'of his majesty's presence, or I should not thus have failed in the respect and forbearance I owe him!' We may smile at such an answer, as a shallow excuse of cowardice; but when we recollect the superstitious veneration for their sovereigns in which the Spaniards and Portuguese are bred, we shall not think it incredible that the strange feeling of foreign loyalty professed by the be-sieged may have really existed in their minds."

mer and later war in Spain.—" In his account of this campaign, Berwick expresses his astonishment that, whilst he succeeded so easily in reducing fortified bulwarks and regular garrisons, he should encounter such obstinate resistance from the most open and indefensible towns; and it is very remarkable how often the same observation holds good with respect to the last Peninsular war. The cause is to be found in the joint result of a brave people, and of a wretched government, which corrupts and degrades the army, and every other public institution, to secure its own miserable despotism. Its strength against its subjects is its weakness against strangers."

How true is the remark on the return of the Princess Orsini!

" Considering her former unpopularity amongst the Spaniards, her return was much less displeasing to them than might have been expected: and this, probably, arose from its having been so long deferred. In every country the multitude are apt to expend all their energy against the mere early rumours of a hateful measure; so that none is left to oppose its execution."

Lord Peterborough .- " This very remarkable man-the most remarkable, perhaps, of all those brought before our view in the war of the succession - had just been appointed by Queen Anne to the command of a new expedition against Spain. Closely resembling in his character the ancient heroes of that nation which he was sent to gain over or subdue, Lord Peterborough may be called the Don Quixote of history. Like the renowned knight of La Mancha, much that appeared little and ridiculous was singularly blended in his mind with much that was great and noble. His chivalrous turn of mind seemed to soar above the low and selfish level of modern times; but, whenever shut out from any adequate employment, would waste itself, and degrade him by freaks and eccentricities. At eighteen he had fought against the Moors in Africa; he had been the first English nobleman to join William the Third in Holland; and was now in his forty-seventh year. Though-devoting all his intervals of leisure to frivolous and fickle amours, he yet, at any call of duty or any pressure of danger, shone forth a skilful general, an unwearied and enterprising soldier. His talent for partisan warfare, more especially, has very seldom been equalled, hardly ever exceeded. On every occasion we may admire both the secrecy with which he planned, and the speed with which he executed, his designs. His courage was carried to the verge of rashness-his generosity to the verge of profusion. He was rapid in decision, and fertile in expedients; but all his great qualities were often counter-balanced by the high opinion which he himself entertained of them,—by a fretful and irritable vanity, which never left him in repose, which urged him to unceasing journeys and intrigues, and made him, as was usually said of him, see more kings and postilions than any other man in Europe. Under the influence of this froward temper, he was often as dangerous to his friends as to his enemies, and far better fitted to encounter the latter than to conciliate the first. Perhaps his very inconsistencies might tend to enhance his reputation with his contemporaries; for the most capricious freaks of great men are often admired by the multitude as deep-laid designs: but the impartial tribunal of history, while it admires Peterborough's genius, and praises his disinterestedness, must and seemed always to proceed from momentary impulse, instead of settled resolution.'

Stanhope...." General Stanhope was appointed the English envoy extraordinary at that court; and was, moreover, directed to lead w Barcelona the fresh troops sent for its relief. As, from this period, we shall find him taking a principal part in the war, his life and character, like those of its other leading personage. may perhaps seem to require some detail. He was grandson of the first Earl of Chesterfield and son of Mr. A. Stanhope, whom I have already had occasion to mention as ambassador to Spain in the days of its Charles the Second. Having passed his youth at his father's house in Madrid, he was well acquainted with the Spanish language, manners, and feelings; and thus peculiarly fitted to conduct any public business in that country. For his military studies he had found opportunity in Flanders, and a master in Marlborough. His diplomatic talent was tried by this most difficult mission to Charles the Third at Barcelona. In both departments of war and state affairs he was considered by his contemporaries as well skill. ed; and they saw him at successive periods attain the highest pinnacle of each, being at one time commander-in-chief in Spain, and afterwards first lord of the Treasury in Enggland. In both he is admitted to have shewn very great disinterestedness as to personal profit and enrichment. Thus, for instance, when directed by his government to conclude. if possible, a commercial treaty with King Charles, and having at the same time rendered that prince important military services, he was offered, as a recompense for these, a grandeeship and estate in Spain, but refused them; and only requested that, if any gratitude were felt towards him, it might be displayed in a readiness to adjust and concede the disputed articles of the treaty. Many men accordingly have left a more ample fortune, but few a more blameless character, behind them. Even now. his high qualities are recorded by tradition in the country where they were most conspicuously shewn: his name yet lives in the honourable recollection of the Spanish peasantry; and two of his great-grand-childton, who fought (and one fell) in the late Peninsular campaigns, met with frequent inquiries, shether they were in any wise related to 'Don Diego Estanop,' the great English general in the war of the succession."

Loyally .- " A brother of the Conde de Santa Cruz, an archdeacon of Cordova, had no sooner heard the betrayal of the Spanish galleys and treasure to the enemy, than he hastened to the baptismal register of the city, and tore out the leaf which contained his brother's name, isdignantly exclaiming, 'May no record of so vile a wretch remain amongst men!' At the court of Philip a country priest obtained at audience of the queen, and offered her one hundred and twenty pistoles from a small village with only the same number of houses. 'My flock,' he added, 'are ashamed at not being able to send a larger sum; but they entreat your majesty to believe that in the same purse are one hundred and twenty heart faithful even to death.'"

Superstition .- "The Minorquins never restured to prune a fruit-tree, thinking it implous to presume to direct its growth, and amend the works of Providence."

Siege of Alicant.—" During the winter.
Asfeld busily employed his troops in construcing at its base an enormous mine, which he lament that his conduct was so frequently guided silled with fifteen hundred barrels of gunpos-Similar cause and similar results in the for- by wounded vanity and personal resentment, der. On its completion, he displayed a degree of humanity and consideration for his adversaries very different from his former conduct at Xativa. He communicated his plan to the governor-general, Richards, an English Catholic, in the service of Charles, and gave him leave (which was readily accepted) to send two of his officers to view the real state of the mine. These Asfeld accompanied to the spot; and, pointing out to them his formidable preparations, declared that he could not bear to let so many brave men perish under the ruins of a place which they had so gallantly defended; and offered them a free and honourable passage to Barcelona, and twenty-four hours for deliberation. But the two officers, who saw only the opening of the well-filled mine, were unconvinced of its extent, and suspected a stratagem; and General Richards, relying on their report, as well as on the natural strength of the rock, still refused to capitulate. So great, indeed, was his personal intrepidity, that he determined to abide the issue at the post of the greatest danger, the Parade, just above the chamber of the mine; and, accordingly, as soon as he perceived the appointed signal (it was at daybreak of the 4th of March), he hastened to the fatal spot, attended by his principal officers. After a few moments of silent expectation, the mine was spring, with an effect rather resembling a convulsion of the elements than a contrivance of human skill. The whole rock heaved, and shook as with an earthquake; the Parade was violently rent asunder; and the ill-fated English officers upon it were all either buried in the chasm, or blown to pieces in the air. The effect of the explosion was, however, less than had been expected and designed; for, taking a transverse direction, it had blown up but a small portion of the rock, and rather increased than diminished the steepness of the rest. The garrison still remained undaunted. Even during the blast, at a moment of such horror and probable destruction, a cry of 'Long live the queen!" had been cheerfully raised by the British soldiers, and rung amid the ruins.—

Vincent Peyton, Journal of the Siege of Alicant, MS. With military details this officer intersperses poetical effusions, of which I am inclined to think two lines will be quite enough to satisfy the reader :-

' Horror and mischief in each cloud appears, And mountains fall together by the ears.'"

Detached Observations "A new ministry. besides, seldom fails to be popular at first, from the fair professions with which it always sets out, and from the usual proneness of the people to confound the two ideas of alteration and amendment."

"Resentment always gathers strength from the necessity of concealing it."

Fine Remark of Stanhope .- " Among the wounded,' Stanhope used to say, 'there are never any enemies.'" never any enemies."

Spanish Pride.—" One of the first measures of Vendome was to display, and at the same time to confirm, the good disposition of the grandees, by inducing them to sign a public declaration of their allegiance to Philip; and a little incident, which occurred on this occasion, is far too characteristic of the old Spanish pride to be passed over. When the grandees signed this declaration, most of them added to their names the words 'noble as the king.' Vendome, seeing the necessity of conciliation, bore this with patience for some time; but when one of them, besides these words, wrote down 'and a little more,' he could no longer restrain his anger. 'Heavens!' he exclaimed, 'dare you Fifth is a Frenchman, and that I am a Castilian!"

Letter of General Stanhope's.—" I did every thing I thought for the best: fortune hath crushed me, and I know no remedy but patience. I am sensible how I shall be arraigned in England; but I assure you that thought is not half so mortifying to me as the consequences to the public. I don't know when I may expect to see you; and, what is worse, they are so particularly jealons of my corresponding any where, that I don't know whether even this letter will come to you. If I continue long a prisoner, which is not unlikely, I shall grow a philosopher, having no other comfort but books, yet even those are not to be found here; and to give you a taste of the literature of this country, I must tell you what happened to me two days since with the Jesuits. I desired some books out of their library, which they had courteously offered, amongst others a Demosthenes. They sent me the next day a book well bound, and on the back 'Demosthenes,' writ in gilt letters; I opened it, and found it to be Tully! it might have been the Alcoran, for aught they knew.

It is easy to see that Lord Mahon's predilec-tions are strongly on the Tory side; but with political opinions we have nothing to do, more than to point out their particular bias. On general grounds we disagree with the follow-ing:—" Seldom, even in republics, have great services been more ungraciously acknow-ledged."

Now, the ingratitude of kings is just as proverbial; and in both instances it appears to us, that the blame is laid on particular individuals and circumstances, when, in reality, it belongs to all human nature. In conclusion, we have only to observe, that the present very intelligent volume does infinite credit to its young and noble author; it shews mind exerotised in reflection, high and generous feeling, an honourable desire of public approbation evinced in the improvement and exertion of talents and opportunities; it is literary and enlightened leisure put to the best use, and richly deserves appreciation and applause. To public favour we commend and leave The War of the Succession in Spain.

Personal Sketches of his own Times. By Sir Jonah Barrington. Vol. III. 8vo. pp. 436. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley. IT will be remembered that the two first volumes of Sir Jonah Barrington's stories excited much amusement at the period of their publication. They were felt to be all strictly true, not in the least coloured; and as they were also not a little extraordinary, of course they entertained as much as they astonished. The present tome is of the same kidney, but only not quite so droll and original as its precursors : it is rather the shakings of the bag, after the grain has been pretty well tossed out.

In a preface Sir Jonah defends his veracity

as gravely as if any body ever doubted it; and he tells us— " The only merit which I actually claim is, that the principal sketches somewhat illustrate the native Irish character at different spochas in different grades of society, and furnish some amusing points of comparison between the more remote and the modern manners and habits of that eccentric people; -and 'and a little more,' he could no longer restrain there my irregularities are perfectly appropriate, twisted cravat, as if it feared to be mistaken his anger. 'Heavens!' he exclaimed, 'dare you call in question the nobility of the House of hot before me;—I fear my fair readers will from his honest throat, upon which the neigh-

Bourbon—the most ancient in Europe?' never pardon me for introducing so small a 'True,' replied the Spaniard; 'but remember, proportion of true love into my anecdotes—an my lord duke, that after all, King Philip the omission for which I am bound, so far as in me omission for which I am bound, so far as in me lies, to give the very best apology I can. But when I reflect on the exquisite tenderness of the female heart, and its intrinsic propensity to imbibe that most delicious of the passions on every proper opportunity, I almost despair of being able to conciliate the lovely spinsters who may deign to peruse my lucubrations; and if the ladies of an age mur do not take my part, I shall be a ruined author. Trembling, therefore, I proceed to state some matters of fact, which, if dispassionately considered and weighed, may prove that, from the rapid movements of love in Ireland, there can be but very scant materials for interesting episodes in that country.

I now frankly confess that during the composition of the three volumes, my inventive genius, (if I have any,) like one of the seven sleepers, lay dormant in my occiput, and so torpid, that not one fanciful anecdote or brilliant hyperbole awakened during the whole of that ordinary period; and I fear that there is not an incident in the whole which has any just chance of melting down my fair sensitives into that delicious trickle of pearly tears, so gratifying to the novel-writers, or even into one soft sigh of sympathetic feeling, so naturally excited by exploits in aerial castles, or the embroidered scenery of fancy and imagination."

Such is the author's account of himself; and we shall endeavour to let him shew off his qualities as a professed story-teller.

"Mr. Conaghty was a barrister of about six feet two inches in length; his breadth was about three feet across the shoulders; his hands splay, with arms in full proportion to the rest of his members. He possessed, indeed, a set of limbs that would not have disgraced a sucking ele-phant; and his body appeared slit up two-thirds of its length, as if Nature had originally intended (which is not very improbable) to have made twins of him, but finding his brains would not answer for two, relinquished her design. His complexion, not a disagreeable fawn-colour, was spotted by two good black eyes, well intrenched in his head, and guarded by a thick chevaux de frise of curly eyebrows. His mouth, which did not certainly extend, like a john-dory's, from ear to ear, was yet of sufficient width to disclose between thirty and forty long, strong, whitish tusks, the various heights and distances whereof gave a pleasing variety to that feature. Though his tall coun-tenance was terminated by a chin which might, upon a pinch, have had an interview with his stomach, still there was quite enough of him between the chin and waistband to admit space for a waistcoat, without the least difficulty. Conaghty, in point of disposition, was a quiet, well-tempered, and, I believe, totally irreproachable person. He was not unacquainted with the superficies of law, nor was he without professional business. Nobody, in fact, disliked him, and he disliked nobody. In national idiom, and Emerald brogue, he unquestionably excelled (save one) all his contemporaries. Dialogues sometimes occurred in court between him and Lord Avonmore, the chief baron, which were truly ludicrous. The most unfortunate thing, however, about poor Conaghty was his utter contempt for what fastidious folks call dress. As he scorned both garters and suspenders, his stockings and small-cloths enjoyed the full blessings of liberty. A well-twisted cravat, as if it feared to be mistaken

the interstice. His rusty black coat, well eyes grew dim, his pulse ceased, his long limbs trimmed with peeping button-moulds, left him, quivered—failed; and down came poor Coaltogether, one of the most tremendous figures naghty with a loud shriek and a tremendous I ever saw of his own profession. At length crash. His beloved bride, running up alarmed it pleased the counsellor, or old Nick on his by the noise, found the counsellor as inanimate behalf, to look out for a wife; and, as dreams as the boards he lay on. A surgeon was sent go by contraries, so Conaghty's perverse vision for, and phlebotomy was resorted to as for of matrimonial happiness induced him to select apoplexy, which the seizure was pronounced a sposa very excellent internally, but in her to be. His head was shaved; and by the time exterior as much the reverse of himself as any he revived a little, he had three extensive two of the same species could be. Madam blisters and a cataplasm preparing their Conaghty was (and I dare-say still is) a neat, stings for him. It was two days before he pretty, dressy little person; her head reached nearly up to her spouse's hip; and if he had horrid spectre that had assailed him - for he silly occasion. Sure there's no reason in that? stood wide, to let her pass, she might (without much stooping) have walked under him as through a triumphal arch. He was quite delighted with his captivating fairy, and she he grew quite delirious. His reason returned equally so with her good-natured giant. No-thing could promise better for twenty or thirty years of honey-moons, when an extraordinary and most unexpected fatality demonstrated the uncertainty of all sublunary enjoyments, and might teach ladies who have lost their beauty, the dangers of a looking-glass. The counsellor had taken a small house, and desired his dear little Mary to furnish it to her own dear little taste. This, as new-married ladies usually do, she set about with the greatest zeal and assiduity. She had a proper taste for things in general, and was, besides, extremely anxious to make her giant somewhat smarter; and, as he had seldom in his life had any intercourse with looking-glasses larger than necessary just to reflect his chin whilst shaving, she determined to place a grand mirror in her little drawing-room, extensive enough to exhibit the counsellor to himself from head to foot; and which, by reflecting his loose, shabby habiliments: and tremendous contour, might induce him to trim himself up. This plan was extremely promising in the eyes of little Mary; and she had no doubt it would be entirely consonant with her husband's own desire of Mrs. Conaghty's little drawing-room being the nicest in the neighbourhood. She accordingly purchased in Great George Street, at a very large price, a looking-glass of sufficient dimensions, and it was a far larger one than the counsellor had ever before noticed. When this fatal reflector was brought home, it was placed leaning against the wall in the still unfurnished drawing-room; and the lady, having determined at once to surprise and reform her dear giant, did not tell him of the circumstance. ill-fated counsellor, wandering about his new house - as people often do toward the close of the evening — that interregnum between sun, moon, and candlelight, when shadows are deep, and figures seem lengthened - suddenly entered the room where the glass was deposited. Unconscious of the presence of the immense reflector, he beheld, in the gloom, a monstrous and frightful Caliban, wild, loose, and shaggy, standing close and direct before him; and, as he raised his own gigantic arms in a paroxysm of involuntary horror, the goblin exactly followed his example, lifting its tremendous fists, as if with a fixed determination to fell the counsellor, and extinguish him for ever. Conaghty's imagination was excited to its utmost pitch. Though the spectre appeared larger than any d-l on authentic record, he had no doubt it was a genuine demon sent express to destroy his happiness and carry him to Beelzebub. As his apprehensions augmented, bouring beard flourished in full crops, to fill up his head. At length his blood recoiled, his to any body but his master,) sure it's their only recovered sufficiently to tell his Mary of the never fail to take the name of J-s on every really thought he had been felled to the ground by a blow from the goblin. Nothing, indeed, be cutting and hacking, starving and burning the grew quite delirious. His reason returned slowly and scantily; and when assured it was only a looking-glass that was the cause of his terror, the assurance did not alter his belief. He pertinaciously maintained, that this was only a kind story invented to tranquillise him. 'Oh, my dearest Mary!' said poor Conaghty,

'I'm gone!—my day is come—I'm called away for ever. Oh! had you seen the frightful figure Sure it's the Jews, and not the poor Catholics, that struck me down, you could not have sure that have to do with them: and sure the parvived it one hour. Yet why should I fear the liament-men make many a law twice as strong d-1? I'm not wicked, Mary! No; I'm not as any commandments; and the very gentlevery wicked!' A thorough Irish servant, an men that made those said laws don't observe old fellow whom the counsellor had brought their own enactments, except it suits their own from Connaught, and who of course was well purposes—though every 'sizes some of the acquainted with supernatural appearances, and crethurs are hanged for breaking one or two of had not himself seen the fatal mirror, discovered, as he thought, the real cause of the goblin's visit, which he communicated to his mistress with great solemnity, as she afterwards that your clergy don't put a stop to the practice: perpetually calling on the name of our Brophy, 'mistress,' said the faithful Dennis tice: perpetually calling on the name of our Redeemer, without any substantial reason for all the books in the master's study, I'd swear it was only a mistake! What harm did ever name could they call on, Master Jonah?' said my master do nobody? and what would bring a d-l overhauling a counsellor that did no harm? What say could be have to my master? 'Don't tease me, Dennis,' said the unhappy Mary; 'go along!—go!' 'I'll tell you, mistress,' said he; 'it was a d—l sure enough that was in it!' 'Hush! nonsense!' said his mistress. 'By J-s! it was the d-l, or one of his gossoons,' persisted Dennis; 'but he mistook the house, mistress, and that's the truth of it!' 'What do you mean?' said the misof it!' 'What do you mean?' said the retress. 'Why, I mane that you know Mr. lives on one side of us, and Mr. - lives at the other side, and they are both attorneys, and the people say they'll both go to him: and so the d—l, or his gossoon, mistook the door, and you see he went off again when he found it was my master that was in it, and not an attorney, mistress.' All efforts to convince Conaghty he was mistaken were vain. The illusion could not be removed from his mind; he had received a shock which affected his whole frame; a constipation of the intestines took place; and in three weeks the poor fellow manifested the effects of groundless horror in a way which every one regretted." This is as good as any of the anecdotes, worded up rather prosily by our ancient racon-teur. An apology for Irish swearing affords an example of another sort.

"'Is it not extraordinary, Michael,' said I one day (as a great number of labourers were making up hay in one of the meadows, and Michael and myself were seated on a heap of it), 'that those poor fellows can scarcely pro-good Irish without either swearing or cursing, because it's their own tongue. Besides, all their forefathers used to be cursing the English day and night for many a hundred years; so that they never used the Sassanagh tongue without mixing curses along with it, and now it's grown a custom, and they say that the devil himself could not break them of it—poor crethurs! 'I should think the devil won't try, Mick Heney.' 'It's no joke, Master Jonah.' 'But,' said I, (desirous of drawing him out,) 'they 'Yes, but there is, Master Jonah,' said Heney: ' in the owld time, when the English used to praying to Jesus grew so pat, that now they can't help it.' 'But then, Michael,' said I, 'the commandments!' 'Poo-o! what have the crethurs to do with the commandments? them.' Heney was now waxing warm on the subject, and I followed him up as well as I could. 'Why, Mick, I wonder, nevertheless, Heney. 'Why should the clergy hinder them? It's only putting them in mind of the name they are to be saved by. Sure there's no other name could do them a pennyworth of good or grace. It's well for the crethurs they have that same name to use. As father Doran says, pronouncing the glorified name puts them in mind every minute of the only friend any poor Irish boy can depend upon; and there can be no sin in reminding one of the place we must all go to, and the holy Judge we'll be all judged by at the latter end. Sure its not Sergeant Towler, or the likes of him, you'd have the crethurs swearing by, Master Jonah. He makes them remember him plentifully when he comes to these parts.' 'And even the schoolmasters don't punish young children for the same thing, remarked I. Why should they? rejoined Michael Heney; 'sure Mr. Beal, though he's a Protestant, does not forbid it. 'How so?' 'Why, because he says if he did, it would encourage disobedience to their parents, which is by all clergy forbid the control of the con den as a great sin as well as shame.' 'Disobe-dience!' said I, in wonder. 'Yes; the fathers and mothers of the childer generally curse and swear their own full share every day, at any rate: and if the master told the childer it was a great sin, they would consider their fathers and mothers wicked people, and so despise and fly in their faces! But, surely you are ordered not to take God's name in vain? 'And sure,' said Heney, 'its not in vain when it makes people believe the truth; and many would not believe a word a man said in this this porces sent out their icy perspiration; he nounce a sentence without some oath to contry unless he swore to it, Master Jonsh' tottered — the fiend too was in motion! his firm, or some deity to garnish it with? 'Mash' But cursing,' persisted I, 'is ill-natured saw hair bristled up, as it were like pikes to defend ter Jonah, (he never said 'please your honour' well as wicked.' 'Sure there's no harm in cursing a brute beast,' said Heney, 'because there's no soul in it; and if one curses a Christian for doing a bad act, sure its only telling him what he'll get a taste of on the day of judgment.' 'Or, perhaps, the day after, Michael Heney,' said I, laughing. 'The devil a priest in the county can tell that, said Heney; but, (looking at his watch,) you're playing your pranks on me, Master Jonah! the bells should have been rung for the mowers' dinner. half an hour ago, and be d-d to them! The devil sweep them altogether, the idle crethurs ! 'Fie to yourself, Mr. Heney!' cried I: but he waited for no further argument, and I got out, I really think, the reasons which they all benakes an abatement of fifteen years out of twenty at the galleys, if a man kills another without premeditation: and I think the same principle may apply to the involuntary as-semblage of oaths which, it should seem, have been indigenous in Ireland for some centuries

We are sorry we cannot give a story of Curran and a dog, but it is too long; and a few scraps must suffice.

"Carding the tithe proctors (who certainly were the genuine tyrants of Ireland) was occasionally resorted to by the White Boys, and was performed in the following manner. tithe proctor was generally waked out of his first sleep by his door being smashed in; and the boys in white shirts desired him 'never to fear,' as they only intended to card him this bout for taking a quarter instead of a tenth from every poor man in the parish. They then turned him on his face upon the bed; and taking a lively ram cat out of a bag which they brought with them, they set the cat between the proctor's shoulders. The beast, being nearly as much terrified as the proctor, would endeayour to get off; but being held fast by the tail, he intrenched every claw deep in the proctor's back, in order to keep up a firm resistance to the White Boys. The more the tail was pulled back, the more the ram cat tried to go forward; at length, when he had, as he conceived, made his possession quite secure, main force convinced him to the contrary, and that if he kept his hold, he must lose his tail. So, he was dragged backward to the proctor's loins, grappling at every pull, and bringing away, here and there, strips of the proctor's skin, to prove the pertinacity of his defence. When the ram cat had got down to the loins, he was once more placed at the shoulders, and again carded the proctor (toties quoties) according to his Walking Gallows " At the period alluded to, law being suspended, and the courts of justice closed, the 'question' by torture was re-vived and largely practised. The commercial exchange of Dublin formed a place of execution; even suspected rebels were every day immolated as if convicted on the clearest evidence; and Lient. H___'s pastime of hanging on his own back persons whose physiognomies he thought characteristic of rebellion was (I am ashamed to say) the subject of jocularity instead of punishment. What, in other times, he would himself have died for, as a murderer, was laughed at as the manifestation of loyalty: never yet was martial law so abused, or its enormities so hushed up as in Ireland. Being a military officer, the lieutenant conceived he had a right to do just what he thought proper, and to make the most of his time while martial law was flourishing. Once, when high in blood, he happened to meet a suspicious-looking peasant torily account for himself according to the lieu- | an eye-witness) took place in the barrack-yard body at hand to vouch for him, the lieutenant of course immediately took for granted that he must be a rebel strolling about, and imagining the death of his most gracious majesty. He therefore, no other court of justice being at hand, considered that he had a right to try the man by his own opinion; accordingly, after a brief interrogation, he condemned him to die, and without further ceremony proceeded to put his own sentence into immediate execution. However, to do the lieutenant justice, his mode was not near so tedious or painful as that practised by the grand signior, who sometimes causes the ceremony to be divided into three acts, giving the culprit a drink of spring water to refresh him between the two first; nor was it so severe as the burning old women formerly for witchcraft. In fact, the 'walking gallows' was both on a new and simple plan; and after some kicking and plunging during the operation, never failed to be completely effectual. The lieutenant being, as before mentioned, of lofty stature, with broad and strong shoulders, saw no reason why they might not answer his majesty's service, upon a pinch, as well as two posts and a cross bar (the more legitimate instrument upon such occasions): and he also considered that, when a rope was not at hand, there was no good reason why his own silk cravat (being softer than an ordinary halter, and of course less calculated to hurt a man) should not be a more merciful choke-band than that employed by any Jack Ketch in the three kingdoms. In pursuance of these benevolent intentions, the lieutenant, as a preliminary step, first knocked down the suspected rebel from county Kildare, which the weight of metal in his fist rendered no difficult achievement. His garters then did duty as handcuffs; and with the aid of a brawny aide-de-camp (one such always attended him), he pinioned his victim hand and foot, and then most considerately advised him to pray for King George, observing that any prayers for his own d-d popish soul would be only time lost, as his fate in every world (should there be even a thousand) was decided to all eternity for having imagined the death of so good a monarch. During this ex-hortation, the lieutenant twisted up his long cravat so as to make a firm, handsome rope, and then expertly sliding it over the rebel's neck, secured it there by a double knot, drew the cravat over his own shoulders, the aid-de camp holding up the rebel's heels, till he felt him pretty easy, the lieutenant with a powerful chuck drew up the poor devil's head as high as his own (cheek by jowl), and began to trot about with his burden like a jolting cart-horse, —the rebel choking and gulping meanwhile, until he had no further solicitude about sublunary affairs-when the lieutenant, giving him a parting chuck, just to make sure that his neck was broken, threw down his load-the personal assets about which, the aide-de-camp made a present of to himself. Now, all this proceeding was very pains-taking and ingenious; and yet the ungrateful government (as Secretary Cook assured me) would have been better pleased had the execution taken place on timber and with hemp, according to old formalities. To be serious. This story is scarcely credible, yet it is a notorious fact; and the lieutenant, a few nights afterward, acquired the sobriquet which forms a head to this sketch, and with which he was invested by the upper gallery of Crow Street Theatre; nor did he ever get rid of it to his dying day. The above trotting executenant's notion of evidence; and having no- at Kerry House, Stephen's Green. The hangee was, I believe (as it happened), in reality a rebel."

Pun.—"A gentleman of the bar, married to a lady who had lost all her front teeth, and squinted so curiously that she appeared nearly blind, happened to be speaking of another lady who had run away from her husband. 'Well,' said Harvey, 'you have some comfort as to your wife.' 'What do you mean, air?' said the barrister. 'I mean that if once you should iose Mrs. —, you will never be able to i-dent-ify her."

A Sermon " I tell you all, my flock,' said Father Doran, 'there's not a man, woman, or child among you, that has not his soul this present minute shut up in his body, waiting for the last judgment, according to his faith and actions. I tell you fairly, that if flesh could be seen through, like a glass window, you might see every one's soul at the inside of his body peeping out through the ribs, like the prisoners at the jail of Maryborough through their iron bars: and the moment the breath is out of a man or woman, the soul escapes and makes off, to be dealt with as it deserves - and that's the truth; --- so say your beads and remember your clergy!""

Some repetitions, and a good deal of imma-terial matter, are the chief objections to this volume; but Sir Jonah is an old man; and if he does bestow some of his tediousness on us, he affords us also some light and agreeable pleasantries and sketches of Ireland during the last quarter of the last century.

Early Discipline Illustrated; or, the Infant System progressing and successful.
Samuel Wilderspin. 12mo. pp. 266. 12mo. pp. 266. London, 1832. Westley and Davis.

THE author is one of the chief promoters of those institutions whose object it is to take children even from the nursery and educate them, on the principle that tuition cannot be commenced at too early a period, and that heretofore this important work has generally been deferred too late. There can, we think, be no question, that the sooner good impressions are made upon the human mind, it will be the better for the individual and for society: all that there can be any difference of opinion upon, is the mode of effecting this purpose.

As it has not fallen in our way to witness any portion of Mr. Wilderspin's system in operation, we can only say, that his doctrines and descriptions, contained in the present volume, give us the idea of a person of strong natural sense and acuteness, and of one most zealous in the cause he has for twelve years laboured to advance in every quarter of the kingdom, by lectures, the establishment of schools, improvements in the method of teaching, and all other means in his power. That he has greatly suc-ceeded is evident from the following quota-

"Every lover of his country should rejoice in the fact, that there are now in the United Kingdom more than 10,000 schools, more than 100,000 teachers, and more than 1,000,000 of children, gathered from the streets and lanes, within the pale of these invaluable institutions.

The account we have here of Mr. Wilderspin's journeys from place to place, the nature of the receptions he met with, and the success or failure of his attempts, is rendered amusing by a number of local anecdotes, personal adventures, and such remarks as might occur to a from county Kildare, who could not satisfac- tion (which was humorously related to me by clever tourist. From these we are inclined to we meet him in any of his rambles. To illus-culprit has invariably pleaded in his behalf, and trate this matter we shall transcribe a few pas-shielded him from prosecution. Nor is this all.

blind others to those truly royal qualities.

" I took up my abode with a lady-a member of the Society of Friends - at the expense and Glasgow), men of apparent respectability of two gentlemen interested in the object I was anxious to promote. After the usual preliminaries, the authorities lent us a large room connected with the poor-house, until a suitable building could be erected. And although the children had to go a considerable distance, we soon obtained as many as could be accommodated. My kind hostess acted as almoner for some of the distinguished inmates of the Pavilion and other persons of rank; and one day she said: 'Friend Wilderspin, if thou likest to get a copy of thy book handsomely bound, a person of distinction will give it to the king.' Accordingly, I had one prepared, and enjoyed the high gratification of hearing that it was most graciously received. His late Majesty was subsequently apprised that an infant school was opened in Brighton, and was pleased to express a wish that the children should be taken into the Pavilion; but the time for doing so was not appointed. As, however, I had remained a much longer time than I contemplated, and the institution in London was suffering from my absence, it was agreed that I should leave the town, and return as soon as my presence was desired. After some time had elapsed, I received a letter, urging my immediate attendance in order to superintend the introduction of these infants to the king, and I proceeded to Brighton without the least delay. But, to my indescribable regret, I discovered that the letter had, by some means, been delayed a day, and that I had arrived, most unfortunately, on the very evening of the one on which the exhibition was appointed to take place. It appeared, however, that some of the nobility went from the Pavilion to the school, witnessed what they could from the exertions of the master who had just been initiated into the system, and were so far satisfied by the result, that his Majesty, from their report, most munificently promised to clothe the chil-dren annually, and this was done to the time of his death. After this, the number of schools greatly increased; some persons, who had avowed themselves hostile, came forward to our help; and others, who had hitherto stood aloof from various causes, advanced to our aid. A large school was opened at Brighton, which I hear gives great satisfaction. Another has since been established."

Of the juvenile depravity of Manchester Mr. W. draws a frightful picture.

"Juvenile delinquency is appalling in Manchester, as it is in all the great towns I have visited. I have watched little children, waiting most eagerly for an opportunity to enter shops, in order to take what they could. Once I observed a child watching at a window to give a signal, should it be necessary, and another bring out a large plum-cake, which was immediately given to the former. On detecting trate this matter we shall transcribe a lew passages from his volume.

About the beginning of his career, Mr. W. Visited Brighton; and it is with pleasure we extract a paragraph relative to his late Majesty George IV., on whose love and patronage of the arts and literature this journal shall never the sites the proper with the sites the proper with the sites the proper with the sites are often beset by girls, about eight years of age, some dressed gaily and others in rags; and he proceeds to facts which, however necessary to be inquired into, for the sake of applying a remedy, it could answer no good end to copy into our miscellany, for the reading of every class, and age, and sex. We will rather copy one of the author's stories, to shew the influence of the Roman priesthood in Ireland.

" In one of my rambles, a fine young woman, about twenty-two years of age, in a very dirty and ragged plight, came out of a wretched hovel, and with intense emotion said, 'O, for the love of God and of the holy virgin, y'er honour, give me a penny! On bestowing what I thought proper, I observed her enter a neighbouring cabin, where various articles were sold, and bring from thence two candles. Anxious to watch her still farther, I followed her to her and on this, some straw or rushes appeared heneath a rug. Observing her gazing with great intentness on it, and not noticing me, though standing at the door, I was led to in-'Och! trude, by asking what was there? sure,' was the reply, 'and is'nt it my own dear, dear darlint?' And, lifting up the rug, she exposed to my view the corpse of her babe. Affected by the sight and the emotion of the mother, I entered into conversation with her, and at length ventured to speak of a future state, on which, though she had paid marked attention to all I said as to her own circumstances, she stared, and exclaimed, with mingled anxiety and apprehension, 'And is it you that talk about these things? Hav'nt we, now, our own priest to do this? Does'nt he come very often here;—and does'nt he, sure, know more than you a grate dale? What is it, now, that he has not tould me? Och! ye need not be saying any thing at all, at all! Nor would she allow me to resume the subject. I then naturally inquired,—If she had such great faith in father O'Reilly, why she did not ask him to relieve her? 'Och,' said she, 'now I know that ye know nothing at all! Has he not often relaved me? and sure did he not say, the last time he was here, that if I put my trust in God, somebody would come and help me, and, faith! has'nt he sent you? and so no thanks to you."

We have got another story too—an adventure in a sea-bath in the Firth of Forth. Mr. W. tells us:

"A friend and myself were bathing one morning, as we had done before, and determined to swim out and rest on a certain rock. He generally took the lead, and while following I was suddenly struck as by an electric shock. them in the fact, the one who stole it said, 'I I then discovered that I had swam on a gelati-have not got it,' the receiver said, 'I did not nous substance, about three feet in diameter, take it;' and two others, who were waiting which proved to be a fish surrounded by stings. having made copies in the sand, they were fancy that our author is what is usually called opposite to divide the spoil, hastily ran off. In a moment it covered or enwrapped me, we "a character;" and such a character as we Frequently have I witnessed such acts, and that every part of my body was stung; and I could have no objection to cope withal, should secured the offender; but the early age of the could only disengage myself by tearing the we meet him in any of his rambles. To illust culprit has invariably pleaded in his behalf, and animal from me piece-meal, at the peril of my hands, which were just as if I had poured vitriol upon them. With great difficulty I swam back towards the shore; but when I reached the machine, I had not strength enough to dress; and was afterwards led home between two persons. A medical friend ordered an application of oil and vinegar. Intense agony, be silent, however much political feelings may he sitate to affirm that in many of the large which I can compare to nothing but the being towns, both of England and Scotland (particustum by thousands of wasps, continued for larly London, Liverpool, Bath, Manchester, about eight hours; and had it not terminated then, I must soon have sunk beneath the torture. As soon as the pain from the surface of the body was mitigated, I felt an internal soreness, was unable to eat for two days, and inflammation of the throat continued for a fortnight. Several of these creatures are seen on the sands left by the tide, for about a mouth in the year; and I observed that no home would tread on one, nor would children touch it except with a stick; but though the inhabitants of Porto-Bello had heard of persons being slightly stung, the oldest of them had never met with a case parallel to mine."

We will conclude with another extract, also interesting in the way of natural history.

"The cottages in some parts of Cumberland are often widely scattered, and a great number of the people are engaged as shepherds, herds-men, &c. Frequently have I witnessed in these and other mountainous districts, a dedwelling, built of earth, in which were four lightful illustration of the parable of the good posts driven in the ground; on them an oblong Shepherd, wherein it is said, 'the sheep know block was placed, measuring about four yards his voice.' When the sun is about to set, a by two, which, I supposed, served for a bed;—shepherd's boy advances along the foot of a chain of mountains, and giving a signal by a peculiar call or whistle, the flocks, which were scattered like spots of snow over those stupendous heights, begin to move simultaneously, and collecting as they pour down the steep descent, approach him in order, without leaving behind one solitary strongler." leaving behind one solitary straggler.

It is added, and affords an example of primitive manners :

" In consequence of the wide dispersion of the cottages, and of the general employment of the peasantry in pastoral life, the children cannot be sent to any regular school, and hence persons travel from house to house under the singular appellation of 'Whittle-gate masters.' They do not proceed according to the practice of 'giving lessons,' but become inmates of the dwellings they visit for a week or more, as may accord with the wishes and means of their inhabitants. Should another cottage be near, the children of the two are instructed in one group; but their tuition is confined to reading and writing. For this service, the teachers receive perhaps a few pence, but are always supplied with food; hence the name they bear, which intimates that they are masters, or instructors, for their victuals. Among these persons, I found one who deserves particular notice. After walking ten or twelve miles to a cottage, he had often the mortification of finding it contained neither pens, ink, nor paper. Necessity, however, is the mother of invention; and having great native genius, he devised several instruments, some of which, altered or improved, now meet the public eye under the names of others; and among them one to supersede these articles, which we are accustomed to consider indispensable. He had at first a board spread over with sand; and as retraced by the children, who were greatly delighted with the process, as they fancied they made the letters themselves. This was a manifest improvement on the sand-boards of Lancaster and Bell, on which the finger was used; as by the adoption of the reeds, they soon learned how to hold a pen. With no other tool than a pen-knife, he afterwards cut out a machine that would smooth the sand and set a copy in an instant."

We observe, at page 172, that Mr. W. speaks rather disparagingly of the Madras System, especially as compared with his own favourite Infant School plan: both, if well conducted, must be beneficial to the community. His remarks on prison discipline are very judicious. It is, indeed, very well to employ the best means that can be suggested to prevent these seminaries of vice and crime from adding more than they do to the mass of guilt and misery; but we have always felt, that to begin reforms there, was really beginning at the wrong end. By improving the moral condition of the people, and keeping only fifty inmates a-year out of gaol, more real good will be effected than by all the discipline that ever was devised for reclaiming the thousands who find their way thither, in consequence of the neglect of their childhood, the ignorance of their youth, and the mismanagement and misgovernment of their riper years.

Davids' Turkish Grammar.

[Second Notice: Conclusion.]

WANT of space in our last Number compelled us to postpone the close of our review of this work: we now conclude it with a few miscellaneous and, we think, interesting extracts of a literary character. " The oldest poetic writer of the Osmanlis is Aashik Pasha, the author of a collection of mystic poetry. Sheikhi lived as early as the reign of Orkhan. Baki, Nefi, Mesihi, Nedgati, Kasim, Fozouli, Misri, Kemal Pasha Zadeh, and Letifi, are considered among the most celebrated of the ancient poets. Nabi Efendi, Raghib Pasha, and Seid Reefet, hold a distinguished rank among the modern. The reign of Bajazet II. was one of the brightest epochs of Turkish poetry."

As an example we copy a part of an ode of Mesihi.

"Listen to the tale of the nightingale—that the vernal season approaches. The spring has formed a bower of joy in every grove where the almond-tree sheds its silver blossoms. Be joyful! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

"The groves and hills are again adorned with all kinds of flowers: a pavilion of roses, as the seat of pleasure, is raised in the garden. Who knows which of us may be alive when the fair season ends? Be joyful, therefore! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

"Again the dew glitters on the leaves of the lily, like the sparkling of a bright cimeter: the dew-drops fall through the air, on the garden of roses. Listen to me! listen to me! if thou desirest to be delighted. Be joyful! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

"The roses and tulips are like the blooming cheeks of beautiful maids, in whose ears hang varied gems, like drops of dew: deceive not thyself by thinking that these charms will have a long duration. Be joyful! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

"Every morning the clouds shed gems over given the selam aleik, he was about to seat the rose-beds: the breath of the gale is full of himself in the highest place, when the kami joyful! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

"The sweetness of the rose-bed has made the air so fragrant, that the dew, before it falls, is changed into rose-water: the sky has spread a pavilion of bright clouds over the garden. Be joyful! be full of mirth! for the spring season passes soon away: it will not last.

There are even gems to be picked up among the grammatical illustrations. For instance:

A certain thieving cutpurse and impostor, who was possessed of such power, that he could penetrate the walls of the Castle of Keiwan, and snatch the collyrium from the eye of Venus.

permitted to possess the sweet odour of faith without the thorn of malignity. Neither great nor small taste a draught from the hands of the cup-bearer of Fortune, without draining a portion of the dregs of the sweet wine.'

"A hare once said to a lioness, 'I bring

"Let him come whose heart is firm as gold:
We will try it by the fire of wine.
Let not the austere approach our Joyful assembly:
The narcissus of the bower shall be our sentine.
We will make the gay and rosy-cheeked of the banquet intoxicated, and head-drooping like rose-buds.
The purple goblet we will make our companion:
Causing the new wine to gush through the mouth of the bottle, we will let it flow like the blood of the sarrifice.

sacrifice. This is the ocean of love, and my tears burst like waves at the gust of my sighs.

My head is the firmament of reproach, and my eyebrows are like anchors.

The tiger of love agitates the forest of my gray hairs: My head is the barren desert of grief and despair."

We see that the cuckoo is called kuku kushi, and the wren (which well deserves its nightinbaba, a mother ana, a grandfather dedeh, a tanch, lemon limon, spinach ispinak, pepper biber (Lat. piper), alas vai (Lat. væ), and many other resemblances, which point to the original locale or condition of the thing designated. But, as we have noticed, we cannot go into dry details, and therefore end with a story from a MS. of Evlia Efendi, in the possession of M. Von Hammer.

"Mohammed II. being, like Jem, a very passionate monarch, severely rebuked his architect for not having built his mosque of the same height as Aya Sofiyah; and for having cut down the columns, which were each worth the whole tribute of Rûm (Asia Minor). The architect excused himself by saying, that he had reduced the two columns three cubits each, in order to give his building more solidity and strength against the earthquakes so common in Islambol; and had thus made the mosque lower than Aya Sofiyah. The emperor, not satisfied with this excuse, ordered the architect's appeared with his family before the tribunal of the kazi, styled Islambol Mollasi, to lay his complaint against the emperor, and appeal to the sentence of the law. The judge immediately sent his officer to cite the emperor to appear in court. The conqueror, on receiving this summons, said: 'The command of the prophet's law must be obeyed!' and putting on his mantle, and thrusting a mace into his belt, noble hands, wished him good day, and re-went into the court of law. After having turned to his palsee."

Tartarian musk. Be not neglectful of thy said:— Sit not down, O prince! but stand on duty, through too great love of the world. Be thy feet, together with thine adversary, who has made an appeal to the law.' The architect then made his complaint:—' My lord, I am a has made an appeal to the law.' perfect master-builder, and a skilful mathematician; but this man, because I made his mosque low, and cut down two of his columns, has cut off my two hands; which has ruined me, and deprived me of the means of supporting my family: it is thy part to pronounce the sentence of the noble law. The judge upon this thus addressed the emperor: 'What sayest thou, prince! Have you caused this man's hands to be cut off innocently?' The emperor immediately replied: 'By heaven, my lord! this man lowered my mosque; and for "In the rose-bower of this life we are not having reduced two columns of mine, each worth the produce of Misr (Egypt), thus robbing my mosque of all renown, by making it so low, I did cut off his hands: it is for thee to pronounce the sentence of the noble law. The kazi answered: 'Prince, renown is a misfortune! If a mosque be upon a plain, and forth every year many young ones; and you low and open, worship in it is not thereby in the whole course of your life only bring prevented. If each column had been a precious forth one or two.' True,' answered the lioness, 'I bring forth but one; but that which I bring forth is a lion." his skilful workmanship, you have illegally cut off: he can henceforth do no more than attend to his domestic affairs. The maintenance of him and his numerous family necessarily, by law, falls upon thee. What sayest thou, prince?' Sultan Mohammed answered:—' Thou must pronounce the sentence of the law.' 'This is the legal sentence,' replied the kazi: 'If the architect requires the law to be strictly enforced, your hands must be cut off; for if a man do an illegal act which the noble law doth not allow, that law decrees that he shall be requited according to his deeds.' The sultan then offered to grant him a pension from the public gale compliment) bukludgeh bulbul, a father treasury of the Mussulmans. 'No!' replied the Molla; 'it is not lawful to take this from philosopher filsof, cherry kires, chestnut kes- the public treasury; the offence was yours: my sentence therefore is, that from your own private purse you allow this maimed man ten aktchahs a-day.' 'It is well!' said the conqueror, 'let it be twenty aktchahs a-day; but let the cutting off his hands be legalised.' architect, in the contentment of his heart, ex-claimed, 'Be it accounted lawful in this world and the next!' and having received a patent for his pension, withdrew. Sultan Mohammed also received a certificate of his entire acquittal. The kazi then apologised for having treated him as an ordinary suitor; pleading the impartiality of law, which requires justice to be administered to all without distinction, and intreating the emperor to seat himself on the sacred carpet. 'Efendi,' said Sultan Mohammed, angrily, 'if thou hadst shewn favour to me, saying to thyself, 'This is the sultan,' and hadst wronged the architect, I would have broken thee in pieces with this mace,' at the same time drawing it out from under the skirt hands to be cut off; which was done accord- of his robe. 'And if thou, prince,' said the ingly. On the following day the architect kazi, 'hadst refused to obey the legal sentence pronounced by me, thou wouldst have fallen a victim to divine vengeance: for I should have delivered thee up to be destroyed by the dragon beneath this carpet.' On saying which, he lifted up his carpet, and an enormous dragon put forth its head, vomiting fire from its mouth: Be still, said the kazi, and again laid the carpet smooth; on which the sultan kissed his

We have to reproach Mr. Davids with using ! the vulgarism " talented" at p. lxi. of his Discourse: he ought to be ashamed of it. At p. iv. too, "sufficient definite idea," is shocking to our taste. But these are the only censures we shall pass on his admirable work, which places him in an exalted rank among the foremost scholars of Europe.

The Return of the Victors: a Poem. By W. Dailey. Pp. 134. London, E. Wilson; Edinburgh, Waugh and Innes; Oxford, Talboys. EXCITED by the events of the Polish rising. our young hard has rushed into poetry with more of feeling than success.

Buker's Grenada Register and Literary Album for 1832. St. George, Baker.

This is a little West-Indian production, containing a great deal of useful information, and a spice of amusing literature at the conclu-

A Lecture on Knowledge; delivered before the Members of the Keighley Mechanics' Institution. By Thomas Swinburn Carr. 8vo. pp. 28. Keighley, Aked; London, Crofts.

FROM the circumstance of lectures not always being published, the efforts of this various and useful method of exercising and assisting the intellect, very often do not come, or come slowly, under our critical remark. We are glad (though late) to seize the opportunity afforded us by this well-written little pamphlet, to acknowledge the great mass of information which is thus so easily and so pleasantly communicated. Lectures, in London, where all species of intelligence are so much at every one's command, are perhaps less efficient than elsewhere: but in the country, where mental wealth is scattered, and more difficult of access, this plan of collecting thought and instruction must be, and is, very valuable. In the manufacturing towns especially, a great body of knowledge is thus being disseminated; much has been, and much more might be done; encouragement ought to be given to these attempts to interest and to instruct : and care should be taken as to the wholesomeness and utility of the food thus placed within general reach. We are very much pleased with the lecture before us; it is the first one of a series on the history of philosophy—not merely, to use the author's own words, " that philosophy which is conversant with intellectual and abstract notions, but also of that higher philosophy, which pertains to the cultivation of our moral nature, and to the humanisation and embellishment of civilised society." And it is treated as such a subject ought to be treated-with fine taste and fine feeling, and a conviction that intellectual pursuits alone can redeem the worldliness, and ameliorate the selfishness, of a highly civilised state of society. We must do Mr. Carr the justice of quotation, though it is difficult to select one link from a continued chain of reasoning: we therefore content ourselves with an admirably expressed and insulated remark:

"Every man, when he is engaged in argument, is more affected with positives than negatives'-pays greater attention to the reasonings that support his hypothesis, than to the exceptions that counteract it :--every man, when he brings up all the force of his intellect, all the light of demonstration, to bear upon though 'it reveals the beauty of earth, yet | shuts up the face of heaven,' and the nobler beauties that adorn it."

Three Nights in a Lifetime, and Inishairlach: Domestic Tules. Pp. 416. Edinburgh, 1832, Maclachlan and Stewart; London, Baldwin and Co.

THERE are some authors who use their sense as Queen Dido did her cow-hide; and it is quite wonderful how little will cover a large space. A very slight sketch of narrative is here overlaid with a great prodigality of words; the story is vague and inexplicit, and gives little indication of talent; while scarce enough of interest is excited for the reader to observe that the mysterious separation of the lovers is wholly unexplained.

in Questions and Answers; with Illustrations adapted for facilitating the Naval Student in the acquisition of the Art, &c. &c. By R. Brindley. 12mo. pp. 167. Devonport, Hearle; London, Sherwood and Co. WITH a vocabulary of technical terms, and accounts of the latest improvements in nautical science, this is a volume of perfect utility, and well calculated to supply all necessary informa-tion to those for whose instruction it is intended. It is properly dedicated to the King.

Waverley Novels. Vol. XXXVIII. The Talis-Edinburgh, Cadell; London, Whitman. taker.

THE frontispiece and vignette are both painted by Mr. Watson Gordon, and do credit to Scottish art. An Introduction, dated 1st July, 1832, will be read with melancholy interest, when the actual condition of the admired writer is remembered. It gives a curious account of the Lee penny, a Saracen amulet in the possession of the Lockhart family; and reprints a still more curious romance of Richard the First's adventures in the Holy Land. These add much to the value of this volume.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCE-MENT OF SCIENCE. (Abridged from the Oxford Herald.)

In September last year, a numerous body of persons engaged and interested in the cultivation of science met at York, and formed themselves into an Association, which took the name of "The British Association for the Advancement of Science." The next meeting was appointed to be held at Oxford, and many distinguished cultivators and admirers of science assembled in that city on Monday and the following days. In the course of Monday meetings of the committee and of the general Association were held, for the purpose of admitting new members, of which the numbers, both of strangers and of residents, were very considerable. Various arrangements were also made for the transaction of the business of the Association; and it was agreed that general meetings should be held each day at one, and that in the mornings and evenings the members should meet in four sections, corresponding to different branches of science. The following were the divisions of the subjects, and the names of the principal persons who formed the provisional committees :-

any single point of a question, is in danger of rendering that point so brilliant to his imagination, as to eclipse, with its very splendour, all the rest; in the same manner as the sun,

Dr. Pearson, Professor Powell, Mr. Potter, Professor Rigaud, Mr. Rothman, Captain Smyth, Rev. R. Willis, Rev. W. Walker, and the Rev. W. Whewell.

2. Chemistry, Misserulogy, end Chemical Art.—Mr. Dallon, Dr. Daubeny, Mr. Children, Professor Cussning, Mr. Faraday, Mr. Johnston, Dr. Prout, Dr. Turner, Rev. W. V. Harcourt, Mr. Harris, Professor Ritchie, Mr. Soresby, Dr. Gregory, Mr. König, Mr. Brook, Professor Niller, Marquess of Northampton, and Mr. Guillemand.

3. Geology and Geography.—Rev. W. Buckland, D.D., Rev. W. Conybeare, Rev. A. Sedgwick, Mr. R. I. Muchison, Mr. G. B. Greenough, W. H. Fitton, M.D., Rev. W. V. Harcourt, the Marquess of Northampton, Majorental Straton, Viscount Cole, Sir P. Egerton, Bart, Mr. W. Smith, Dr. E. Turner, Mr. Hearry Withson, Tho. England, Eaq., Sir C. Lemon, Bart., Mr. W. Hutton, Mr. Callft, Mr. John Taylor, Rev. J. Yates, Mr. G. Mastell, Sir T. D. Acland, Bart., Mr. J. Carne.

4. Natural History.—Mr. R. Brown, Dr. Dushen, Professor Henslow, Dr. Williams, Mr. R. Taylor, Mr. Jenyas, Mr. Garnons, Mr. P. Duncan, Mr. Yarrel, M. Vigors, Mr. Sabine, Dr. Prichard, Mr. Clift, Dr. Kid, Dr. Knox, Mr. Burthell.

The authorities of the University of the Mr. Clift, Dr. Kid, Dr. Knox, Mr. Burthell.

The authorities of the University allowed the general meetings to be held in the Shelds-A Compendium of Naval Architecture, arranged nian theatre, and the sectionial meetings and other business of the Association to take place in a suite of rooms in the Clarendon buildings.

On Tuesday the sectional committees met at ten o'clock, and chose the following officers:

Various business was transacted by these committees, and papers read upon the sections, some of which gave occasion to instructive discussions.

At one the Association met in the magnificent theatre, a large portion of the gallery being filled with ladies. Viscount Milton, the president of the Association at its former meeting, and president of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, then took the chair, and, after an appropriate speech, resigned the former office; and the Rev. Dr. Buckland took the chair, as president of the assembly. Professor Airy was called upon for his report on the state and progress of physical and practical astronomy, undertaken in pursuance of the request of the former meeting, which was accordingly read by the author. Mr. Lubbock's report on the present state of our knowledge respecting the tides, was the next in order; and, in the absence of the author, the substance of it was stated to the meeting by the Rev. W. Whewell, and illustrated by the exhibition of a map of the world, in which were drawn the co-tidal lines, or lines which pass through all the points where it is high water at the same moment. After an announcement of the order of the subsequent proceedings, the president then adjourned the meeting till 5 o'clock, when the members met to partake of a splendid entertainment in the hall of New College, given to the Association by the Oxford members of it. After dinner many loyal and patriotic toasts were given, and others connected with scientific institutions, which called forth addresses from the Vice-Chancellor, Mr. Duncan senior fellow and the Warden of New College, Lord Milton, Dr. Buckland, Mr. Whewell, Dr. Davies Gilbert, Sir T. Brisbane, Professor Hamilton, Mr. Taylor, Linnean Society, Mr. Murchison, Professor Airy, Professor Sedgwick, Sir Alex Croke, the Rev. W. V. Harcourt, Mr. Dalton, Professor Babbage, and Lord Morpeth.

The party adjourned from the hall to the rooms at the Clarendon, when sectional meetings were held, and in the chemical room experiments were shewn by Mr. Keening, illustrative of his communication on a safety

On Wednesday morning sectional meetings were again held, and many valuable papers were read, and discussions carried on in each of the four rooms. At one o'clock the President took the chair, and at his request the business was begun; the chairman of each section reading to the general meeting the report of the proceedings of the preceding day in his respective department. At the conclusion of the report of the geological section, the President (Dr. Buckland) requested permission of the assembly to allow Dr. Mobaston's gold medal, voted last year by the Geological Society to Mr. William Smith, to be presented to him, in the presence of the members of the British Assorelation. This was accordingly done by Mr. Murchison, who pronounced Mr. Smith to be the father of English geology. Mr. Smith returned his most grateful thanks

Professor Cumming then read his report on thermo-electricity. Mr. Forbes read his report on the present condition of our knowledge of meteorology. Mr. Willis gave a verbal account of the present state of the philosophy of sound, illustrated by diagrams, and by musical experiments. The meeting was then adjourned.

In the evening, at nine o'clock, two very interesting lectures were given in the music-room; the one by Dr. Ritchie on magnetic electricity, and the other by Dr. Turner on chemistry.

At half-past eleven o'clock on Thursday morning, about 150 members of the Association, on horseback, accompanied by carriages containing ladies, and by many persons on foot, assembled near Magdalen Bridge, to attend a assembled the Amaghaen Bridge, to attend a lecture by Professor Buckland, on the geology of the neighbourhood of Oxford. He demonstrated, by examples, the dependence of the character of the soil upon the condition of the subjacent strata; and called their attention to the adaptation of sand and calcareous and argillaceous soils to the different modes of agriculture. He enlarged on the advantage of improving the mineral condition of all soils by artificial manures, the application of which is founded on the principles of agricultural chemistry; and suggested the importance of adding to the geological committee of the Association a section to be devoted to the improvement of agriculture. He expatiated on the agricultural state of Ireland as connected with the possibility of reclaiming peat-bogs, distinguishing those which are capable of being re-claimed from those which, in his opinion, can never be reclaimed without an outlay of capital far exceeding any profitable return. He also explained the manner in which water is supplied from the sea, through the medium of the atmosphere, to fertilise the earth by rains, and to furnish a perpetual supply of water for the maintenance of springs and rivers. The professor pointed out many defects in the ordinary systems of draining, and illustrated, by examples, the important fact, that large tracts of land might be permanently drained at small expense, by methods depending entirely on consideration of the geological structure of the substrata. He also spoke of Artitian wells, and suggested the advantage that would arise from a more general application of them in the neighbourhood of London. After an excursion of nearly six hours, occupied chiefly in exhibit-ing the geological character of the neighbourhood, the professor returned with the party to dinner. In the evening the different sections were occupied with papers and discussions, as at the previous meetings.

(The following is from the Oxford Journal.) An interesting account was delivered by Mr.

Scoresby, of a singular effect produced by light-ning on the New York packet vessel. Its object was to throw light on the disputed question, whether conductors provoke the discharge of electric fluid, which might otherwise pass over a body innocuously, or carry off the fatal effects of it, though it may invite an explosion?" During a terrific storm which the above vessel weathered in April 1827, an iron rod was attached, as a conductor, to the mast-head, and let down in an oblique direction into the sea. A flash of lightning soon struck it, with a terrible explosion; the cabins were filled with sulphur, and the whole vessel was wrapped in flames. The lower part of the conducting rod was found, on examination, to be fused—owing, probably, to its being thinner at that end, and therefore not having a sufficient body of conducting power. Other effects, however, were very remarkable. The compasses changed their points; all the chronometers in the vessel stopped; and what is more, parts of their me-chanism were discovered to possess magnetic attraction. Every knife and fork acted like so many loadstones. An infirm and elderly gentleman, who lay disabled in the ladies' ca-bin, was so fortunately electrified, that he instantly skipped about, and, when the vessel arrived in port, walked home to his hotel. The inference which Mr. Scoresby drew from these circumstances was, that this conducting rod, though it perhaps occasioned a severe shook, by attracting the electric matter, yet saved the vessel from a fatal blast. This conclusion of Mr. Scoresby was confirmed by another gentleman, who adduced the instance of a single vessel, armed with a similar conductor, which alone escaped injury out of many others, not so defended, that lay close around her.

[Conclusion in our next.]

ROYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS.

SIR HENRY HALFORD, Bart. in the chair. The last evening meeting for the season was well attended, although not quite so numerously as some of the preceding ones, which might be accounted for by the circumstance of the Harveian oration (by Dr. Tattersall) hav-ing been previously delivered on the afternoon of the same day. The Bishop and Dean of Chichester, the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Nicholl, and other distinguished persons, were present. Dr. Francis Hawkins, the registrar, read a paper, by Dr. Uwins, entitled, "Cursory remarks on the present state of medicine, &c." in which the author expressed his opinion, that medical practice is, perhaps, less advanced at the present time than medical polity, and that the admitted diminution in the rate of mortality is in great part attributable to moral improvements in society. Many practitioners, he thought, now-a-days, are occupied with partial views of pathology; a fault to be avoided only through the influence of an en-larged and liberal education, which ought always to be considered necessary to the complete physician; since an education strictly professional, begun at a too late period, is sure to cramp the mind, and render it unfit for comprehensive views, and for the fulfilment of the numerous and varied duties which devolve upon a physician.

In closing our sessional notices, we cannot refrain from expressing a sense of the gratification these re-unions have afforded to us,a feeling held in common with the thousands distinguished by abilities and rank, who have attended them throughout the season.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR JULY. 21d 10h 22m - the Sun enters Leo. 27d - the Sun eclipsed, visible at Greenwich.

Digits eclipsed 0° 12′ 30″ on the Sun's southern limb. To Scotland the Sun will not be eclipsed; to the northern counties of England the solar and lunar limbs will be merely in contact; at Paris 41' will be eclipsed. The eclipse will increase in magnitude towards the equator, and within the tropics will be total. It is very probable that the planet Venus will be seen during the total obscuration, about 45' from the Moon's northern limb.

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

	D.	H.	N.
→ First Quarter in Virgo······	4	11	33
O Full Moon in Sagittarius	12	10	55
Last Quarter in Aries	20	10	2
New Moon in Cancer,	27	ì	55
he Moon will be in conjunction	. wi	th

D. H. M. Staturn in Leo	D. H. M. Staturn in Leo	2 2 46
Uranus in Capricornus	15 5 0
Jupiter in Pisces	18 3 7
Mars in Arles	29 0 17 42
Venus in Cancer	27 2 5
Mercury in Leo	28 18 8 8
Saturn in Leo	29 16 51

2d 20h 15m — Mercury in his superior conjunction with the Sun. 9d — greatest north latitude. 27d 10h in conjunction with Regulus: difference of latitude 15'.

26d 20h 45m-Venus in her superior conjunction with the Sun. 30d-perihelion.

8d 20h Mars in conjunction with Piscium. The Asteroids.—1^d—Vesta in conjunction with 42 Leonis. 3^d—Juno in conjunction with a Leonis. 1^d—Pallas in Pisces near the equinoctial colure. 9^d—Ceres in conjunction with · Ceti.

174-Jupiter stationary.

Eclipses of the Satellites.

	D.		M.	8.
First Satellite, immersion	6	14	10	47
	22	12	97	ì
	29	M	2 į	3
Second Satellite	1	13	47	23
	26		54	52
Third Satellite, emersion		13	45	2
Fourth Satellite, immersion	10		29	13

19h-major axis of the ring of Saturn 37"-96; minor axis 2"69.

Uranus is advancing to a favourable position for observation.

J. T. BARKER. Deptford.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

THE Society held its last meeting for the season on Wednesday week; Colonel Leake in the chair. Mr. Hamilton read a critical dissertation, by himself, on the celebrated passage in the description of the descent of Apollo, Iliad A. v. 47.

Mr. H. thinks that the commentators and translators of Homer, in the various versions of the passage, have failed to convey the definite sense of the original, in consequence of having overlooked the peculiar characteristics attributed to Night in the ancient mythology. The Greeks, peculiarly susceptible of impressions from all the ordinary phenomena of nature, seem to have been especially struck by the vivid contrast presented, in their brilliant climate, between day and night; hence the word #µies mild, from #µies the day (the day being mild and fair to look upon); and hence they described night by the epithet "awful" verence as a goddess, and assigned to her for appointment of Dr. Rosen as honorary foreign her progeny all terrible things, as inqui dreams, secretary to the committee, to conduct the cor-Savarès death, xñeis the Fates, Eerrous the respondence with Germany, and the subordi-Furies, Niμses the goddess of vengeance, "Ατη nate arrangements, having been noticed, the The Furies were more particularly guilt, &c. supposed to be sent from heaven to punish crimes through the intervention of night, becrimes through the intervention of night, best cause remorse and despair, the direful effects of a guilty conscience, are chiefly felt during the darkness and silence of that season. Now such the design of Apollo a train of calamities it is the design of Apollo the Artides for their impiety in the Artides for their impiety in the Artides for their impiety in the design of the Artides for their impiety in the procession of Sir W. Ouseless of the control to bring on the Atridæ, for their impiety in ley. 8vo.

5. The Hoel lan ki, a Chinese Drama, translated by dishonouring his priest: to what, therefore, could he be more appropriately compared, when descending surrounded with the ministers of divine vengeance, than to Night, the mother of the night." The moral or metaphysical allengery included in the words as thus explained, does not indeed harmonise with the general simplicity of the Homeric poems; accordingly the clause is rejected by several of the best dishonouring his priest: to what, therefore, the clause is rejected by several of the best critics, as an interpolation of later times, when critics, as an interpolation of later times, when it was the preceding list, but, from accipate were more anxious to display the stores to add to the preceding list, but, from accipation to their knowledge in enigmatical and oracular dental causes, this could not be effected, viz. of their knowledge in enigmatical and oracular language, than simply to represent nature, as in the earlier ages.

Lord Morpeth, Lord Cavendish, and R. Sneyd, Esq. were elected members.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION PUND.

THE anniversary meeting of this active and flourishing institution was held on Saturday last, and was attended by a great number of its most distinguished supporters, among whom were the Dukes of Wellington, Somerset, and Northumberland, the Earls of Munster and Delawarr, Sir Robert Gordon, Sir Gore Ouseley, Sir George Warrender, Sir George Staunton, Sir Alexander Johnston, Sir W. Ouseley, &c. &c. His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury sent a letter expressing his concern that he was prevented from attending, as it would have given him pleasure to declare the interest he felt in the objects of the Society, and his satisfaction at the judgment and diligence with which its labours have been prosecuted. On the table of the meeting-room were placed several copies of each of the ten works prepared by the exertions of the committee during the past year, to be presented to the subscribers this day. The annual report of the committee was read by the chairman, Sir Gore Ouseley Owing to there not having been a general meeting of the subscribers last year, from causes explained in the report, it comprised a period of two years. After noticing in appropriate terms the loss sustained by the Fund in the death of its first munificent patron, King George the Fourth, the report proceeded to state, that his present most excellent Ma-jesty had been graciously pleased to signify his intention to place two royal gold medals, of the value of 25 guineas each, at the disposal of the committee for the furtherance of its objects. The report, in the next place, detailed the instructions sent by the Oriental Translation committee to its branch committee at home; and adverted to the establishment of a corresponding committee at Bombay, by the prompt exertions of the Earl of Clare, thus effecting the important object of having a branch of the committee at each Indian presidency.

The report then alluded to the resignation of Mr. Huttmann, late secretary to the committee, last year; and congratulated the sub-scribers on the duties of that office having been committee proceeded to describe the works laid before the subscribers this day ; viz.

1. The celebrated Shah Nameh of Firdausi, translated

Two others were expected to have been ready the second part of Dr. Dorn's History of the Afghans, and a History of Morocco, translated by Walter Price, Esq. Nineteen works, how-ever, have actually been published since the last anniversary in 1830.

The report announced the death of M. Rémusat, and paid a just tribute to his merits. A translation from the Chinese of the travels of two Buddhist priests, in which he had been engaged for the committee, was finished before his death, and his friend M. Klaproth has undertaken to carry the work through the press. The Fund has received from H. M. the late King of Sardinia, a present of a splendid copy of a Persian romance, entitled "Homay and Humayun," executed in exact imitation of the original, both as to writing and illustrations, by M. Jouy, of Paris.

The report then alluded to works recently published in other quarters connected with oriental literature, as Davids' Turkish Gram-mar, Major Yule's Sayings of Alee, &c. &c., and announced that the committee had awarded one of the royal medals this year to James Atkinson, Esq. for his translation of the Shah for its continued prosperity. Nameh, and the other to Dr. Stenzler, for his edition and translation of the Raghuvansa.

The committee then proceeded to detail the numerous and valuable offers of translations which it had received since the last report; and reported the state of several works now in the press, and preparing for publication, not only in Europe, but at Madras, and in Ceylon, where the American missionaries at Jaffna have undertaken a translation of the Scandapurana, a sacred work in the poetic dialect of Tamul, read in the temples there; and several other MSS.

The report then referred to various minor occurrences, detailed the names of many new subscribers, and, after stating the amount of the sale of the publications of the Fund since the last report, concluded by expressing the confidence of the committee that a long series of equally successful anniversaries may be predicted.

The report was ordered to be printed, on the proposition of the Duke of Somerset, seconded by Sir Alexander Johnston.

From the statement of accounts read by the chairman, it appeared that in 1831 the receipts undertaken by a gentleman so eminently quas

A royal medal was last year awarded to Major C.

Stewart for his translation of the Autobiography of Timur.

(φοβιρά Νύξ), worshipped her with peculiar re- institution as Mr. Graves C. Haughton. The of the Fund were 2,9294. 4s. 11d.; expenses 2,268/. 16s. ld.; leaving a balance in favour of the Fund, at the beginning of the current year, of 760l. 8s. 19d. The total receipts this year, up to the 23d inst. are, 1,260% for 7d; repenses, 567% 12s.; balance in the hands of the treasurer, 692% 14s. 7d. This report was also treasurer, 692L 14s. 7d. ordered to be printed.

The gold medal awarded to J. Atkinson Esq. was then presented to that gentleman by the Duke of Somerset, with a suitable address The Duke of Wellington presented the other medal to Dr. Stenzler, expressing himself to the following purport:—"Sir, I am very happy to be empowered by the meeting to present this medal to you. This Society has been paronised by the munificence of the King, for the purpose of encouraging translations from the oriental languages. It is with great pleasure that I present this royal medal to you as a reward for the translation of your work."

The regulations of the committee, which have been remodelled by the care of Mr. Haughton, were submitted to, and approved by, the meeting. The Duke of Wellington moved, and Lord Munster seconded, a vote of thanks to the chairman of the committee. were then voted to the committee and the rest of its officers; also to the branch committees at Rome and in India. Sir A. Johnston, in moving a vote of thanks to the American missionaries at Jaffna, took a view of the origin and labours of that association, which owes in establishment to the piety of some of the inhabitants of the town of Salem, in Massachusetts. This resolution having been seconded and carried, Mr. Vail, the American charge d'affaires, who was present, expressed his acknowledgments for the mark of attention in paid to his countrymen by the meeting. Sir Gore Ouseley then left the chair, which was taken by the Duke of Wellington, and a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the former gentleman for his able conduct in presiding.

We cannot conclude our account of this day's proceedings without remarking, that the complete and rapid success of this Institution must be a subject of real gratification to the Earl of Munster, through whose exertions it was formed, and to whom it is so largely indebted

LITERARY FUND.

On Wednesday, in last week, the usual Greenwich meeting of the friends of this institution took place at Richmond, E. L. Bulwer, Esq. in the chair. Previous to dining, the committee voted a considerable sum for the relief of meritorious authors, whom untoward events had injured in their prospects and circumstances After dinner, patriotic and benevolent toast were proposed in an eloquent and feeling manner by Mr. Bulwer; and at a good hour the company separated, highly gratified with the proceedings of the day.

HIGHLAND SOCIETY OF LONDON.

AT a general court of the Highland Society. held in May, it was resolved, that a premium of one hundred guineas should be offered for the best history of the Highland Clans. their nature, origin, services, and moral effect in their respective districts; and the directors have consequently given notice that they will be ready to receive any work embracing the objects contemplated. The productions to be considered, and prize awarded, in the spring of 1834.

PINE ARTS. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Sportsman at Home. Painted by W. Cozins; engraved by W. Raddon. London.

R. Ackermann. WHEN this natural representation of a sporting subject was exhibited, we offered our meed of praise to the talents displayed by the painter, whose dogs are almost upon speaking terms. The animal expression is excellent throughout, and has been most faithfully preserved by Mr. Raddon. The sportsman himself is in the background; but, with the few accessories intro-duced, in good keeping. Altogether this is a print well calculated to ornament the cheerful farm parlour, the shooting box, or the portfolio.

Finden's Landscape Illustrations to Mr. Murray's Edition of Byron. Part IV. Murray; Tilt.

WE have lying before us proofs of the plates, engraved by the Findens, which are to embellish Mr. Murray's forthcoming volume. They are all beautiful, and several of them exquisite. We have never seen a finer representation of architectural sublimity than "Mafra," a richer assemblage of oriental scenery than "St. Sophia, from the Bosphorus," greater freshness and vividness of daylight than in "Chillon," and vividness of daying than in "Chilon," or greater simplicity and grandeur of composition than in "Chitra." The vignettes,—one, "The Coliseum, from the Orto Farnese," the other, "The Wenger Alps," are also admirable; and there is a charming little head of Ada, "sole daughter of my house and heart!" engraved by W. H. Mote, from an original miniature.

The Pictorial History of the Bible. Nos. I. to IV. 4to. London.
This work, announced in twenty-shilling and two-shilling numbers, contains engravings from admirable pictures, illustrative of Scriptural subjects; and is a very desirable companion to the reading of the Bible. The "Holy Family," after Reynolds, and "Jacob's Vision," after Stothard, form the first number; "Christ and the Woman of Samaria," after W. Hamilton, and "Hagar and Ishmael," Arland, the second; "Abigail before David," and "The Departure of Hagar," both Hamilton, the third; and "Jacob's First Sight of Rachel," the same, and "Christ stilling the Storm," De Loutherbourg, the last of these cheap illustrations before us.

Signor de Begnis.

A spirited and faithful sketch of this amiable man and admirable singer, embellishes the first number of the Dramatic Gallery, in that miscellaneous and entertaining little publication, "The Parrot."

Walton's Complete Angler. Parts I. to III. Pickering.

THE auspicious commencement of a publication which is to be completed in about twelve Parts, and which is to contain not fewer than fifty engravings. Besides views of the actual scenery, a number of designs have been made expressly for the work by Stothard, and the fish are to be from paintings by Inskipp. To the first Part is prefixed a fine portrait of "contemplative" Izaak, engraved by Robinson, from a picture by Inskipp. "The Greeting," and "The Milkmaid's Song," are the chief very charming.

Illuminated Ornaments, selected from Missals and Manuscripts of the Middle Ages. By Henry Shaw. Parts VII. and VIII. Pickering.

This splendid little work is successfully proceeding, although its contents are almost inca-pable of description. The plates must be seen, in order that their beauty, and the pains which have been taken to render them fac-similes of the valuable originals, may be duly appreclated.

Fancy Fair, held for the Benefit of the Charing Cross Hospital. G. Scharf del. et lithog. As from its name it ought to be, fair and fanciful.

Gigantio Whale. G. Scharf del. et lithog .-"VERY like a whale."

The Duke of Devonshire: The Marquess of Stafford. Engraved from life, on stone, by F. W. Wilkin.

PRIVATE portraits of these distinguished persons, executed by Mr. Wilkin, with the same power and mellowness to which we adverted in noticing his portrait of Lord Leveson Gower. The resemblances are striking; especially that of his Grace of Devonshire.

MR. LOUGH'S GALLERY.

WE well recollect, some years ago, when the gifted and benevolent author of "the Social Day" introduced us to Mr. Longh, who, at that time, entirely unknown to fame, was working patiently and perseveringly on his Milo, in one of those narrow streets of the Strand swept away for ever by the recent improvements, and in a room so small that the elbow of the unhappy Crotonian athlete almost left its impress on the ceiling,-we well recollect the feelings of admiration and respect with which we contemplated a scene that presented to us a more vivid representation than had ever before fallen under our notice, of genius triumphing over difficulty. Since that period, the reputation of Mr. Lough has extended as it deserved to extend; and we hope that his substantial encouragement from the public has increased with it. This eminent sculptor has just opened a spacious gallery in Great Portland Street; and although many of the works of which the collection consists were exhibited formerly at the Egyptian Hall, they are seen to great advantage in their new situation, and are associated with others fresh from Mr. Lough's hands, which are among his finest productions. Of these, the chief are "Orpheus," "The Expulsion," and "Satan." The first is full of case and grace: we are happy to see by the catalogue, that it is to be executed in marble for Sir Matthew White Ridley. The Expulsion is that of our first parents from Paradise, so pathetically described by Milton; and Mr. Lough has, in our opinion, shewn the greatest felicity in preserving the distinct and appropriate expression of the two figures. For the idea of his Satan the artist is indebted to the same great poet; but it is an idea which he has gratefully and nobly expanded. Although, of course, quite dissimilar in all the details, there is something in the figure which, on our first view of it, reminded us of Michael Angelo's Lorenzo di Medici. The resemblance must, racter. The ornamental head-pieces are also is one of the most striking. We adverted to this spirited group in the course of our notices of the exhibition of the Royal Academy; but, miserably placed as it was in the dismal parlour of Somerset House, we had a very inade-quate notion of its excellence, until we saw it in its present favourable position and light. In addition to the new productions which we have mentioned, Mr. Lough's well-known "Milo," "Musidora," "Somnus and Iris," Youthful David," "Death of Nessus," "Samson," "The Battle of the Standard," "Elijah," &c., contribute to form an exhibition, the pleasure of visiting which no person of taste would willingly forego.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

CHATEAUBRIAND,

A la Préfecture de Police, sour Eliza Frizel, fille de mon ami, enterrée devant moi, hier, 16 Juin, 1832. IL descend, ce cercueil, et les roses sans tache Qu'un père y déposa, tribut de sa douleur; Terre, tu les portas, et maintenant tu caches Jeune fille et jeune fleur.

Ah, ne les rends jamais à ce mende profane, A ce monde de deuil, d'angoisse, et de deuleur! Le vent brise et flétrit, le soleil brûle et fane, Jeune fille et jeune fleur.

Tu dors, panyre Eliza, si légère d'années, Tu ne crains plus du jour le poids et la chaleur. Elles ont achevé leurs fraiches matinées, Jeune fille et jeune fleur.

Mais ton père, Eliza, sur ta cendre s'incline, Aux rides de son front a monté la paleur : Vieux chêne, le temps a fauché sur ta racine Jeune fille et jeune fleur.

Translation.

The coffin sinks-the spotless roses' pride Which on its lid a weeping father laid; Earth, thou didst bear them, and thou now dost hide

The flower and the maid.

Ah, give them never to this world again-This world of mourning and of misery's power! The winds would spoil, the burning sun profane, The maiden and the flower.

Thou sleep'st, Eliza, and thou fear'st no more The withering influence of the noontide hour; The dewy morning of their youth is o'er In maiden and in flower.

Thy sire, Eliza, o'er thy ashes leans, His aged brow with pallor overspread: Time spares the rugged oak, and near it gleans The flower and the maid.

MUSIC.

MELODISTS' CLUB.

This society, which is in a very flourishing state, held its last meeting on Thursday last, which meeting was honoured with many fair visiters, who occupied the galleries, and appeared greatly delighted with the musical treat afforded them. Lord Saltoun filled the chair; and Lord Berghersh, who was present, was elected a vice-president by acclamation. Several of Lord Berghersh's compositions were introduced during the evening, much to the apparent gratification of the noble composer, and of the hoarers. One song, "There's a bower of roses by Bendemere's stream," was done to it by the sweet manner in which Parry, jun. sang it. T. Cooke introduced a and "The Milkmaid's Song," are the chief only in a slight approximation of are replete with Mr. Stothard's peculiar delivative, and the general air of grandeur new canon, composed expressly for the club; are replete with Mr. Stothard's peculiar delivative, and the general air of grandeur new canon, composed expressly for the club; are replete with Mr. Stothard's peculiar delivative, and strong perception of characteristics. The Mosever, reside only in a slight approximation of grandeur new canon, composed expressly for the club; and it was finely performed by a large body carry of taste, and strong perception of characteristics. Tield on

SIGNOR DE BEGNIS' CONCERT.

SIGNOR DE BEGNIS, one of the most deserving of public favourites, took his benefit-concert at the great room of the King's Theatre on Monday last. That it was beneficial to bequeath a lesson to that hitherto disgracefully him, the thronged and fashionable assembly conducted portion of our musical establishments. gave sterling proof,—that it was likewise satisfactory to the audience, ample testimony was afforded by the approbation so unequivocally and bountifully expressed throughout the concert gave general satisfaction; and it bodes performance. On this occasion we notice with well for the progress of refinement, to observe a pleasure the absence of that which may be called a fraud on the public, yet so frequently names, yet exhibiting a degree of taste, and practised at concerts—that of inserting the appreciation of music, which would not shame names of eminent professional performers who never attend to execute the parts set down for them. To such as were determined to find and no crowd is without them, -the fault. complaint against the laughter-creating Begnis would have been for giving them too much of a good thing. In obedience to public cravings, there was much of novelty in the selection; the programme mentions eight pieces as being entirely new in this country-several of these were of great beauty; but we protest against ever again hearing the duet, composed of a hundred and sixty-four bars, and of more than six hundred words, sung by Madame de Meric and Signor de Begnis in the short space of four minutes. Of the harmony of this composition by Cimarosa, the less said, the better,—the singers seemed to think the same, and even ran through it in two minutes and a half, thus beating their own programme by a minute at the least. Madame Mariani is certainly among the most accomplished singers of the age, advancing her reputation in this country by every successive performance. Cinti executed with the highest and happiest degree of finish the beautiful air from Auber, "Dès qu'd moi l'on a recours." Donzelli and Haitzinger were enthusiastically and deservedly applauded for the admirable style in which they gave the duet of "Donala a questo core," from Rossini. We have only space to say, that the various talents and excellencies of Mesdames Devrient, Stockhausen, Vigano, with others, and Signori Tamburini and Pellegrini, were advantage-ously united;—that of two debutantes, the one a Miss Waters, and pupil of De Begnis, shewed herself to be of a good school, and is a pretty bird of promise; the other, a Madame Hantute, daughter of Mrs. Salmon, inheriting a sweet voice, was so thoroughly possessed by her fears, as to be entirely unpossessed of her music. The four little brothers Koëlla played a quartetto on the violin; Mr. Field, a fantasia on the pianoforte; and, with Spagnoletti and Mori for leaders, Sir G. Smart conductor, the company had plenty of harmony, the performers plenty of applause, and De Begnis more weighty satisfaction than either.

SOCIETA ARMONICA-

This Society gave their fifth concert for the season, at the King's Theatre, on Monday evening. The music, consisting of a selection from the Italian, German, and French masters, was well chosen, and admirably executed by a very effective orchestra. Their performance of the piano, Sedlatzek on the flute, and Parry Beethoven's pastoral symphony merits partinovelties, acting them well, and resping to on the harmonicon, respectively exerted them cular mention. Madame Devrient's genius was reward of full houses.

And the combination of such varied the predominant of the evening, and manitalent, together with the good and social feel- fests how much is lost to an audience by that ing that prevailed from the moment that Bra- want of spirit, and apathetic tameness, so comham, with undiminished brilliancy, burst forth mon even to our most popular singers. Her with "A health to the King, God bless him!" execution in the "Jubeltone," from Weber's to the close of the evening, rendered the whole Euryanthe, was electrical. Nourrit sang deproceedings a rich treat.

| Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | Remain | R quite so well satisfied with him in "Ah! quel plaisir d'être soldat," from the Dame Blanche, plaisir d'être soldal," Irom the Dunne Dunnere, as with our old and accustomed friend Pon-chard. The German charus-singers gave their usual entire satisfaction, and we trust will A violin quartetto by Mori, Seymour, Tolbugue, and Griesbach, though somewhat of the longest, was very beautifully executed. The Society like this, though unsupported by great the loftiest.

DRAMA. KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday, La Straniera, an opera by Bellini, new to this country, was produced with pleasing rather than striking effect. The plot was not easily followed; but consisted of rivalries, disguises, and supposed murders. Signori Tamburini and Donzelli, in the principal male characters, sang very charmingly; and Signore Tamburine and Tosi sustained the female characters with credit. Two of the concerted pieces, and several of the airs, are extremely Two of the concerted pretty.

HAYMARKET.

A VERY clever little one-act piece, from the pen of Mr. C. Mathews, jun., and entitled the Wolf and the Lamb, has been produced at this theatre. It is a legitimate Haymarket drama, full of merit and piquancy: Farren is excel-lent in the principal character.

Or dramatic movements we have to state that Covent Garden finished the campaign on Friday last week, when Mr. Bartley delivered the customary address, announcing the accession of Laporte to the management, and his intention of producing French plays, with Mars and other first-rate performers, previous to opening for the next season; that Arnold's English Opera company, shewing the right example of reduced prices for admission, breaks into song on Monday at the Olympic, while his own new theatre is being built;—that the City Subscription Theatre, Milton Street, has begun con spirito, managed by Mr. Jones, from Edinburgh;—and that Mrs. Waylett, having got Abbott, Keeley, and other popular actors into her train, is bringing forward continual e It is said that Mr. L. is converting the whole dress circle into private boxes for these representations: and we hear much objection made to his so doing. Join a list of the novelities of the past season.

Oct. 19th. A Genius Wanted, Interlude: G. Rodwell.
Oct. 29th. Army of the North, Drama: Planché.
Nov. 3d. Fra Diavolo, Opera: Lacy.
Nov. 17th. Irish Ambassador, Farce: Kenny.
Dec. 6th. Country Quarters, Interlude: Pocock.
Dec. 25th. Hop o' my Thumb, Christmas Pantomine: Farley.

Farley.

Jan. 18th. Catherine of Cleves, Tragedy: Lord F. L.

Gower.
Feb. 21st. Flend Father, Opera: Lacy.
March 15th. Francis I., Tragedy: Miss F. Kemble.
March 17th. Born to Good Luck, Farce: Power.
April 8th. Hunchback, Play: Sheridan Knowles.
April 26th. Tartar Witch and Pedlar Boy, Easter Spectacle: Fatley.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre.—June 21. Robert le Diele. Nourrit and Melle. Schneider being called in immediately on the fall of the curtain, one forward at once: Nourrit of course being wi dressed as Robert, but Mademoiselle was onpletely apparelled in a walking dress and four little bonnet. As the princess (the part & sustained) is on the stage with Robert at the fall of the curtain, this rapid travestie excise no little astonishment, till it was remembered that the princess does not sing in the last at and the inference thence drawn, that her par therein is sustained by a double, while its former representative dons her walking dress as: funny little bonnet. The devil still continue to escape the poetical justice intended by Scrib. for the very adequate and satisfactory reason alluded to in my last.

Covent Garden. - June 22. When Mr. and Miss Kemble came forward, in their private clothes, to receive the applause of the audieno. the lady detached with some difficulty a boxquet of real flowers from her waist, and raising her arm with the oddest gesture imagination, pitched it with all her strength into the pit. !: reached to about the seventh row, where it was instantly torn to pieces in the scramble for its possession. Why did Miss Kemble do this I do not catch the idea. I have always onsidered it sufficiently absurd for the sudience to pelt the actresses with flowers in an Italian theatre; but for an actress to pelt the audience therewith in an English one, is, I concere, a unmeaning as it is unparalleled.

Vauxhall. - June 25. The Magic Fan. 1 do not like clap-traps. We all know that Mrs Waylett must, after performing in the first piece at the Strand Theatre, go to Vanzhall is a terrible hurry; but there is no occasion is her to begin her part every Vauxhal night with, "Well, here I am; I've come here is such a bustle," &c. The magic of the fans that, by striking it, a blow will be dealt upon any given nose; an infliction which often act as a salutary interruption. Its possessor, how. ever, is not always sufficiently quick in his interruptions, and on this occasion an impetuous youth, about to take a rash oath, we obliged to stop short in the most absurd and enigmatical manner with the words, "Thus, then, by our holy prophet I swear to -

VARIETIES.

Translation !- In the recent trial respecting the death of the Prince of Condé, there was a great deal of evidence respecting a prise staircase, and whether the door had been staircase. Somewhat later in the care opened or not. it was stated of the Prince, that ses liaisons istimes furent brisés, which a clever translativ for our journals rendered " his inner bolls ken broken."

Model of a Copper-Mine. We have the week been much gratified by the inspection of the model of a copper-mine near Tariston now exhibiting at Exeter Hall. It is a recomplete thing, and represents every part of the process of mining the copper ore in a way to render it quite familiar to the specials. The machine is about twelve feet in length six in breadth, and as much in depth, and formed of wood and metal. The whole of the movements are caused, as in the original the action of water on wheels, which imper various cranks, whims, windlasses, rollers mills, &c. &c. and shew the operations of excavating the earth, drawing up and crushing the ore, carrying off the water, and effecting all the complicated purposes of a mine in full work. The shafts, levels, and audits, are also laid open by a section of the interior, and the workmen are seen at their several labours. This ingenious performance has been constructed by a miner and his father, by the labour of two years; but it seems well deservations of two years; ing of the toil, and we recommend a visit to it, not only of scientific persons, and those who wish to reward well-applied skill and industry, but also to the young, to whose minds it will convey a more perfect idea of the important operations of mining than the best descriptions they could read, accompanied by plates, or even by descending into a real mine.

New Works.—The second volume of "The Venetian History" (Murray's Family Library) pleases us as much as the first, which was particularly acceptable, both for its literary contents and embellishments. We shall review it next week. We are also enabled to say a good word of what we have seen of Mr. Fraser's "Smuggler"-very descriptive of the Scottish Highlands. On the "Letters of a Lady of Fashion" we can as yet offer no opinion.

Judicial Wrath. - A rather amusing scene took place upon the bench in the Common Pleas the other day, when the judges were provoked by the conduct of some action to express themselves warmly on the subject. Mr. Justice Park was very energetic and loud in his condemnation of the proceedings, and was succeeded by Mr. Justice Gaselee in terms equally voluble and denunciatory. Mr. Justice Alderson, finding that he could do nothing farther in explaining the feelings of the Beach delivered himself thus:—" I am of the same opinion as my learned brothers: yes! even unto the indignation!"

Dr. Valpy's Library.—The noble classical library collected, through a long and most useful life, by Dr. Valpy, of Reading, has, during the whole week, occupied the hammer of Mr. Evans. Many of the works are of extreme rarity. The sale will fill ten days.

Garcia.—The father of Malibran died about a fortnight since at Paris: our musical readers will remember his science in many an opera, and that his school was one of great merit.

The Papyro Museum .- Among the spectacles now on foot in London, we have been highly gratified by a sight of a Liliputian performance under the above name. It consists of eighty groups of figures of every class, and in all varieties of occupation, about two inches in height. The figures are admirably executed in paper, and as remarkable for character, expression, and propriety of costume, as the largest and most elaborate works. We observe from the catalogue that two young ladies have completed the whole of this curious design; and, with a benevolence equal to their ingenuity and talents, have devoted the profits of the exhibition, and ultimately the sale of the museum, to the endowment of a charity, Queen Adelaide's, at Southampton, for the relief of decayed individuals of respectability.

Ecclesiastical Commission.—Government has issued a commission for the purpose of taking an account of all ecclesiastical revenues and property in general possessed by the church. Quæres, we understand, are about to be addressed immediately to the different dignitaries and incumbents of the establishment.

Professor Wilson. - The Professor is, we hear, about to embark on board the Vernon, to take a cruise with the experimental squadron, where he may pick up a new set of ideas at sea.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Lit. Gasette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXVI. June 80, 1839.] Mr. Cooper's New Novel, called The Heidenmauer, the Benedictines.

or, the Benedictines.
Captain Skinner, of the 31st Regiment, is about to publish a Narrative of his visit to various parts of India, called Excursions in India, and including an account of a walk over the Himalaya Mountains to the sources of the Jumna and the Ganges, up which latter river the of the Juma and the Ganges, up which latter river the author sailed 1200 miles.

Mr. T. Arnold is about to publish a Series of Tales, under the title of Dramatic Stories.

Gems of Periodical Literature, a Selection of Tales, Poems, &c., from the principal Magazines.

Memoirs of Captain Heywood, Midshipman on board the Bounty at the time of the Mutiny.

Mirabeau's Letters, Anecdotes, and Maxims, during his Residence in England.

The Reformer: a Novel.

Attributes of the Delty; being the Religion, Morality, and Poetry of the Old Testament. Selected and arranged for the Use of Young Persons. By Sarah Austin.

Letters for the Press, on the Fealings, Passions, Manners, and Fursuits of Men. By the late Francis Roscommon, Esq.

A Companion and Key to the History of England, &c. By George Fisher, Swaffham. Also, a Genealogical Atlas, composed of the Charts of this Work.

The Main Principles of the Creed and Ethics of the Jews, exhibited in Selections from the Yad Hachazakah of Maimonides, with a Literal English Translation, &c. By Hermann Hedwig Bernard, Cambridge.

Thoughts on Secondary Punishments. By Richard Whately, D.D. Archbishop of Dublin.

Views of the River Fleet; from Drawings by Anthony Crosby; with Historical Notices from the earliest periods to the present time.

to the present time.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia, vol. 32, Spain and Portugal, 4 vols. Vol. 111. fc. 62, cloth; Cabinet Library, vol. 9. Wellington, Vol. 11. fc. 52, cloth.—Key to both Houses of Parliament, 8vo. 11. 82, cloth.—Britton's Sketches of Tunbridge Wells, 8vo. 52, cloth, royal 8vo. 78, bds.—Bottin's Almanach du Commerce de Paris, for 1839, 8vo. 11. sd.—Cleland's Statistics of Glasgow and Lanarkshire, folio, 22. 22, cloth.—Lovett's Sermons, 8vo. 62, sewed.—The Traveller's Pocket Diary, &c. 18mo. 45, bds.—The Western Garland, &c. 4to. 72, 6d. bds.—Badcock's Tables of the Prices of Wheat, &c. folio, 11. 16, cloth.—Henderson's Scottish Proverbs, 12mo. 72, 6d. cloth.—Family Library, No. 33, Venetian History, Vol. 11. 52, cloth.—Edgeworth's Novels and Tales, vol. 3. Moral Tales, Vol. 11. 65. 8, cloth.—Barrington's Personal Sketches, Vol. 111. 8vo. 14z, bds.—Bellinaye on Hygiene, 12mo. 7z, 6d. bds.—Romis's Conspectus of Insects, &c. 16mo. 2z, 6d. cloth.—Barrington's Personal Sketches, Vol. 111. 8vo. 14z, bds.—Bellinaye on Hygiene, 12mo. 7z, 6d. bds.—Red's Bibliotheca Scoto-Ceitica, 8vo. 12z, cloth.—Jones's Plea for Christian Plety, 8vo. 12z, hd.—Cloth.—Jones's Plea for Christian Plety, 8vo. 12z, hd.—Cloth.—Jones's Plea for Christian Plety, 8vo. 12z, hd.—Cloth.—Jones's Course of French Literature, 12mo. 7z, 6d. dds.—Taylor's Natural History of Religion, 12mo. 4z, bds.—Hibbert on Extinct Volcanos, &c. with Plates, 8vo. 10z, 6z, bds.—Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 12mo. 6z, bds.—Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 12mo. 6z, bds.—Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. II. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. III. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. III. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. III. 112mo. 6z, bds.—Thev. Rev. R. Parkinson's Sermons, Vol. III

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have to acknowledge The Morning Star, another penny contemporary, which promises fairly in its first Number. A review of reviews, if well done, would be both enlightening and entertaining; but there is hardly room for such a design within so small a compass. Verses from Mr. T. Manchester received. We cannot inform C. R. "whether any bookseller would attend to a communication from a stranger without introduction;" nor, consequently, "what bookseller would be most likely to do so "We presume that much would depend on the nature of the communication. We were prevented from attending the view of Mr. Reinagle's fine collection of pictures (sold within the last three days), in consequence of not receiving intimation in time.

in time.

We are much obliged by the communication of the Liberia Herald, which does honour to its sable editor, and to a republic of nine years' growth. The accounts of the settlement to the middle of March are very satisfactory. The establishment of schools and other excellent means for diffusing knowledge and civilisation are prudently selected.

adopted.

We wish the friends of the Printer's Pension Society all kinds of pleasure in their annual acquatic excursion on Monday. Their object is worthy of all praise; and the Venus steamer could not be better employed.

We are sorry to say an accident has lost us the notice of the Miss Mills', or Milles', Concert, which it was our desire expressly to recommend.

An extraordinary curse in our next No.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL THE AVENUE OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS at their Gellery, Pall Mail East, will close on Saturday, July 14th. Open each day from Nine till Duk. Admittance, 1s.—Catalogue, ed. R. Hill.S, Secretary.

INIVERSITY of LONDON: SCHOOL.

T. Hewlit Key, M.A. Professor of Latin.
Henry Maiden, M.A. Professor of Latin.
Henry Maiden, M.A. Professor of Oreek.
Pupils are admitted until the end of the Term at a Pee of 21.10s.
The Holydays begin on the 11th of August, and the School pens again on the 1st of October.
THOMAS COATES, Secretary.
Council Room, June 25th, 1833.

ROYAL MANCHESTER INSTITU-TION, Eighth Annual Eshibition.
Pictures intended for Eshibition in this Gallery will be received until the 31st of July; those from London until August 4th. Pictures to be addressed to F. W. Winstanley, Esq. Royal In-stitution, and ferwarded by Pickford's Boat, with whom necessary arrangements have been made.

A LADY, who has been in the habit of devoting her time and attention entirely to the improvement of her Pupils, has now a few Vacancies for Young Ladies who are finishing their Education. She has lately removed to an elegant House, in a most airy situation, where she will carefully superintend, with the assistance of the first Masters, those Young Ladies who may be placed under her care.

For Cards of Address apply at Messrs. Hatchard's, Piccadilly; Messrs. Fenwick de Porquet, 11, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE DAHLIE MYTHOLOGICE; or, a Selection of the finest Dahlias, Mythologically Arranged; to be completed in five or six Nos. drawn on Stone, and coleured from the Living Plants,

By H. C. ANDREWS.

Sold by W. Pickering, 57, Chancery Lane; and J. Ridgway, 169, Piccadilly.

Price 4s. 8d. Part I. of

THE BYRON GALLERY; a Series of Historical Embellishments to illustrate the Poetical

Works of Lord Byron, beautifully engraved from Drawings and Paintings by the most celebrated Artists, and adapted by their size and excellence to bind up with and embellish every edition of Lord Byron's Works.

A limited number of Proofs have been taken on royal 400. price, on plain paper, &c.; India, 76.6c; India, before letters, 10c. 40.

Pirat Part of the Byron tiallery, the Proprietors are antious to ensure additional claims in their forthcoming Nos. upon the probation of the Public; and in order that the Engravers may of the utmost justice to the designs of those most distinguished Artists who are employed on the Work; it is resolved that the appearance of the Second Part shall be postponed to the ist of August.

ppearance of the Second 2 are successful to the Plates, will be forwarded Prospectuses, with specimens of the Plates, will be forwarded to Country Booksellers, on application through their Lendon

Published by Smith, Eider, and Co. Cornhill.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,

No. XXXIII. containing the following Articles:—
1. Doctor Chainers' Political Beonomy—2. Adventures of a Younger Son—3. Panishment of Death—4. Jacotor's System of Education—5. Correspondence of David Garrick—6. Constitution and Government of India—7. Vane and Bunyan—8. Lord Dover's Life of Frederic II.—9. Washington Irving's Albambra—10. Catiline's Compiracy—11. Statistics and Political Institution of the United States—12. Gait's Radical—13. Renewal of Bank Charter—14. Fresent State of France—16. Supplement to Article on Silk and Glove Trades—16. Prospects of Reform—Postscript to Article on the Enharmonic of the Ancients—List of Hooks, Index, &c.

No. XXXIV. will be published on the 30th

No. XXXIV. will be published on the 30th of Sept.

B. Heward, 5, Wellington Street, Strand; Agent for France,
G. G. Bennis, Rue Neuve St. Augustine, No. 55, Paris.

Dean's Catalogue of Plants.

In 8vo. price 18t. boards,

LORTUS CAN'TA BRIGHENSIS; or, an Accented Catalogue of Indigenous and Exotic Plants of Can'ta Bright Can'ta Can'ta Brigh

In 6 vote. Svo. the 5d edition, price 3l. 15c. boards,
THE HISTORY of BRITISH INDIA.

"The labour My JAMES MILL, Eq.

"The labour My JAMES MILL, Eq.

"The labour My Mich has been employed in collecting and examining materials, the shiful distribution of the facts into proper compartments, the high tone of moral feeling, and the enlarged philosophy which every where pervade the marriative, emittle the History of British India' to be regarded as a valuable addition. History will be a benefit both to England and to India."—British Review.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author, Elements of Political Economy, 8vo. 3d edit. price & boards.

An Analysis of the Phenomena of the Human Mind, in 2 vols. 8vo. price 16s. boards.

RASER'S MAGAZINE for July,

RASER'S MAGAZINE for July,

Description of the Linds, by Tiger, Galt, Picken—The Book of Jashur, from the Linds, by Tiger, Galt, Picken—The Book of Jashur, from the Lindson of Life of Raleigh—Alian Cunninghan's M. ad of Brachen or the property of the Company of the British, Part II. by Colonel Rickorp Domestic Manners of the British, Part II. by Colonel Rickorp Domestic Manners
of the British, Part II. by Colonel Rickorp Domestic Manners of the British, Part II. by Colonel Rickorp Literary the from Plasisy, Letter IV, from Glasgow—Callery of Literary the from Litrary Ricketh—Lady Mary Shepherd's Metaphysics—MisLitrary Ricketh—Lady Mary Shepherd's Metaphysics—MisPipson—Gur Royal-Academical Lounge—What is an Irish Orator by S. T. Coleridge, Eq.—On the Opera, No. IV.; Mangement, Dancers, Italian, French, and German Operas—The Schoolmaster's Experience in Newgate, No. II.: Hurried Trials —Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Other Colonics to Correspondent—A Parting Stave in honour of the Colonics of our Pitch Volume, entitled "The Pirst of July"—Index.

July ... Index.

James Fraser, 215, Regent Street, London; Wapph and Innes, Edinburgh; M'Phun, Glasgow; Grapel, Liverpool; and Grant and Bolton, Dublin.

The Third and concluding Volume of SIR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PERSONAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES.
This Third Volume of Sir Jonah Barrington's Personal Sketches abounds still mere take the two preceding le racy smeedestes of the true Hibernian character, and is particularly clock in the hamours of the Irish Error Fred Following names figure conspicuous in this new Volumers. The following names figure conspicuous Yelverton, Avonmere, and Francis Surgh-Level Norbury and Clare — Judge Fletcher—Jan Burgh—Level Norbury and Byrne, Flizgibbon, Norcott, and Lyngh-Mr. Plood—Fighting Frizgerald—Mr. Martin of Galws—Tir John Burke—Sir Hercules Langreish—Mr. Dundes—Beauchup Bayenal Harvel (Leader of the Rebeis in 1769)—Mr. Banha—Sir Judgin Flizgerald, &c. gerald, &c.
Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

N the FREE MOTION of POINTS, and on Universal Gravitation, including the Principal Properties of Books I. and III. of the Principals: the Pirst Part of a new edition of a Treatise on Dynamics.

By WILLIAM WHEWELL, M.A. Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College.

For J. and J. J. Deighton, Trinity Street, Cambridge; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Arnot, London.

In 3 vols. price 11. 11s. 6d.

ITZ-GEORGE. A Novel.

"Smiles without mirth, and pastimes without pleasure, Youth without honour, age without respect."

Byron's Marias Faliero.

"If all novels were like this, they would soon be in the hands of philosophers as well as fashionables; and instead of being snerred at by the severer order of moralists, they would soon declared with the very best productions by which knowledge, both useful and entertaining, is commanicated to manhind."—Two Sun, June 8.

Lendon: Published by Effingham Wilson, Reyal Exchange.

In 1 large voi. foite, 2d edition, 2d. 2c. cloth,

LASSIFIED ENUMERATION of the INHABITANTS of the CITY of GLASGOW and with an Abstract of the Forther Government Census of 1881; numerous Statistical Tables. Sc. of very general interests.

By JAMES of the City of Glasgow, Member of the Society of Li Engineers, London, &c.

Longman, Recs, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co. London;
Smith and Son, Glasgow; and A. Black, Edmburgh.

THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE for July THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE for July contains—The Results of the Bill—Christopher North and the Cockneys—Specimens of Death, No. 1. 2 Beroughmonger's—The Deputy Moralist—The Iron Collar—Some Geotleman's Autobiography—Ruins of the Church Establishment—The Greek Barber—Financial Reform—Notes an America—The Spanish Headsman—France—My Opposits Neighbours—Importances of Cuba to England—With many other humorous and important papers, making upwards of 80 Articles, being the First No. of the Second Volume.

Published by J. Leiber, at the Monthly Magazine Office, 4, Wellington Street, Strand.

Price 2s. 6d.

Rey to both Houses of Parliament, &c.

In a thick vol. 11. 82. in cloth,

EY to both HOUSES of PARLIA MENT; consisting of Alphabetical Netices of the Lords and Commons of Green thinh and Ireland—The Ragulations and Standing Orders of both Houses respecting Privileges, Frivale Bills, Fees, Fines, and of the Scottish and Irish Nothin Majesty's Privy Council, and of the Scottish and Irish Nobillty, who do not sit in the House of Feers. With every obspacedes of Information respecting the Congitinuics, History, and Usages of Parliament.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

SERMONS on the CHRISTIAN LIFE and CHARACTER.

and CHARACTER.

By ARTHUR B. EVANS, D.D.

Head Master of Market Seewerth Pres Grammar School.

Frinted for T. Cadell, Strand; and W. Blackwood, Edinburgh.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

1. Sermons on the Relative Duties of the Poor. 18mo. 4s. boards.

2. The Layman's Test of the True Minister of the Church of England. 2s. 4d. in boards.

3. The Present National Delusion, upon Wisdom, Power, and Riches; considered in a Bermes preached before the Sparkinghoe District Committees of the Seciety for Promoting Christian Knowledge, &c. &c. 1s.

Ke. &c. &c. &c.

Grant, Cambridge; Stillies, Sechers, Edinbergh; Mr

Grant, Cambridge; Stillies, Sechers, Edinbergh; M

Glangew; Wakeman, Dublin. Orders received by all Book and Newmen.

In 8vc. price 10s. 6d. with Maps, Views, and either Hundersteines, HISTORY of the EXTINCT VOL-CANOS of the BASIN of NEUWIED, on the Lewer Rhins.

By SAMUEL HIEBERT, M.D. and F.E.S. Ed.
Fellow of the Geological Society of London, Vice-Fresident of the Audquarian Society of Scotland, Member of the Physical and Medical Society of Heidelberg, &c.
Printed for W. and D. Laing, Edisburgh; and Trentiel and Wurtz and Richter, London.

Charles Lamb's Tales of Shakepeare.

A new and elegant edition, with Twenty-two superb Cuts, from Designs by Harvey, and finely printed by Whittiagham, in I vol. 18mo. pinc 7. 6d. handsomety bound.

THE TALES of SHAKSPEARE.

Designed for the Use of Young Persons. The Whittiagh

THE TALES of SHAKSPEARE.

Designed for the Use of Young Persons. The 5th edition.

"Lamb's Tales from Shakspeare are well known, as forming one of the most charming children's books in the language. They are conceived in a spirit of simplicity, and yet with so shrewd a feeling of the power and beauty of the original, as was perhaps possible to no other mind than that of Ella. They have airrived at a fifth edition, which is very prettill got up, and is advanded with woodcats from designs by Harvey."—Speciator, August.

"One of the very best works that ever issued from the press for the delight and instruction of young people. The vigneties are quite admirable for delicacy and fancy; and if some of this litestrations in this work he not bisseried pictures, we know not what the works man."—Alternooms, July 26, 1921.

Lenden: Baldwin and Cradeck, Paternooter Row.

Siendard Howie, Vol. IVII.

Complete in t vol. neatly bound and becoulfully embellished, price fo. with a new Interdection by the Author, IVII.

HEPRAIRES STORY OF SERVICES S

Of whom may be had, by the same Author, sich complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and illustrated, prior The Spy, a Tale of the Neutral Ground. The Pilot, a Tale of the Sea.

The Last of the Mohicans, a Tale of Ame

The Pioneers; or, the Sources of the Sus

The 3d edition, with Additions, in 8vo. price 1s.

REMARKS on the NATURE of VALUE, for the Consideration of the Language for the Consideration of the Lefbouring Classes.

By the Rev. HENBY PALMER, A.M.

Formariy of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Sold by J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Flace, Pall Mail.

Glossary of Ancient and Provincial Words of the English Language.

DART I. of the late Rev. JONATHAN
BOUCHER'S GLUSSARY of ANCIENT and PROVINCIAL WORDS.
Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH HUNTER, P.S.A. and Forming a Supplement to Dr. Johnson's and Dr. Webster's Dictionaries. Price 74. 6d. to Sabacribers, and 6s. to Non-Sebscribers.

actibers. London: Black, Young, and Young, Poreign Booksellers to the King, 2, Tavistock Street.

Of whom may be had.

Dr. Webster's English Dictionary, complete 2 vols. 4to. price 5l. 10s. cloth boards, Public Records.

In 8vo. price 6s. boards,

A PROPOSAL for the ERECTION of a

A GENERAL RECORD OFFICE, Judgoef Mail and Chanbers, and other Buildings, on the Size of the Each Bustes; ispther with some particular respecting the Saitors' Fund.

By C. F. COOPSER, Esq.

Also, by the same Author,
In 8 handsome vola. Svo. price 84s.

An Account of the most important Public Records of Great Brigais, and the Publications of the Sacret

Commissioners'; together with Miscellamous, Rissericai, and Antiquarian Information. Compiled from warious printed Besh and MSS. Public Bassa

London: Baldwin and Cradook.

All the Publications of the Record Commission, at very reduced prices.

Library of general Reference.

Containing Thirteen Hundred New Articles. bringing down the Work to the 1st of June, 1820,

AN APPENDIX to the UNIVERSAL HISTORICAL DICTIONARY of G. CRABB, A.M. including Biblical, Political; and Ecclosistical History, Geography and Biography, Heraldry, Numissantics, &c. &c. libraries with 500 Engraphy, including 800 fine Portraits, werk intend with 1500 Engraphy, including 800 fine Portraits, werk alone the whole control, edges of the work. & vois. 4to. boards, edgesdippublished at 56. 84, and now, with the valuable Appendix included, reduced in gene 18. 180. 66. By the new Proprinter, J. Dowding, Bookseller, Newgate Street.

Who has also to announce for publication, on the 1st of Aprend.

J. Dowling, Bookseller, Newgate Street.
Whe has also to announce for publication, on the 1st of August, an Appendix to the following distinguished Work, entitled the Universal Technological Dictionary of G. Crabb, A.M.; or, Familiar Explanation of the Terms used in all Arts and Sciences. Illustrated with nearly 800 beautiful Engineerings on copper and wood. S vols. the bearing, originally published at M. St. which, including the Appendix, is new reduced to M. 16s.

year 1828.

J. D. having purchased from the original publishers the entire stock of the above works, is induced, by the terms upon which has become proprieter, in consention with the advantages attending a prompt and an extensive sale, which he is desirons of resisting, to offer them at the above reduction.

Letters from Continental Countries.
In 8 large void-post 8 vo. price 1/L la. cloth, ETTERS from CONTINENTAL

LETTERS ITUM
COUNTRIES.

Foreign Honorary Secretary of the Mineralogical Society of Jens;
Author of a "Guide through Switzerland and Savoy," dat. de.
These volumes contain a minute and socurate account of a such through France, Savoy, Switzerland, Italy, Germany, and such through France, Savoy, Switzerland, Italy, Germany, and vidual or family, many will be found entremely unfail to may individual or family, many care of the savoy, and care of the savoy of MAGAZINE of NATURAL HISTORY, And Journal of Zoology, Botany, Mineralogy, Goole d Meteorology. Conducted by J. C. LOUBON, P.L.S. &c.

(Continued every two Months, alternately with the Gardener's Magazine.)

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

VOL. XIX. of the MIRROR, with a Steelplate Potrait of the Right Hon. EARL GREY, and a Biographical Memoir of his Lordship; upwards of SRRY Engravings, and 450 closely printed pages, is now publishing, price
6. 6d.

Parts 124 and 125, 8d. each, are also ready. Vols. I. to XVIII. price in bds. 41. 18e. 6d.; helf bound, $4. Ge. J. Limbird, 149, Strand; and all Booksellers.

Wanevieu Novele.

WORK is published this day, price 5s. It comtains the Talisman, being the conclusion of the Tales of the Crusaders. The Illustrations by John Watten Gordon.

Vol. Thirty-nine, which commences Woodstock, will appear on 1st of August, with copious Introduction and Notes. COLUME THIRTY.EIGHT of this Volume Forty, which concludes Woodstock.

Volume Forty-one, on 1st of October, will comprise

The Highland Widow.
The Two Drovers.
The Tapestried Chamber.
My Aunt Margaret's Mirror.
The Laird's Jock.

Volumes Forty-two and Forty-three, comprising the Fair Maid of Perth, will appear on the lat November and lat December, and the other Tales regularly on the lat day of each month, till the whole are completed, in Forty-eight voluwhich will include all the author's works of faction, and be accompanied with a copious Glossary.

Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker and Co. London.

Who have also just published,

1. The Nineteenth Vol. of the New Issue of 1. A HE NINEWESTER YOR. OF the 1484 ASHE OF the Waverley Novels, which completes the Monaster, price &c.

*All the early Volumes of both issues may be had from the commencement.

2. Captain Basil Hall's Naval Life and Early

Voyages. First and Second Series. 2d edition, 6 vols. 30s. with engraved Titles.

3. Capt. Basil Hall's Travels in North America, in 1837 and 1828. 3d edition, 3 vols. 1l. 11s. 6d.; Plates separately, 10s. 6d.

4. Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather. Pirst, Second, and Third Series. New editions, 10s. 6d. e. Also, History of France, 8 vols. 10s. 6d.

5. Destiny. By the Author of "Marriage." 3 vols. 11. 11s. 6d.

6. Marriage. 2 vols. 3d edition, 11. la 7. The Inheritance. 3 vols. 2d edition,

11. 11c. 6d.

8. The Cook's Oracle. A new edition 7s. 6d.

G Of this popular work upwards of 60,000 copies have been sold.

9. Mrs. Dalgairns' Cookery. A new edit. being the third. 7s. 6d.

Few works of this description have so speedily attained popularity, three editions having been called for in little more than

New Work by Mr. France, &c. just published.
In 3 vols. post 8vo.
THE HIGHLAND SMUGGLERS.
By J. R. PRASED. By J. B. FRASER, Esq.
Author of the "Persian Adventurer," &c. 3 vols.

7.7 Private Correspondence of a Woman of Fashion. 3 vols. III.

Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier.
By the Author of "Darmley," &co. 8 vois. IV. Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry

Lights and Shadows of American Life.

And Single and Singlews of American Ander Sometis.—The Politician.—Rirabeth Latimer.—The Squater —The Devil's Pulpit.—The Young Backwoodsman.—Major Rege-ton.—Adventure at Sea.—The Green Mountain Boy.—The Arure Hose—The Three Indians.—Modern Chivalry.—The Isle of Flow-ers.—Last of the Boatmen, &c.

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. 2 vols.

2 on informly with the "Sketch-Book."

"A work which we would lay up among our favouritee, bind in morocco, and reserve for summer reading in happy hours."

Spectator.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

"This work takes high and bold ground, and refers explicitly and by name to a variety of illustrious individuals; among others, to the Dake of Wellington — Lord Byron—the late King-the Countess of Jersey—Bir George Warrender—and many others."—Morning Post.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In 18mo. price 7s. cloth boards,

THE SOURCES of HEALTH and DISEASE in COMMUNITIES; or, Elementary Views of Hyglene, illustrating its Laportance to Legislators, Heads of Families, No.

Families, &c.

By HENRY BELINAYE,
Surgeon Extraordinary to II. R. H. the Duchess of Kent, &c. &c.
Printed for Treuttel and Würtz and Richter, 30, Soho Square.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In monthly volumes, small ove. &s. in cloth.
Just published being Vol. XXXII. of the above, Vol. III. of HISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL,

On Aug. 1, History of the Western World, Vel. II.-United States concluded.

Published June 1, History of Switzerland, in 1 vol.

London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

DLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH
MAGAZINE. No. CXCVI. for July 1822.

I. The Pandeur and his Princess. A Hungarian Sketch—II.
Tom Cringle's Log, Chap. II. The Chase of the Smuggler—III.
Tom y Birde—IV. Homer's Hymas. No. 5, Halls, or the Sun.
No. 7, Minerva. No. 8, Diana—V. Memoirs of the Dachess of Abrantss—VI. The Fall of the Constitution—VII. The Sense of the last Six Books of the Eneld—VIII. Plan for the gradual Abolithen of Negro Slavery—IX. Griffin's Remains—X. Christopher at the Lakes. Flight Second—XI. Duties of the Conservative Party—XII. A New Song, for a Conservative Dinner on the Anniversary of Waterloo.

Edinburg: Printed for William Blackwood, No. 45, George Street; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

Dr. Lardser's Cabinet Library.

Dr. Lardser's Cabinet Library.

Just published, in small 8vo. price 5s. Vol. II. of MARSHAL the DURE of WELLINGTON. 2 vols.

By MAJOR MOYLE SHERER.

Being the concluding Volume of "The Cabinet Library."

Life and Reign of Cabinet Cabinet Library.

Life and Reign of Public Affairs, for 1831. 2 vols.

Annual Retrospect of Public Affairs, for 1831. 2 vols.

Mistorical Memoirs of the House of Bourbon. 2 vols.

Mistorical Memoirs of Wellington. By Major Sherer. 2 vols.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Commencement of a New Yolsome.

THE LADIES' MUSEUM for July,
Edited by F. W. N. BAYLEY, Eq.
Contains Contributions by Dr. Bowring—Miss Mitford—The Author of "Manners of the Day"—Sheridan Knowles—Thomas Roccoe, Editor of "The Landscape Annual"—Don Telesfore de Trueba, Author of "The Castilian," "Exquisites," &c.—The late Professor Porson—Miss Jesubary, "Miss Isabel Hill—Andree Picken, Author of "The Dominie's Legacy," "Club-Book," &c.
R. F. Williams—and the Editor.
The Embellishments are a Pertrait of Ninon de l'Enclos—A froup of Brugnioli and Samengo—and two Fail-lengths of Lady Dover and Countess Gower in the Fashlons of the Month—and Sweet Girl, a Song by F. W. N. Bayley, Music by A. Lee, sung by Mrs. Waylett at the New Strand Thesire.

Price &c.
Ladies' Museum Office, 16t, Strand.

OBSERVATIONS on the HEALTHY and DISEASED PROPERTIES of the BLOOD.

By WILLIAM STEVENS, M.D.
John Murray, Albomaric Street.

MR. HALLAM'S HISTORY of the MIDDLE AGES. MIDDLE AGES.
Also a 3d edition of

The Constitutional History of England, vols. 8vo. 36s.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

In 1 vol. 12 mo. price 7s. 6d. boards,

CLARENSWOLD; or, Tales of the North.

North.
Printed for Bell and Bradfate, Edinburgh; and James Duncan, 37, Paternoster Itow, London.

No. VI. price 1s. 6d. Illustrations of Political Economy, WEAL and WOE in GARVELOCH. A Tale.
By HABRIET MARTINEAU.
Charles Fex, 67, Patermoster Row

A New Text of Sallust, founded on Twenty-five Manuscripts in the British Museum.

In 1 vol. royal 19mo. 10... 6d. boards,

SALLUSTII CRISPI de CATILINÆ SALLUSTII UKISTI GE UALLIANVA ONIJURATIONE deque BELLO JUGURTHINO, librie cod. adrietis simul impressioque quadraginta amplius colla-its, recensult atque adnosationibus Ribustravit HENRICUS E. ALLEN. Printed for T. Cadell, Strand, London; W. Sinchwood, Edin-burgh; and Milliken and Son, and J. Cumming, Dublin.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Doctrina Copularum Lingues Latines; sive de vi atque usu elegantiori Particularum Ac, Atque, Et, Que, de-que exram formulis, Commentarius. 30. boards.

Cheap edition of SOUVENIRS sur MIRABEAU.
Per DUMONT.
13mo. price 4s. 6d.
Just imported, by Dulau and Co. 37, Soho Square.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On the 7th of July will be published,
Under the Direction of the Committee of general Literature and Education, appointed by the Society for Promoting Christian Empiricals,

THE SATURDAY MAGAZINE,
No. I. price One Penny.
London: John William Parker, 445, (West) Strand, by whom Communications for the Committee are received.
Orders may be given through all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the Kingdom.

New Edition of Miss Edgeworth's Works, in Monthly Volumes, price 5s. each, with superb Engravings, to correspond with the Wewerley Novels and Lord Byron's Life and Prems.

On the 2d of July will be published, ornamented with Twe highly diabed Engravings, from Drawings by Harvey,

VOL. III. of the TALES and NOVELS of

MARIA EDGEWORTH, being the Second and cocluding Volume of the Moral Tales, price 5s. elegantly bound in letb, and lettered.

London: Baldwin and Cradock, and the other Proprietors.

On the 7th of July, in crown 8vo. price 8s.

THE DEVOTIONAL LETTERS and SACRAMENTAL MEDITATIONS of the Rev. PHILIP DODDRIDGE, D.D.; to which are added, his Lectures on Preaching, and the Ministerial Office.
In announcing this Volume, the Publisher feels it a duty to remark, that the added to the remark, the standard of the results are contains are made in the standard of the results and the religious consolation and advice they convey, cannot but reader them of great service in families, and so truly valuable to all Christians, that every individual will be desirous of possessing them.

them.

All may be justly said that the genuine spirit of the Gospel pervades every page of this book, the hope is confidently entertained, that is sill prove one of the most influential supports the cause of Evangelical Truth which has appeared since the first publication of "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul."

Lendon: Published by James Gilbert (successor to William Kidd) 220, Regent Street, and 31, Paternoster Row.

THE MESSIAH.—The Public are respectfully informed, that the Second Edition of Montgomery's new Poem, "The Messiah," will be ready for delivery on Tuesdy next; and, to obviate disappointment, are requested to make immediate application for the same to their respective Booksellers.
June 29.

Opinion of the Press. Opinion of the Freet.

"The Messiah" is, in our judgment, equal to any of Mr.
Montgomery's productions, and a lasting monument to his fame."

—Literary Genetic.
John Turrill, British Magazine Office, 250, Regent Street, London.

On Monday next will appear,

On Monday next will appear,

FORT RISBANE; or, Three Days' Quarantine.

By a DETENU.

Smith, Elder, and Co. Cornhill.

THE POETIC NEGLIGÉE.

By CALEB.
In One Volume.

In a few days will be published, in 1 vel. 8ve.
HISTORY of CHARLEMAGNE.
By G. P. R. JAMES, Eg.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

On the lat of July will be published,

JURIST; or, Quarterly Journal of Jurispradence and Legislation, No. VIII. price 5s.

The Contents of this Number are,

I. On the Administration of Law in India.

II. The New Bankruptcy Court.

III. The New Bankruptcy Court.

III. The Reformation of Criminals.

IV. Judicial Establishments of France.

V. Parochial Registration, and Municipal Institutions.

VI. The Barrister, No. 3.

VII. Law Manuscript Reports, and Privy Council Papers.

VIII. Review; Criminal Trials.

IX. Review; Park's Dogmas of the Constitution.

X. Short Reviews of Books.

XI. Parliamentary Proceedings.

XII. Parliamentary Papers, Instilligence, &c.

London: Baldwin and Cradock.

Phenomenon in Literature! Price only One Shilling!!

THE COMIC MAGAZINE.

Belisted by the Reliste of "Figure in London."

The fverth-cosming Number (for the-morrow, July lat), of this very elegant, most amusing, and highly popular periodical, contains several humorous Articles, by Conic Authors of the highest celebrity, illustrated by the extraordinary number of Nincton (!) beautifully comic Engravings, by the colebrated Seymeur!!!

The Authors already restained are, John Poele, Eng.; R. R. Peake, Eng. (who illustrates for himself!); W. T. Mencrick, Enq.; the Editor of Figure in London, &c. &c.

9 Miss Sheridan, and Thomas Dibdin, Enq. have promised their assistance; and negotiations are pending with Thomas Head, Eng., Hornoc Smith, Enq., Theodore Hook, Enq., — Croker, Enq., and that veteran Son of Momus, George Colman the Yeanger.

On Menday, the 2d July, will be published, in I small vol.

A DVICE to a Young Man upon his First going to Oxford, in Ten Letters, from an Uncle to his Nephew.

By the Rev. E. BERENS,
Late Fellow of Oriel College.
Frinted for J., O., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and J. H. Parker, Oxford.

Cooper's New Novel, &c.

Just ready for publication, by Henry Colburn and Richard
Bentley, New Burlington Street.
In 8 vols. post 8vo.

THE HEIDENMAUER; or, the Benedictines. By the Author of the "Spy," "The Pilot," &c. II.

Excursions in India, comprising a Walk over the Himalaya Mountains, to the Sources of the Jumna and the Ganges. By Captain Thomas Skinner, 21st Regiment. 9 vols.

"Wherein of antres vast, and deserts life, Rough quarries, rocks, and hills, where heads teach heaven, It was my hint to speak."

IIL Fortune Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life. By the Author of "First Love." Svois.

Dramatic Stories. By T. Arnold, Esq.

SPLENDID SERIES OF

Portraits, Landscapes, and Costumes,

PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN

MAGAZINE. THE COURT

BELLE ASSEMBLÉE.

Emprobed Beries.

EDITED BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON.

Literary Contents of the July Number, which commences a New Volume.

A Dramatic Sketch. By Miss Fanny Kemble—Evenings in the Ventilator, No. I. By a Member of Parliament—Charades. By Lord Nugent—The Coquette, a Takin Prose. By Mrs. Norton—The Maiden Speech — Fame. Extraordinary Combat with a Tiger — The Viceroy and the Abbess. By C. Macfarlane, Esq. — Lament of the Pect Savage. By Mrs. Norton—The Orphan's Slumber—Character of Meyerbeer's Music—The Drop-Scene—The Highland Pleasure-Party—Goethe's Character as a Patriot considered—Sonnet, by Roscoe—The Alps and Apennines, &c. &c.

Prospectus of the Improved Series.

This work, which addresses itself in a peculiar degree to the rank, fashion, and beauty of England, has already attained a high relebrity through its graphic embellishments, which, besides ther acknowledged individual excellence, present the advantage of uniting to form a brilliant collection of portraits, representing the flower of the English female nobility. The success established theory this feature of the work, has led to the intention now announced, of carrying the claim of "The Fourt Magazine and Billet Assemblet" yet considerably further, by means of such improvements the nature and style of its hierature, as may place this essential department on an equality—in grace, spirit, and general attraction—with the decorative portion of its contents. In order to give complete effect to this design, the most active exertions have been made, and the most liberal arrangements formed, so as to ensure contributions of a high order of talent; and it with great satisfaction the Proprietors have to a state, that the Hon. Mrs. Notion has concented to undertake the superintendence of the work. This intimation will be doubtless received at the fallest guarantee in favour of the fature tone and character which will mark the literary contents of the work.

It is a stated that further arrangements have been made to enrich the embedished portion of 'The Court Magazine and Belle Assemblée,' by producing monthly, as early as the election of the court Magazine and Belle Assemblée,' by producing monthly, as early as the election of the court of the court of the emprayings which form the embed, in addition to the emprayings which form the embed, in addition to the emprayings which form the embed in addition to the emprayings which form the tect can be realised, in addition to the engravings which form the Portrait Gallery of the Female Pobility:

A SPLENDID SERIES OF VIEWS FROM STEEL ENGRAVINGS, TO PRESENT A

Landscape Gallery of the Seats of the Aobility.

From original Drawings by William Daniell, Esq. Royal Academician, under whose superintendence also the engravings will be produced. Appended to each of these picturesque representation as descriptive account, explaining its history in regular descent, and embalying every interesting irradition and legendary anecdote that may exist in connexion with it.

The greatest care and difference will continue to be devote to the object of furnishing the best illustrations and descriptions of English and Foreign Female Costumes,

Which will, in future, be undertaken by Mde. Maradan Carcon. A Critical History of the Literature of the Month, Music, the Drama, and the Arts, will also be given, with a Register of Erest.' a thome and abroad. As many of these features are entirely new, it is intended to give an extra half sheet with each Number, which will add nearly 100 pages to the yearly volumes.

It is fully anticipated that by means of these, and the previously announced alterations in the character and management of this work, it will assume a position superior to that held by any similar publication hitherto presented to the public.

London: Published by Edward Bull, 26, Holles Street; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and Cumming, Dublin. Price 3s. 6d.

Of whom also may be had, just completed by the publication of Part VI. which has been unavoidably delayed on account of the very elaborate nature of the INDEX,

THE BIBLICAL CABINET ATLAS,

(Uniform with the Geographical Annual.)

Containing finely executed Engravings on Steel, by STARLING, of all the Tribes and Countries mentioned in Sacred History; with Plans of the City of Jerusalem and the Temple; and a New General Index, exhibiting, at one view, all that is Geographically and Historically interesting in the Holy Scriptures.

OPINIONS OF THIS WORK. "This beautiful publication is executed in a style of engraving beyond which, we suppose, art cannot go. It is the more acceptable, as charts of the countries mentioned in the Bible have hithers been either very incorrect, or, if well executed, inaccessible to the public, on account of their enermous prices."—Mouthly Review.

"We are pleased to add our most unequivocal commendation of this very useful publication. In point of execution the maps are nothing inferior, if they are not superior, to their predecessor; and the forrectness does infinite credit to the diligence and research of Mr. Starling and his interary associates."—Christian Remembrancer.

"The present is a very excellent addition, and is a desideratum in families."—Specialor.

"The Index will afford a large body of information for the general reader, and must be of great value and interest, as well to the historical as the biblical student."—Cavitale Patriet.

"The biblical student, in a pocket volume, arranged on a plan entirely new, has a most comprehensive, clear, and correct Scripture Atlas at a trifling cost. The beauty and clearness of its engraving is only equalled by its accuracy and unefulness."—Coverty Heraid.

"The maps are curious and interesting to any student; but to the biblical reader they are invaluable for the information to communicate."—Type Hercury.

Price, plain, 15s. bound; finely coloured, 21s.; in morocco, 3s. extra-

THE GEOGRAPHICAL ANNUAL, 1832,

CONTAINING 100 STEEL ENGRAVINGS BY STARLING.

"Of all the Annuals, this is unquestionably the most useful. It is one of the most delightful books that can be given or received at a season of the year."

"This beautiful and most useful little volume is a perfect picture of elegance, containing a vast sum of geographical information. A more instructive present, or a gift better calculated to be long preserved, and often referred to, could not be offered to favoured youth of either sex."—Literary Gasette.

"The utility of this valuable volume almost eclipses its heauty, in our estimation. Were we limited in our choice to the purchase of one Annual out of the multitude, this should be that ose in preference to all the rest. It is an ornament for the boudder or the drawing-room, while its absolutely necessary for the study."—Alles.

"It is the most perfect gem which has ever been published."—Bristol Journal.

Price, plain, 18s. bound; finely coloured, 21s.; in morocco, 3s. extra.

UNIFORM WITH THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. At only 6s. per Volume, neatly bound, a complete and uniform Edition of

THE FOUR SERIES OF

THE ROMANCE OF HISTORY.

- ENGLAND. By Henry Neele.
 From the Norman Conquest to the Reformation. 3 vols. 18s.
 FRANCE. By Leitch Ritchie.
 From the Time of Charlemagne to the Reign of Louis XIV: 18s.
 ITALY. By Charles Macfarlane.
 From the Lombard Epoch to the Seventeenth Century. 3 vols. 18s.
 SPAIN. By M. Trueba.
 From the Time of Roderic to the Seventeenth Century. 3 vols. 18s.

These Works illustrate the Romantic Annals of every Age between the Periods above mentioned, and comprise also a short History of each Country.

"The plan of this work is novel, and of a very interesting description. It is the realisation of that which has been often said, and often felt,—that the annels with which the history of every country is thickly strewn, are in themselves far more romantic than the happiest inventions of the most ingenious novelists and poets. They are valuable illustrations of manners, and striking communicaties on the history of the country."—There.

" The plan of this work is excellent."-Literary Gazette.

To be had of all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OPPICE, 7, Weddington Street, Oppices Bridge, Stread, and 12, South Members Street, Order's Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 20, Royal Exchange; F. Marlborough, Ave Heris Law, Languate Rill: A Strike Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Chappell, and J. Comming, Dublin. Agent for America, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 20, Castle Street, Lelcester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 807. -

SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Music of Nature; or, an Attempt to prove that what is passionate and pleasing in the Art of Singing, Speaking, and Performing upon Musical Instruments, is derived from the Sounds of the Animated World. William Gardiner. 8vo. pp. 530. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

As all discord is harmony not understood, we are glad to see so enthusiastic a devotee of music as Mr. Gardiner step forward to give us some information on the subject. His volume is, indeed, a very curious one; very eccentric, very original, very desultory, very entertain-ing, very erroneous, and very instructive. It is replete with excellent notices of the music with which the public is most familiar, and of the most popular singers and instrumental performers from whom it has been heard; together with judicious remarks and criticisms on the composers, their compositions, and those who execute them. The tinge of extravagance which peeps out sometimes, adds only to the gusto and amusement with which we peruse the work. To read it is a great treat; but to read it and try all its exemplifications on an instrument is perfectly delicious. Of the latter enjoyment, however, we are sorry to say we can convey no idea; and we must refer to the publication itself for the illustrations of the Music of Nature, through all the varieties of bees, birds, bantams, game-oocks, asses, horses, dogs, flies, cows, children crying or at play, pea-hens, doves, sheep, the effects of fear, of cavalry, of cantering, of blowing a fire, of a counterfeit shilling, of a young lady calling, and of dozens of other noises, all set to some tune, and turned to explain some analogy or principle.

In truth, Mr. Gardiner embraces so many subjects, that we can scarcely tell how even to afford a notion of his literary contents—of his observations on the faculties of the ear, noise and sound, the voice in oratory and singing, time, graces, melody, modulation, rhythm, utterance, and other matters connected with the theory and practice of every kind of mu-sical instrument, and of music itself. We fear that our review must, of necessity, be very mixed-a pot-pourri, like our theme; but having no remedy, we must, to use the old adage, ride the ford as we find it. Of the ear we are told:
"By practice, the discriminating powers of the ear may be carried to the highest degree of perfection. The success of thieves and gamblers depends upon its quickness. Since the money has been recoined, the regularity with which each piece is struck gives them a uniformity of sound that is very remarkable; the half-crowns having the sound of A in alt. Bankers quickly discover the least deviation from the proper tone, by which they readily detect the counterfeits. In the tossing up of money, gamblers can perceive a difference in the sound, whether it falls upon one side or the other. Pie-men are furnished with a covering to their baskets made of a smooth plate of metal by which they take in the appropriate of the counterful to the state of the appropriate of the counterful to the state of the counterful to the state of the counterful to the counterfu the sound, whether it falls upon one side or the other. Pie-men are furnished with a covering to their baskets made of a smooth plate of dismond necklace of the Queen of Portugal for sixteen thousand guiness, and, in addition, gave four thousand more for the tiars and ear-rings.

the sound upon the plate, though concealed by the hand. The atmosphere is the grand medium by which sound is conveyed, though re-cent discoveries prove that other bodies conduct it with greater expedition, as in the instance of vibrating a tuning fork, to the stem of which is attached a packthread string; on the other end being wrapt round the little finger, and placed in the chamber of the ear, the sound will be audibly conveyed to the distance of two hundred yards, though not perceptible to any bystander. Miners, in boring for coal, can tell by the sound what substance they are penetrating; and a recent discovery is, that of applying a listening tube to the breast to detect the motions of the heart. The quickness which some persons possess in distinguishing the smaller sounds, is very re-markable. A friend of the writer has declared he could readily perceive the motion of a flea, when on his nightcap, by the sound emitted by the machinery of his leaping powers."

The author speaks highly of Scotch songs, especially of their genuine simplicity of ex-pression; and mentions, that "at a concert in London, 1722, it was announced that, at the desire of several persons of quality, would be performed for the first time a Scottish song."

Mr. Gardiner describes Braham (p. 119) as the first of tenor singers, and one whose voice for compass, power, and quality, has, probably, never been equalled: he further states, (which we hope is true) that he has realised 100,000L by it! Of Mrs. Salmon he observes_" Her voice had all the colour of the rainbow, and her great faculty was that of adapting the colour of her tones to the note she had to perform: naturally warm, her notes had a refulgent glow; yet she could cool them down to the mild ray of a moonbeam." Of Cato the mild ray of a moonbeam." Of Catalani, "the most splendid vocalist of the age: as a musician she was below mediocrity, possessing scarcely the knowledge of a third-rate performer; but by a quick perception and sen-sibility she concealed these defects even from the learned. Her origin (he adds) was that of a match-girl, in Rome; but in her career she visited every court in Europe, where the most profuse presents were showered upon her by kings and princes. Having amassed vast trea sures in money and jewels, her voice and beauty gone, she has retired to her domain and palazzo in the country that gave her birth."

"If we listen," it is asserted, " to the trot-ting of a horse, or the tread of our own feet. we cannot but notice that each alternate step is louder than the other, by which we throw the sounds into the order of common time. But if we listen to the amble or canter of a horse, we hear every third step to be louder than the other two; owing to the first and third foot striking the ground together. This they readily tell which side is uppermost by regularity throws the sounds into the order of triple time.

"The pulse, in the time of Hippocrates, than sixty beats in a was probably not more than sixty beats in a minute; from which probably originates our smallest division of time, denominated the mo-ment or second, which divides the day into 86,400 parts. As the human species refine, probably the pulse quickens; and so completely are we machines, that, like a clock, the faster acquiring a knowledge of musical time, is that of playing in concert; and the larger the band, the greater is the probability that it will be

At page 189 we find a curious pictured and tinted illustration of the shape and colour of the tones of wind instruments, from the lowest note to the highest, which we have not the means of copying; so must proceed with other miscellanies. For instance:

"Dogs in a state of nature never bark; they simply whine, howl, and growl: this explosive noise is only found among those which are domesticated. Sonnini speaks of the shepherds' dogs in the wilds of Egypt as not having this faculty; and Columbus found the dogs which he had previously carried to America, to have lost their propensity to barking. The ancients were aware of this circumstance. Isaiah compares the blind watchmen of Israel to these animals; 'they are dumb, they cannot bark.' But, on the contrary, David compares the noise of his enemies to the 'dogs round about the city.' Hence the barking of a dog is an acquired faculty—an effort to speak which he derives from his associating with man.

It cannot be doubted that dogs in this country bark more and fight less than formerly. This may be accounted for by the civilisation of the lower orders, who have gained a higher taste in their sports and pastimes than badger-baitings and dog-fights; and it may with truth he asserted, that the march of intellect has had its influence even upon the canine race, in destroying that natural ferocity for war, which (happily for the world) is now spent more in words than in blows.

The Violin.... "It is now two hundred years since Anthony Wood speaks of the first violin being introduced into a concert of viols at Oxford; which instrument, upon close inspection, was pronounced by all the connoisseurs present to be a mere bauble, never likely to be used in the performance of music with any success. Though it resembled the viol in many respects, yet, as it was stripped of its frets, in the opinion of these judges it was an instrument that could not be handled with any truth or certainty. But the very removal of these mechanical helps has conferred upon it a power of expression never contemplated by our fore-

• "It has been found that in a watchmaker's shop the time-pieces or clocks, connected with the same wall or shelf, have such a sympathetic effect in keeping time, that they stop those which beat in irregular time; and if any are at rest, set a-going those which beat accurately."

about the year 1600; but those which are esteemed of the greatest value were made at a later period, about 1650, at Cremona, by the family of A. and J. Amati, and their contemporary Stradvarius, of the same place. These instruments are found to be very much superior to any that have been made since that time, which acknowledged excellence is chiefly attributed to their age. The Amati is rather smaller in size than the violins of the present day. and is easily recognised by its peculiar sweet-ness of tone. The Stradivari is larger and louder, and is so highly esteemed, that many have been sold for the sum of two hundred guineas. The violin has not altered its shape for the last 180 years; yet the method of per-forming upon it has been highly improved. At intervals it seems to have waited for the advance of the art, and more especially for the cultivation of the female voice. Under the hands of Corelli and Tartini it aimed at no shelf; and it only needs to be known to be other effects than had previously been produced by the organ and harpsicord; such as double stops and arpeggio passages, which it was ill stops and arpeggio passages, which it was ill adapted to perform. As science improved, it relinquished these impossibilities, and in the "Kuzzilbash." 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley. of passion and simplicity. When the era had This is a novel which may come under the arrived in which Haydn begun to animate the description of picturesque: woods, mountains, arrived in which Haydn begun to animate the description of picturesque: woods, mountains, art with natural sounds and inflections, music the shaded dingle, and the heath-covered plain, made by rule was abandoned for that which succeed one another in animated panorama, was simple and melodious. Then the violin while the landscape is enlivened by living began to develop its powers. The great range figures full of national character; and for the of its effects entitle it to the first consideration among musicians, as the best means of expressing the thoughts of the composer; but the pegress. We shall give a few of the pictures, and rlod at which it made the greatest advances then ask the reader, would be not like a sumtowards perfection, was soon after the cultiva- mer, ay, and an autumn too, in the Highlands? tion of the female voice. From this beautiful auxiliary it received its first lessons in pathos sham saw a little green spot surrounded by and feeling, and in return it has taught the hoary stunted birch-trees, growing upon rocks voice grace and execution. The compass of as grey as themselves. Close beneath these the violin is more extensive than that of the trees stood some black huts, chiefly to be disvoice; within its range it has a scale of four cerned by smoke which arose from the roofs of octaves, and as each string differs so much in one or two among the group; for the walls quality of tone, it may be considered as pos- were so green, as to leave it doubtful whether sessing in many instances a fourfold effect. they were not rather mounds of earth than But the most striking powers of the instrusuch are the vast variety of accents to be pro- hind the overlapping shoulders of the hills, duced by a skilful management of it, that a was stretched before this nest of huts. This while confined in a dungeon for the murder of his mistress; but it must be confessed that our author sometimes shews his credulity. The following are amusing remarks:

"Persons who have not attended to birds, suppose that every one of the same species sings the same song; but although there is a general resemblance, many varieties may be noticed. Thus, 'the London bird-catchers prefer the song of the Kentish goldfinches, and the Essex chaffinches, and the Surrey nightingales, to those of Middlesex.' These varieties may be compared to the dialects of different pro-

"It is a remarkable circumstance, that many of the greatest vocalists of the age have been justly charged with the occasional fault of sing-ing out of tune. • • The points of inaccuracy with the singer are generally, if not ration of the mind, and a peculiar formation of and at some distance further, the glen appeared the voice, to produce them; hence they are always more correctly given."

"The Indian jugglers, who exhibit such extraordinary feats with swords, cups and balls, depend upon the rhythm of the movement for the success of their performance. The balls are of different gravities, and are thrown with a certain velocity, so that they shall fall into the hand in the time of quavers and semi-quavers, and from their being hollow and made like a coral bell, they give a jingling sound, by which they are more easily caught."

With this, it is time for us to conclude; which we do, again cordially recommending the mass is composed. These are built one this volume as a source of great entertainment to the musical world, and of very agreeable intelligence to the general reader. Its variety of anecdote, criticism, and original thoughts, entitle it to a place in every library and bookpopular, from the most magnificent saloon to the snuggest parlour.

benefit of the young ladies there is a love-story, with a proper number of obstacles in its pro-

A hunting bothy. - " On turning it, Trewere so green, as to leave it doubtful whether habitations for men. A meadow of a full mile ment may be said to reside in the bow, and in breadth, which lost itself at either end beduced by a skilful management of it, that a was stretched before this nest of huts. This single bar of music, according to the French rich piece of pasture was intersected by the school, may be bowed fifty-four different ways." numerous windings of the stream, now diministration of the stream of the s We regret to see Mr. G. repeat the refuted nished to a mere burn, and interspersed with and ridiculous story about Paganini having patches of peat-bog and heather. On the opacquired his extraordinary fame by practising posite side of this meadow rose a huge mountain, the bosom of which was covered with scattered wood in all stages of luxuriance and decay; and several chasms, black with rock and shadow, served as beds for the torrents, which, collecting on the broad surface above, were even at this time seen, like silver threads, hurrying down the steep declivity, or precipitating themselves in a series of petty cascades from ledge to ledge of the rock, which their violence had laid bare. Above this region rose the great mass of the mountain, exhibiting a variegated expanse of rich purple heather and grey moss, interspersed with stripes and patches of green grass, indicating perennial springs; and of peat moss, evidencing itself in black cracks and spots, which pervaded a great portion of its surface. White or grey rock stared through the surface in all quarters; and the summit, which rose in several sharp points connected always, upon the third, fifth, and eighth of the with one great lumpy ridge, appeared to be formed of dark lead-coloured stones, with a of the speaking voice, which we utter instinctively, make us careless in producing them; mountains behind the bothles were of a similar

The violin had its origin in Italy, but the other notes of the scale require an ope- | character, but still more rocky and precipious; to terminate in a dark mass of peaks and ridges, so jagged and confused, as to suggest the idea of a distant peep of chaos. bothy, to all appearance, was built precisely of the same materials and in the same fashion u other Highland huts, or shealings, (as the occasional abodes of shepherds in remote glens are generally termed,) except in as far as it was larger and more lofty than those around it The walls, externally at least, were formed of divots; that is, sods cut with the heather or grass growing on them, the matted roots of which give a firmer texture to the soil of which upon another, in courses, longwise or edgewise. like bricks; and, supported by a frame-work of timber, make a firm and warm wall. The roof was formed of the same materials, laid upon small rafters, (or, as they are called in the country, kebers,) and covered with a heather thatch; and in this manner, bating only the heather thatch, are the majority of the black huts, which form the abodes of the Highland peasantry, chiefly or entirely built, to the graining of the ground in their neighbourhood, the surface of which becomes thus most variafully peeled, because the lazy tenant 'canable fashed' to erect a better habitation of the stood and wood, and heather, which are always to be found in abundance near him. A small square pavement of pebbles placed before the doorway of this tenement, prevented the lodgment there of the water, which formed pools in front of the other huts; and a small window, consisting of six panes of glass in a casement opening inwards, betokened when it was observed in matter not of absolute necessity, from the thickness of the wall in which it was sunk,) 1 degree of refinement scarcely in unison with the materials around it. On entering the doorway, to effect which our Englishman was forced to stoop rather lower than was agreeable, Treham found himself in a passage formed of day and wattle, which divided the interior into two parts. A glance in passing shewed, on the ce hand, a dark space, of undefined dimension filled with smoke, amidst which sparkled the embers of a peat fire; several dim shapes, like the state of the sparkled that the sparkled the sparkled that the sparkled that the sparkled the sparkled that the spar ghosts hovering in their own grey mist, might be detected sitting round this dubious light, a flitting about in the thick atmosphere. A quim of uneasiness came over the Englishman as biser fell upon this suspicious, limbo-like hole; but he yielded to the impulse of his hest's arm, as k threw open the door of an opposite spartment, the appearance of which, as it broke upon him aler the other, afforded infinite relief to his mind The whole interior of that quarter of the both had been plantered and whitewashed; and luminated by no less than two small glass with dows and a oheorful fire, it wore an air of cleanliness and comfort far greater than might have been augured from its black exterior. It true that the great thick couples, as they are called, which form the frame-work at once walls and roof, together with the cross-beams or bauks, which secured them near their per of junction at the upper ends, were seen projecting from the foundation to the roof far into the apartment; and that the dark glossy land of the smoke which had encrusted them, below the promotion of the bothy to the dignity of a hunting seat, would here and there insist up appearing through even the densest coat plaster. But the offensive objects were had

The floor was boarded; a fire-place, which did not smoke, at least at that time, was urnished with a few bars of iron, so placed as o favour the arrangement and combustion of he wood and peats which were used for fuel; and a table or two of deal, with three or four wooden chairs, and some shelves, on which lay few books, completed the furniture of the rublic apartment of the bothy."

So much for the hunting-box; now for the unting itself. " Raising his eyes to a level with the heather op, Tresham could see, at the distance of not more than three hundred yards, the horns of a noble stag just rising between two hags. No other part of the animal was visible; but the movement of the antiers, which slowly turned from side to side, proved sufficiently that he maintained a vigilant look-out after his own safety. 'We'll match him yet, I think,' said Glenvallich. Retreating a few yards, to get further under cover of the rising ground, Maccombich, followed by the rest of the party, crept on all fours from the water-course, across thirty or forty yards of long heather-covered muir, until they reached a maze of peat-bog cracks, of little depth, but sufficient to cover a man creeping flat upon his belly. This, although the moss was moist and muddy, they were forced to submit to, as the only way of crossing unseen by their intended victim, and in this manner they gained about a hundred and fifty yards more upon the deer's position. The forester, alone, was now sent on to ascertain the means of further progress: and after an absence of more than ten minutes, which to the sportsmen seemed a full hour, he returned creeping like a worm, and beckoning the party to follow in the same manner. This they did; and at length, keeping along the peat-cracks, got a chasm deep enough to afford sufficient cover for the whole body. 'He's no a hunder yards from you this moment, Glenvallich,' whispered the forester, in scarcely audible accents, ' and the wind is strong from him. Ye most climb this know; if you can get him within eighty yards, dinna seek to get nearer, for he's in a wide green heuch, and he's very jealous. I dinna think ye'll mak' muckle better o't; but ochone! sir, tak' time and be canny—I wudna for ten pund he got awa!'

'Never fear me, man; but here's Mr. Tresham must take the first chance... I'll fire only if he misses. Come along, Harry.' The forester cast a look of mingled disappointment and remonstrance at his master; but it was disregarded. Tresham also, who still shook from head to foot, with recent exertion and present excitement, would have excused himself from interfering with the anterior rights of his friend in this particular animal; but Glen-vallich would not listen to him. 'Have done with this debating,' said he; 'we shall lose the deer_follow me, Tresham.' Cautiously, like deer_follow me, a cat stealing on its prey, foot by foot, and inch by inch, did Glenvallich, grovelling in the heather, advance towards the crest of the knoll in front of him; when the deer's antlers moved, he was still, when they took their natural position, he moved forwards. Tresham followed in his track, stopping or advancing as he did, until they had reached some twenty paces onwards from the ravine. Glenvallich then signed to him to raise his head with caution. signed to him to raise his head with caution. Scriptions like these being enough to turn the He did so, and saw, with a sensation of eager thoughts of three parts of our southern tourists to the land of the heather. We observe that ful pitch, the noble stag lying among some Mr. Fraser—we may surely put his name to a work that does him so much credit—has some closus tranquillity, occasionally scratching a part of his hide with a fork of his antiers, and of romantic superstition does not prevent his driving away the insects, which appeared grievously to torment him. 'Take him as he lies, Harry; aim low, at the shoulder,' whispered Glenvallich. The heart of Tresham beat more audibly than ever it had done on going into ac-tion, as he carefully extended and levelled his rifle. Whether it was the slight click of cocking, or some movement made in the heather, as he stretched out the piece to take aim, is un Pocket-Book; and "this very fair alliterative certain, but the stag started, and made a movetitle, which was sufficiently catching to suit ment as if about to rise, just at the moment the wishes of any modern bibliopole, would not when Tresham was pressing the trigger. circumstance, probably, unsettled his aim, for awkward circumstance that, during its protended object. But not thus was the unfortunate animal to escape; for scarce had the relair, when the rifle of Glenvallich gave forth its fatal contents, and the stag, making one the reviewers, for having thus deprived them high bound from the earth, tumbled headlong of a capital opportunity of exercising their wit forwards, and lay struggling in the agonies of upon him by the rather obvious, but pertinent, death. He had anticipated the possibility of juke of his 'Pocket-Book being as big as a the animal just behind the shoulder, and went clean through its heart. 'Hurrah! capital! grand! by Jove, he has got it!' shouted Tre-sham, starting up: but the arm of Gleavallich pulled him down again. 'Hush! be quiet,' whispered be; 'never do so—there may be twenty more deer near us, of which we yet know nothing-such a halloo would send them all of. Load your piece-load quickly.' While they were performing this necessary operation, Maccombich, who had joined them, and was keeping watch around them, touched his arm, and pointing with one hand, shewed him three fine stags moving off to the further hill, alarmed, no doubt, by the reports of the rifles, and probably by the exclamation of Tresham. God bless me !' said the mortified young man, this is a lesson I shall not forget; but who could have imagined it?' A little further scrutiny by the practised eye of Maccombich, was sufficient to convince the party that there was no more game near them, at least in view; so the hunters advanced to break the deer, as it is called, by cutting the throat, and disembowelling it; and while Maccombich was performing this sportsmanlike duty, it was amusing to watch the rapture to which, when unrestrained by habitual caution, he now gave full way on the glad occasion of a successful shot. Apostrophising it in Gaelic, he addressed to it every reproachful epithet he could think of, as a villain who had so often baffled their murderous efforts: it was a scoundrel, and a rascal, and a devil, to whom he wished a bad end, and whose soul, heart, and liver, he gave to the devil: then changing his tone, he lavished upon it every expression of endearment in which his language is so fruitful, but which, when translated, often sounds strangely enough to English ears. It was his dear, his darling, his bonny beast, his cattle, his love. He seemed to abandon himself to the very intoxication of delight; and it was singular to see a man habitually grave and reserved, acting as if for the time he had actually been deprived of reason."

These pages are full of equally lively sketches; and, appearing as they do at this season of the year, we hope the Highland lairds are pre-pared for an unusual extent of hospitality; de-

A Key to both Houses of Parliament, &c. &c. &c. 8vo. pp. 924. London, 1832. and Co.

This work, the preface tells us, is that which has been long announced as The Parliamentary The now have been dispensed with, but from the the rifle exploded, but the ball flew over its in- gress, the said book hath so increased in bulk as to require a pocket of no ordinary dimensions to contain it. Whilst confessing his own port of Tresham's shot made him start from his inexperience and miscalculation, however, the writer begs pardon of their high mightinesses his friend's failure, and prepared to remedy it, Bible: at the same time he invites the polite which he did effectually, for the ball had struck attentions of these '____ good-natured friends' rather to the interior than the exterior of the volume; trusting that they will act towards him as he has done in regard to others, viz.

'To speak of him as he is: — nothing extenuate; Nor set down aught in malice.'"

Having no malice in our composition, we shall accept the compiler's invitation to the interior; but, in the first place, beg to say a few words on the porch, or "catching" title which has been abandoned. Without entering into the general question of book nomenclature, we have often had to notice the inconsistency between names and contents; the former being much better calculated to catch than the latter to satisfy the reader. It has indeed grown to be part, and almost a principal part, of the trade, to devise captivating titles; and, with little care as to what merit the production itself may boast, the converse of "Give a dog an ill name, and hang him," has become a leading feature in our literature -Give a publication a taking name, and sell it. Now, Parliamentary Pocket-Book was so very concise and good an appellation, that we should have been sorry for its change, had not a Key been quite as appropriate to a performance which, in its advocacy of reform, does not yield to the lord mayor himself. Still, we feel a lingering regret about "pocket-book," of the full import and extensive applicability of which, this writer does not seem to be aware. The fact is, that the vast majority of books now published are, in reality and literally, nothing else but pocket-books; from the identical eodem nomine pocket-books of the year, which, with all their cost and shew, cannot afford to hold a pencil worth a farthing, to the most imposing quarto that issues from the press. One and all are pocketbooks; that is to say, books intended to touch the pockets of the buyers, to replenish the pockets of the publishers and sellers, and, perhaps, to put a trifle into the pockets of the authors-especially if they happen to be mere hacks, drudges, and manufacturers to order. and do not pretend to originality or genius.

With regard to this Key to both Houses of Parliament, it seems to be more indebted for its admission there to the Black Book* than to the Black Rod. Regardless of the latter, it pretty freely adopts the principles of the former: and when we consult it for reference, we are apt enough to find politics. For instance, looking for an account of the Aberdeen district of boroughs which returned Joseph Hume to parliament, we learn respecting them, that "as far as regards all necessary purposes of corruption, these borough corporations are just as rotten as boroughmonger could wish. But, at the time of the union with England, in order that every spark of public virtue should be extinguished, that every germ of political independence might be crushed, these unfortunate towns were clubbed into tricts' of four, five, and six boroughs each, to be represented in the British parliament by one commissioner!" And farther — " Of the fifteen commissioners for the cities and royal burghs of Scotland (horresco referens!) fourteen are chosen by sixty-six delegates, who are elected by 1269 self-appointed individuals! Edinburgh, alone, without the incumbrance of other towns, retains the right of sending one commissioner to the commons' house of parliament, and thirty-three persons elect him!! Thus, there are not quite a hundred voters for parliamentary representatives in all the cities and towns of Scotland, the number being exactly ninety-nine!!!-a cargo about just sufficient to load a moderately-sized Leith smack. Indeed, three or four Botany-Bay transports are capable of affording ample accommodation for the whole electors for town and country.'

We turn to Dover, a cinque port, and learn that " a freedom of a cinque port town is always considered as entitling the possessor to a provision of some sort, which is generally furnished at the expense of the nation; and in order thereto, in every one of the cinque ports. as a matter of course, there is a very large custom-house establishment. Besides the ordinary servants and retainers to a custom-house, there are usually five or six riding officers, and a custom-house boat among the crew, of which, if there be a single sailor, it is an extraordinary circumstance; but they must all of necessity be freemen. At three or four of the towns, custom-house cutters are stationed, nominally to cruise against the smugglers, but really to make provision for the friends of the minister: the whole body of officers are freemen of course. At almost all the ports, forts and batteries have of late years been built, with no other view whatever, that can be discovered, except that of furnishing three or four snug sinecure places in each port. Another common mode of binding the lower class of freemen to their good behaviour, is by lending them small sums of money on bond, which, so long as they conduct themselves to the satisfaction of their superior, are never demanded."

From these quotations the tone of the Key may be ascertained; and it will be deemed of a high pitch or low pitch, just as the opinion of the reader may incline to conservativeness or radicalism. For our parts, we can only repeat what we have frequently declared, no matter to which side extreme party feelings ran away with a writer, that we are always sorry to see them protruded in works of this kind, the utility of which must rest upon the unbiassed information they are supposed to furnish, and which must always lose in authority in proportion to the partisanship and passion and partiality they exhibit.

Still, notwithstanding this taint, which, though it may recommend the Key politically to a vast number of zealous reformers, will, at the same time, deprive it of estimation in the embrace a mass of very necessary and welldigested matter. It is, however, curious to observe the amount of changes which have taken place even during its progress through the printer's hands; changes so multitudinous and important, that should the system proceed with like celerity hereafter, we should, about the year 1834, be able to consult it only for an account of privileges, of spiritual lords, of qualifications, of fees, of peers, of princes, of represented places and representatives, of usages, and of institutions, existing about the period of its publication.

Till then, and may the day be far off, much valuable intelligence may be sought and obtained from it, on the points designated by the title-

We notice some verbal, and even graver chronological and biographical errors; but it is hardly possible to avoid them in the first edition of a work of this description.

A Narrative of the late Nanning Expedition : containing a simple Detail of the Operations of the Troops, from the 6th to the 25th of August, 1831. By an Officer of the Expedition. 8vo. pp. 49. Malacca, 1831. From Malacca, from Juanpore, from Van Diemen's Land, + from Ceylon, 1 this single sheet of the Literary Gasette affords the striking example, that wherever the printer's art exists, an English periodical is made the common centre of communication, and, receiving the streams of information from every quarter, is enabled in return to spread the fertilising flood of intelligence over the civilised world. It is a distinction to be justly proud of; and we trust it is so used as to be not only honourable to us, but beneficial to the public. S With regard to the little pamphlet before us, it is written to remove certain misapprehensions which are stated to exist respecting the expedition whose operations it describes in a graphic and interesting manner: but as the politics of Malacca (which became British in 1825, in exchange for Bencoolen, which was given up to the Dutch) are less important on our side of the globe than in the East, we shall only quote a few passages characteristic of the work, premising that "the district of Nanning lies about due N.E. from the town of Malacca, and the residence of the panghooloo is at a small place called Tabo, about twenty-three miles from Malacca, so insignificant as not to be deserving even of the name of a village. It consists, in fact, of three or four houses in addition to that of the chieftain." Short as this distance was, and insignificant as the enemy appeared to be, the march of our force through tangled forest and difficult ravine was adventurous, and replete with sanguinary incident. The first action opened thus :-

"By the time that the gun was unlimbered, a panglimah, or head warrior, dressed in an elegant red broad-cloth jacket, with a spear ornamented with horse-hair in one hand, and a sling in the other, stepped out a little in advance, and performed the war-dance for our amusement, which he accompanied with a song, inviting us in no very courteous terms to advance. • • The gun fired two rounds of grape at different groups; but the artillery officer, being short-sighted, was unable to dis-minds of many other persons, the volume does | tinguish the panglimah, who, nothing danted continued his song and his dance, both of which very nearly resembled those of Bandoolah's invincibles at Rangoon. The third shot, how. ever, was more effectual, eight or ten his taking effect (one between the eyes), and is song and the dance terminated together. Dismayed by the fall of their leader, the enems hastily retreated to an eminence on their left. about 800 yards from our position; and the gun immediately opening on them at a very considerable elevation, knocked over five a them and a couple of buffaloes to boot, which were peaceably grazing in the paddy-field in their front. The advanced guard now crossed, and, having scoured the jungle in front, took up the enemy's position until the road across the paddy-fields could be made passable for the guns; when the whole force moving ore, established themselves for an hour and a half, which was devoted to the important affair of breakfasting, as we knew not the nature of the obstacles in front. On the body of the panylimah datoo, who was a fine athletic man, were found an embossed gold ring on the finger, a few small gold buttons on the jacket, an amulet, a small copper coin, also kept as a charm, and the usual proportion of opium and betel-nut."

There was constant and harassing fighting; and the Malays are painted in the worst of colours for cunning, treachery, and cruely. On one occasion, "with that humanity which forms so striking a feature in the Malayan character, they proceeded to shew their surgical skill on the wounded Chinese by lopping of their limbs at each joint successively, scooping out their eyes, cutting off their nose, and winding up the performance by ripping open their bellies and tearing out the bowels. So ardent was their thirst for butchery and torture, that the senseless body of the private Shaik Sillah was treated in the same way.

Lieutenant White " was brought in still alive and sensible, and we were sanguine enough at first to trust that his wound was not more. On stripping off his jacket, all these pleasing hopes were dissipated. The ball, a small pistone, had passed through the right arm, a coupe of inches below the shoulder, fractured the book. and, penetrating the chest, was cut out at the opposite side by the surgeon, having thus gone quite through the lungs: all that could now be done was to endeavour to alleviate the sufferings of the patient, which arose chiefly from the sense of suffocation produced by the pouring of the blood into the lungs. His agonies were soon terminated, and at a quarter before three he breathed his last. We gave him a soldier's grave in the corner of the stockade that even. ing, save that no volleys of muskery announced our loss to the enemy. This officer exhibited such a marked illustration of presentiment, that I must be excused for introducing a subject which might otherwise be deemed foreign to its object. One of the most daring and gallant young men that erer en-tered the army, and enthusiastically deroted to his profession, he started with the detachment from Malacca that morning with an unusual depression of spirits; which was the more extraordinary, as the gaiety and liveliness of his manner rendered him the joy and rattle of society. He only added another to the many instances already on record of fatal presentiment. He declared to his brother officers that he felt convinced he should fall that day; substituted a handkerchief for his foraging cap. and replaced his sword and waist-belt by a pistol. He was posted to the rear-guard; but on the arrival of the head of the column at the stockade where the body of Shaik Sillah was lying, the first sepoy that mounted it fell shot through the temples. The others were checked by the fall of their comrade in a spot where it appears that they did not expect opposition, and did not advance. The presentiment that hung over the mind of Lieutenant White had no effect upon his courage, and in the ardour of the moment he rushed on from the rear, with a view of leading on the party. He had nearly reached the head of the column, when the fatal shot took effect, and he staggered forward, exclaiming, 'My God!—I am shot through the body.' Lieut. Brodie caught the reeling the body.' Lieut. Brodie caught the reening body of his friend, and placed him, pro tem-pore, under a bush. We will here drop the thread of the narrative for a while to record an instance of the fulfilment of a remarkable expression used by this officer. Two or three years before, he had expressed a wish that he might die in the field, and that his brother officers would, as he expressed himself in the lightness of his heart, drink a glass of grog over his grave. The latter part of this wish. however improbable, was unconsciously fulfilled. The corner in which we deposited his gallant remains was the best sheltered of the whole from the view and fire of the enemy. and was therefore selected in order that the coolies might pursue their mournful task uninterruptedly. For the same reason, it was our wont to retire thither after dinner, in order to enjoy our cigar in security, the enemy's shot all lodging in, without being able to penetrate, the trees of which the stockade was composed. The last clod had hardly been trodden in level with the rest of the surface, in order effectually to conceal the place of our comrade's repose from the notice of the enemy, when cigars and brandy and water being introduced, fulfilled to the letter this extraordinary wish."

Page 423. † Ib. ‡ Ib. § We rather make this reference as a curious proof of the universality of English periodical literature, than as a particular puff of our Gazette. It is pleasing to see, no matter by what channel, a knowledge of our improvements in every branch which can enlighten mankind thus wafted "from Indus to the Pole."—Ed. L. G.

The following affords information as to the native Malay system : __" The nature of the chieftaincy amongst the Malayan tribes may be stated as comprising the sole provision of the eldest son; whilst the others, as they advance to maturity, are turned adrift with a few retainers each, to make their way through the world by levying contributions from their less warlike neighbours, either as pirates or banditti."

We shall only add, that the failure of the military operations here described has so shaken the adherence of the Malayan peninsula, as to render it expedient to reduce the whole by more powerful and effectual means to subordina. tion to the English rule.

The pamphlet is, we believe, by Lieut. Peter Begbie; and it does him much credit, both as a soldier and a writer.

Family Library, Vol. XXXII. Sketches from Venetian History, Vol. II. London, 1832. Murray.

A SECOND volume, as agreeable as its predecessor, is now before us; and opening with the period of its highest glory, concludes with the fall and degradation of the once magnificent republic. The annals of Venice are one of the most singular pages in history, though a pitimost singular pages in history, though a piu-able one, shewing how men may be swayed by fear and pride—the two great supports of the Venetian government. What a picture of the terrible is presented in the following passage!

"Little more than this last great failure in duty was wanting to seal the fate of Carmagnuola; and that little was soon afterwards sup-some advantageous posts on the very borders of that the presence of Carmagnucia was required the Lagune, which he might easily have maintained. Even if the senate absolved him from any charge of treachery, to which he had but too obviously exposed himself, he had ceased to conquer, and his removal therefore was most desirable. The course which they adopted was in all points consistent with their ordinary dark policy, and it is well explained by Machiavelli. Perceiving that Carmagnuola,' says the acute author of the Prencipe, 'had become cold in their service, they yet neither wished nor dared to dismiss him, from a fear of losing that which he had acquired for them : for their own security, therefore, they were compelled to put him to death.' Yet it may be believed that, however unscrupulous in their state craft were the rulers of Venice, they were, in this instance, actuated by more powerful motives than those of long-sighted precaution; and that they inflicted punishment for offences already committed, as well as guarded against the possibility of a future commission. The conduct of their general had long been an object of discussion; for it is recorded that, while residing in Venice, during the short interval of peace, and laden daily with new honours, as he one morning attended the levee in the ducal palace, he found the prince but just returning from a council which had sat in debate all night. 'Shall I offer good morrow or good even?' was the sportive and unsuspecting inquiry of the soldier. 'Our consultation has been indeed protracted,' replied the doge, with a gracious smile, 'and nothing has more frequently occurred in it than the mention of your name.' Then, as if recollecting that he had outstepped the bounds of caution, he artfully diverted the conversation to other topics. It is not possible to reject the great mass of concurrent testimony which assures us that the precise measures which the government ultimately adopted were decided upon fully eight months before their execution: and it appears a matter of no small pride, not only to the pensioned historian Sabellico, but even to the exalted and independent spirit Paolo Sarpi, that, although the secret resolution was well known, during that long period, to at least three hundred persons, who had themselves assisted in framing it,many of them intimately and familiarly ac-quainted with their intended victim, some oppressed by poverty which they might have exchanged for immediate affluence by a disclosure,-yet not one whisper was breathed from a single lip which could, in the slightest degree, compromise the mysterious design of the senate. The fact perhaps speaks quite as strongly for the terror inspired by the Venetian government as for the fidelity of its agents. The senate concealed their determination till the blow could be struck without a chance of failure; and it was not until the following spring (1432) that Carmagnuola received a summons to Venice, under pretexts of high respect and consideration, which might have deceived the most veteran intriguer. Sanuto, indeed, may perhaps seem to imply, and if he does so, it is with the most unflinching gravity, that some misgiving might have crossed the general's mind, if he had paid due attention to the ill-favoured countenance of the pale and cadaverous secretary of the chancellor, who bore the message: but, with this one equivocal exception, no pains were spared to lull suspicion. Negotiations for peace were stated to have commenced, ambassadors from the chief belligerents were assembled at Piacenza, and it was to assist the great council in its delibein the capital. Every precaution which the council of ten adopted in order to secure his person, from the first moment after he left the camp, was so astutely contrived, that he received it with satisfaction as a token of more than ordinary respect; and although he remarked the unusual caresses which were lavished on him, probably he did not feel, certainly he did not express, any suspicion as to the motives in which they originated. The Lord of Mantua never quitted his side; on setting foot in the territory of Vicenza, the commandant met him at the head of a considerable body of troops, and escorted him to the opposite frontier; a like guard of honour, as he believed it to be, awaited him at Padua; where the governor, Contarini, insisted that he should partake his bed, a compliment agreeable to the manners of the times, and, in this instance, well answering the double purpose for which it was designed. When he embarked on the Lagune, to the borders of which Con-tarini attended him, he found in waiting the Signori di Notte (certain police magistrates), with their officers; and at the entrance of the capital, eight nobles, who were posted to re-ceive him, entreated that, instead of proceeding immediately to his own palace, he would accompany them, in the first instance, to that of the doge. On entering the prince's mansion, its gates were closed, all strangers were excluded, and the count's suite was dismissed, with an intimation that their master was to be entertained with a banquet by the Doge Foscari. While Carmagnuola, awaiting his audience, remained in conversation with the members of the collegio, the doge excused himself till the following morning, on a plea of indisposition. As it grew later, the unsuspecting prisoner took his leave, and the attendant nobles, seemingly in order to pay yet farther respect to their illustrious visitor, accompanied him to the palace court. There, as he took the ordinary path to the gates; one of them requested him to pass over to the other side, towards the prisons: 'That is not my way,' was his remark; and he was significantly answered, 'It is your way!' As he crossed the threshold of the dungeon, the fatal truth flashed upon him, and he exclaimed with a deep sigh, 'I see well enough that I am a dead man;' and, in reply to some consolation offered by his companions, he added words fully expressive of his conviction that life was forfeited. For three days he refused all sustenance. At their expiration, when he was led, by night, to the chamber of torture, and stripped for the question, an arm, formerly broken by a wound received in the service of his judges, prevented the executioners from lifting him to the height requisite to give full effect to the inhuman application of the strappado. His feet, therefore, were brought to the stoves; and it was reported that ample confession of treachery was speedily wrung from him by the acuteness of his sufferings, and confirmed by the production of letters under his own hand, and by the testimony of agents whom he had employed. But the mysteries of the council of ten were impenetrable; and all that can be stated with certainty of his trial, if such it may be called, are the terms of his accusation,-namely, that he was in compact with Filippo-Maria to refuse assistance to Trevisani, and not to take Cremona. He lingered in prison for nearly three weeks after this examination, and was then conducted, after vespers, on the 5th of May, to the Two plied by his permitting the enemy to occupy rations upon the proposals submitted to it, Columns. Either to prevent him from exciting pity by an enumeration of his former great spectacle awakened more desire than veneradeeds, or from appealing against a punishment tion. Watching his opportunity, and closely mouth was carefully gagged; and Sanuto, who plunderer secreted himself behind an altar in vest with the sleeves tied behind his back. It was not till the third stroke that his head was severed from his body; and his remains were gained access at will to its interior, he carefully then buried by torch-light in the church of replaced the panel, leaving it removable at where, at the descent into the cloisters, his wooden coffin was shewn not many years since, perhaps may still be shewn, covered with a a lust for gold which allured him in the first will illustrate the manners of the time.

"On returning from his coronation, Frederic, with his newly married consort, Eleonora entire, and requiring the tedious process of the of Portugal, revisited Venice, through which saw before it could be borne away. More The eternal Bucentaur, surrounded by unnumbered vessels of every name and stances, must have already suggested itself to burden, glittering with brocade and tapestry, gold, silk, and banners,—the doge and his court, the patricians and their noble dames, all of dignity and beauty which Venice could detected. Simply to possess this boundless display, poured forth to honour the imperial guests, on their days of separate arrival. A long and brilliant course of festivities succeeded; and, at a public ball, the illustrious pair condescended to mingle personally in the dance. Besides a golden crown set with jewels pre-sented to Eleonora herself, the senate, as a pledge of affection and fidelity to a generation yet to come, offered to the babe of which the Empress, although not yet fifteen, already gave promise, a costly mantle, and a purple coverlid for its cradle, richly interwoven with pearls. If we are to believe Justiniani, the emperor, at a banquet in the ducal palace, foretold that this bribe to the unborn infant would prove unavailing; and turning to Foscari, while he protested his own unchangeable attachment to Venice, at the same time lamented the injuries which he foresaw would hereafter be inflicted on her by his descendants. There is yet another anecdote connected with this imperial visit, which, for the credit of the chief actor in it, might be wished forgotten. Among the presents tendered to the acceptance of Frederic, was a magnificent service of the purest crystal glass, from the furnaces of Murano, long the chief emporium of that once rare and difficult manufacture. The emperor, who weighed gifts by other standards than those of taste and beauty, was disappointed in the material. He made a sign to the court jester who accompanied him, and the adroit knave, as if inadvertently stumbling against the table, overset and shattered the frail vases with which it was covered. 'Had they been of gold or silver,' was the sordid and unmannerly comment of the prince, 'they would not have been thus easily broken.'

Superstition .- " The seamless vesture of the Redeemer was still found, or supposed to be found, in the reliquaries of Constantinople, and the great price of 10,000 ducats was ten-dered for it by Venice, and refused by the unbelievers.

Daring Robbery...." Among the suit of a prince of the house of Este, indulged, according partment of the marble panelling which girded the lower part of the treasury. Having thus as most gratified his fancy. It was doubtless black velvet pall, upon which was placed a instance to the beretta of the doge, studded skull." We now proceed to the many extracts that short of an insatiate love of virtu could have prompted him to secure the accredited horn of a unicorn, too cumbrous for removal while exploit, perpetrated under very similar circumevery reader of Herodotus, Stammato, but for his vanity, might have enriched himself, and escaped to his native shores, unharmed and unwealth, however, appeared but little in his eyes; for its full enjoyment, it became necessary that another should know of his possession. Ac-Candian of noble birth, he led him to an obscure lodging, and poured before the astonished plunder. While the robber watched the countenance of his friend, he mistrusted the exwas already in his grasp to ensure his safety, when Grioni averted the peril by stating that lence, perhaps as a bribe, Stammato presented his unwilling accessory with a carbuncle, which afterwards blazed in the front of the ducal known and incontestable evidence of his truth, hastened to the palace and denounced the criminal. The booty, which amounted to the scarcely credible sum of 2,000,000 ducats of gold, had not yet been missed, and was recovered undiminished. Stammato expiated his offence between the Two Columns; the rope been gilt, in order that, like Crassus, he might exhibit in his death a memorial of the very passion which had seduced him to destruction.

We beg to dissent entirely from the criticism launched into by the writer before us. He says of Byron's Two Foscari, that it is "a play in being compensated by beauties of conception.' With this opinion we cannot agree: some of the noblest passages our poet ever penned occur in that very tragedy; one alone might redeem the whole—we allude to the superb answer of the Doge to Mariana: indeed, it is our belief that Byron's dramas are his great certainties of fame. Our next extract is the romance of history

"Fifteen years had now passed during which beneath the yoke of the republic, and earnestly sought to transfer their allegiance to Naples, deeds, or from appearing against a primarile inflicted without due evidence of guilt, his noticing the localities of the spot, this ingenious had now become accustomed to their virtual mouth was carefully gagged; and Sanuto, who plunderer secreted himself behind an altar in masters. There were contingencies, neverthehas minutely recorded the particulars of his the body of the cathedral, and when discovered less, not likely to escape the sagacity of Venez, he appeared upon the scaffold. He was clad fresh access by means of false keys. After he appeared upon the scaffold. He was clad fresh access by means of false keys. After intrigue, might perhaps gather its fruits. Can in scarlet hose, a cap of velvet from his own numerous difficulties, and by the labour of rina still retained more than ordinary beauty; In scarlet mose, a cap of tenter to many and a scarlet many successive nights, he removed one com- and her picture, in widow's weeds, (even now vest with the sleeves tied behind his back. It partment of the marble panelling which girded glowing with almost original freshness among the treasures of the Palanzo Manfrini,) was one of the earliest great works of Titian, which both from the skill of the artist and the love-San Francesco della Vigna. In later days pleasure; and, renewing his nightly visits, he liness of the subject, extended his growing fame they were transferred to Sta Maria dei Frari, selected, without fear and without suspicion, beyond the borders of the Lagrane. With an such portions of the entire spoil at his command great attractions, coupled to the rich dowry of a kingdom, it was not probable that the Queen of Cyprus would long remain without suitors; and rumour already declared her to be the in-tended bride of Frederic, a son of the King of Naples. If she married and bore children, Cyprus would become their inheritance; and w prevent the possibility of such an extinction of their hopes, the Venetian government resolved to assume its sovereignty directly in their own city he had before passed on his progress to fortunate than the Egyptian robber, whose bold persons. The civilians, therefore, were instructed to avouch the legitimacy of this claim; and they declared, perhaps with less sincerity than solemnity, that the son of Giacopo Lusi-gnano inherited the crown from his father; that since he died a minor, his mother inherited from him; and that, finally, Venice inherited from his mother, an adopted daughter of St Mark. Giorgio Cornaro, a brother of the queen, was solicited to conduct the ungrateful process cordingly, having exacted a solemn oath of of her deposition. To his representations, secrecy from one of his countrymen, Grioni, a that by abandoning the care of a turbulent kingdom, and returning to her native land, in which she might pass the remainder of her life eyes of his companion the dazzling fruits of his tranquilly and securely, amongst those bound to her by natural ties, she would far more consult her happiness than by remaining exposed pression which passed across it; and the stiletto in a remote and foreign country to the hazards of its ambiguous friendship,—she replied with confidence, that there was little which could the first sight of so splendid a prize had well allure a woman environed with the splendour nigh overpowered him. As a token of benevo- of royalty and the observance of a court, to descend to the parsimonious habits and undistinguished level of a republican life; and that it would please her far better if the signory would bonnet; and Grioni, seeking excuse for a short await her decease before they occupied her posabsence, and bearing in his hand this well- sessions. But to arguments explanatory of the will, the power, and the inflexibility of the senate, it was not easy to find an adequate answer; and the natural eloquence, as the historian styles it, of her brother, ultimately pre-vailed. 'If such,' she observed, as soon as tears permitted speech, 'be your opinion, such also shall be mine; nevertheless, it is more from with which he was executed having previously you than from myself that our country will obtain a kingdom. Having thus reluctantly consented, after a few days' delay she commenced her progress to Famagosta. Royal honoursattended her every where as she passed; and on the 6th of February she signed a formal act of abdication, in the presence of her couswhich the ruggedness of execution is far from cil; attended a solemn mass, at which the banner of St. Mark was consecrated; delivered that standard to the charge of the Venetian general; and saw it raised above her own on the towers of the citadel. On the approach of summer she embarked for Venice, where she was received as a crowned head by the dage and signory; and in return for the surrender of her sceptre, she enjoyed a privilege never before or since accorded to any of her countrywomen, a triumphal entry to St. Mark's Pixtto custom, with an inspection of the wonders of the signory had governed Cyprus, under the zetts, on the deck of the Bucentaur. A revense the treasury of St. Mark's, was a Candian name of Catarina, whose son died not long after of 8000 ducats was assigned her for life; and mamed Stammato, in whose bosom the sacred his birth; and the islanders, who at first chafed the delights of the 'Paradise' of Asala, in the beautiful and various, and from them equally correct ideas may be formed both of the city, its architecture, and costumes. Some of the latter are curious enough; witness the garb appropriated to the Vergognosi, a begging dress assumed by the decayed nobility when they solicited the assistance of the charitable.

The Hobart Town Almanac for 1832. Pp. 264.
Hobart Town. J. Ross.

In our No. 800 we noticed the preceding Annual production of Van Diemen's Land, and have nothing to say of the present but that it also gives us (after the usual kalendar) some particulars of this remote colony, not unworthy of being generally known.

" The continued melting of the snow on the mountains of Van Diemen's Land, perhaps causes its torrents to be unparalleled throughout the world for constant strength and activity during the winter months; so much so, that it is dangerous to attempt to cross some of them, within steep banks, although they are not ten feet in width, without felling a tree for a bridge. These furious torrents, in their descent, often form beautiful cascades, which shine forth like molten silver from among the sombre foliage that clothes the mountain's side, and produce a chain of vapour so intense, that it rises without dispersion in graceful

"The poison is of a powerful sedative nature, producing stupor, loss of speech, deglutition, vision, and the power of the voluntary muscles, and ultimately an entire deprivation of nervous has entered on his task with all his heart and power, and death. At the inquest over the all his mind; and it supplies what will be indisabove bodies, the effect of the poison was satispensable in every library, whether historical or factorily proved, by giving part of the fish left military—a connected narrative of the camby the unfortunate individuals to two cats, paigns which shewed such variety of exigence which soon became affected. When both were and such fertility of resource in our illustrious in a dying state, one had twenty-five drops of general. The various events have been so the arsenical solution introduced with a silver often before the public, that our extracts will lady's periodical; and we anticipated grace, tube into the stomach, and rapidly recovered; necessarily be brief; but we must illustrate wit, pathos, and subjects of feminine interest. while the other, which was allowed to take its the different spirit of English and French conchance, quickly died. The bodies at death were flaccid and blanched, with no fector, but rather a smell like that of new hay, particularly about the month; but in about twelve and the new constitution was proclaimed amid hours they became livid, swollen, with bloody the loud vivas of exulting crowds. The entire serum issuing from all the external parts, in-population poured into the streets and squares; tolerably fortid, and rapidly running into decom-position. The general size of the fish is about heard the accents of joy; laurels and flowers five inches in length, the girth is great in pro-decorated the gay scene. Tapestry and carpets portion to the length, the back is of the colour were hung from the balconies; holyday dresses and spotted like cortoiseshell, the belly is of were put on; holyday greetings were given; a white kid-skin feel and appearance. The and the holyday smiles of men, women, and animal has one ventral fin posterior to the anus, one caudal, and two pectoral. The tail Wellington was more especially the object of is perpendicular, the gills are anterior to the peared, cries rent the air of, 'Long live the confined, and afterwards locked in by pier and inch in length, and of a semi-lunar form; the eyes are rather large and prominent, like those of the toad; the nares are anterior to the shawls, were strewn before his horse's feet.

The idea—that of a river, first fresh and unconfined, and afterwards locked in by pier and bridge, being compared to a young poet, is taken verbatim from a little poem called "The Altered River," in the Keepsake of 1828; a Trevisan mountains, in which the unqueened sphere. We are glad to observe, from a coupqueen continued to assemble her little court, d'wil at the end, that the settlement goes on the piety, and the metaphysics of the Illustrious arrative of Catarina's dethronement."

The illustrations of this volume are very capital is estimated altogether at ten per cent. Population has increased in a still greater ratio; the whites amount to above 27,000; the blacks to from 300 to 400. The imports have not increased much, but the exports have risen 30,000% chiefly in wool and oil, and amounted to 200,000%. There are now five journals, three in Hobart Town and two in Launceston.

> The Van Diemen's Land Almanac, for the Year 1832. 12mo. pp. 268. Hobart Town, Melville; London, Smith, Elder, and Co.

> SINCE the foregoing was in type, we have received the little contemporary volume whose title we have just cited. We observe that it states the population at 24,000 whites, and We observe that it probably 1000 or 1500 blacks, or aborigines. Among the useful information, we see the arrival, May 2, of the Eliza, 343 tons, James Weddell, master, from London and the Swan River - the latest notice we have of the able and enterprising mariner who has sailed nearer the south pole than any other man, and added greatly to our geographical knowledge.

> Cabinet Library: Military Memoirs of Field-Marshal Duke of Wellington. By Captain Moyle Sherer. Vol. II. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

This volume completes the military career of wreaths to the very mountain's top." the Duke of Wellington; a man who, whatever Among the embellishments is a picture of estimate may be formed of his political views, the toad-fish; in consequence of partaking of no one can deny the praise of being England's which, a lady and two children died recently at grentest general, and one whose genius was Hobart Town.

of Ciudad Rodrigo, conceived in those glowing terms which are fitting towards a deliverer, Wellington replied with simple dignity and unaffected modesty; nor did he notice in his reply their proud and swelling enumeration of his great successes, further than by one line-'The events of war are in the hands of Providence.'

On his entrance into France, the Duke of Wellington "impressed forcibly on the troops his desire and resolve that the inhabitants should be well treated, and that private pro-perty should be respected. Officers and sol-diers must recollect, said his memorable order to the army, 'that their nations are at war with France solely because the ruler of the French nation will not suffer them to be at peace, and is desirous of forcing them to submit to his yoke.' And, after remarking upon the conduct of the French soldiers in Spain and Portugal, and the sufferings and evils resulting to themselves from their great irregularities and cruelties towards the unfortunate inhabitants of those countries, Lord Wellington adds: To avenge this conduct upon the peaceable inhabitants of France would be unmanly, and unworthy of the nations to whom the commander of the forces now addresses himself."

The nation that does not appreciate her great men will never produce them; and we are glad to see a production like this, which forcibly recalls what are the real claims of the conqueror of the Peninsula upon the gratitude of his countrymen.

Letter on Nomenclature, addressed to M. Quatermere de Quincy, &c. By John Henderson. Printed at Juanpore, by Bulloram Bhooo. Pp. 50.

This pamphlet bears strong marks upon it of its foreign paper and typography; and we confess that in other respects we do not entirely understand it. It contains, however, some shrewd remarks and reason on the scientific have been not only dishonour, but destruction. nomenclature now in use, especially in botany, These Memoirs are written in a fitting spirit and suggests a new plan in which (if we comof warmth and admiration; Captain Sherer prehend the matter?) the letters of the alphabet should be employed.

> La Belle Assemblée. New Series. London, Bull.

THIS pretty Magazine has disappointed us : perhaps we expected too much ;-we certainly expected more from Mrs. Norton. This is a female pen and perusal! Lord Nugent, a politician and Lord of the Treasury, has in revenge furnished riddles and charactes. This is somefurnished riddles and charactes. This is something like masquerading: still, there is much graceful writing in Miss Kemble's sketch of the "Two Kisses;" though in respect thereto we really must quote Moore's lines-

"Wherefore make So much ado about a trifle?"

We thought we recognised an old friend with a new face in "Fame," by Mrs. Price Blackwood. Here it should be recorded, that when, upon different mythin compared the end are got up the Farmer's Kalendar is made curious the 22d of August, the new council waited dress. The Miscellanies at the end are got up in a very slovenly manner; and, altogether, enough by the extreme difference between its upon him, with all the ceremonies of state, to operations and counsels and those of our hemi-offer to him a congratulatory address as Duke we guess that the principle on which many ladies select their companions is the one on which Mrs. Norton has chosen her contributors, vis. for foils. Her own "Coquette," and the beautiful "Lament of Savage," certainly appear with all the advantage of comparison. Probably when the fair Editress has disposed of some of the reserved stock, and got more into our harness, she will produce a superior work.

Family Classical Library, XXXI. Vol. I. London. Valpy.

HERE begins one of the most interesting of all the Roman classics, whose narrative has made many a warrior, whose facts throw so important a light on the history of every European na-tion, and whose style is a model for writers in all languages. The translation is by Professor Duncan, of Aberdeen, and a bust of Cesar the frontispiece.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT OXFORD. [Continuation of the proceedings.]

On Thursday morning Professor Henslow of Cambridge, accompanied by Dr. Daubeny and by Mr. Baxter of the Botanic Garden, and a large party of gentlemen and ladies, made a botanical excursion on Shotover Hill.

On Friday morning the four sections resumed their sittings, in which the reading of papers was continued, and their subjects discussed as before. Various suggestions were also made and considered as to the reports and communications on scientific subjects, which it was desirable to endeavour to obtain for the ensuing annual meeting. Mr. Duncan gave notice that there were laid upon the table some curious papers from the Ashmolean Museum, recording the early proceedings of the Oxford Society of learned men, which, according to the opinions of some, was the origin, and, according to others, was an early branch of the Royal Society of London. An abstract of Sir D. Brewster's report on the progress of optical science was then read by the secretary, Professor Powell. Mr. Johnston read his report on the progress of chemical science, especially in foreign countries. Professor Powell read his report on our knowledge of the phenomena of radiant heat. Mr. W. Conybeare gave an account of the nature and objects of his report on the recent progress of geology.

Saturday morning the general committee met at half-past nine, and various prospective arrangements were made respecting the future proceedings and constitution of the Association. Meetings of the sections were also held. At one o'clock the president took his chair in the theatre, and various business was transacted. Mr. Brunel then, being called on by the president, gave a history of the attempt made to carry a tunnel under the Thames, exhibiting at the same time a number of illustrative drawings. Mr. Whewell gave a sketch of the views contained in his report on the recent progress and present state of mineralogy; and Dr. Prichard's essay on the application of philological inquiry to the physical history of man was read by Mr. Conybeare. Thanks were voted to the vice-chancellor and heads of houses for the great kindness they had shewn to the Association; and the president announced that the managing committee had unanimously arrived at the conclusion, that on every account it was most expedient for the next meeting of the Association to be holden at Cambridge. The season most convenient for that purpose would be towards the latter end of the month of June-probably a few days after the Oxford the many examples afforded by comparaire Commemoration.

In the evening the music-room was crowded with members of the Association and with ladies; and a lecture, illustrated with large drawings, was delivered by Professor Buckland on the fossil remains of a gigantic monster the megatherium), which have recently been for the first time imported to England from South America. Dr. B. pronounced a glowing eulogy upon Cuvier. Upon the animal itself, and its kindred monster the aloth, he observed, that it had been considered by all naturalists to afford the greatest deviations from the ordinary structure of quadrupeds-deviations which they have always viewed as indicating imperfection in their organisation, without any compensating advantage. The object of the professor's lecture was to shew that these anomalous conditions and deviations are so far from being attended with inconvenience to the class of animals in which they occur (an opinion that has been entertained even by Buffon and Cuvier himself), that they afford striking illustrations of those rich and inexhaustible contrivances of nature by which the structure of every created being is precisely fitted to the state in which it was intended to live, and to the office which it was destined to perform. The peculiarities of the sloth, which render its movements so awkward and inconvenient upon the earth, are adapted with peculiar advantage to its destined office of living upon trees and feeding upon their leaves. The peculiarities of the megatherium are not less wisely framed to its office of feeding upon roots; its teeth (though ill adapted for the mastication of grass or flesh) are wonderfully contrived for the crushing of roots, with the further advantage of keeping themselves constantly sharp by the very act of performing their work. The fore-feet, exceeding a yard in length and a foot in breadth, were provided with three gigantic claws, each more than a foot long, rendering them a most powerful instrument for scraping roots out of the ground. The colossal proportions of the hinder parts of the animal are calculated to enable it to occupy one of its fore-legs in digging, whilst the other three legs support the weight of the body. A further peculiarity consists in the fact of its having been armed with a coat of mail, like the armadillo and several other animals, which obtain their food by the act of continual digging in the ground. This coat of mail exceeds an inch in thickness. and in shape resembles an enormous barrel. The professor suggested his opinion that the use of this bony armour is to prevent the annoyance which this class of animals would feel, without some such protection, from the constant presence of dust and dirt with which the act of digging and scratching for their daily food would otherwise fill their skins. The height of the megatherium was about eight feet, its length twelve, its anterior proportions comparatively light and small, its posterior proportions nearly double the size of those of the largest elephant. The object of this apparently incongruous admixture of proportions was to enable the creature to stand at ease on three legs, having the weight of its body chiefly supported by the hinder extremities, and one of its fore-paws at liberty to be exercised without fatigue in the constant operation of digging roots out of the ground. The professor concluded by repeating that this was but one of anatomy of the inexhaustible richness of contrivances whereby nature has adapted every animal to a comfortable and happy existence in that state wherein it was destined to more; and added, that the researches of geology tended not only to afford similar examples if contrivance, indicating the wisdom, and goodness, and care of the Creator over all his works but afforded also to natural theology a powerful auxiliary ; -shewing, from the unity of design and unity of structure, and from the symmetry and harmony that pervade all organic beings in the fossil world as well as in the present, that all have derived their existence from the same almighty and everlasting Creator.

The dinner-parties at the ordinaries were of the most hospitable and pleasant description; and it was understood that, after the meeting next year at Cambridge, future anniversures would be appointed at great manufacturing places.

Original Additions.

[Having thus sketched these proceedings in an airiged form from the Oxford newspapers, we beg to offer sub-further information as we have received from other quarters.]

It may, however, be as well to repeat that the objects of this Society, which, though in its infancy, is yet in so flourishing a condition, are, to promote the interests of science, by collecting together once a year the learned from all parts of the United Kingdom—to encourage the pesonal interchange of ideas and opinions, and the reciprocation of information—as well as w make known the desiderata in science, and thus to settle as it were a combined plan of operations for the scientific campaign during the ensuing year.

There exists that spirit of fellowship, a set of freemasonry it may be termed, among men of science, which would render such a meeting desirable, even should no other practical god result from it. The union thus brought about among persons engaged in kindred pursuits situated in distant parts of the kingdom, and personally unacquainted, except perhaps through the medium of common fame or private corre spondence, must be attended with benefit as well as gratification to all the parties concerned.

It has been the reproach of Oxford, that, great as is her devotion to literature, she has not shewn a very kindly disposition towards science. The wand of Friar Bacon seems to have been broken at his death, like Prospero's or at least to have fallen into the hands of no successor worthy of wielding it. There it, however, one redeeming fact in her annik, namely, that she received and fostered in troublous times the infant Royal Society, which for a long time after its first institution, he its sittings in apartments over the gateway of Wadham College.

A revival, however, of those forgotten Pur suits is now decidedly to be anticipated. It on as the place of rendezvous for the meting the huilding of the Clarendon Press, with whose grand portico we are so familiar fre the representation on the titles of books which have issued from it, having been some total ago vacated, for the splendid and more commodious new edifice, had been fitted up in a most convenient fashion for the reception of the professors of geology, chemistry, and astronomy, and its spacious apartments converted in the converted of the commodious museums and class-rooms of the first proceedings of the Oxford on mittee appointed to manage the meeting, to appropriate this building to the temporary room, where they might carry on their own proceedings each day at particular hours, while the theatre was decided on as the place of general assembly.

^{*} Upon this and other subjects many complimentary speeches were made, and the utmost cordiality expressed. † See a recent No. of the L. G. for an account of it nearly similar to the learned doctor's.

The greatest liberality was shewn in the throwing open the various buildings of the University, and in allowing free access to all comers to this various and important institution.

One exception, indeed, did occur, and that in the case of a person of high importance in the University. He appears to have listened to the request made to him for the use of the hall of his college with somewhat of the contempt, though little of the good humour, of the poor French soldiers in Egypt, when they opened their squares at the well-known exclamation, "Place pour les anes et les savans." He had, without doubt, his reasons; and in the end the Society was no loser, inasmuch as it occasioned them to be received under the hospitable roof of New College, whose gates were readily opened on the first hint.

For some time previous to the meeting, the stir of preparation had been actively carried on; and no little pains had been displayed in pro-viding for the lodging and entertainment of the expected visitors. A great number of strangers arrived on Sunday and Monday; Tuesday, however, was understood to be the day on which business would commence in earnest; and with it I will begin.

Each member on his arrival had his place of lodging assigned to him by that excellent quarter-master-general Dr. Daubeny, every inn and lodging-house having been previously surveyed, and moderate rates of charge agreed on with the owners. He was then directed to proceed to the Clarendon to enrol his name, and obtain a ticket to serve as a sort of passport during his stay. The early hours between ten and one were occupied by each individual as his inclination led him, in the various sections of the sciences. The communications which had been sent in were understood to exceed fifty in number; and as interesting papers were often going on at the same time in more than one room, it was a subject of regret with many that a power of ubiquity was not conceded to them. The geologists were early in the field. Mr. Conybeare displayed a section of Europe from John o'Groats house to Como; and a map geo-logically coloured, as far as could with accuracy be laid down. Strong wishes were expressed that Mr. Greenough would avail himself of the valuable materials which he has collected for many years, in constructing a more perfect chart of European geology. This gentleman, it will be recollected, did incalculable service to English geology by constructing, many years ago, the first geological map of England.

(To be continued.)

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. FARADAY concluded on Saturday a very interesting course of lectures, which, com-mencing with the most familiar objects in domestic life, led on to the newest and most recondite discoveries in science. They were entitled, the Candle, the Lamp, the Chimney, the Kettle, and Ashes. In the last he took occasion to remark, how objects apparently the most worthless become valuable in highly civilised life, by serving as the instruments of man's labour and ingenuity. He illustrated this by a statement of the value of coal ashes and Oxford, Mr. Faraday was warmly cheered by other refuse deposited in the dustbins of London. The ashes, after being sifted from exercised in other places, he are,—No. 48, A Man's Head, by Rembrandt, use of the Society; assigning to the followers of traneous matter, contribute greatly to the each science or class of sciences an apartment or making of bricks, the larger portions, containing still a considerable proportion of combustible matter, serving in the furnaces to burn the bricks to the fine dust entering into their composition. During the building mania from 1827 to 1829, the parish of Mary-le-bone received 7000l. per annum from a contractor for the liberty of taking away the dust from the parish, he paying all the expenses of men, carts, and horses. The duty on brick-making in those years was about 300,0001.; but now matters are much altered, and this year the parish of St. George's, Hanover Square, pays 4001. for the removal of the dust, -the value of the material not covering the labour. great mound which used to stand at the end of Gray's Inn Lane (a kind of Monte Testacico) was composed of such materials, and was considered worth 40,000/. He understood it had been the marriage-portion of a young lady [a laugh], and had been sold to Russia to aid in the reconstruction of Moscow. Mr. F. proceeded to state the immense value of woodashes, under the name of potash, or, in a more refined state, purlash, in arts and manufac-tures. After demonstrating their alkaline nature, by their effect on turmeric paper, and adverting to the universal domestic use of them on the continent in washing, he described the immense scale on which they are produced in America by the burning of timber, which has no other value, besides the negative one of clearing the ground, but this product, an essential ingredient in the making of soap and glass. The duty on this latter article in 1830 was 4,500% the value of the material being estimated at 306,000%. Flint-glass, the finest glass used in prisms and all optical instruments, is composed of silica, potash, and oxide or cinder of lead; it may, therefore, fairly itself be called a cinder or slag. In 1807, Sir Humphry Davy made the brilliant discovery that the foundation of potash was a metal, which he named potassium: it is capable but for a moment of returning its metallic brilliancy in the common air, and on being placed in water, floats, and burns spontaneously with a bright flame, returning immediately to the state of potash. Sodasis is a very similar product to potash, and has nearly the same properties: it is obtained by burning marine plants, and also from salt: its foundation was also discovered by Sir Humphry Davy to be a metal, which he called sodium. Having nearly the same properties as potassium, it does not, however, burn in water, but, like potassium, floats, spins, and hisses, and soon returns to the state of soda. There is another substance obtained from the burning of marine plants called iodine, which burns with a bright purple vapour, and is considered useful in medicine for the dispersion of tumours. It must be from the presence of this substance, that burnt sponge has long been the popular remedy in Switzerland for the tumour in the throat which is so prevalent there, the goitre. The professor, from want of time, adverted but briefly to the products obtained from the burning of animal matter, as phosphorus, &c.; and concluded the somewhat funereal subject of ashes, by speaking of the physical difficulty which was experienced during the Peninsular war of renewing the antique practice of burning the human body, though circumstances rendered such a mournful ceremony absolutely necessary. On his return from receiving a degree of LL.D. at laid them all at the feet of that Institution, to which he owed every thing.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

THE COLOMBO JOURNAL, NO. I. HAIL to the diffusion of knowledge through the medium of the press! We rejoice to see from this journal, of January 7th, which has just crossed the earth to our office, that the government of Sir R. Wilmot Horton has thus early been signalised by the publication of a genuine newspaper in Ceylon. We are well convinced, that such an instrument, under such auspices, is capable of producing great benefits in this important colony. It is very gratifying to notice the first advances of improvement; and we observe with pleasure that a mail-coach has been established between Colombo and Candy! and that a national savings-bank is about to be introduced. This is as it should be, and reflects high honour on the liberality and good sense of the new governor, while it promises much prosperity to the people over whom he is placed in authority. It was in Ceylon that Sir A. Johnston commenced those legal and political experiments, which are likely to produce such important and lasting effects over all the eastern world; and to witness the same enlightened spirit following in a similar course, is altogether very satisfactory. We copy two passages from the introductory remarks in the Colombo, No. I. "It is notorious that the judicious introduction of capital into Ceylon is all that is wanting to bring the industry of its inhabitants into full development, and thereby to accelerate its prosperity at an inconceivably rapid rate. This desirable object cannot be effected as long as misrepresentations from the public press induce capitalists to believe that isks are to be incurred from bad laws, and a bad administration of them, which should in prudence dissuade those who might otherwise be so inclined from settling here.

"On statistical information of every description we shall set the highest value, as this alone can in truth convey a true idea of the present state and future prospects of the colony, and form the sole criterion by which the world will judge of its advancement or retrogression in the scale of society. Let the assistance then we ask for be given with zeal and alacrity, let none be wanting in contributing their mite to a concern which is intended for the amusement and instruction of all; and we shall by no means despair, not only of producing something better than has heretofore appeared, but of rendering our columns of no slight interest to the inhabitants of this island, and even of extending their circulation to the shores of India."

PINE ARTS.

BRITISH INSTITUTION.

THE gallery of the British Institution opened on Wednesday last, with a collection of a hundred and seventy-five pictures by Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English masters, "with which the proprietors have favoured the Institution." Into a critical examination of works thus liberally contributed for the gratification of the public, it is not our province to enter. It is in vain to deny, that there are some which seem to us to have been scarcely deserving of the honour of selection; but there are others of the highest merit, and of which the property of Mr. Ridley Colborne; No. 113, main features; shape, an oblong just suited to widow with five young children; three sons, Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, by Titian, the property of Lord Northwick; No. 134, Virgin Mary, with Infant Christ and St. John, by Titian, the property of Mr. Wells; No. 138, Cupid, by Titian, the property of Mr. Udney ; No. 12, The Horrors of War, by Rubens, the property of Mr. Rogers; No. 151, St. Martin dividing his Garments, by Rubens, the property of his Majesty; No. 35, Landscape, with Portrait of the Artist drawing, by Cuyp, the property of the Duke of Bedford; No. 88, Landscape and Cattle, by Cuyp, the property of Lord Northwick; No. 105, Sea-shore, with Horses and Figures, by Cuyp, the property of Sir Matand Figures, by Cuyp, the property of Sir Mat. flowers, the chaplet crowns, the musicians, and thew White Ridley: No. 136, The Nativity, the glorious flitch itself, the scene is full of aniby Paulo Veronese, the property of the Earl of Aberdeen; No. 150, View on the Grand Canal, Venice, by Canaletti, the property of Lord Farnborough; No. 14, Portrait of a Man, by Sebastiano del Piombo, the property of the Marquess of Lansdowne; No. 84, Admiral Lord Keppel, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, the property of the Earl of Albemarle; No. 102, Milk-Girl, by Gainsborough, the property of Sir George Philips; No. 19, Landscape, by Gaspar Poussin, the property of Lord Farns borough; No. 129, Hagar and Ishmael, by Francisco Mola, the property of Colonel Hugh Baillie; No. 62, Arch, by Ruysdael, the property of Mrs. Bredel; No. 31, Sea-shore, with figures, by Bonington, the property of the Marquess of Westminster; No. 127, The Institute of Taillie 1881. terior of a Tailor's Shop, by Bracklencamp, the property of Mr. Hastings; &c. &c. &c.

It is with feelings of patriotic pride that we notice the manner in which the English pictures maintain their ground in this collection. The two works, one by Reynolds, the other by Gainsborough, which we have already mentioned, are especially entitled to this remark. In addition to the exquisite character of each, and to their various technical excellencies, the mellowing hand of time has imparted to them a depth, and richness, and harmony of tone, unexcelled by that of any of the fine produc-tions by the old masters with which they come into so close a comparison.

Three of the most curious articles in the collection, are Nos. 95, 96, and 97, Fragments from Herouleneum, painted prior to A. D. 79, the property of Sir Matthew White Ridley. It is astonishing how much colour they retain after such a lapse of years. If the talents pos-sessed by the legitimate artists of Herculaneam may be judged of by those here displayed by mere decorators, painting was, even at that remote period, carried to a high degree of elevation.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Procession of the Flitch of Bacon. From a design by T. Stothard, Esq. R.A.; engraved (in line) by J. H. Watt.

THE appearance of an engraving of this kind deserves to be commemorated with more than erdinary netice; for it is a work likely to adorn many a handsome room, and to last as long as the arts are appreciated among us. In preceding Gazettes we have had occasion to notice Stothard's drawing, and also the print, which we did not suppose to be finished and ready for publication, as we now see, by the beautiful proof before us, that it really is. To state that it is "companion meet" for the Canterbury Pilgrims, one of the most popular productions of our time, night, however, be sufficient both for criticism and calogy. It is, indeed, in its

Not Bonnington, as twice misprinted in the catsi-crown the chimney-piece; subject, a procession with horses; treatment, displaying all the evergreen imagination and skill of our venerable academician,—every way worthy of similar favour and patronage. The curious old custom of Dunmow, of giving a flitch of bacon (last claimed in 1751) to any married pair who had neither quarrelled, nor repented of their union, within the honey-moon and eleven other moons superadded, is here happily embodied. The principal dramatis persona, the servants, the spectators, are charmingly grouped; and what with the picturesque costume, the strewing of mation and interest. We have now only to speak of the style of the engraver, which is not only beautiful in itself, but extraordinary for the fidelity with which it has followed every trace of the original, while at the same time it maintains all the spirit of an unshackled composition. So excellently are its qualities blend. ed, we might pronounce it Stothard if it were not Watt,-Watt if it were not Stothard. But further remark is unnecessary. Early and good impressions are all that the admirers of first-rate engravings will hasten to look for, after what we have already, though briefly, National Portrait Gallery. With Memoirs by William Jerdan, Esq. Part XXXIX. Fisher, Son, and Co.

PORTRAITS of "Charles Lennox, Duke of Richmond," "Robert Jameson, Esq. F.R.S," and "Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart.," embellish the thirty-ninth number of the National Portrait Gallery. The last-mentioned (after Lawrence) is especially heautiful; and the manner in which Mr. Cochran has, in so small a space, preserved the marking of the features, and the general expression of the countenance, does him great credit. As not only just, but as peculiarly applicable to that department of our publication in which the present notice appears, we quote the following passage from the summary of Sir Robert Peel's

44 As a minister of the crown, Sir Robert Peel has always been deservedly esteemed to be honest and above corruption; as a senator, most able and powerful; as a citizen, liberal and upright. To these noble qualities we may add, that he has great taste for, and is a mu-nificent patron of, the fine arts; and his gallery of eminent contemporaries will, when finished, be one of the most interesting in the country. Our native school, in every branch, is, indeed, deeply indebted to his continual encouragement. At every exhibition are seen many of the best productions, either painted for, or purchased by him; and there are few of our most celebrated artists who have not been put in requisition to enrich the splendid collection he has so patriotically and so judictously made. Some of the finest works of the old masters are also in his possession."

BIOGRAPHY. ANNA MARIA PORTER.

THIS accomplished and popular novelist died lately at Clifton, after a short illness. She was descended, on the father's side, from an Irish family of great respectability, which acted a conspicuous part in the contest between James the Second and the Prince of Orange.

one of whom was the present Sir Robert Ker Porter, and two daughters, of whom Anna Maria was the younger, the elder being the highly accomplished Miss Jane Porter. Mn Porter, who possessed an excellent understanding, bestowed her utmost care on the education of her daughters, imbuing their minds from infancy with that literary taste, and training them to those habits of studious application. which laid the foundation of their future eminence in that pleasing department of literary composition to which they devoted themselves Anna Maria evinced an unusual precocity of genius. When not more than thirteen years of age, she commenced her career of authorship by the publication of a small work, suitably en-titled Artless Tales. These little stories betar. as might be supposed, many marks of a jurenile pen; but there are also discernible in their construction and composition numerous indications of that fertility of invention and fluency of narration which imparts so great a charm to her subsequent productions. Her next work which appeared after an interval of a few years, was a novel in one volume, entitled Walsh Colville, founded, we believe, on some incidents in real life, in which the fair and youther author was in some measure personally interested. The favourable reception experienced by these works encouraged her to proceed, and she shortly afterwards published another nore in three volumes, entitled Octavia; which was followed, though we think with the intervention of another smaller work, by the Hungarian Brothers, a novel in three volumes; and by Den Sebastian, or the House of Braganza, M historical romance in four volumes. These works obtained a very extensive circulation, and placed the author among the favourite standard novel-writers of the time. She now prosecuted her literary labours with great ardour, and published several other works with increasing reputation. Among her more popular productions may be enumerated The Recluse of Norway, in four volumes; The Village of Mariendorpt, also in four volumes; and The Fast of St. Magdalen, in three volumes. also published a volume of Ballads and Romances, with other poems.

Miss Porter's continued mental exertions proved too much for her bodily constitution, which was naturally rather delicate. For some years her health had been gradually on the deeline, her sight especially being greatly impaired. She had just entered, with her sister, on a plan of relaxation for the summer months, when she was suddenly cut down while par-taking the kind hospitalities of a valued friend at Clifton.

The death of this lady will occasion a chasm in the world of letters that will not soon be filled with equal talent, or receive such general acceptance. Her qualifications for the species of literary labour to which she directed her genius with such honourable success were of the highest order. To a fertility of invention, not often surpassed for its exuberance, she united a close observation of living manners, and a quick and accurate discrimination of human character. From the combination of these rare endowments, she acquired the magic power of moulding the creations of her fancy into the forms and incidents of actual life, and of imparting to them, with an intensity immeasurably increased, all the deep and affecting interest which springs from the complicated workings of human passion, and supplies the Mr. Porter held a commission in a regiment ample and varied ingredients of human blis of dragoons, and, dying at an early age, left his and of human wee. Her delineations of character uniformly display the touches of a masterhand. She sketched with a rapidity and decision, and with a truth and force of colouring, which may be aptly compared to the most striking productions of her brother's bold and rapid pencil upon canvass. Her portraits have all the personal individuality and all the force and vividuess of real life. There was much of the romantic of gone-by times in Miss Anna Maria Porter's mind, which may be traced in some of the incidents of her tales. But this never blinded her judgment in her estimate of the actual condition of society. Her representations of living manners are always true to nature; and her familiar intercourse with persons moving in the highest circles enabled her to delineate, with a fidelity not often to be found in other writers, the discriminating peculiarities, feelings, usages, and language of the more polished and privileged classes. Her writings are also marked by a high tone of moral feeling—an excellence above all praise equally pervading the publications of her ami-able sister. Her style is characterised by a graceful case and fluency, admirably adapted to her immediate purpose; her narratives are inartificial, smooth, and spirited; her dialogues possess all the flexibility and point of the best conversation; and her disactic lessons are delivered with a simple gravity and force irre-sistibly impressive and affecting. In private life, Miss Porter was distinguished for the purity and elevation of her moral character. Her pleasing manners, the affability of her temper, and her extraordinary powers of conversation, won for her the esteem and affection of a large circle of acquaintance, by whom her departure will long be deeply deplered. To the public she has bequeathed a well-carned reputation, which will, we doubt not, transmit her name with honour to a remote futurity.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

It will not be smiss for such of our readers as can read aloud, to read, for the sake of its impressiveness, the following aracient anathema, in an audible voice. It is a remarkable specimen of the times; and we cannot but congratulate ourselves on the chance which has enabled us to rescue it from the oblivion in which it has rested so long. How it should have escaped antiquarian research is not perhaps strange, seeing that there must be a vast mass of curious and important documents in this immense collection which have equally eluded the historical investigator; but it is so remarkable a paper, and so eminently illustrative of the lawlessness of the Scotch borderers, and the powers assumed by the church, three centuries ago, that we cannot help recommending it to particular attention. Dr. Slop's Curse in Tristram Shondy is not to be essengared with it, either for force, imagination, poetical conceptions or demandery minuteness of detail—Bd. L. G.

Copy of Sentence of Excommunication prenouneed by order of Gawen Dunbar, Archbishop of Glasgow, against the Scottish Borderers, in the year 1526. Taken from a MS. in the Brilish Museum, Caligula, B. II. 130.

Gude Folkis, — Heir at my Lord Archbishop of Glasgwis letters, under his round sele directit to me, or ony uther chapellane, makand mentioun with greit regrait how hevy he beris (a) the pieteous, lamentabill, and dolorous complaint that passes ower the realme, and cummis to his eres by opin voice and fame; how our soverane lordis trew liegemen, wiffs, and barnys (b), booth and redemit by the precious blude of our Saviour Jhesu Crist, and levand (c) in his lawis, are saikleslie part murdrist, part slane, brynt, heryit, spulzeit (d), and reft oppinly, on day licht, and under silens of the nicht, and thair takkis (s) and landis laid waist, and thair self banisht theirfra, als wele (f)

(a) bears. (b) bairns, children.

(c) Hying.

kirklands as utheris, by commoun tratours, revars, and theifis, dwelland in the south part of this realme, sic as Tevidale, Esdale, Liddisdele, Ewisdale, Nedisdale, and Annandaill, quhilkis hes (g) bene diverse ways persewit and punist by the temperale swerd, and our soverane lordis authorite, and dredis nocht the samyn (h). And thairfoir my Lord Archbischop of Glaegw hes thocht expedient to strike thaim with the terribill swerd of Haly Kirk, quhilk thei may nocht lang endure and resist; and hes chargit me, or any uther chapellane, to denunce, declair, and proclame thaim oppinly and generallie cursit, at this Market Croce, and all utheris public places.

Heirfor, throw the auctorite of Almichty God, the Fader of Hevin, his Son our Salviour Jhesu Crist, and of the Haly Gaist, throw the auctorite of the blessit Virgin Sanct Mary, Sanct Michael, Sanct Gabriell, and all the angellis; Sanct Johne the Baptist, and all the haly patriarkis and prophetis; Sanct Peter, Sanct Paull, Sanct Andro, and all haly appostillis: Sanct Stephin, Sanct Laurence, and all haly murtheris (i); Sanct Gile, Sanct Martyn, and all haly confessours; Sanct Anne, Sanct Katherin, and all haly virginis and matrouns, and of all the sanctis and halv cumpany of hevin; by the auctorite of our haly fader the Paip and his cardinalis, and of my said Lord Archbischop of Glasgw, by the avice and as-sistance of my lordis, archbischop, bischopis, abbotis, priouris, and utheris prelatis and ministeris of haly kirk, I denunce, proclame, and declare all and sindry the committaris of the said saikles (j), murthuris, slauchteris, birnyng, heirschippis (k), reiffis, theftis, and spuleze oppinly apon day licht, and under silence of the nicht, als wele within temperale landis as kirklandis, together with their part-takers, assist-aris, supplearis, wittendlie resetteris (1) of their personis, the gudes reft and stollen by thaim, art or pairt therof, and thair counsalouris and defendouris of their evil dedis, generallie cursit, waryit (m), aggregeite and reaggregeite, with the greit cursing. I curse their held, and all the haris of thair heid. I curse thair face, thair ene, thair mouth, thair neise, thair toung, thair teith, thair crag (n), thair schulderis, thair breist, thair hart, thair stomok, thair bak. thair wame (o), thair armis, thair leggis, thair handis, thair feit, and everilk (p) part of thair body, fra the top of thair heid to the soill of thair feit, before and behend, within and without. I curse thame ganging, I curse thame ryding; I curse thame standing, I curse thaim sitting; I curse their eting, I curse their drinking; I curse their walking (q), I curse thaim sleping; I curse thaim rysing, I curse them lying; I curse them at hame, I curse thaim fra hame; I curse thaim within the house, I curse thaim without the house; I curse thair wiffis, thair bairnys, and thair servands, participant with thaim in thair dedis. I wary (7) thair cornys (8), thair cattales, thair woll, thair scheip, thair horses, thair swyne, thair geese, thair hennys, and all thair quyk gude (l). I wary thair hallis, thair chalmeris (u), thair kechingis, thair stabillis, thair barnys, thair byris, thair bernzerdis, thair cailzar-dis(v), thair plewis(w), thair harrowis, and the gudis and housis that is necessair for thair sustentacioun and weilfair. All the malesouns and waresouns (x) that ever gat warldlie cretur

(g) which has.

(i) martyrs.
(i) receivers, or protectors.
(m) neck.
(o) belly.
(p) each separate.
(q) waking.
(r) worry, signifying to plague or destrops.
(r) crops of corn.
(i) live stock.
(v) chambers.
(v) maisolictions and cursings.
(w) maisolictions and cursings.

sin the begynnyng of the warld to this hour, licht upon thaim. The maledictious of God that lichtit apon Lucifer, and all his fallowis that strak thaim fra the hie hevin to the deip hell, licht apon thaim. The fire and the swerd that stoppit Adam fra the zettis (y) of Paradise, stop thaim fra the gloir of bevin qubill (s) thai forbere and mak amendis. The malesonn that lichtit apon cursit Cayen guben he slew his bruther just Abell saiklesly(a), licht apon thaim for thair saikles slauchter that thai commit dailie. The maledictioun that lightit apon all the warlde, man and beist, and all that evir had life, quhen all was drownit by the flude of Noye (b), except Noye and his ark, licht apon thaim, and droune thaim, man and beist, and mak this realme cummirles (c) of thaim, for thair wikit synnis. The thunnour and fireflauchts (d) that zet down as rane (e) apon the citeis of Zodoma and Gomora, with all the landis about; and brynt thame for thair vile synnys, rane apon thaim, and birne thaim for thair oppin synnys. The malesoun and confusioun that lichtit apon the gigantis for thair oppression and pride; biggand (f) the Tour of Babiloun, confound thaim and all thair werkis, for thair oppin reiffic and oppressioun. All the plagis that fell apon king Pharac and his pepill of Egipt, thair landis, corne and cataill, fall apon thaim, their takkys, rownes, and stedin-ges, ternys, and beistis. The watter of Tweid, and uther watteris quheir thai ride, droun thaim as the Reid Sey drounit king Pharao and the pepil of Egipt, perserving Godis pepill of Israel. The erd (g) oppin, riffe and cleiff (h), and swelly (i) thaim quyk to hell, as it swelly it cursit Dathan and Abiron, that ganestude (j) Moeses and the command of God. The wyld fire that brynt Chore (k) and his fallowis, to the nowmer of twa hundreth and fyfty, and uthers 14000 and 700 at anys (1), usurpand agains Moyses and Araon, servandis of God, suddanely birne and consume thaim daile ganestanding the commandis of God and haly kirk. The maledictioun that lichtit suddainely apon fair Absolon, ryding contrair his auld fader king David, servand of God, throw the wod, quhen the branchis of ane tre fred him of his horse and hangit him by the hair, light apon thaim ryding agane trew Scottis men, and hang thaim sic like, that all the warld may se. The maledictioun that lichtit apon Olifernus, lieutenant to Nabogodonosor, making werr and heirschippis apon trew Christin men; the maledictioun that lichtit apon Judas, Pylot, Herod, and the Jowis that crucifyit our Lord, and all the plagis and trublis that lightit apon the citie of Jherusalem thairfoir, and apon Symon Magus for his symony, bludy Nero, cursit Ditius, Makeentius, Olibrius, Julianus Apostita, and the laiff (m) of the cruell tirrannis that slew and murtherit Cristis holy servandis, licht apon thame for their cruell tiranny and murthirdome of Cristin peple. And all the vengeance that evir wes takin sen the warlde began for oppin synnys, and all the plagis and pestilence that ever fell on man or beist, fall on thame for thair oppin reiff (n), saickless slauchter, and schedding of innocent blude. I dissever and part thame fra the kirk of God, and deliver thaim quyk to the devill of hell, as the appostill Sanct Paull delivered Corinthion. I interdite the places they cum in fra divine service, and ministration of the sacramentis of halv kirk. except the secrament of baptising allanerlie (o);

(y) gates. (c) unless.
(e) waking. (e) cruelly. (b) Noah. (c) unencumbered.
(iv) chambers. (v) chambers. (f) building. (g) earth. (h) riven and cleft. (i) swallow.
(iv) plaughs. (h) Rozzh. (l) at once. (m) rest.
(vi) theel. (o) only.

and forbidd all kirkmen to schriffe or absolve thaim of thair synnys, quhill (p) thai be first absolute of this cursing. I forbid all Cristin man or woman till (q) have any cumpany with thame, eting, drynking, speking, praying, lying, ganging, standing, or in any uther deid doing, under the payne of deidly sin. I discharge all bandis (r), actis, contractis, aithis (s), or obligatiouns maid to thame by ony personis, outher of lawte (1), kyndenes, or manrent (u), sa lang as they susteine this cursing; sua(v) that na man be bunden to thaim, and that thai be bunden till all men. I tak fra thame, and cryis doune all the gude dedis that ever they did or sall do, quhill that ryse fra this cursing. I declair thaim partles (w) of all matynys, messes (x), evinsangs, dirigeis, or uthers prayers, on buik or beid; of all pilgrimages and almouse (y) dedis done, or to be done in haly kirk, or by Cristin pepill, enduring this cursing. And finally, I condempne thaim perpetuallie to the deip pytt of hell, thair to remane with Lucifer and all his followaris; and thair bodeis to the gallowes of the Burrowe Mure, first to be hangeit, and syne revin and ruggit (x) with doggis, swyne, and uthers wyld beistis, abhominable to all the warld. And as theis candillis gangs fra your sicht, sa mot (a) thair soulis gang fra your sient, sa mot (a) thair souns gang fra the visage of God, and thair gude fame fra the warld, qubill thai forbeir thair oppin synnys foirsaidis (b), and ryse fra this terribill cursing, and mak satisfactioun and pennance. Amen! Fiat! Fiat! Amen!

Hac est vera copia originalis processus lati et continuò ferendi contra supradictos malefactores, semper et quousque redeant ad gremium sanctæ matris ecclesiæ, abstinendo et debite faciendo. Teste manú honorabilis et egregii viri Magistri Richardi Bothvile, utriusque Juris Doctoris, qui principalem processum, ex mandato Reverendissimi Domini Gaweni ecclesia metropolitana Glasguensis Archiepis. copi, fecit in lucem, produxit et fulminavit.

(Signed) Ita significat Richardus Bothvelle. utrarum Legum Doctorum unus, Prothonotarius Apostolicus.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Wednesday the German opera of Macbeth, composed by A. H. Chellard, Kappel-meister to the King of Bavaria, the libretto by C. M. Heigel, was produced at this house, before a full, though not overflowing audience. There often arises in sagacious and enlightened England an outcry against adapting in any other way for the stage any subject which has been immortalised by Shakespeare; which said outcry we consider to be extremely common-place,

(p) until. (t) either by law. (r) bonds.
(u) custom. (a) Oathu-(w) not to be partakers.
(z) afterwards rent and torn. (y) alms. (b) aforesaid. (z) masses. (a) not to be partakers. (7) masses. (9) aims. (2) afterwards rent and torn. (a) may. (b) aforesaid.

That the custom of cursing has not entirely ceased, even in our day, is (though more faintly) illustrated by the following against the Whiteboys, read in all the chapels of Kildare and Leighlin, in October, 1775.

In the name of God, Amen.—As we see, to our great grief, that all our endeavours to reclaim those unhappy and, like all common-places, extremely absurd. Shakespeare hesitated not to take his characters, incidents, and plots, wholesale from his contemporaries and predecessors; and we firmly believe that he never dreamt of locking them up for ever after from his successors. would, indeed, be hard upon posterity, if a man (especially a man of unbounded genius) should be deemed to taboo, as the South Sea savages call it, every thing he touched, and make it sacrilege thenceforth to approach the sacred objects. In this case, the Swan of Avon would not only have tabood many of the greatest events of Greek and Roman history, but nearly the whole history of England; not to mention Italian story, Norse tradition, and a variety of legendary lore and popular belief, fruitful to the drama of all nations and ages. But the notion is hack foolishness. There is no everlasting tenancy on the free domains of literature; but every new candidate has an equal right to the soil, and to cultivate it into such produce as he may choose, for his own profit and honour, let the crop be verse or proce, epic or parody, history or novel, tragedy

Even were we inclined to the tabooing of Shakespeare, we should, in the present in-stance, absolve Herr Chellard; for, though the play of Macbeth is one of the noblest ever written for the stage, and therefore most worthy to be admired as a work of surpassing talent, there is nothing in the characters which it developes to entitle them to that feeling of respect or love that ought to preserve them from the degradation, if degradation it be, of exhibiting their wicked passions and deeds to music. Lady Macbeth, the she-wolf, has but one touch of nature in her, " Had he not resembled my father as he slept, I would have done it;" and her husband is only less resolutely criminal. Old Duncan is so rarely seen, that we care little for his kingly report as a good sort of man; Banque is a brother conspirator, softened down in his guilt by the poet; and Macduff, and all the inferior personages, are but unfortunate losers in the game of war, murder, and ambition. We should like to know the reason why they should not sing their sentiments; or why they should not be accompanied, as the matter requires, by violin, flute, haut-boy, drum, bassoon, violon-cello, trumpet, or trombone? To come to the point, and counterpoint too, we were, at all events, much delighted with the attempt, and are most heartily grateful to Herr Chellard for having invaded Shakespeare and gratified us. We do not wonder at these German operas having taken such hold of the public. There is an action and interest in them congenial to our tastes and habits; and the very sound of the language has a resemblance to our own, which seems to intimate that one is meeting a abet or employ them. We also charge every parish priest of the diocese of Kildare and Leighlin, as they must otherwise account for it, to read this sentence with an audible voice, immediately after the first gospel to their several congregations, for two Sundays ensuing the receipt hereof.

If, after this, any of these lawless people should be so hardened and preveyse as to continue any longer in their

If, after this, any of these lawless people should be so hardened and perverse as to continue any longer in their insquitous combinations and practices—then, may they be excommunicated and accursed; may they be accursed in the house and out of the house, in the city and in the field; may they be accursed walking or sleeping, eating or drinking, sitting or standing; may their fash and bones be accursed from the sole of their foot to the crown of their head; may every other curse light upon them, denounced by Moses the servant of God against the children of iniquity; and morsover, may their names be blotted out of the book of life, and their portion be with the devils in hell, unless they reform and cease from their wickedness; and let the congregation say, Amen, Amen I relation—a pretty cousin-German at least— with whom one is bound to become familiar Then there is also an energy so and friendly. different from the strains of Italy, as often insipid, tame, and wearisome, as possessed of the delicious languor and grace which sometimes enchant us, that were it only for the sake of the contrast, we would cherish our new musical allies.

In arranging Macbeth as an opera, besides Duncan, Macbeth, and Lady Macbeth, we have a daughter of the king introduced and betrothed to a Douglas, or unmarried Macduff: these, with the witches, three bards, and an attendance of chieftians, soldiers, and Highland maidens, sustain the whole. Of course the plot is altered to suit the altered purpose of the composer. The supernatural agency is made more direct, and the witches appear, on several occasions, to seduce, and finally to punish the murderers. At the conclusion, Lady Macbeth stabs herself; Macbeth receives a mock crown from the fiends, and descends, à la Don Juan, to regions below; and Duncan, in a grand and effective scene, mounts to realms of bliss. The music is far above mediocrity, and always good, though there are only four or five occasions on which it excites more decided admiration. The whole of the first act is impressive, the incantation of the witches striking, and the recitative of Macbeth (Pellegrini) full of beauties. A drinking chorus is equal to any thing of the kind we ever heard; and all the other choruses are not only fine, but executed in a style of precision and excellence to which we are little accustomed in this country. A trio of bards is per-haps the most popular bit in the opers, and was warmly encored. The meeting scena between Macbeth and his lady (Devrient) is rather long, but has several capital passes. Duncan's go-to-bed lullables are also of the longest; and, in our opinion, the composer falls short where he had the best opportunity to show great power—we mean in the quintett where allegiance is sworn, and the king gives his blessing to his daughter (Meric) and her affianced (Haitzinger). This was susceptible of being illustrated by the noblest efforts of music; and is only very well. A cheerful morning duetto between Meric and Haitzinger is in the true allegro character, and allowed the lady to treat us with a charming cavatina. The sleep-walking of Lady Macbeth and the catastrophe were thrown into darker shade by this lively effusion; and enabled Devrient to evince higher qualifications than she had done in the preceding and too fatiguing parts. Pre-viously she seemed to be exhausted; but there was great force in her dying scene.

A Highland sword and shield dance was introduced as a ballet; and altogether, the scenery and dresses being appropriate and splendid, the opera was a source of genuine musical enjoy-ment, and the curtain fell amidst loud applause. Herr Chellard was called for, and bowed his thanks: and thanks are still more due to the management which has thus encouraged living genius, and added another attractive novelty to the liberal number with which he has already, within less than a single season, gratified the metropolis.

ENGLISH OPERA: OLYMPIC.

UNTIL we can again enjoy our excellent friend Arnold's musical and dramatic provisions in a

[•] There was, after Semiramide finely got up on Saturwith the devils in hell, unless they reform and cesse from their wickedness; and let the congregation say, Amen, Amen I Given in Tullow, (the day above-mentioned,)

JAMES KERFFE, &c. Table Swinzade finely got up on Saturday, a new ballet, but with nothing particular for reform their wickedness; and let the congregation say, Amen, Amen I day, a new ballet, but with nothing particular for reform their wickedness; and let the congregation say, Amen, Amen I day, a new ballet, but with nothing particular for reform their wickedness; and let the congregation say, a new ballet, but with nothing particular for reform their wickedness; and let the congregation say, Amen, Amen I day, a new ballet, but with nothing particular for reform their wickedness; and let the congregation say, a mark. As Brugnioli is not yet sufficiently recovered to endure another drive, and, like a bear on the Stock Exchange, by entering a hird cab, speculate on a fall, we are still deprived of her agile and fluttering gyrations.

In the name of God, Amen.—As we see, to our great grief, that all our endeavours to reclaim those unhappy people called Whiteboys, have proved hitherto ineffectual; as all our exhortations and menaces have been lost upon them, and that instead of mending, they still go on with their disorders, more daringly than ever, in open defiance to all laws, human and divine, and to the terrible scandal of the church they belong to,—in order to hinder the further progress of such evil as much as we can, we find it necessary to recur at length to the last extremity, left in our power by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: therefore, by the advice of numbers of our clergy, and after having earnestly invoked the Holy Ghost to direct us, by authority of Almighty God and his holy church, we hereby excommunicate and anathematise all those of our flocks, who, after the publication of this our sentence, join said Whiteboys in any of their nocturnal meetings or disorders; and not them only, but also all those who theatre of his own (which we observe with without; so that passengers and audience are pleasure is contracted to be built immediately for some 20,000l.), we are glad to greet him in his temporary lodgings, with Vestris, at the Olympic. Here he opened on Monday with the Evil Eye, and other favourite entertainments; supported by Miss Kelly, Miss H. Cawse, Mrs. C. Jones, Miss Ferguson, Reeve, Wrench, O. Smith, Benson, F. Mathews, Hill, Salter, Bland, W. Bennett, and a competent company for acting and song. The house was well attended, and the performances went off with éclat. Is he Jealous? introduced a débutante (Miss Percy) as Mrs. Belmour, who met with a very favourable reception, and promises to be an acquisition to the London boards. There has been no novelty since (we write on Friday) to require particular notice; and we need only repeat our praise of established dramas represented by such actors as we have mentioned.

STRAND THEATRE.

On Saturday a regular three-act drama, called the Golden Calf, by Mr. Jerrold, the author of the Rent Day, and very well cast for performance, attracted us to this snug and (though in this weather rather warm) agreeable little theatre. It is, as might be anticipated, a clever production, with many capital hits, several good situations, and as a whole replete with ability. The author's object is to shew that the heirs of wealthy tradespeople, Mr. and Mrs. Mountage (Abbott and Mrs. Waylett), in aspiring to fashionable and high society, forfeit real happiness to glitter, and sacrifice themselves to heartless roués and mean hypocrites, who plunder and despise them. In the Golden Calf the parvenus are rescued by a rich eccentric, John Crystal (Mr. Williams), who adopts painful but effectual means to cure their folly, and save them from impending ruin. A villanous moneylender, his wife, and their servant Rags, (Keeley); together with the quality—a lord, his double, a pseudo-caustic wit, and a faithful old, and a master-aping new servant, complete the dramatis persona. As in Mr. Jerrold's other drama or dramas, the gist lies in drawing the upper ranks in dark colours, and allotting such virtues as he can afford to the lower classes. The dialogue is spirited; and one scene, in which all the Dons debase themselves into menial situations in order to conciliate Crystal and his loans, is most laughably A multitude of bitter truths are put farcical. in strong lights, and some satirical touches are as applicable as they are sharp or laughable. The performers we have named played with great effect; and indeed the whole piece was most respectably acted. It was received throughout with great applause, and will doubtless have, as it ought, a long and popular run.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

New City Theatre, June 28.—A most amusing place; Mr. Jones being manager, author, actor, and also prompter thereof. Its chief peculiarity is, that the play may be heard with-out the walls as well as within, and whatever passes in the street, as well within as alike entertained with the mingling sounds of songs, carts, speeches, street-cries, applause,

Songs, Carts, specialces, street-line, and barking dogs.

King's Theatre, June 30.—Semiramids.

Grisi should study that art whereon Bishop
Taylor wrote a book, "The Art of Dying." Her death is the most unpicturesque and absurd I ever witnessed.

Haymarket, July 2 .- Kean halted through Richard, à l'ordinaire. What can be more destructive to the illusion of the scene, than to see Richmond first fiercely attack and beat his adversary on his knees, and then tenderly extend his arms to help him up, that he may renew the combat? In the Merchant, too, Gratiano is obliged sympathisingly to help up Shylock from his kneeling positions, immediately after addressing him with the friendly words,

"Oh, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog!" &c. It would not, perhaps, be in good taste to call attention to the actor's feebleness; but it is, I conceive, called for by the assertions made by the bills, and even by the papers, that he has completely recovered his strength.

Olympic, July 2.—I was here in time to see a boat in the Evil Eye suddenly skip from beneath the persons it was carrying, and leave Miss Cawse coolly sitting, and a troop of janissaries coolly standing, in the water. The new scene-shifters cannot master the mystery of Vestris's bisected curtain at all. There was a ridiculous failure as often as they attempted to close it; and, on each occasion, the performer, waiting till the case was proved to be hopeless, scampered off the stage; while prompters, and women, and divers other nondescripts, scampered across, to the no small amusement of the audience.

Cobourg, July 3 .- Miss Pearson is here, encoring her own songs as at Drury. She sings them the first time within two inches of the foot-lights, and the second, if any opposition be manifested, within one inch of the same. Mr. H. Johnston is also here. As the blue beggar in the Antiquary, he exclaimed to Captain Lovel, on the supposed death of his antagonist, "Fly! shave yourself from the same which awaits you!" The man who acted the antiquary, proved either that he was in possession of a curiosity hitherto unknown to virtuosi, or that he had no claims to the title of one himself; for he called his favourite urn a lachryminary, instead of a lachrymatory. In the scene wherein the lady is saved from the waters by being pulled up in a chair lowered from the cliff above, the scene-shifter, or perhaps the scene-designer, had forgotten the cliff: the chair was lowered from the sky, and Miss Pearson hoisted up out of sight into heaven. I never visit this theatre without seeing the same cloak on the shoulders of one or other of the actors: it is the more remarkable garment, from the circumstance of its being a most undeniable table-cover with a collar sewed to it. In the Falls of Clyde, a man exclaimed, "Now then we are all safe;" and e'en at the word, tumbled over a ladder on the stage, and came floundering down with his nose reposing on a torch which he held in his hand.

VARIETIES.

Earthquakes. — At Reggio, in Italy, several severe shocks of earthquake were experienced early in June; one shock, on the 7th, was so powerful as to convert the convent of the Madonna into a mass of ruin.

Egyptian Antiquities. - The Pasha of Egypt having presented two colossal sphynxes of red granite to the Emperor of Russia, these monuments of antiquity have reached Cronstadt from Alexandria, on their way to St. Petersburgh.

Erlestoke Park Sale. - Mr. George Robins's catalogue of the magnificent property in Erlestoke Park, belonging to Mr. Watson Taylor, is a marvel in the annals of sales. It begins on Monday, and lasts for twenty succeeding days; when all of splendour which prodigal wealth could acquire and accumulate will submit to the hammer, and be dispersed throughout the country. It is a melancholy reflection. Superb furniture, unequalled, perhaps, for extravagant richness, costly wines, masterly paintings, ex-cellent books—all that human luxury could crave, or human intellect and refinement enjoy, must yield to the change of fortune and adorn other mansions, or eurich the shops of brokers and dealers. Except Fonthill, we suppose there has been no auction in England equal to this: and, indeed, of the crowds who have visited Erlestoke, many report to us that this is the most interesting of the two. It will require all our friend Robins's talent and eloquence to do it justice.

Mr. Britton has given six lectures on the architecture of the middle ages, at the Royal Institution, and illustrated his essays by numerous very fine and large drawings. He commenced by shewing the characteristic features of the architecture of the pagan and classical ages of the olden times, and inferred, as well as proved, that the sacred buildings of the Christians were, in the first instance, a rude imitation and ap-plication of previous buildings to the new religion. This was verified by comparative accounts and delineations of several ancient edifices in India, Egypt, Greece, Italy, &c. In tracing and illustrating the architectural designs of the middle ages, the lecturer brought forward numerous illustrations of Christian, castellated, and domestic buildings. To the first, three lectures were appropriated, and the other two were discussed and exemplified in three more; by which arrangement the chronology and history of the architecture of the middle ages was clearly and perspicuously displayed. Our limits will not allow us to enter into details; though it is but justice to remark, that whilst the drawings were calculated to amuse and attract the eye, the language and matter of the lectures could not fail to be interwhether antiquary, topographer, or amateur.

Paganini at Covent Garden, and ordinary prices, must be a treat: but Friday night is too late for our notice.

Savage Captivity. From Sydney, New South Wales, there are accounts of a young man, called Mathews, who was captured from the Alfred whaler, about three years previously, by the natives of Malenta, an island somewhere near the New Hebrides group. The captain and several of the hands, it seems, were murdered; but Mathews and a mate carried into the island by its cannibal inhabitants. The discovery of his being there and alive was curiously and ingeniously made by his cutting his name, and describing his situation, on a piece of bamboo, which the natives bartered with an English vessel as an article of traffic; and what adds to the romance of this story is, that a poor old woman at Llanelly, in South Wales, believes that she has recognised in the individual her son William Mathews, aged about 42, who went out as the mate of a ship to Port Jackson, and about whom she has been in

As, in spite of notoriety, mistakes always occur where there is an identity of names, we shall note that this clever and meritorious Mr. Jones is from Edinburgh, and not our old and cherished Mr. Jones of Covent Garden and Drury. The latter, we regret to find, is difficult to be tempted upon the stage, of which he was so sprightly and great an ornament, again, not withstanding high offers; but his success as a teacher of elocution for the bar, the pulpit, and the senate, is, we fancy, alike too agreeable and too profitable to be postponed for theatrical toil and trouble, even with the best theatrical emoluments.

nearly ten years. He was always very clover in painting, cutting out, &c. &c.

The Pilcairn Islanders .- The Salem Gauette states, that the inhabitants of Pitcairn's Island having lost twelve of their number at Otaheite. had been restered to their homes by the American brig Charles Dogget, commanded by Captain Driver. They had suffered much from sickness; and, as we quoted in a former Literary Gazette, were not morally improved, whatever experience they may have acquired, by the extreme licentiousness they witnessed in their travels.

Preservation of Ancient Buildings .- We rejoice to see that the example set by the spirited conservatives of the Ladye Chapel, Southwark, has produced, and is producing, very excellent effects. At Carlisle an ancient gateway, clustered about with historical memories, has been saved from destruction. Saint Alban's venerable shrine is (as we have recorded) likely to be preserved through the intervention of liberal antiquaries and a prospering voluntary subscription. We observe, still more recently. similar measures adopted to secure the remains of Crosby Hall, a beautiful specimen of the domestic architecture of the fifteenth century, situated near Bishopsgate-street; to rescue which, between four and five hundred pounds have been raised. Crosby Hall, our readers will be aware, is all that is left of the palace of Richard the Third. An address, prefixed to the list of subscribers, contains some excellent observations on the neglect of works of taste and art in this country, where objects of far less importance are pursued with unrivalled assiduity. Another proposal, connected with antiquity, we see is to establish an annual or triennial commemoration of that enlightened citizen Sir Thomas Gresham: to this we have no objection; but we think it would be infinitely more beneficial to examine into the obvious diversion of the funds he bequeathed for the advancement of learning and science, and provide that the institution he founded, and the lectures he ordained, should in reality fulfil the intention of the testator, and not be unmeaningly frittered away in utter uselessness.

Van Diemen's Land. - In a recent Review of Mr. Bischoff's History of Van Diemen's Land, and the Van Diemen's Almanac (Lit. Gas. No. 800, p. 308), we quoted the account of a mission undertaken by Mr. G. A. Robinson, with the view to reclaiming the natives, and locating them under the protection of government in Gun Carriage Island, situated between Great Island and Cape Barren. It new appears, from the Hobart Town Courier. to 19th Feb., that the Oyster Bay and Big River Tribes, accounted the most sangulnary in the island, had abandoned their wilds and fastnesses, and accompanied their white friend to Hobart Town, on their way to the settlement prepared for them. The blacks were forty in number, and followed by a large pack of dogs, with which they hunt kangaroos and other animals. The women were disgustingly ornamented with human bones of slain enemies and murdered Europeans. The bark insides great distress, not having heard of him for of their huts were found to be covered with as, kangaroos rude drawings of cursa, opossems, kangaroos, &c. The woods are represented as being still filled with creatures unknown to naturalists.

> " A nobleman, who had a splendid library, and wanted a copy of a very rare and magnificent book, was informed that it had been bought by a tradesman of Paris. 'Then,' said he, 'the book will be mine; for I will make an offer which no tradesman can refuse.' He was introduced to the possessor, who was M. Rénouard. When he saw his library, and discovered his taste and learning, he dropped the idea of bribery, and said, Sir, I called on you to bribery, and said, 'Sir, I called on you solicit the honour of your acquaintance.' Note in Dr. Valpy's Catalogue. .

> "Voltaire's chief merit consists in his dramatic works. On a cause apparently trifling, the fate of a writer sometimes depends. Ou the first representation of his first play, the Œdipe, the house had been repaired and adorned, and a new motto painted on the proscenium, — O. T. P. Q. M. V. D. the initials of Omne Tulit Punctum Qui Miscuit Utile Dulci. Appeal was made to Piron for an explanation. The witty author of the Métromaine whispered, Œdipe, Tragédie Pitoyable, Que Monsieur Voltaire Donne. The play was not suffered to be acted, until the inscription appeared the next day at full length: from this plaisanterie the world had nearly been de-prived of Alzire, Zaïre, Mahomet, and Merope. He who reads only the Zaire of this extraordinary writer, in which the divinity of Christ, and his death for the sins of man, are expressed, will scarcely conceive that he was an archinfidel."-Ibid.

> " Mr. Walker had so intimate a knowledge of the provincial peculiarities of pronunciation, that, in a private course of reading at Oxford to twelve under-graduates, he told each of us the respective places of our birth or early edu-cation."—Ibid.

> Increase of Correspondence between Edinburgh and London .- Sir Walter Scott says, in his notes to Redgauntlet, "that within his own recollection the London post was brought north in a small mail-cart; and men are yet alive who recollect when it came down with only one single letter to Edinburgh, addressed to the manager of the British Linen Company."

A superlative Garrick-Chib Witticism The conversation turned upon Mr. Collier's able History of the Stage; when —— observed, that though not so amusing, it was infinitely superior to Colley Cibber's work. "That is as it

Puns Phrenological. - A phrenologist who had, as usual, bored the company a long while, at length described a head as exquisitely formed; in short, "a harmonious head." "I can understand that," said one of his weary listeners: "it means a head with a ringing in the ears; and, if that won't do, you may add a wring to the nose."

Cholera .- A terrified contagionist, the other day, after lavishing every frightful term upon the horrors of cholera, ended by declaring that it was the Frankenstein of diseases.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Lib. Gazette Workly Advertisement, No. XXVII. July 7, 1888.]

Mr. Kennedy, Author of the "History of the Con-tagious Cholers," informs us that he is finishing a third edition of his work, with the results of his observations on the character and treatment of the disease in England.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Blosmfail's Greek Testament, 2 web. Sve. E. M. bis.

-Kaith's Signs of the Times, 2 vols. 18mo. 16a. 64 bis.

Lescons on Shells, with Plates, fcp. 5c. 6d. bds.—Rowst.

Reform Act, with Notes, &c. 18mo. 5s. bds.—The Pubit, Vol. KIK. with Postrasit, 8vo. 7c. 6d. cloth.—Fisher.

Companion and Key to the History of England, 10918

8vo. 11. 15c. hf.-bd. morocco; Genealogical Atlas of the Kings of England, 10921 8vo. 8s. 6d. hf.-bd. mrecco.—

The Weil-spent Hour, 18mo. 2s. hf.-bd.—Wooff Bible

Stories, Part II. 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Juvenité Cyclopeda,

Vol. V. 10921 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Live Doll, 18mo. 2.

1fr.-bd.—Ciscenswold, or Tales of the North, 18mo. 7c. 6d.

bds.—Haden's Medical Guisée for Families, 2s. bds.—Power on the Periodical of the Hurnan Female, 8vo. 3s.

sewed.—Webster on the Epidemic Cholera, 12mo. 5c.

bds.—Tales, &c. by W. H. Harrison, No. I. the Lot

beed, Is. sewed; proofs, Is. 6d. sewed.—The Beggri

Daughter of Bethnal Green, edited by Dr. Perry, 12mo.

2s. 6d. sewed; India, 4s. sewed.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

To the Editor of the Literary Gazette.

To the Editor of the Literary Gazetts.

Sir.—Last night's meteor is spoken of by all in this neighbourhood who saw it, as by far the sublimest spotantial production of the sublimest spotantial production of the same spotantial production of a passage in St. Matthew: "And, lo! the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending." The weather, for the last two or three days, he been very sultry, with little or no wind or clouds. Last night the sky was cloudless, and the sir, in the lower regions of the atmosphere, almost motionies, the vene pointing nearly east. At eleven o'clock, while waking towards the west, in an open place near this town, a bright light suddenly shone around me. I instantly turned to my left, and at S.E. by S. at an elevation of between 19 and 40°, I beheld an intense white ball of fare, nearly a large as the meridian moon, and tapering upwards into a tresulous or vibratory tail, eight or ten times longer than its greatest transverse diameter. The meteor sense to have no horizontal motion, but to be descending very slowly and majestically in a perpendicular director to the active histories of the active hardened for the tresnulous or vibratory tail, eight or ten times longer than its grastest transverse diameter. The metaor sensed to have no hotizontal motion, but to be descending very slowly and majestically in a perpendicular direction to the serie, at the distance of only a few hundred feet. It was visible for ten or twelve seconds, and then disspeared, hidden, no doubt, behind an eminence about; mile distant from me. I continued out for half an hour afterwards, but heard no report or sound of any kind proceeding from the meteor. Although the nights are now less dark than in any other part of the year, the eye could acarcoly endure the excessive splendour. A genieman who happened to be looking in the direction of the meteor when it first appeared, and who was then travelling on a coach, thirty miles eastward of this place, over a plain bounded only by the horizon, and who consequently saw it a second or more both before and after myself, informed me (and I can rely on his accuracy) that at its first appearance it was in the direction which I have already stated, at an elevation of about 40°; that it appeared very near to him, and to descessed very slowly, without any horizontal motion; that it was first of an intense blue colour, and of the size and form of an egg-with its small end upwards, accompanied with a leag iluminous train, extending also upwards, and perfectly almihar to the train of an ordinary shooting-star; that it soon lost the train, and became a vivid white half of fire; that it then seemed to burst, or to expand into a roundish but irregular form of a reddish hue, four or five feet in diameter; and finally disappeared, as if it had fallen to the arth, within the limits of the herison. The genterman withdrew his eyes for a second or two from the meteor, to observe the degree of illumination which it diffused, and he saw the wheel-tracks and little stones on the road and the country around as clearly as they could have four or five feet in disanster; and finally disappear until it seemed quite dark around him, Redreth, 30th June, 1832.

We cannot take any further notice of the ridiculous scribbling of R. W. of Windsor: he may be assured we would rather serve than hurt him.

We have not had time to examine the Saturday Magazine, No. I.; but thank the Editor, as inturin, for the compliment of sending it.

The Moraing Star improves upon acquaintance; it is certainly very civil to the L. C., and we think (but not on that account) it ought to rice daily.

ERRATUM.—In the account of the meeting of the Oxford Association in our last, Mr. Hemming's name, is comercion with the safety tube for the oxyhydrogen blow-pipe, was misprinted "Reening."

The patrons and friends of this Conservation have The patrons and friends of this Conservation have just had another parochial tussle with the Sordids, but have beaten them on all points, except being obliged to receive five of them into their committee; no doubt to receive five of them into their committee; no doubt to take care that good taste and refinement are not cuttivated at the cost of too many pounds, shillings, pence, and farthings. They have also a Fair in the attractive Zoological Gardens of Surrey, where toys are sold to make a fund for saving the church, and ices eaten with a view of keeping up a structure hoar with the frost of ages. We hope they are making money among the Beessts.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

The MALL.

The Gallery, with a Selection from the Works of the Ancions Masters of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English Schools, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till Six in the Admission, 1s.—Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

THE PAPYRO-MUSEUM .- The Public THE FAPYRU-MUSEUM.—The Fubits are respectfully informed that this truly unlaws, beautiful, and wonder-exciting Exhibition, consisting of upwards of Eighty Groups of Figures, exquisitely modelled from life, is now open dally, at 28, Old Bond Street, next door to Mr. Ebers's Library, from Ten o'Cloch till duck.

Admittance, is.—Catalogue, 8d.

WEST of SCOTLAND EXHIBITION

EST OF SUUTLIAND EARIDITION of the FINE ARTS.

In consequence of the unexpected delay in fitting up the New Exhibition Rooms, Works of Art intended for Exhibition under the Patronage of the diagoow Dilettanti Society, will be received until the 31st instant.

WALTER BUCHANAN, Secretary.

Exhibition Rooms, Buchanan Street, Glasgow.

MINIATURE PAINTERS and INIATURE PAINTERS and ARTISTS generally, are solicited to inspect his very extensive and elegant Stock of Or-Moin Miniature Frames, Mats, Morocco Casses, &c. by W. Miera, (Maker, by appointment, to Her Mejerity, at No. 111, Strand, where, seads Branch of the Trade being now canducted under his own immediate inspection, he is enabled to execute Orders in the shortest possible time, as well as to regulate his prices lower than any other maker.

A libertal Allowance is made to drving and to the Trade, and on Country and Foreign Orders.

W. Miers, No. 111, Strand, near Waterloo Bridge.

Frank P. Starp: "The Morning Star!" "Ay, the New Penny Daily Paper!" "Not I; I have's time to read all these Penny things. And what, pray, is there in the Morning Star, more than in the others?" "What! there's the Statesman's Manual, the Noctes Lucifers, which is a 'decided hit.' and worth double the money of itself; then there's a powerful leading sticle every day; "Strictures on Men and Manners—Sparkling Forty, and "Boogh! a mough! I'll pretty seeins, Mems, Mems, Morning Star, then." "Have it! to be sure you will—on your breakfast-table every morning. The price is nothing, considering the quality of the article "Office, No. 8, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street.

TO ADVERTISERS .- EDINBURGH REVIEW. Advertisements for insertion in the Advertising Sheet of No. CX. are requested to be sent to Longman and Co. Paternoster Row, by July 18th; and Prospectuses, Bills, &c. to be stitched in the Number, a week later.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Donovan's British Zoology.
Published by J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterico Piace, Pail Mall.

THE NATURAL HISTORY of BRITISH SHELLS, including Figures and Descriptions of all the Species hitherto discovered in Greek Britain, systematically arranged in the Linuxan manner. In 8 vols. royal 8re. with 120 Plates, elegantly coloured, price 76. 18s. boards.

2. The Natural History of British Insects, in 16 vols. royal 8vo. with 576 coloured Pistes, price 344, 18s. boards.

3. The Natural History of British Rirds, in

4. The Natural History of British Fishes, in s vois royal ave. with 120 coloured Pigue, prins 104. 105, boards.

5. The Natural History of British Quadrupeds, in 8 vois royal ave. with 79 coloured Plates, price 56. 58. boards.

Dy B. DONOVAN, F.L.S. W.S. &co,

• a These Works are also published in Parts, and may be had by one or move at a time, or in volumes, at the convenience of the Purchaser.

Sir Walter Scott's Prose Works. In 6 vols. 8vq. 2l. 12s. boards,

THE MISCELLANEOUS PROSE "HE MISCELLANEOUS PRUSE WORKS of SIR WALTER SCOTT, Bart. now first collected. Containing Life of Dryden-Life of Swift.-Memoir of Richardson, Fielding, Smollett, Cumberland, Goldantth, Johnson, sterne, Mackensler, Walpole, Clara Reeve, Mrs. Radcliffe, Le Sage, Johnstone, Bage, Charlotte Smith, Sir Ralph Sadler, Dr. Leyden, Miss Seward, De Foe, Duke of Buccleugh and Queenbury, Lord Somerville, King George III., Lord Syron, Ruke of Verk-Pauls Letters to his Rissofule-Basy on Chivalry,
Romance, and the Drama, &c.
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman, Leeden: and Cadell and Co. Edinburgh.

Jehouch Elahim.

In 2 vols. 8vo. prior 16s. beards,

TRINITARIAN and UNITARIAN

SERMONS, according to the Scriptural Doctrine of the harch of England.

Church of England.

By the Hon. and Rev. E. J. TURNOUR, M.A.
Formerly of St. Mary Hall, Onford.

Printed for the Author, and sold by C., J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterlee Place, Pail Mail.

With nearly 100 Engravings by G. W. Bonner, price 3s, 6d.
ef on India paper, 9s.

IDD'S PICTUR ESQUE COMPANION to RICHMOND, HAMPTON COURT, 8cc.

James Gilbert, (Successor to William Kidd), 238, Regent Street, and 61, Paternorier Row.

THE DOOMED ONE; or, they met at

Genjon. J. ROSALIA ST. CLAIR,
Anthor of Sailor Boy, Soldier Boy, Fashionables and Unfashionables. Son of O'Donnel, Ulrica of Saxony, Meaner Oglivle, Banker's Daughters of Britatol, First and Last Years of Wedded vering Tower, &c. Printed for A. K. Newman and Co. London.

Where may be had,
The Unchanged, by Selina Davenport. In

The Water Queen, by Mr. Coates. 3 vols.

Romance of the Hebrides, by F. Lathom

Bravo of Bohemia, 4 vols. 3d edit. 11. Children of the Abbey, by R. M. Roche.

St. Clair of the Isles, by E. Helme. 4th edition, 4 vols. 1/.

HISTORY of the WAR of the SUCCES-

Robert Montgomery's Sacred Poems.

THE following Poems, by the Author of the Messiah, are published by W. Simpkin and R. Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court, London; and may be had of all Booksellers:

1. The Omnipresence of the Delty, 12th

1. The Unity resence of the Delty, agest edition, 5s. 6d. beards.

2. A Universal Prayer; Death; a Vision of Heaves, and a Vision of Hell. 4th edition, 5s. 6d.

3. Satan. 2d edition, 8s. 6d.

New Series of Museum Criticum.

THE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM,

THE PHILOLOGIUAL MUSSION,
No. III.
Contents.—Imaginary Conversation—Solon and Pisistratus—
On the Historical References and Aliasions in Horace, from the German of Ruttman—On Xenophon's Hellenica, from the German of Niebuhr—Xenophon, Niebuhr, and Delbrueck—On certain Passages in the Fourth and Fifth Books of the Architecture of Vitruvius—On a Passage in Xenophon's Hellenica, i. 6—The Comic Poet Antiphanes—On the Names of the Antehellenic Inhabitants of Greece—De Passanie Stilo Augusti Boochhil Prolusio Academica—On certain Fragments quoted by Herodian He Grammarian—On English Orthography—On English Diminutives—Miscellaneous Observations.
Printed for Deightons, Cambridge; Rivingtons, London; and Parker, Oxford.

Of—hom may be had,

Of whom may be had,

The First and Second Numbers, price 5s. sech, or the First Volume, complete, price 15s. beards.

To Travellers in Italy. In 8 vols. small 8vo. with Plates, price 15s. beards, the 3d edition with numerous Additions, of with numerous Additions, of DESCRIPTION of the ANTIQUITIES and other CURIOSITIES of ROMS, from Personal Observation, made during a Visit to Italy, in the Years 1918-19.

With Illustrations from Anotons and Modern Wilson.
By the Rev. ED Walds and of Christ Church, Onfered.
Frinted for J., 6.1, and F. Bleingnen, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterlee Place, Pall Mail.

New edition, with the Population Return of 1831, 18s. boards; or 18s. 6d. half-bound in Parchment, pt He, Sef. half-bound in Parelaments,

DATERSON'S ROADS of ENGLAND and WALES, and of the SOUTH of SCOTLAND.

By EDWARD MOGG.

Arranged upon a plan entirely novel: the whole remodelled and augmented by the addition of new Roads and new Admentagements with an Appendix, Tour through Wales, &c.

Loadies: Friend for a suggest, and the suggest of the sug

In a thick 18mo. vol. with 94 Views and Maps, price 18t. bound,

UIDE to all the WATERING and SEABATHING PLACES, including the Scotch Westering Places; containing full Descriptions of each Place, and of striking Objects in the Environs; fearing an agreeable Companion during a Residence at any of the Places, or during a Bummer Team. With a Description of the Lakes, and a Tour through Wales.

through Waiss.

Description of the Lakes in the North of England. By W. Wordswerth, Eq. With Map, 5s. 6s.

Original Picture of London, corrected to the present time, with a Description of the Buvirons. Re-edited, and mostly written, by J. Britton, P.S.A. &c. 18me. with upward of 100 Views of Public Buildings, Maps, Plans, &c. including a Map of the Country 20 Miller round London, $s.; with the Maps only, 6c. neatly bound.

London: Longman, Bees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Librery of Chancel Brafileh Poerry.

In 1 elegant vol. 8ve. price 20s. cloth; with gilt edges, 31s. 6d.

ELECT WORKS of the BEITISH
POHYS, from Chancer to James. with Bisgraphical
Sketches. By ROBERT SOUTHBY, LL.D.

Uniform with the above, 18s. elech; 18se with gilt edges, Select Works of the British Poets, from Jonason to Beattle, with Biographical and Critical Prefaces. By Dr.
Alkin.

Alice in 10 vols. reyal 16ms. to match the British Bessylses, 2d.; and in 10 vols. post 18ms. 2d.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.
Of whom may be had, in 1 elegant vol. 8ve.

Bowdler's Family Shakspeare, New edition, with 25 Illustrations. 20s. cloth; 31s. 8d. with gilt edges.

Popular School-Books,
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. Lenden.

YEW PANTHEON; or, an Introduction to the Mythology of the Ancients. Compiled for the Use of Young Persons.
By W. JILLARD HORT.
lame. with Plates, new edition, enlarged, is. 6d. bd.
English School Dictionary of Select Words, with their Meanings affixed, intended to be committed to memory, as well as for reference in Reading and Writing. By W.
J. Hort. 18mo. 2s. 6d. bound.

Introduction to the Study of Chronology and

Introduction to the Study of Chronology and Ancient History. By W. J. Hert. 18mo. 4s.

Introduction to Modern History, from the Birth of Christ to the present Time, in continuation of an Introduction to Chronology and Ancient History. By W. J. Hort. 9 vols. 18mo. 10s. 6d. bound.

Moral Biography; or, Lives of Exemplary

English Lesson-Book for the Junior Classes.

By Lucy Altin. 18mo. 2s. 6d. hair-bound.
Geography for Youth, adapted to the dif-ferent Classes of Learners. By the late Bav. John Hartley 19mo. 7th edition, revised by his Sen, 4s. 6d. bound.
Outlines of Geography, the First Course for Children. By the Rev. J. Hurrley. 10th edition, 8d.

Children. By the Rev. J. Hartley. 10th edition, ed.
Conversations on Mythology, 12mo. 5s. bds.
Conversations on Algebra, 12mo. 7s. bds.
Concise System of Commercial Arithmetic.
By James Morrison. 19mo. 4s. 6d. beand.
Key to the same. 12mo. 6s. bound.

Compendious Chart of Ancient History and Biography. By Mrs. John Hurford. Sc. 6d. in sheets; 16c. 6d. folded in boards.

Brief Summary of Ancient History, arranged in Periods; intended as a Companion to the above. Se.

Elements of Astronomy. By S. Treeby.
18mo. with Plates, Sc. 6d. bound.

Professor Lindley.
With Ten Engravings, 5s. 6d. No. V. of THE POSSIL FLORA of GREAT BRI.

THE FOSSIL FLURA of CHREAT BK.

TAIN; or, Figures and Descriptions of the Vegetable Remains found in a Fossil State in this Country.

By JOHN LINDLEY, F. R. S. L. S. and G. S., and WILLIAM BUTTON, F. G. S.

Part I. of Vol. I. may now be had, containing Forty Plates and Descriptions, a Preliminary View of the Subject, a general introduction to that Branch of Science which is now called Fossil botany, and a compendious Classification of such Bermains of the ancient Flan of the World as have been discovered up to the present time. 22s. cleth boards.

No. VI. will appear on October the 1st next.

James Ridgway, Piccodilly : Charaley, Newcastle on Tyne; and all Becksellers.

Frice 8s. (with 16 Plates, above 160 Wood Engravings, and Two Sheets of Letter-press), Part II. of an PARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE; with name-rous Designs, Setimates, and Orlical Remarks.

By J. C. LOUDON, F. L. d. Sec.

Conductor of the Curdener's Magazine, &c.

This Work will example 15 west in cutting the second, forming the control of the Cutting Control of the Cutting Control of the Cutting Control of the Cutting Control of Cutting Cutting Control of Cutting Control of Cutting Control of Cutting Cutting Control of Cutting Control of Cutting Control of Cutting Cutting Control of Cutting Control of Cutting C

THE MESSIAH.

By the Author of "The Care HE M F 3 3 1 A 11.

By the Author of "The Omnipresence of the Peity."

May be had of all Booksellers.

Post 8vo. price 9s. 6d. boards.

Lendon: John Tarrill, British Magazine Office,

250, Regent Street.

Mangaell's Questions, and Geography.

In 13mp. new edition, 5r. bound,

ISTORICAL and MISCELLANEOUS
QUESTIONS, for the Use of Young People; with a Selection of British and general Biography, &cc.

By RICHMAL MANGALL.

The present edition is considerably enlarged by the insertion of the Astronomical Terms and Biography, &cc.

By RICHMAL MANGALL.

The present edition is considerably enlarged by the insertion of the Astronomical Terms and Biography, &cc.

By RICHMAL MANGALL.

The present edition is considerably enlarged by the insertion of the Astronomical Terms and Biography. &cc.

By RICHMAL MANGALL.

The present edition is considerably enlarged by the insertion of the Astronomical Terms and Biography.

The Astronomical Terms and Biography.

By the Same Author,

By the same Author, By the same Author,

Compendium of Geography, for Schools, Private Families, and all those who require knowledge of this necessary Balesco. 26 edition, overcood, 7a 64. bound.

London: Longman, Rece, Comp. Brown, Green, and Co.

APTAIN SKINNER'S EXCURSIONS

CAPTAIN SKINNER'S EXCURSIONS in INDIA,
Including an Account of a Voyage of 1800 miles up the Ganges, of a Visit to Merut, Cawnpore, the City of Delhi, and other places in Hindoatan, and of a Walk over the Himalaya Mountains to the Sources of the Jumma and the Ganges. In 2 vols. 8vo. with Plates, will be published on Saturday, July 14th.

8, New Burlington Street.

Professor Lindley's superior and cheap Work on Floreers, Gardening, Sc. 4s. each Number.

EDWARDS'S BOTANICAL REGIS-

EDWARDS'S BOTANICAL REGISTER; or, Ornamental Flower-Garden and Shrubbery.
Continued by JOHN LINDLEY, F.R.S. L.S. &c. &c.
No. V. of Vol. V. New Series.

Each Number contains Eight Portraits of the handsomest ornamental Plants cultivated in the Gardens, &c. of this country. The Plates are as full as the usual quarto sire, and are finely coloured from the living Plants, accompanied by their History, Description, and full Directions for Cultivation.

"O" All the previous Numbers, which were out of print, may now both the plates are executed, and the judicious remarks on cultivated and general habit by Mr. Lindley, is, in consequence, the superior publication."—Loudon's Maguaine of Bolany, &c.

Also,

1. Sweet's Hothouse and Greenhouse Manual; or, Botanical Cultivator. 5th edition, 164.

2. Sweet's Hortus Britannicus; or, Catague of every British or Foreign Plant, either known or culti-tied in England, arranged according to Natural Orders, Colou-the Flowers, Habit, &c. brought down to the present time

3. A Practical Treatise on the Cultivation 3. A Fractical Treatise on the Cultivation and Management of Narcissus, the finest early group of our Gardens. By A. H. Haworth, Eq. 2d edition, enlarged, 2s. 6d. James Ridgway, Piccadilly; and through every Bookseller.

Edinburgh Sessional School-Books.
In 1 vol. 19mo. 3d edition, price 5s. boards,

A CCOUNT of the EDINBURGH SESSIONAL SCHOOLS, and the other Perchial Institutions for Education established in that City, with Strictures on Education in general.

ducation in general.

By JOHN WOOD, Esq.

Printed for John Wardiaw, Edinburgh; and James Duncan, 87, Paternester Row, London.

1. First Book, Edinburgh Sessional School,

2. Second ditto, ditto, ditto, 18mo. half-

3. Old Testament Biography, 18mo. sewed.

4. New ditto, ditto, 18mo. sewed, price 6d. 5. National School Collection, 12mo. price

6. Instructive Extracts, 12mo. price 3s. 6d.

7. Sacred History, in the form of Letters, (Five Parts) price 3s. each, half-bound.

In 18mo. price 6s. boards, the 9d edition of

PLAIN PAROCHIAL SERMONS, preached in the Parish Church of Bolton-le-Moors.
By the Rev. JAMES SLADE, M.A.
Vicar of Bolton, and Prebendary of Chester.
Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, 9s. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mall.

and Waterioo Place, rail mail.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Twenty-One Prayers, composed from the Psalma, for the Nick and Afflicted; to which are added, various other Forms of Prayer for the same purpose, with a few Hints and Directions for the Visitation of the Sick, chiefly intended for the Use of the Younger Clurgy. 3d edition, 18mo. 3s. 6d.

LEANINGS in NATURAL HISTORY,

With Local Recollections.

By EDWARD JESSE, Esq.
Surveyor of His Majesty's Parks and Palaces.
Being a Companion to the Journal of a Naturalist.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

R. HALLAM'S HISTORY of the

Also a 8d edition of
The Constitutional History of England, 8 vols. 8vo. 86s. John Murray, Albemarle Street.

11. 64. bound, a new edition (corrected) of the SCHOLAR'S SPELLING ASSISTANT; wherein the Words are arranged on an improved Plan, calculated to familiarise the Art of Spelling and Pronunciation, to remove Difficulties the Art of Spelling and Pronunciation, for remove Difficulties the Art of Spelling and Pronunciation, to remove Difficulties the Art of Spelling and Pronunciation, and Pronunciation and Pron

By the same Author, English Vocabulary, in which the Words are arranged indiscriminately; designed as a Sequel to the above.

New edition, corrected, $s. bound.

New edition, corrected, $e. bound.

New Orthographical Assistant, or English
Exercise-Boot, on an improved Plan, for the more speedy Instruction of Young Persons in Spelling and Pronunciation. 8d edition, a: Longman, Ross, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Arnot.

Messrs. Fisher, Son, and Co. have this day published—NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY,
No. XXXIX. containing Portraits and Memoirs of
The Duke of Richmond, R.G.
Sir Robert Peel, Batt.
Professor Jameson, F.R.S. L. and E.
Imperial Svo. 3s. 6d.; India Proofs, 5s.

Baines's History of the County Palatine of Lancaster, Part XVII. embellished with Views of Townley Hall, and Hall I' the Wood, from a valuable original Painsting by Linton, in the possession of Benjamin Hick, Esq. of Bolton. 111

Thomas Telford, Ras The Imperial Magazine for July, containing the Portrait and Memoir of Thomas Telford, Esq. with the usual variety of entertaining and useful matter.

IV Elegantly half bound, containing 145 highly finished Engravings, price

Devonshire and Cornwall Illustrated, from original Drawings by Thomas Allom, with Descriptions by J. Britton and E. W. Brayley.

Barney Mahoney. A Second Edition of this interesting Volume is published this day. I vol. 8s.

VI.
The Select Library.

Lives of Eminent Missionaries, by John Carne, Evg. Author of "Letters from the East." Vol. I. forming the Siat Volume of the Select Library, will be ready July 7th. "Mr. Carne has entered into the fine and pure spirit which animated the good men whose labours and adventures he records in an appropriate style. The events are often so romantic, that the whole possesses a charm to attract even the reader for amusement; while the Christian world will be edited, and all improved, by a familiar acquisinance with these striking travels and proceedings of very extraordinary men."—Literary Gazette.

Select Library, Vols. I. to IV. 6s. each, Polynesian Researches, by W. Ellis.

Vol. V. 6s. Stewart's Visit to the South Seas.

to the South Seas.

WOL. XIX. of the MIRROR, with a Steelplate Portrait of the Right Hon. EARL GREY, and a Biographical Memoir of his Lordship; upwards of Sixty Engraving., and 450 closely printed pages, is now publishing, price

Parts 124 and 125, 8d. each, are also ready. Vols. I. to XVIII. price in bds. 41. 18s. 6d.;

half-bound, 6/. 6s.
J. Limbird, 143, Strand; and all Booksellers

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE for

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE for June (published July 1) contains, among others, the following Articles:—
On the Currency and the Bank Charter—Sculpture found the Chapter-house, Bristol (with a Plate)—Anecdotes of Witchcraft in Wiltshire—Progress of Anecdotal Literature—British and Roman London—Outerden Place and Church, Kent (with a Plate)—Original Letter of Edmund Bolton—Progress of the Lady Chaptel—Restoration Fund—Sit. Martin's Church, Stamford—Crosby Hall—Oxford Common Prayer-Books, &c. &c. Several Articles in Classical Literature—Reviews of New Publications—Obituary, with Memoirs of the late Bishop of Hereford, the Right Hon. Sit W. Grant, the Rev. Caleb Colton, and several other distinguished Individuals recently deceased.
Price Two Shillings.
Published by John Harris, St. Paul's Churchyard.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE

Monthly, price 2s. 6d.

Sold at all Booksellers, Stationers, and Newamen, in England, Scotland, and Ireland; by whom Subscribers' names are received, and the Nos. supplied regularly.

Interesting New Works, Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentiey, New Burlington Street. In 8 vols. post 8vo.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE of a WOMAN of FABRION.

The Highland Smuggler. By the Author of the "Ruzzilbash." 3 vols. III.

Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier. By the Author of "Darnley." 3 vols.

Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. 2 vols. "A work which we would lay up among our favourites, bind in morocco, and reserve for summer reading in happy hours."—Spectator.

The Prairie. By Cooper.

Revised and corrected, and accompanied by a new Introduction by the Author, complete in 1 vol. 8vo. beautifully embellished, price 6s. forming the 17th Volume of the Standard Novels. VII.

Lights and Shadows of American Life.

Lights and Shroows of American Life. By Mary Russell Mitford. 3 vois. Contents.—The Politician—Elizabeth Latimer—The Squatter -The Deril's Pulpit.—The Young Back woodsman—Major Eger-ton—Adventure at Sea—The Green Mountain Boy—The Azure Hose—The Three Indians—Modern Chivairy—The Isle of Flow-ers—Last of the Boatmen, &c.

In 3 vols. 18mo. embellished with numerous Plates Maps, price 18s. boards, Maps, price 18th, boards,

IT A I, Y.

By JOSIAH CONDER,

Auther of the "Modern Traveller."

"Conder's 'list' will in future be the travelling companion of every man bent upon a thorough investigation of that interest, land. He is the best compiler of the day, and this is no trailer, the best and completest grographical and descriptive variety, the best and completest grographical and descriptive variety in any language."—Spectator, April 1831.

"We sincerely congratulate the public upon the appearance is a work, which really is an accurate and complete account of a derivative for the service of the service of the service in 180 Maps and other Engraving, St. Sc. cloth boards,

The Modern Traveller, containing a Description, Geographical, Historical, and Topographical, of the variety Josiah Conder.

New editions of the several Countries may be had secretic.

Countries of the tiobe, compiled from the best attacher. St. Josiah Conder.

New editions of the several Countries may be had separate, price &c. &d. per vol. in cloth boards.

"No work can be found in our language, or any other, equing apply the place of the "Modern Traveller." — Literary &c. &c. "Conders." Modern Traveller! is worth all the libraries turn together." — Frintee's Magazine, August 1831.

Printee's James Duncan, 87, Patermoster Row.

John Galfa New Book. John Gall's New Book.

P H E R A D I C A L; an Autobiography.

Price 5s.
Printed for James Fraser, 215, Regent Street Of whom may be had, lately published, by the same Author,
The Member, an Autobiography, price &c.

MANUAL for EMIGRANTS to AMERICA.
By CALVIN COLTON, A.M.
Of America.
1 vol. 18mo. price, bound in cloth, 2z. 4d.
London: Frederick Westley and A. H. Davis, Scalisser Corr.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

The late Major Rennell's Current Charts.

In the press, and speedily will be published, in 1 vol. 8va dedicated, by special permission, to His Majesty, MEMOIR by the late MAJOR A REMOTE to accompany his Charts on the preview arrents in the Atlantic Ocean.

Printing for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Pan's Charchyar, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

In the course of a week will be published, in 1 vol. beautifully

THE VISIT.

N.B. This little tale is intended to illustrate the county life of the higher class of the English Aristoracy.

Printed for James Fraser, 215, Regent Street.

New Work by the Author of the "Spy."
On the 14th instant, in 3 vols, post 8ve.

THE HEIDENMAUER; or, the Benedictines.
By J. F. COOPER, Esq.
Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Nearly ready for publication,
THOUGHTS on SECONDARY PUNISH-MENTS, in a Letter to Earl Grey.

By RICHARD WHATELY, D.D.

Archbishop of Dublin.

To which are sppended, Two Articles on Transportation 19
New South Wales, and some Observations on Pelice Regulation and on Colonisation.

Printing for B. Fellowes, Ludgate Street.

Literary Novelites.

The following will be published in the course of the press month, by Heary Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Berlington Street.

DRAMATIC STORIES.

Up T. ARNOLD, Esc.
(On Monday next.) 11.

Fortune-Hunting; a Story of Modern Life. By the Author of "First Love." 3 vols. (On Monday next.) 111

Wild Sports of the West. By an Experi-

Life of a Sailor. By a Captain in the Navy.

The Conclusion of Madame Junot's Memoirs.

Zohrab the Hostage. By the Author of LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, it the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wallington Strike, Waterloo Bridge, Stread, and 18, South Moulton Street, ord. Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange. I Marlborough, Ave Maria Lana, Ludgate Hill: A. Evigdinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Athurand Co. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dubits... Agest families, O. Etch, 18, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Lelcester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Aettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 808.

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1832.

Price 8d.

BEVIEW OF NEW BOOKS

Excursions in India: including an Account of a Voyage of 1200 Miles up the Ganges; of a Visit to Merut, Campore, the City of Delhi. and other Places in Hindostan : and of a Walk over the Himalaya Mountains to the Sources of the Jumna and the Ganges. By Captain Skinner. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE have here another very lively and descriptive work on India; not so minute in its details of Mahometan rites and manners as that of Mrs. Meer Hassan, nor so thickly studded with hunting and shooting exploits as that of Captain Mundy: but replete throughout with admirable sketches of native scenes and native portraits, picturesque, amusing, and impressive. Indeed. Captain Skinner paints so well, that we almost seem to be present at his hurried marches. Indian fairs, Oriental ceremonies, British encampments, with all the varieties of traits with which he improves and embellishes these agreeable delineations. A more pleasant volume has not, for a long time, occupied our attention, or offered us more ready materials for an attractive review: for old as the ground over which he has trodden is, he abounds with new matter.

The Excursions begin with a voyage from Calcutta through the Sunderbunds to Dinapore, in which Captain Skinner's budgerow was one of a fleet transporting a considerable number of troops. This mode of proceeding to the Ganges, through tiger-haunted jungles and forests impending so imminently over the water as often to impede the navigation and damage the vessels, is placed before us by the narrative. We select one passage. After leaving Comercolly, where there is a very extensive silk factory, Captain Skinner says,-

We experienced the first north-west gales, and were destined to meet with a return of them every evening for at least a fortnight: they always prevail in the month of March, at the 10th of which we had arrived without seeing the Ganges. The hurricanes are magnificent both in their approach and retreat, but somewhat uncomfortable during their operation. Our boats were moored on the first night we experienced one beneath a high bank of soft sand, that threatened every moment to fall upon us: wherever purchase could be found for a rope, one was fastened; so that the vessels were in a line, and made fast from every possible quarter. The sky had been some time darkening; we were prepared therefore for the on-set. Clouds of dust announced the approach, and filled our budgerows and the thatched boats, which rocked up and down as if they had been at sea, and bumped each other at a most alarming rate. The boatmen and servants were all drawn up in front cooking their food, 'thinking no evil,' when the storm burst: their fires were soon extinguished, their cooking-pots overthrown, and their clothes and turbans cast hailstones were as large as hazel-nuts, and rattled upon the roof of my budgerow at a rate that made me fear it would be beaten in : heavy rain and the loudest thunder succeeded, while the lightning played so vividly about our thatched boats, that they appeared to be on fire. It was dreadfully dark, but the bursts of fire from all sides lit up our situation splendidly. The lightning did not appear to break from any one quarter of the heavens, the whole firmament was flame! it seemed to open every moment and disclose a sheet of living fire. Many people were not able to reach their boats, and were seen clinging to the posts to which they were moored in perfect despair. Now and then the cracking of a rope, and the breaking away of a boat from its fastenings, added to the confusion; several got loose and drifted into the middle of the stream; the natives screamed for assistance which could not be granted, for no one could tell precisely where they were driving to; every description of thing seemed to be travelling down the wind-hats, turbans, loose straw, broken cooking-pots, lighted wood, and even fragments of the cooked messes. It is a complete tragic-comic scene. It generally lasts in full force about half an hour, and then dies gradually away, leaving the lightning, which melts into a soft blue flame, to flicker on the masts of the tossing boats for some time longer.'

The next excursion is a trip to Delhi, where again we become spectators and actors rather than readers, through the clever guidance of our author. Though often mentioned, we do not recollect so good an account of Delhi, and of most eastern cities, as the following:

"Generally in the towns of the East the streets are very narrow, and little better than dark passages. In Grand Cairo, if you unfortunately meet a string of masked beauties upon donkeys, you must make a rapid retreat, or resign yourself to be squeezed to a mummy against the wall for daring to stand in their course, if your curiosity should tempt you to do so. The Chandy Choke, in Delhi, is, however, a great exception to this rule, and is perhaps the broadest street in any city in the East. The houses in it have occasionally balconies in front of them, in which the men sit, loosely arrayed in white muslin, smoking their hookahs; and women, who have forfeited all pretensions to modesty, are sometimes seen unveiled, similarly occupied. The din of so populous a place is very great, for every house seems as well furnished as a hive of bees. The population is nearly 200,000 souls, in an area of seven miles in circumference, which is the extent of the wall of modern Delhi. The great peculiarity of an eastern town is, that every thing is done in public: the people talk as loudly as they can, and sometimes, when engaged in un-important matters, seem to be scolding each other in the most outrageous manner: the neighing of horses, the lowing of cattle, the down the wind: every one rushed on board as well as he could. It blew tremendously, and a violent storm of hail accompanied the wind; the carried on in a little open space in front of whole street into a fine confusion. In one of each shop), are beyond all endurance. trumpeting noises of the elephants, with the groaning of the camels, varied occasionally by the roaring of a leopard or a cheator, (which animals are led about the streets hooded to sell for the purposes of hunting,) with the unceasing beat of the tom-tom, the shrill pipe, and the cracked sound of the viol, accompanied by the worse voices of the singers, are enough to drive a moderately nervous person to desperation. Among the natives of Mahometan towns there seems to be a familiarity of manner that places every one in a moment at his ease. If a stranger enter the town and find a group engaged in any amusement, he will not group engaged in any sindsement, he will not scruple to join it instantly, and take as much interest in its pursuit as if he had known the members of it all his life; and then, perhaps, tendering his pipe to one of the party, or receiving one from it—a sure sign of intended hospitality—sit down and relate his history with as much frankness as if he had met a brother. The houses are generally irregular in their construction, and not unfrequently curiously decorated. Different-coloured curtains hang before the doors; variegated screens serve as blinds to the windows; and the custom of hanging clothes, particularly scarfs of every hue, pink, blue, yellow, green, and white, on the tops of the houses to dry, make them look as gay as a ship on a gala-day with all its colours flying. The clouds of dust from the number of equipages, with the insects that surround the pastry-cooks' shops, are the most intolerable plagues of all. The rancid smell of the nastylooking mixtures that are constantly in course of manufacture before you, with the general stench of the town, is a sign that it is seldom indeed that a 'musk caravan from Koten passes through it.' I think, in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, there is a story of a princess threatening to have a confectioner beheaded, if he did not put pepper in his tart-lets. However despotic it may appear in this lady, I cannot help thinking it a just satire upon the pastry of the East; for to season it out of all taste of its own fundamental ingredients, is the only way to make it palatable. This cook, I think, nearly fell a martyr to the honour of his profession, and refused to be dictated to; and I do not believe any thing would induce his brethren of the present day to improve their confectionary. Riding through the town requires much management and some skill. It is necessary to shout, push, and kick the whole way to warn the multitude to get out of the road. Occasionally you have to squeeze past a string of loaded camels, or start away from a train of elephants; and if your horse be frightened at these last animals, which is frequently the case, it needs some ingenuity to avoid being plunged into the cauldrons, which simmer, on each side of the way, in front of the cooks' shops. The fear is mutual very often; and the elephants, in attempting to escape from the approach of a in state. When overtaken by such a storm, it of the peepul for themselves; while the eleis a long time before you can recover either phants, who have just received the call, are your sight or position. The idle cause of all shuffling, with as much liveliness as they can this tumult was reposing quietly in a shining, express by their action, to a distant part of the yellow palanquin, tricked out with gilt mould-ground where their cakes of meal, well baked, ing in every possible direction. He was pre- are spread out for them. A certain number is ceded by a large retinue of strange-looking beings, mounted on horses and dromedaries, and dressed in the most fantastic style. animals were covered with scarlet housings, bound by gold lace, their bridles studded with shells; round their necks were collars of gold or silver, with little drops hanging to them, that kept time most admirably with their jogging measure. The camels were likewise adorned with bells. The riders were in large cloth dresses, caftans, reaching from their pretending to receive his assent to the approfrom the hip downwards, for the converted the elephant, that it is not too much to say nience of sitting on horseback. These were he seems to understand the arrangement. One fastened round the waist by a cotton shawl, The either of white or green, in several folds. common colours of the coats were red and vellow. A cimetar hung by their sides, and they bore matchlocks upon their right shoulders. A helmet, sometimes of steel, and sometimes of tin, pressed close to the head, in shape not unlike a dish-cover; a pair of jack-boots reaching to the knee, and fitting quite tight to the leg; the loose trousers gathered above, giving to the thigh the appearance of being the seat of a dropsy; and a pair of spurs, resembling two rusty weather-cocks, completed the equipment of these splendid retainers. Then followed a mass of servants on foot, some naked, and some with their limbs bare and bodies covered. They carried sheathed swords in their hands, and shouted out the titles of their lord, at frequent intervals, in their passage through the city. They were followed by the stud. each horse beautifully caparisoned and led by a groom; then came the elephants with their shewy trappings, gilt howdahs, and umbrellas of gold or silver tissue. The palanquin, bearing the owner of these motley assemblages, at length appeared, and he was followed by a guard similar to the one that preceded him. At a distance these processions look very grand, particularly the elephants and their castles; but when near there is a great deal of tawdry and ill-assorted tinsel. The horsemen of the party add greatly to the interest of the scene, by exhibiting their evolutions upon the line of their route. Some tilt at each other with their spears; and others affect to pursue, with drawn the other, with excellent characters for kind-swords, the runaways of the party, who, in ness and management, but the gentlest crea-their turn, chase their followers back into the ture seemed suddenly transformed into the ranks. In the management of the horse, and the use of the spear, the natives are generally very skilful; but some of the irregular cavalry of the country excel all belief in these exercises. They will gallop at a tent-peg, stuck firmly into the ground, and divide it with the point of the spear, not abating their speed in the least; and I have seen a troop of men, one after the other, break a bottle with a ball from their matchlocks, while flying past at a racing pace."

On the river, after departing from Delhi, Capt. S. describes an interesting festival, called the Bhearer, and accompanied by the sailing of innumerable little floats with lights and flowers, which we regret we must pass over, to copy another of the author's descriptive bits.

"Dinner is over; and while the more pre-my strolls through the city on horseback, I during their meals, the others, having satisfied gorged epicure, who thinks it necessary to was nearly swept away by a species of simoom, their own appetites, are busily engaged in gratify his palate, even when his stomach is town, of some important personage travelling the camels are returning loaded with branches allotted to each; a fourth of which is destined rites. for the cooly, who assists the mahout, or driver, in the care of him, and whose duty it is to bake the cakes and administer them. which is by no means a hasty operation. Each cooly puts the food into the elephant's mouth with his own hands, and waits quietly by his side till he has swallowed one mouthful, ready to introduce the next. The portion intended for himself he first shews to the animal, and he seems to understand the arrangement. One of the most striking features in the character of the East Indian is, the great devotion each person bestows upon his particular business. This arises, no doubt, from the division into castes, which having first introduced, now fosters the belief in the necessity of hereditary occupations. The Mahometans themselves, although privileged by their religion to be exempt from such restrictions, are not entirely free from the belief; and it is not uncommon to hear a low-born and uneducated person assert the privilege of his caste, when asked to do what he feels any repugnance from obeying. Each member, therefore, of that mighty race which sprang from Brahmah's foot — the race of mechanics - devotes all his energies to that particular branch that was followed and handed down to him, generally unimproved, by a long line of fathers. Those men who attend to the care of animals are so identified with all their habits, that they seem to think of nothing else, and their charges appear so fully to understand them, that you may fancy they take part, particularly the elephants, in the conversation of their keepers. Sometimes the mahout gains such an influence over this animal, that he may be suspected of having compelled the affactions by 'spells and medicines bought of mountebanks.' Some fault had been found, not long ago, with the driver of a baggage-elephant belonging to my regiment, and he was dismissed. The elephant had received his lesson, and would not suffer another to come near him. Several were procured one after ness and management, but the gentlest creature seemed suddenly transformed into the most ungovernable. A month had passed without any return to rule, when the discharged driver was again taken into service, and the elephant, delighted to see him, became once more fit to use. I have known the same tricks played with horses. They generally are unable to feed themselves, so dependant are they upon their grooms, when first bought from a native merchant, from their being accustomed to be crammed from the hand. As the natives like to see a horse shaking with fat, and his coat shining like glass, they stuff him three times a-day with an extremely nastylooking mixture of meal and oil, and several sorts of spices, which they put into his mouth, having previously kneaded it into little balls. They assist the mastication with their fingers, tions, in as picturesque parties as they formed with as little appearance of appetite as a well-sight."

Our author went to the fair at Hurdwa where the Ganges first issues from its mounts throne to pursue its sweeping march of 1200 miles to the sea, and which is accordingly hallowed by eastern mythology and living

" It is not (he tells us) an easy matter to describe the singular scene that is exhibited a the fair of Hurdwar, where the Hindoos assenble in countless multitudes, to combine, as they every where contrive so admirably to do, their spiritual and temporal pursuits. For seven miles before we reached it, we had pased thousands of people in every description of vehicle hastening towards it. They were of all ages, all costumes, and all complanions: no spot upon earth can produce so great a variety of the human race at one assemblage, and it would be impossible to enumerate the article of different sorts, or even the countries that produce them, offered for sale in the streets. The merchants in their own languages praise their own commodities, and make a confusion of tongues highly bewildering to a learned pundit, but to a European confusion were confounded. There are horses from all part of the globe, elephants, camels, and buffals. cows, and sheep of every denomination, thickly crowded together; dogs, cats, and monkeys leopards, bears, and cheators; sometimes the cubs of a tigress, and always from the elk w the mouse deer, every species of that animal Shawls from Cashmere, and woollen cloth from England, are displayed on the same stall; coral from the Red Sea, agate from the Gurzerat, precious stones from Ceylon, gums and spices from Arabia, assafestida and rose-rate from Persia, brought by the natives of each country to the mart, lie by the side of satch from France, pickles from China, saucs from England, and perfume from Bond-street and the Rue St. Honoré. I have seen a case of French rouge, and henna for the fingers of an eastern fair, selling in adjoining booths; antimony to give languor to an Oriental eye, and all the embellishments of a European toilet In roaming through the fair you are smused by the tricks of the eastern jockeys: here one is ambling on a richly caparisoned horse, with necklaces of beads and bangles of silver, displaying his paces with the utmost dexterity; another is galloping as hard as he can, we shew how admirably he can bring him on him haunches; while a third lets his horse loss; and calls him by a whistle, to prove his docility. Elephants and camels are exhibiting at the same time their several graces and complishments; while a Persian, with a broad of the beautiful cats of his country, stands quietly by to attract you with his quadrupeds, f you should fail in making a bargain for the larger ones. The dealers invariably ask ten times as much as they mean to take, and ran their demands as they gather from your coult tenance your anxiety or indifference for the purchase. It is not uncommon for a hord dealer to fall, in the course of a few moments in his demand, from ten to one thousand When the bargain is about to be out cluded, the buyer and the seller throw a cloth over their hands, and naming a price, ascertain by the pressure of certain joints how nearly they are making towards its termination. By an affected air of carelessness, how deeply they are interested. During their great attention to worldly matters, they are not forgetful of the grand object of the Hurdwar meeting: crowds succeeding crowds move all day towards the Ghaut, and no minute of the twenty-four hours passes without being marked by the cleanly rites of the worship of Gunga: the devout bathers of all sexes assemble in thousands, and perform their ablutions with so perfect a sincerity and indifference to appearance, that they seem nearly ignorant whether they are clad or not. The Ghaut presents as singular and motley a sight as the fair itself: Europeans lounging on the backs of elephants to witness the bathing—Brahmins busy in collecting the tribute—religious mendicants displaying every species of indecency and distortion—and Christian ministers anxiously and industriously distributing to the pilgrims copies of the Scriptures, translated into their various languages. Some of these excellent men - for no difficulty or labour stays them in their heavenward course — sit in the porches of the temples, with baskets of tracts by their sides, giving them to all who approach: the number so disseminated must be very great, for every person is attracted to the seat of the mis sionary, as he passes from the river to complete his devotion at the temple. We hear very little of Hindoo conversion, and many who have not had the opportunity of witnessing the zeal and perseverance of our missionaries may imagine that they slumber on their posts. But theirs is a silent way, and their endeavours, though little seen or heard, have, under the Divine assistance, produced some effect. It would be enlarging on a well-known tale to dwell upon the sorrows that a Hindoo must bear, and the struggles he must make, before he can renounce his religion, "There are a great many elephants in the woods, in this part of India, but they are not so much esteemed as those which come from a warmer latitude; we have not met with any, although sometimes they are to be seen frequently enough, and have been known to come down and attack the tame ones. When they are met in herds they are not prone to mischief; but a solitary one, driven perhaps for some breach of law from its associates, is generally ready to offend. It is somewhat appalling, when not quite prepared for the onset, to hear the crackling of the wood, as a wild herd rushes through it. In travelling through Assam, I have heard that this is frequently experienced. And in the interior of Ceylon, have listened myself with astonishment to the tremendous sound. The elephants sometimes display a great deal of humour in their attacks. After having routed the party, who generally leave their goods behind, they amuse themselves by a most minute examination of them. and take real pleasure in their destruction, I remember a narrow pass in the kingdom of Kandy being a long time guarded by one elephant, who determined to allow no one to go through it without paying him tribute. On his first appearing at the mouth of it, he had frightened a cooly laden with jaggray, a preparation of sugar; the fellow, throwing his burthen down, ran away. The elephant picked it up, and finding it excellent, resolved upon levying a similar tax upon all future travellers. As the pass was on the highway to Eandy, he could not have chosen a better position for his purpose; and 'no trust,' although not written upon his gate, was distinctly enough netified to all passengers. The circumstance soon beupon his gate, was distinctly enough netified ous blandishment of air, to conceal the ordinary view of the interior through openings that to all passengers. The circumstance soon bedesign on the pocket of the stranger; but it is were protected by gratings curiously and elacame generally known, and no cooly ventured in the nature of things that the design should borately wrought. In the farther and dark to pass that way without having prepared a sop exist.

for the Cerberus who guarded it." | sions, i

But here we must halt; and propose next week to resume our march, under the enter-taining command of Captain Skinner.

The Heidenmauer; or, the Benedictines. By the Author of the "Prairie," the "Bravo," &c. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE have not these volumes in a sufficiently perfect state to pronounce a decided opinion on their merits; but this we must say, that we are exceedingly pleased with what we have read, and think that the Heidenmauer (the sample.

"It was a bright autumnal day when we re-I was just bitterly regretting our precipitation, when the church-tower of Duerckheim peered We debated the question of proceeding, or of stopping, in a good deal of doubt, to the moment when the carriage drew up before the sign of the Ox. A substantial-looking burgher came forth to receive us. There was the pledge of good cheer in the ample development of his person, which was not badly typified by the sign; and the hale, hearty character of his hospitality removed all suspicion of the hour of reckoning. If he who travels much is a gainer in knowledge of mankind, he is sure to be a loser in the charities that sweeten life. Constant intercourse with men who are in the habit of seeing strange faces, who only dispose of their services to those that are likely never to affinities of a more permanent intercourse, ex-

The passion of gain, like all other passions, increases with indulgence, and thus do we find those who dwell on beaten roads, more rapacious than those in whom the desire is latent, for want of use. Our host of Duerck. heim offered a pledge, in his honest countenance, independent air, and frank manner, of his also being above the usual mercenary schemes of another portion of the craft, who, dwelling in places of little resort, endeavoured to take their revenge of fortune, by shewing that they look upon every post-carriage as an especial god-send. He had a garden, too, into which he invited us to enter, while the horses were changing, in a way that shewed he was "Heathen Wall"—not to suffer this name to simply desirous of being benevolent, and that be a puzzle to the circulating libraries) is a he cared little whether we stayed an hour or a spirited picture of those feudal times in Ger- week. In short, his manner was of an artless, many, when the burghers were beginning to kind, natural, and winning character, that feel rather than to know their influence; when strongly reminded us of home, and which at the usurpations of Rome began to tremble to once established an agreeable confidence that is their fall, and the doctrines of Luther first to of an invaluable moral effect. Though too exawaken the minds of men. A very pleasant perience blindly to confide in national chaintroduction is prefixed. Take one day for a racteristics, we liked, too, his appearance of German faith, and more than all were we pleased with the German neatness and comfort, turned to the left bank of the Rhine, on the of which there were abundance, unalloyed by way to Paris. The wishes of the invalid had the swaggering pretension that neutralises the taken the appearance of strength, and we hoped same qualities among people more artificial. to penetrate the mountains which bound the The house was not a beer-drinking, smoking Palatinate on its south-western side, and to caravanseral, like many hotels in that quarter reach Kaiserslautern, on the great Napoleon of the world; but it had detached pavilions in road, before the hour of rest. The main object had been accomplished, and as with all who might, in sooth, take his rest. With such inhave effected their purpose, the principal desire ducements before our eyes, we determined to was to be at home. A few posts convinced us remain, and we were not long in instructing that repose was still necessary to the invalid. the honest burgher to that effect. The decision This conviction, unhappily as I then believed, was received with great civility, and, unlike came too late, for we had already crossed the the immortal Falstaff, I began to see the proplain of the Palatinate, and were drawing near to the chain of mountains just mentioned, which out having a pocket picked. The carriage was are a branch of the Vosges, and are known in the country as the Haart. We had made no Notwithstanding the people of the house spoke calculations for such an event, and former exconfidently, but with sufficient modesty, of the perience had caused us to distrust the inns of state of the larder, it wanted several hours, this isolated portion of the kingdom of Bavaria. I was just bitterly regretting our precipitation, though we had enjoyed frequent opportunities when the church-tower of Duerckheim peered above the vineyards; for, on getting nearer to unseasonable. Disregarding hints, which apthe base of the hills, the land became slightly undulating, and the vine abundant. As we love of gain, our usual hour for eating was approached, the village or borough promised named, and, by way of changing the subject, little, but we had the word of the postilion that the post-house was an inn fit for a king, and as to the wine, he could give no higher eulogium "We called Duerckheim a city, mein Herr," than a flourish of the whip, an eloquent extended to the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest that the largest is the largest to the wine, he could give no higher eulogium the largest, the time has been when it was a contained to the largest that the largest is the largest that the largest th the largest, the time has been when it was a capital!" It is the history of this site which originates the ensuing story.

The following scene of penance, for an attack upon a powerful monastery, appears to us best calculated for separate extract; it is a most graphic picture of the manners of the age.

"The ancient church of Einsiedlen (for the building has since been replaced by another still larger and more magnificent) had been raised around the spot where the cell of Saint Meinard originally stood. The chapel, reputed to have been consecrated by angels, was in this revered cell, and the whole stood in the centre of the more modern edifice. It was small in comparison with the pile which held it, but of suffineed them again, and who, of necessity, are cient size to admit of an officiating priest, and removed from most of the responsibilities and to contain many rich offerings of the pious. affinities of a more permanent intercourse, ex. The whole was encased in marble, blackened hibits the selfishness of our nature in its least by time and the exhalations of lamps; while attractive form. Policy may suggest a speci. the front, and part of the sides, permitted a of the Mother and Child. Their dresses, as is these spoons, which may be of use in some of usual at all much-worshipped shrines, were loaded with precious stones and plates of gold. The face of each had a dark and bronzed colour resembling the complexion of the far east, but which, probably, is a usage connected with the association of an origin and destiny that are superhuman. The whole was illuminated by strong lights, in lamps of silver-gilt; and the effect, to a mind indisposed to doubt, was impressive, and of a singularly mysterious in-

"The sacristy was empty, and they awaited still in silence, while the music of the organ announced the retiring procession of the monks. After some delay, a door opened, and the Abbot of Einsiedlen, accompanied by Bonifacius, appeared. They were alone, with the exception of the treasurer of the abbey; and as the place was closed, the interview that now took place was no longer subject to the vulgar gaze.
Thou art Emich, count of Hartenburg-Leiningen, said the prelate, distinguishing the noble, spite of his mean attire, by a single glance of an eye accustomed to scan its equals; a penitent at our shrine for wrongs done the church, and for dishonour to God?' 'I am Emich of Leiningen, holy abbot!' Dost thou disclaim the obligation to be here?' 'And a penitent; the words for being here being bitterly added in a mental reservation. The abbot regarded him sternly, for he disliked the reluctance of his tongue. Taking Bonifacius reluctance of his tongue. Taking Bonifacius apart, they consulted together for a few minutes; then returning to the group of pil-grims, he resumed: 'Thou art now in a land that listeneth to no heresies, Herr von Har-tenburg, and it would be well to remember thy vow and thy object. 'Hast thou aught to say?' Emich slowly undid his scrip, and sought his offerings among its scanty contents. 'This crucifix was obtained by a noble of my house, when a crusader. It is of jasper, as thou seest, reverend abbot, and is not otherwise wanting in valuable additions." abbot bowed in the manner of one indifferent surer to accept the gift. There was then a brief pause. 'This censer was the gift of a noble far less possessed than thee!' said he who kept the treasures of the abbey, with an emphasis that could not easily be mistaken.

Thy zeal outstrippeth the limbs of a weary man, brother. Here is a diamond that hath been heir-loom of my house a century. 'Twas an emperor's gift!' 'It is well bestowed on Our Lady of the Hermits; though she can boast of far richer offerings from names less known than thine.' Emich now hesitated, but only for an instant, and then laid down another gift. 'This vessel is suited to thy offices,' he said, 'being formed for the altar's services.' Lay the cup aside,' sternly and severely interrupted Bonifacius; 'it cometh of Limburg!' Emich coloured, more in anger than in shame, however, for in that age plunder was one of the speediest and most used means of acquiring wealth. He eyed the merciless abbot fiercely, but without speaking. 'I have no more,' he said; 'the wars, the charges of my house, and gold given the routed brotherhood, have left me poor!' The treasurer turned to Heinrich with an eloquent expression of countenance. Thou wilt remember, master treasurer, that there is no longer any question of a powerful simply before the monk, who gazed at it in baron,' said the burgomaster; 'but that the little I have to give cometh of a poor and saddled town. First, we offer our wishes and our prayers; secondly, we present, in all humility, the heart which loved him now belongs to duced in them, in the part before us, appear to the natural three results to the natural three results and the vestigations which have been made into carried the testing the little I have to give cometh of a poor and saddled town. First, we offer our wishes and our prayers; secondly, we present, in all humility, the heart which loved him now belongs to extremity of this sacred chapel were the images and with the wish they may prove acceptable, thy many ceremonies; thirdly, this candle-stick, which, though small, is warranted to be of pure gold by jewellers of Frankfort; and, lastly, this cord, with which seven of our chief men have grievously and loyally scourged themselves, in reparation of the wrong done thy brethren.' All these offerings were graciously received, and the monk turned to the others. It is unnecessary to repeat the different donations that were made by the inferiors who came from the castle and the town. That of Gottlob was, or pretended to be, the offending horn which had so irreverently been sounded near the altar of Limburg, and a piece of gold. The latter was the identical coin he had obtained from Bonifacius in the interview which led to his arrest, and the other was a cracked instrument that the roguish cowherd had often essayed among his native hills without the least success. In after-life, when the spirit of religious party grew bolder, he often boasted of the manner in which he had tricked the Benedictines by bestowing an instrument so useless. Ulrike made her offering with sincere and meek penitence. It consisted of a garment for the image of the Virgin, which had been chiefly wrought by her own fair hands, and on which the united tributes of her townswomen had been expended in the way of ornaments. and in stones of inferior price. The gift was graciously received, for the community had been well instructed in the different characters of the various penitents. 'Hast thou aught in honour of Maria?' demanded the treasurer of Lottchen. The widowed and childless woman endeavoured to speak, but her power failed her. She laid upon the table, however, a neatly-bound and illuminated missal; a cap, that seemed to have no particular value, except its tassel of gold and green, and a hunting horn; all of which, with many others of the articles named, had made part of the load borne on the furniture of the ass. 'These are unusual gifts at our shrine!' muttered the monk. Reverend Benedictine,' interrupted Ulrike, nearly breathless in the generous desire to avert pain from her friend, 'they are extorted from her who gives like drops of blood from the heart. This is Lottchen Hintermayer, of whom thou hast doubtless heard.' The name of Lottchen Hintermayer had never reached the treasurer's ear, but the sweet and persuasive manner of Ulrike prevailed. The monk bowed, and he seemed satisfied. The next that advanced was Meta. The Benedictines all appeared struck by the pallid colour of her cheek, and the vacant, hopeless expression of an eye that had lately been so joyous. 'The journey hath been hard upon our daughter,' said the princely abbot with gentleness and concern. 'She is young, reverend father,' answered Ulrike; 'but God will temper the wind to the shorn lamb.' The abbot looked surprised, for the tones of the mother met his ear with an appeal as touching as that of the worn countenance of the girl. 'Is she thy child, good pilgrim?' 'Father, she is; Heaven make me grateful for its blessed gift!'

Another gaze from the wondering priest, and he gave place to the treasurer, who advanced to receive the offering. The frame of Meta trembled violently, and she placed a hand to her bosom. Drawing forth a paper, she laid it

The abbot bowed, hastily signing to the inferior to accent the offering; and be walked saide to conceal a tear that started to his eye. Meta at that moment fell upon her mother's breast, and was borne silently from the sacristy."

There is a most touching and natural sear between the baron and the burgomaster's wife but, more connected with the progress of the tale, we would only point it out to the readers attention; and must now leave the Hedermauer till next week, when we shall be better able to offer our praise to it as a whole. (er. tainly Mr. Cooper loses no attraction on new ground

Boucher's Glossary of Archaic and Province Words. Part I. London, 1832. Black and Co.

THE name of Boucher is so associated with the history of the early language and literature of England, that it is unnecessary to explain to many of our readers the nature of the collections which he formed, especially as they have been described in our pages, though some time ago. To more general reader, however, it may be requisite to mention that he was rector of Epsom,—that he was a student and a scholar,—that, for the greater part of a long life, he devoted himself towards the formation of what he, in common with others, felt to be a desideratum, a glossary to early English writers. The sources from which he derived his information were authentic: they consis of our old chronicles, our early poets, romanos. and plays. He examined our ancient len documents, and extracted from them such uncommon words and phrases as had perished since the era of their composition. Nor vi it to written authorities alone that he confined his attention: he knew that much, very much, of the early language of England is preserved in the daily parlance of our rustics, and that the dialect spoken by them is not, as is too frequently imagined, a tissue of barbarisms, but a portion of the once-authorised language of our ancestors. Impressed with a conviction of their value, he was a realous and successful collector of provincialisms; and by the frequent opportunities he had of residing in various parts of the country, he became atquainted with the different aspects assumed by dialects in distinct localities, by a comparison of which he detected their original formation. After having spent many years in collecting and preparing his work, and after the greater portion of it was ready for the press, the labours of Mr. Boucher were terminated death. A specimen of this Glossary, containing the letter A, which appeared under many disadvantages a short period after the decease of its highly-gifted author, is well known to those who investigate the history our language; and its merits are of such a nature as to secure for Mr. Boucher a high rank in the estimation of English philologists.

After the lapse of more than twenty year a portion of this collection is at length made public; and it will be seen by the title that the editorial care of the public. tion has been intrusted to gentlemen, who from a similarity of pursuits, are qualified do it justice. It will also be remarked the it is proposed to embody with the labours.

Mr. Boucher the result of the numerous it. vestigations which have been made into ear be taken from writers of an earlier era of our language than that which is commonly used for the purpose of philological investigation; and this circumstance enables the inquirer to detect the principle of the formation of words, which, in the dress of a subsequent age, have frequently become so disguised as to elude discovery. Use has been made of the manuscripts of the British Museum, and a considerable number of the extracts given from them have a value beyond that of barely elucidating the word under which they are cited; for they contain curious notices of dress, customs, diet, household regulations, and other subjects equally interesting. We allude to the curious articles ambrie, ane, anneal, antic, ape, aroint, arvel-bread, assay, Auld-Nick, and others.

But we must, before referring to them by way of illustration, mention the Introduction, which, with some repetitions, and, we think, questionable hypotheses, is a very sensible and able essay. Speaking of the absence of dialect in the language of Rome, Ireland, and America, the author observes -

"Terence, the only dramatic writer of any reputation in the best age of Roman literature. seems to disdain any such adventitious aids. So far from adapting his language to his characters, his 'Davus' is distinguished not only for extraordinary sagacity and shrewdness, but speaks as correct, as pure, and as elegant Latin as any of the other personages. This singular absence of dialect is an extraordinary trait in the character of this extraordinary people; and seems directly to contradict what I had conceived to be a fact without a single exception. viz. that wherever a people and a speech were cultivated, there dialect would certainly be found. Whereas we have now found not only that untutored savages speak in a great variety of dialects, but that there has been at least one instance of a cultivated and highly-improved people who had little or none. Few such cases, I believe, occur in the history of the world. I ought perhaps to except the United States of America, in which dialect is hardly known; unless some scanty remains of the croaking, guttural idioms of the Dutch, still observable near New York; the Scotch-Irish, as it used to be called, in some of the back settlers of the Middle States; and the whining, canting drawl brought by some republican, Oliverian, and Puritan emigrants from the West of England, and still kept up by their undegenerated descendants of New England, may be called dialects. To a certain degree, Ireland also is in a similar predicament: there are some, but they are inconsiderable, diversities, in the native Irish; and this too is nearly the case as to their English. I can no otherwise account for this peculiarity in the history either of the Romans, the North Americans, or the Irish, than by referring it to the peculiarities that prevailed in the history of their first population. The first settlers of England consisted of various tribes from the continent, slowly coalescing into one nation; whilst her colonies in Ireland and in America trace their original to a few active English cities, London, Chester, Bristol, and the like; whose phrases and accents are yet discoverable in the speech of the colonists. In Virginia, one of the oldest of the British settlements, we still hear such terms as holp for help, mought for might; and several others now become obsolete here, but which were in full currency at the time when that colony was first planted. Dublin retains more of the Cheshire and Lancashire speech; whilst the Cork accent is a disgusting union. It has all the laziness of the brogue, joined to the pertness of Somersetshire; a marriage of contraries, that produces a very deformed offspring.

In another part the author is very severe on the American tongue, with its innovation; but as many of the words he quotes are now equally rife in England, we suppose that had be lived to our day (as is hinted in a note) he would have spared these remarks against "t to advocate," "demoralising," "to progress" (still unadopted), "grades," "memorialised," "the " "influential," &c. &c. By alone minister. the by, we see he uses the noun "spread" himself. We shall only quote farther from the Introduction a brief view of the Saxon language.

"It has been usual to divide and distinguish the prevalence of the Saxon speech in this kingdom by three epochs; and Hickes has marked them with great accuracy and pre-cision. The first is that which was spoken, for a space of at least 300 years, from their first settlement among the Britons, to the coming in of the Danes; when, borrowing from, as well as lending to, their new co-patriots, the Britons and the Picts, it is probable the purity, if not the simplicity, of both was for a while impaired by such random inwas for a while impaired by such random interchanging. The language of this period may be called the Britanno-Saxon. The next is the Dano-Saxon, which prevailed, and more especially so in the northern parts of the island, for a space of 274 years, till it gave way to the Norman-Saxon, which commenced at the Conquest, and lasted till the time of Henry II. Of the language in the first of these periods, no specimens now remain, excepting a small metrical fragment of the ge-nuine Cædmon, inserted in Alfred's version of the 'Venerable Bede's Ecclesiastical History,' lib. iv. cap. 24; and which Cædmon is said miraculously to have composed, when dreaming, notwithstanding its actually being neither more nor less than a translation from the Latin; of which language the idiom is preserved even in this rude version. The reader will find a copy of this curious piece in 'Hickes's Anglo-Saxon Grammar,' i. 187; and another, differing materially in its orthography, in Wanley's Antiquitates Literature Septentrionalis,' p. 287. But this is not the case as to the others; and such was their extreme inattention either to correctness or elegance, during the dominion of those little less than savage tribes, composed of the scum and the dregs of various nations,—but all going under the general denomination of Danes, and sometimes of Nortmen, - that their speech partook of their own character, and became barbarous. No modern dialect, nor even those of less enlightened periods, can bear any comparison with the gross barbarism which in those days must have prevailed even in courts. Thus we find mec, mek, and meh, for me; bec and beh for be, thee; juh for eop, you; iuerr and iuerre for eopen, your; usic, usich, usig, and usih, for ur, us, or we; with countless other varieties and corruptions in almost every word, all equally wild, grotesque, ludicrons, and absurd. From this charge, however, it is fit that the writings of King Alfred, and the beautiful poetical Paraphrase usually ascribed to Cadmon, which are supposed to belong to this period, be excepted.

We now turn to the Dictionary itself, and feel how difficult, impossible, it is to convey to our readers an adequate idea of its great interest and merit: we, however, select a few quotations, the same time be found curious and entertaining not only to the philologist, but to every class. At the eighth definition of the letter A we are told-

"A, with the addition of the two Lat. words per se, is used by some of our ancient poets to denote a person of extraordinary merit, a nonparell.

In faith, my sweet honeycomb, I'll love thee, A per se a.

Willy Beguird.

That is the A per se of all, the cream of all.

Blurt Master Constable, 1602.

It is difficult to say whether this peculiar phrase originated from those depositaries of ancient manners and usages, village school-mistresses; but the fact is well known, that children are first taught, as the element of all learning, an intimate acquaintance with A by itself a; as well as with round O, and Q in a corner. The character &, which stands for and, is also still called and per se and. Nor is the idiom without a precedent of the highest authority: $i\gamma \omega \ u\mu \ \tau \circ \Lambda$. Apocal i. 8. Martial, Epig. ii. 57, and ii. 27, calls Codrus the ' $\Lambda\lambda\varphi\alpha$ penulatorum;' just as we say king of the beggars. Gawin Douglas uses this letter with a happy effect in his address to Virgil, in the preface to his translation, in which he styles him 'A per se.' Pref. p. 3. I apprehend that the reason of A being used to denote excellence or pre-eminence, is because it is the first letter of the alphabet. Thus Chaucer (in the beginning of Tr. and Cr.) in describing his heroine, says-

Among these othir folke was Crescids, In widdowe's habit blake; but nathéles Right as our first lettir is now an A, In beauté first so stode she makéles.

The phrase is sometimes used without a, as in the following instance :-

They say he is a very man, per se.

Shakesp. Tr. and Cres. i. 2."

The word Aber is thus explained :-

"The fall of a lesser river into a greater: the mouth of a river; a port, or harbour. Thus Abergwayn, the Welsh name of the harbour of Fishguard in Pembrokeshire, does not denote, as aber generally does, the fall of a lesser river into a greater, but a harbour, or haven. See Cambrian Register, i. 240. It is thus defined by Gir. Camb.: 'Aber, Britannice dicitur Leland, Coll. iii. 75; Id. Itinerary, v.; Diot. Antiq. Syllabus, 39. Hence Aberdeen, Aberford, Abergenny or Abergavenny, &c.; hence also, in the opinion of Leland, the Severn, or Sabrina, and the Humber. See Coll. v. 65, and Comment. in Cygneam Cantionem, Itiner. v., where he offers it as a fair conjecture, that Aber Britannicum, in Humber degenerasse. And this conjecture receives no slight confirmation from the circumstance that abar in the Gael. (which Shaw, forming his judgment merely, as it would seem, from some local and limited use of the term, says, signifies a marshy or boggy piece of ground) is, in Scotland, very commonly, like Humber, changed into Inver, as Inverary, Inverness, &c. See Stoddart's Remarks on Local Scenery and Manners in Scotland, i. 232. A Welsh writer of no ordinary merit (see Camb. Reg., ut supra), unawed by the extreme but laudable jealousy of his countrymen for the honour of their language, suggests that Aber may possibly be derived from the Lat. verb aperio, to open; but it is much more probable that aperio is the derivative, and aber its Celt. theme; inasmuch as, besides the Gael. abar, abar in Corn. likewise means a gulf, whirlpool, and also a place where two or more rivers meet. See Pryce's mixture of the brogue and Bristol, a most as the fittest in our opinion to do this, and at | Cornish Dict. From Aber, portus, is derived

p. 4, 6, 7."

The word Ayog is another good example: be of uncertain etymology. He, however, says it may possibly be derived from the Fr. low phrase agogo; as, ils vivent agogo, they live to an ape in a man's hood, &c. To lead apes in their wish. This definition is by no means hell, said of a woman who lives and dies single. satisfactory, nor can it be supplied by any; thing more than mere conjecture. The meaning of the word in the different instances adduced by him is, elated, looking high. We are told, that when the Norwegians were in possession of the Western Isles, they erected forts or towers all along the coast, placing watchmen in them, who were to keep a constant look-out, and alarm the country by lighting of fires, when danger approached. These watchmen went by the name of goksmen. The literal import of gok, it seems, is to look high; and, if so, is the very same as gove, known to, and used by, the common people all over the north of Scotland. To gove about, is to look about one; at the same time stretching out the neck, and elevating the head, to see further and better. Formed on this idea is Balgore, the name of a gentleman's seat in the neighbourhood of Aberdeen, from the Gothic word bal, an house, and gove, to see far off; so that Balgore denotes the house with a prospect. Gogules are a species of spectacles, and gougleeyes are projecting eyes. In the Heb. THE (ghah) signifies altum, excelsum esse, a rising ground, &c.; and w (gag), a derivative of that verb, signifies the root, or most eminent part of a building. Here, then, we have an elc. mental word very nearly resembling gok, gove, goggles, and agog, as those terms have a reference to height, or elevation. In the language of the Las Bretons, one of the Celtic dialects, gaug or coug, which in their orthoppy do not differ from gog, denotes a hill, a mound of earth, a terrace, or elevated piece of ground; and sometimes, metaphorically, proud and lofty. Acog, therefore, if deemed a derivative from this Celtic origin, may naturally be resolved into a-gaug; which will naturally mean a-high, or on high; and, figuratively, will signify elate. But see the ingenious conjectures on the origin of this word in Mr. Brockett's Northern Glossary, in roce.]"

Our next samples are an "Ape," and "Apple of the Eye."

"Ape. This term was formerly applied to a fool: thus, ' to put on his head an ape,' and to put an ape in his hood,' both meant to make a fool of a man; and ' to put the ape in a man's hood' was to outwit him.

By their fair handling put into Malbecco's cape.

F. Q. 111. iz. 31.

And thus she makith Absolon her aps.

And all his ernist turnith to a jape.

Charger: Urry, p. 26. L 231.

Or very possibly, real apes might sometimes be carried, for the fashion sake, on the shoulders of fops and simpletons. Shakespeare undoubtedly alludes to this custom in the following Dassage:

Because that I am little like an age, He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders. King Richard III. iii. 1.

In the print of Joan Cromwell, prefixed to the mind in such numbers into cloisters, and which account of her court and kitchen, is an apc, it had taken ages to excite, was not to be exsitting on her shoulder. The most striking tinguished all at once: accordingly it would features in the character of the ape are imitation and mimicry: qualities which, as implying Havre de Grace. See Hust. de Orig. Cadon. mimicry were regarded as little better than the case. To counteract and defeat a part of 5, 7."

talents for playing the fool well. 'Fools for supposed to be so unpropitious to the general counteract. merly, says Mr. Upton, ' used to carry apes interest of the community, some pion at "This word is admitted by Dr. Johnson to on their shoulders; that is, I suppose, the representations of apes: and this custom was, probably, the origin of the phrase of putting Hence shall we never mair hear tell Of lasses leading aper in hell.

Allan Rameay, L 358. Had you but liv'd where I did dwall, You had not now led aper in hell.
Shelton's Don Quirote, p. 618.

I must dance barefoot on her wedding-day, And, for your love to her, lead aper in hell. Taming of the Shrew, it. 1.

But 'tis an old proverb, and you know it well,
That women, dying maids, lead aper in hell.
London Profigal, i. 2. A writer, who has written a work expressly on the subject of old maids, ingenuously confesses, that he has attempted in vain to elucidate this mysterious proverb. In Hayley's Essay on Old Maids, iii. 157, we read: 'One of my ingenious friends is convinced that it was invented by the monks, to allure opulent females into the cloister, by teaching them, that if they did not become the spouses either of man or God, they must expect to be united, in a future world, to the most impertinent and disgusting companion. For my own part, I am disposed to rank an idea so injurious to virgins among the dismal and despicable superstitions of Egypt, as I find a passage in Hermes Trismegistus, which says, that those who die childless, are, immediately after their death, tormented by demons. I must confess, however, that, from the very high respect which the Egyptians entertained for the ape, the demons intended by Trismegistus could hardly be of that figure. I do not recollect to have seen the expression of leading apes in any English author, before Shirley, the dramatic poet. In his comedy called School of Compliment, printed in 1637, there is a scene in which, to humour the madness of Infortunio, the several characters on the stage pretend to be damned. Delia, among the rest, declares, that she was damned for being a stale virgin, and that her punishment was to lead apes in hell.' The references already adduced under this article (to which, no doubt, a very diligent search might add many more) are at least sufficient to shew that our laboured nor very accurate. I believe he might levelled. The sergeant was raising his care is have added, that no such saying is, either incur the levelled. have added, that no such saying is, either jocu- the last signal, to spare the victim eren the larly or seriously, in use among neighbouring nations. I also have sought, but have not found: my own opinion, however, is, that the master's side. He had been startled from notion was suggested soon after the Reformation by some zealous reformers, to answer a present purpose. Of all the changes effected by that memorable event, there was none which the multitude more regretted than the loss of monasteries and monastic institutions. Women, in particular, and more especially when they were of a contemplative and retired turn of mind, long sighed after the asylums, which well-born women, who happened not to be well endowed, had been used to find in nunneries; and many, in a spirit of sullen gloom, obstinately continued unmarried, even when they might have married. This was natural: the spirit which led females of a certain cast of not be difficult to find historical evidence to shew that, for a considerable time after the patriotic reformer hit on the device in quetion; which, it will readily be allowed, did 2 require any very extraordinary abilities. Is sibly, in this, as in other instances, its beinglevel to the capacities of the people, and we adapted to their taste, might be one rease. its succeeding so soon and so well." But here we must rest for a week.

Dramatic Stories. By T. Arnold, Esq. 3 702 London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley. THESE very animated and interesting volume containing stories of many times and some are truly what their name infers,—drama: Many of the incidents would, we think, > well on the stage; for example, "Schelmkind," Lionessa," and "the Impostor." The doc of the latter might be made very impressive. We wish we could give a whole story; as it is the following extracts are selected because the part best, and are, besides, a touching picture

A scene in a Conscript's life. - "The sc. geant and the priest advanced : the two friends embraced and kissed each other: Renuner retired to a spot where the other soldier was standing; and, kneeling on one knee, leant his face on his hands, still convulsively and uncosciously grasping the spade, as if for a support the other twelve men had formed a double in about fourteen paces to the front of Jean, ut. was between them and the embankment in white-clothed figure, thus set in relief by in dark ground beyond, presenting a clear aim to their muskets. He knelt down on his rest knee, resting on the other his left arm: he said in a firm voice 'I am ready.' The post was about to bind a handkerchief about the eyes; but he said, 'No-I pray I may k spared that:—let me see my death; I am a straid of it. The priest, after consulting the The priest, after consulting the sergeant's looks, withdrew the handkerdie Colon retired to the place where Reaumer at the other soldier were: and the priest, after having received from his penitent the assurance that he died 'in charity with all manking, and having bestowed on him a last benedician. and laid on his lips the kiss of Christian love. also retired on one side. Colon gare the mode of command—' Prepare: the twelve musker short pang of hearing the fatal word Fre when Rollo, with a loud yell, sprang to be slumber by the roll of the drum; and, looking up at what was going on, perceiving Jen Mineling all alone, and all so silent, error.

Reaumer's faintly-heard sobs, his institute segment to the segment to seemed to tell him his master was in 900 danger: his whining was unheard, or the heeded; he felt this too, and ceased it, but made a desperate effort to break the repe this held him, which, weakened as it was by he late gnawing and tugging at it when in the outbooks and start an outhouse at Charolle, soon gave way, and, a above mentioned, he sprang with a rell to master's side. But Jean's thoughts at its moment were too seriously engaged to be even Rollo: he only raised his right arm, gently put the dog aside, his own mild the flinching gaze still fixed on the soldiers him. But the dog was not checked by the movement of his master; still whining with his ears beseechingly laid back, he strike a want of originality, it would seem our forefathers deemed of little value: for talents for

(who, wondering at the pause since the last him to meet the regiment at Labarre; and I liar and popular than to the technical and word of command, had raised his eyes), that know—' 'And what business hadst thou to he should try to coax the dog off: he did so by advise a comrade in a breach of duty? Stand whistling and calling, but, of course, quite in back to thy place. And Reaumer retired, vain. It will be at once seen that, though this covered with shame. Napoleon beckened Jean vain. It will be at once seen that, though this has taken some time in the telling, all that to him; he came, and Rollo with him; and passed from the time of Rollo's arrival was little more than the transaction of a moment. Still it was a delay; and the men were ready to fire: and Colon, not thinking the incident of sufficient weight to authorise a suspension of the execution, however temporary, muttered, but his gaze drooped, though without qualling, beneath that of the piercing large gray eyes turned his face again to his men; and was again about to give the signal, when he was a second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important than the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down, good dog!' for Rollo was getting important the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts down the second time interrupted by hearing loud shouts dow from behind him, accompanied by the discharge tunate. 'Twenty-five years, sire,' Jean anof a park of cannon. He glanced towards the swered. 'Why hast thou disobeyed orders?' or a park of cannon. He glanced towards the swered. Why hast thou disobeyed orders? opposite hill at his back, whereon the village 'I could not help it, sire.' 'Couldn't help it! stood, and there he saw all was confusion and bustle—officers galloping to and fro, and the friends, and so longed to see them, that indeed men forming hurriedly into a line, he hastily I could not help it, sire.' 'Tis a strange gave the word, 'As you were;' for along a line excuse. Down! I say, good brute!' but at of road to the north-east of the hill he saw a the same moment that he said so, he ungloved thick cloud of dust, from which quickly plunged his hand, and gave it Rollo to lick: then, after out a group of horsemen, evidently officers; a short pause, added, 'And thou sawest thy the foremost not so tall as most of them, nor parents?' 'Yes, sire; and I was returning so graceful a rider as many of them, though he to the regiment, when —' 'Ah! this is true, sat firmly too, was recognised by Colon and his sergeant?' turning to Colon. 'Yes, sire, 'tis men (long before he was near enough for them true,' answered he: 'we met him about three the distinguish a single feature of his face) by his gray frock-coat, and small flat three-cornard; the soldiers shouldered their mus-kets, and prepared to sainte; and, in another

The distinguish a single feature of his face) by quarters of a league from — 'I need not have asked, though,' interrupted Napoleon; the man's face looks true. Thy name?' again addressing Jean. 'Jean Gavard, sire.—kets, and prepared to sainte; and, in another Down, Rollo! I fear he is troublesome to your minute, Napoleon, at the head of his staff, highness. Napoleon smiled—perhaps at the reined up on the top of the hill. He had left title—and answered, 'No, no; poor Rollo, he the march of the grand army some leagues behind, and ridden on towards Labarre, in order, Gavard; for the present I respite thee.' Jean with his wonted watchfulness, to take the detachment by surprise, and see what they were about. His eagle-eye, whose glance saw every thing like another's gaze, had at once detected the party on the hill, and he had ridden from the road at full speed up the slope to discover what the object of the meeting was: a glance, too, told him that; and while he was yet returning the salute of the men and their sergeant, he said, in a voice panting after his hard gal-lop, 'Hey? what's this?—a desertion?' 'Yes, sire—no, sire; not exactly,' stammered Colon. - Not exactly! what then?' asked Napoleon, in a rather peevish tone, his face assuming more escape from death, were like those of a man than its usual sternness; for hardly any thing wakened from a frightful dream, before his more provoked him than hesitation on the part of those he addressed. 'Absence against orders, sire,' replied Colon. 'Aha! for how long? Is proudly; 'but is he honest, and soher, and generally obedient?' 'Yes, sire; this is his shout of 'Live the Emperor!'" first fault.' 'M! how long has he served?'
'Three years last March, sire.' A louder and the least: the time is too far back for inhigher-toned 'M!' escaped Napoleon; and his Reaumer, who, with a timid step, had approached the emperor; and, kneeling on one knee, with clasped hands and broken voice, cried, Oh! sire, if you — if you would spare his life —he is innocent of—any intention to desert that I can—' 'Are you his brother?' inter-rupted the emperor. 'No, sire,' answered Reaumer; 'his friend—his dear friend.' 'And how know you what his intentions were? 'He told them me, sire; he only went last night to see his friends, and would have returned the same night, but that I _ I advised As this volume is addressed rather to the fami-

the latter, as though understanding the power and authority of the man his master thus obeyed, put his fore-paws against his stirrup, and whimpered imploringly up to him. Jean looked for a moment in the emperor's face, knelt on his knee, and seized the emperor's hand to kiss it; but Napoleon said, 'Stay, stay; thy dog has been licking it.' But this made no difference to poor Jean, who kissed it eagerly; and when Napoleon drew it away, it was wet with tears. He looked on the back of his hand a moment, and his lips compressed themselves as he did so. They are the tears of a brave man, sir,' said he, turning to a young officer at his side, on whose features the emperor's side.glance had caught a nascent smile:

Forward!' And at full gallop the party left Forward! And at full gallop the party left the ground.—Jean's feelings at this sudden senses are yet enough gathered together to remember all its circumstances. Jean had little time, however, to gather them on this that his dog?' 'Yes, sire: only a few hours.' occasion, for Reaumer's arms were, in a mo'A few hours! Who gave this order, then?' ment, around his neck; and the hands of
'General S., sire.' 'What character does his comrades—those very hands that a minute the man bear?' 'He is a brave man, sire.' before were about to deal him death—were ' He is a Frenchman,' retorted Napoleon, now gladly grasping his; and their many congratulations on his escape ended in one loud terest; and now and then we have to object to attention was at the same moment attracted by affected phraseology; but these are slight defects in so clever and amusing a work. We congratulate its author on his first appearance, and heartily desire to witness the future efforts, of which he has given so fair a promise.

> The Sources of Health and Discase in Communities; or, Elementary Views of "Hy-glène:" illustrating its Importance to Legislators, Heads of Families, &c. By Henry Belinaye, Esq. 12mo. pp. 261. London, 1832.

scientific consideration of that most important of all subjects, Health, we shall deem that we have done our duty by it most appropriately by quoting some of its views, rather than by discussing them. We have only to premise that it contains much valuable advice, and cannot be read without eminent advantage by every class of the community, embracing as it does, in a condensed form, much of the practical knowledge of the best medical works pub. lished either at home or abroad. The topics are naturally grouped, and follow each other in intelligent order. Their mode of treatment half a dozen of extracts will serve to shew, and at the same time furnish, as far as they go, some useful information to our readers. On the subject of "Emanations," the system of macadamising is incidentally alluded to, and we are told,-

" Before speaking of the odours and effluvia of which the atmosphere is the ever-ready vehicle, we must not forget to observe the effect of those subtle molecules or particles elicited and thrown constantly into the air by friction of artificial processes of manufactories, &c. Dust, or minutely-divided substances, produce the most sensible and pernicious consequences, when inhaled constantly or in large quantities. The eyes, the mucous membrane of the air-passages, and the skin, suffer se-verely from dust, whether it be merely from the mechanical irritation, or from the peculiar pungency of the pulverised substance. Hence the workmen belonging to the numerous trades, in the operations of which a degree of dust is unavoidable, are so often affected with coughs, consumption, asthma, hemoptysis, &c. In the large towns, a great improvement has been introduced in the streets — that which is called macadamisation; but if care be not taken to remove, during wet weather, the loose mud of the surface before dry heat and the friction of carriages turn it to powder - if, during dry weather, the surface be not regularly watered, and that sufficiently to keep down the dust during the whole of the day — if these precautions, we repeat, be not taken, the fearful annual average of deaths from diseases of the lungs, in the bills of mortality, will be inevitably increased by the irritation which the powdered granite horne in the atmosphere must necessarily engender in the respiratory organs. Although not strictly within the limits of our present subject, we shall take this opportunity of observing the danger incurred by delicate persons going out in the evening of a hot day, when large macadamised streets are watered. The cold and dampness of the atmosphere, produced by the evaporation, may prove very pre-judicial."

The destruction of furniture in macadamised streets in London, in consequence of the granite particles lodging in carpets, curtains, chairs, and all woollen, silk, cotton, and leather articles, is also immense. We will venture to say that these will not last half so long in good condition as in paved streets.

Respecting a fever prevalent at this very season, the remarks and cases cited are inter-

"The reader has, no doubt, heard of the existence of a fever called hay fever, attacking delicate persons during the harvest of that fodder. Herodotus informs us, that the Scythians became intoxicated by inhaling the vapour from the seeds of a kind of flax; and modern medicine has observed, that the odour alone of those who inhale it a disposition to anger and quarrelling. The Dictionnaire de Médecine de l'Encyclopédie Méthodique (tome vii. article Jusquiame) cites three examples in proof of The most remarkable is that of a married couple, who, perfectly harmonious and affectionate every where else, could not pass a few hours together in the room where they worked without engaging in the most bloody strife. The room was thought to be enchanted or bewitched. At length it was discovered that the whole blame of these terrible disputes was attributable to a large packet of the seeds of appears, or no longer betrays itself, and then hyoscyamus, placed near a stove; and their removal caused a perfect restoration of peace, disease from local miasmata, or influences. Two persons sleeping in a granary containing. There appears no limit to the violence of morthe seeds of hyoscyamus, were attacked by stupor and violent cephalalgia; and two others in Saxony are reported to have become mad after breathing the smoke produced by burning the same seed. Very strong smells have been occasionally supposed to produce epilepsy. The malva moschata causes, it is said, hysterical attacks - and the flowers of the nerium oleander, and the lily, have been fatal in more instances than one, after they had been long confined in a room. This took place on one well-authenticated occasion, among others, in England, in the year 1779. To 'die of a rose, in aromatic pain,' is an idea that loses some of its facetiousness, when we really find some we neglect occasions of studying disease on a quarter of an hour, to advance the finger of young women (for example, the daughters of large scale, of unravelling the intricacies of its a dial, which will only move at that interval of Nicholas I. Count of Salin, and of a Polish history, of tracing out contagion where it is time. We relate this from recollection, which bishop, &c.) dying immediately after respiring the perfume of some heaps of those flowers, or the perfume of some heaps of those flowers, or objects, we remain not only the blind slaves of violets. The rooms in which flowers are system, but the ready prey to new evils. Unmost diligently amassed by our ladies of fashion fortunately there are Christian as well as Maare generally the smallest; it is in the elegant hometan fatalists, amongst men of the most penetralia of the boudoir that they shut them justly esteemed abilities. The heat there is favourable to the rapid elicitation of odour from the dying plant - the atmosphere is scarcely disturbed by a current, and seldom renewed; whilst, in their natural situation, the cooler air moderates the evaporation, and its undulation wafts towards us a diluted fragrance." derogatory to the character of the medical profession) with which the public has been teased and disgusted on the appalling subject of cho-lera; into a belief of the disappearance of which we seem to be cajoling ourselves by thanksgiving in the church, and the suppression of returns, while its ravages are spreading in every direction.

"As soon as some new disease is imported from abroad, or arises in some spot at home, from which it spreads through the community, discussions and contentions arise on all sides as to its having simply an epidemical character, or one that is contagious, or both. These discussions are important, and the contention of men and discrepancy of facts is so great, that we should be perplexed indeed, did not a simple reflection occur to solve the difficulty. contagious, as well as the malignant character of diseases, depends mostly, if not entirely, upon the degree of vital energy, and the narrowness of the space, &c. within which those who suffer from it are confined. At Maderia, in the south of France, and elsewhere, consumption is deemed contagious, on account of the number of sufferers that resort to those parts. Authors have enumerated many other complaints which we deem non-contagious, as contagious under similar circumstances. For instance, Dr. Cleghorn and Dr. Fordyce, both physicians of high authority in medical science, have considered the ague as contagious, &c. &c.

found, of immoral and filthy habits, ground down, moreover, by poverty, labour, and misfortune — by every thing, in a word, that affects vitality — in such places it is that epidemics first appear, and then grow into contagion. If persons who can command comforts and conveniences are attacked by the invading disease, its contagious character disit is rashly pronounced only an epidemy, or bid power; sometimes it strikes down its victim with the rapidity of lightning, at others sweeps away thousands with the force of a hurricane: even in our temperate regions, we have lately seen 1600 or 1700 persons die in a night! In such a crisis, no one can think of the distrace from individual to individual, is forgotten. When, however, the storm is passed, and we can contemplate more calmly the wreck of life, it behoves us to derive from its examination precautionary rules for our guidance in dangers of more common occurrence. Should mixed up with the emanations from inanimate

"Educated persons, particularly official characters, should be familiar with the subject of contagion and infection, the better to preserve their country and their domestic circles from one of the greatest 'evils that flesh is heir to. If, when a new disease appears, men of science split into contending factions, a clear-sighted, The following are sensible observations, and well-informed person, but without the bias apply with much force to the silly disputes (so which is the result of an education exclusively professional, will be the best calculated to solve the important questions which these principles involve. To prove that such persons will be called upon to do so, we might state two instances of the obstinacy of professional men of the first character and abilities: both denied the contagious character of the plague; the first died in consequence of self-inoculation from a pestilential bubo; the other exposed himself to the contagion in a lazaretto, and expired, denying the existence of contagion -

'The ruling passion strong in death.' On matters of general health, important to the metropolis and to the country at large, it is said -

"We must here take the opportunity of remarking the slender precautions observed with regard to houses, which are, in this metropolis, so rapidly erected, of loose and slight materials: they are occupied immediately they are built, and the bad and damp mortar alone is fatal to many delicate persons; the foundations are vaulted, and are established on loose, damp remains of every description, that easily ferment. Nothing is more common, therefore, than to find in a healthy part of the town, a house, surrounded by others perfectly healthy, whose tenants are constantly labouring under slow fevers, scrofula, &c."

Again—" Honourable to the feelings of the

Therefore it would appear that epidemics, like tion of interment in England, it is not without the cholera, may be conditionally contagious, its bad consequences. The effluvium of a dead In the narrow streets, in the dark blind alleys, body, diffusing itself in a house, where the and small rooms, where human beings are minds and vital energy of its occupants are depressed by sorrow, and where the distressed relatives, perhaps, refuse necessary nutriment may produce the worst effects. To parry these evils, and the still more awful errors of interring the dead alive, a consultation of competent persons might be appointed to examine the dead, as soon as possible after decrase, and decide on the measures to be adopted. civil law of France has made an enactment on this subject, which, if strictly adhered to, would go far to prevent these three evils—crime, burying the living by mistake, and keeping the dead to infect the living. So deeply and awfully have some people been impressed with the horrors of premature interment, that, in one of the old imperial towns of Germany, a plan has been devised and adopted, as a security against this, as well as the other ease, but as an evil riding upon the wind - an evils we have enumerated. Every person, epidemy; contagion, which there is no time to after death, is carried to a well-ventilated room, constructed for that purpose, near the church; the corpse is warmly covered, and laid upon a table - the hands connected with strings, communicating with bells suspended in an adjacent room, where a watchman is constantly on duty. To ensure his vigilance, he is compelled, every however, is accurate in all essential particulars. Two persons were saved by this expedient.'

From these and other data, the author strenuously enforces the expediency of legislating for the sanative preservation of the people.

"The objects (he says) the most important to attain, are, a sufficient control of government over hospitals, &cc.; to bring such institutions for health to an unity of effort and a similarity of aim, and obtain from their reports, and those of every parish in the kingdom, a comprehensive body of knowledge to enlighten and control persons of the least authority in the state. The statistical reports which refer to the special topography, and to the re-culiarities of habits existing in England, once obtained, nothing would be more easy than to establish a perfect system of Hygiene in this country. The numerous councils of health country. abroad, not only afford us models for similar institutions, and for the mode of their proceedings, but they have also collected a great mass of facts and results for the enlightenment of their imitators. No modern nation, however. can lay claim to the first establishment of so salutary a system; neither are our sources of experience restricted to contemporaneous ar nals. Hygiène, like many splendid creations of human intellect, belonged to the bright ers of ancient civilisation, and has been merely awakened from its long slumber of the dark ages. Without detailing the systems of the Jewish, Persian, and Grecian nations, each of which possessed enlightened systems of laws for the preservation of public health, the Romans alone offer a complete model for their formation, and one that proves also that such a frequently not deep enough, or not properly system is as applicable to an immense and very populous community, as it is to a confined one. The classic reader need not be reminded of the titles and functions of those persons who, in Rome, presided over public salubrity; nor of the numerous enactments of that nation_from the laws that watched over the increase of population, to the minuter attention bestowed Again—"Honourable to the feelings of the on the maintenance of baths, aqueducts, nation as all must consider the procrastinasewers, &c. However, those who are bound by their offices to the government and guidance of their fellow-men, might do well to remark the contrast we mentioned before, as furnished by ancient Rome, while wisely insisting on the observance of laws replete with beneficent results, and its present state, when the decay of health and decrease of population accompany the neglect into which those laws have been permitted to fall. It is, indeed, the fate of that city to furnish many varied examples of all that is most striking and interesting in the history of man."

With this we conclude, cordially recom-mending Mr. Belinaye's work to the medical and general reader.

The Private Correspondence of a Woman of nated by the term cant-no story, no interest, no development of character; and not even that graceful and piquant style which gives animation to a nothing. What is the attraction, then, of these volumes ?-one whose reign is, to the credit of the improved taste of the public, entirely past. The day is over when titles and initials, Lady D., or the Duke of , charmed the bewildered reader, and "anecdotes of high life," whether true or false, silly or stupid, were taken on the authority of a title-page. Fashionable is as much worn out as mythological fable; and Almack's is an Olympus whose literary reign, whatever may have become of its galopade sovereignty, is quite over. What can any reader find in sentences like the following?—

"L—d N—g is lord of the manor, but his Iordship is not rich: his property joins the demesnes of the Duke of Norfolk and Lord Egremont. The Miss W-ms' were roaming there, accompanied by an old gentleman, a friend of L—d E——t's."

"The lively and merry Lady C.— L.—y, and the less pleasing Lady E.— F.—s, with two foreign women, Major S.—r, and the odious S.—o, composed her suite."

"Lady *, hearing of my embarras, came over from B.—th to relieve me, although suffering herself from chagrin; for the Dof *, who had then united herself en se-condes noces to Lord *," &c.

"Son Excellence le Chevalier de Bma tante ; ma seconde mère ; ma cousine An-_, Secrétoinette; Monsieur le Comte de Mtaire de Légation; le Capitaine de B___p_e."
But enough of these alphabetical arrangements; and we proceed to give a specimen of the sentiment and style, though we readily admit the truth of the original observation.

"But they are little aware how in their turn they are subject to the world's comments, and that its arrows are more particularly levelled against those hollow-hearted females of modern ton, who employ fair young emissaries to administer to their caprices, to bring them the daily gossip of the environs, and add to the attraction of their table, &c.; that those very Lady Babs, or Lady Marias, &c. &c. laugh at their dupes, while the guests of the preceding evening descant over the breakfast-table, and Thut Cadell.

In their morning lounges, on the stupidity of their assemblages;—not forgetting that their fair assistants, catching the contagion of bad example, also neglect the kind promoters of their own early pleasures! Will not these barren minds be likened in this world unto the salso examined upwards of fourteen of the likened in this world unto the salso examined upwards of fourteen of the salso examined upwards of fourteen of the likened in this world unto the salso examined upwards of fourteen of the salso upwards of the salso examined upwards of fourteen o

Protestant who moulders in the sleep of death beside another of his own creed, in exclusive obloquy, on some sterile spot of unsanctified earth that a papal government allots them, apart from those of its own tenets? But He who died for our salvation is 'no respecter of persons;' and he will award a higher place in heaven to the poor fisherman, who in guileless heart applauds the rising Power that gives him bread!"

What, in the name of this most unhappy and ill-used simile, have the Protestant burial-grounds abroad to do here?—or what comparison can be drawn between gossiping, which is our own choice, and a grave, which is not? There is some silly nonsense too about "that arch-fiend Voltairé," and Buonaparte, elegantly entitled Old Nick. Still, we cannot deny that burn and Bentley.

The Private Correspondence of a Woman of called "news," more truly gossip, or scandal:

Fashion—and private it might as well have of this these letters are full, and the anecdotes remained: sickly sentimentalities—antiquated prejudices—that species of morality have a decided to the signs of authenticity there have evident signs of authenticity. some of them: witness those of the Duchess of Dorset, Lady Combermere, &c. If our readers plead guilty to any such predilection, let them judge for themselves. We believe these letters are genuine, addressed to two ladies of rank, whose names have been mentioned to us; but, except to their own class and parties concerned, we do not see that they possess more interest than if they were sheer invention. It is, after all, the literature or talent in a publication which alone should recommend it; and not the mere circumstance of being written by a titled demirep, or sentimentalist, or pseudo-blue; and, unless for the "sensation" which these which these volumes may excite in the fashionable circles, the names, or indications of the names of so many of the persons who move in these fools' paradises, figure in their pages, we should say that they had better have been left to their privacy, so far as either profit or credit is concerned.

> The Smaller Hebrew and Chaldes Lexicon of Professor Simonis. Translated, &c. by C. Seager. 12mo. London, 1832. For the Author; and A. J. Valpy.

> MR. SEAGER, in his preface, informs us, that this slight hand-book, of between 60 and 70 pages, "contains all the words that occur in the Bible, together with their leading significations and some of the principal irregularities of each." From the esteem in which the larger work of Simonis is held by Biblical scholars, we have no doubt that this abridgment will be cordially welcomed by tyros in the Hebrew language. For ourselves we can only say, that such a compendious, and at the same time compact, lexicon would have been an inestimable prize to us when we first essayed the intricacies of Jewish literature. Among the other recommendations of the volume are, that it is translated by a gentleman every way competent to the task -is very neatly and clearly printedand, as a further guarantee of its value, is dedicated, by permission, to the learned Professor Lee, of Cambridge.

> C. Sallustii Crispi de Catilina Conjuratione deque Bello Jugurthino Libri. Recensuit, &c. H. E. Allen. 12mo. pp. 330. Londini, 1832. Apud Cadell.

most celebrated printed editions, and drawn from them such emendations to the text or elucidations in the way of notes, as they were capable of furnishing. We need hardly say, therefore, that this is a very excellent copy of the works of him who has generally been admitted to be Romana primus in historia: perhaps, on the whole, the most correct and useful hitherto published. But its utility would certainly have been greatly extended, had the notes been written in English instead of Latin, and had the work been accented throughout in the usual way, which, however hateful it may be to the eyes of the mature scholar, is of no mean value to the youthful student.

The Visit. 18mo. pp. 283. London, 1832. TARET.

This is another publication in which the high rank of the lady author, the prettiness of the getting up, with a lovely frontispiece and other embellishments, and the amiability of the design, must stand in lieu of literary merit or publishing importance. It is a harmless volume, enamoured of unadorned descriptions of the country,-an earl's mansion, some dependants and rushes, and a short tale of romance tacked to its close by way of rider. The fair writer, though sensitively alive to natural appearances, will forgive us for doubting her statement, page 9, that "the glow-worms were in great profusion on the turfy banks, giving such a lustre to the vegetation, that the naturally delightful verdure was vividly tinted by the pleasing combination of so many little lights," seeing that "the Visit" was made in the month of April, when glow-worms are rather more scarce than peaches. But criticism is not required on a thing like this; a gentle, wellmeant female toy, which Miss Bagster might read with pleasure and edification, and which is hardly addressed to higher intellect, though fitted by its sweet ornaments for the boudoirtable, to which we commend it.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

THE EXPEDITION TO THE NIGER.

BEFORE this meets the public eye, the commercial expedition for Central Africa will have sailed from Liverpool. As a jealous secrecy has (perhaps with great propriety) been preserved concerning it, we have not much to add to the accounts we have already laid before our readers. The equipment consists of the Quorra, a steam vessel of 200 tons, and another steamer of less burthen, which are expected to ascend the river as high as Boussa. Thence boats, and overland excursions, may convey our enterprising countrymen to places whither they may lesire to go.

As we have formerly mentioned, this is simply a mercantile speculation, though, in unison with the enlightened spirit of the times, it purposes to combine objects of greater and more general interest. The leading feature is to introduce British manufactures into regions hitherto unknown to the civilised world; and, with traffic, to diffuse improvement of every kind of which the natives may be found susceptible. The vessels are accordingly laden with articles most acceptable to the African population; and returns of African produce them even in the first instance.

As we have also stated, government has nothing to do with the outfit of this expedition. Lieut. William Allen, of the Royal Navy, proceeds with it; but without rank or command. as a passenger, instructed to make surveys and observations, for which we learn he is well qualified by his scientific attainments.

Richard Lander, to whom we owe this grand geographical discovery, may, of course, be considered as the head of the party which he accompanies in his third voyage to Africa. With him is associated Mr. Laird, jun., of Liverpool, as supercargo. Mr. Laird, we understand, is an able engineer, and otherwise intelligent and well informed. Mesers. Briggs and Harris are the master and surgeon; and we presume the surgeon to be a sufficient naturalist, and especially a botanist, competent to investigate the very important branches connected with these sciences, either for philosophical or commercial Altogether, we have fervent hopes respecting this design, and most heartily do we wish it success. We had almost forgot to notice that the travellers carry with them a number of copies of an address, prepared in Arabic by M. Salamé, and intended to explain the objects of their visit to the native chiefs and kings. These are on all kinds of coloured paper; and, being adorned with pictures of the two steamboats, are likely enough to be regarded not merely as ambassadorial letters, but as beautiful specimens of the fine arts by the sovereigns to whom they are presented.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT OXFORD.

[Proceedings from Original Sources concluded.] In addition to the curious facts stated by Mr. Scoresby in his paper on the effects of lightning, which struck the packet (see Lit Gaz. No. 806), it was further mentioned, that the first time, the lightning was attracted by the iron-work attached to the masts; it was thence conveyed between decks, everthrowing the bulk-heads, &c. in its passage, dismounting a piano, and finally making its exit by a leaden pipe, part of which it reduced to a honey-combed condition. As the electric fluid passed into the sea, it formed as it were a chasm deep in the water. During the interval between the first and second shock, the captain put up a conductor of iron-rod, with a chain attached to the mast-head: to this he attributes the salvation of his ship from entire destruction in the second instance.

A great part of the chain was fused by the intense heat, and fell in globules on the deck. A carpenter, working at the time of the first shock in the bread-room, was struck on the hand, and the limb was for some time paralysed. The electric shock produced an extraordinary effect on the iron-work of the ship, and also on the watches and chronometers. Three watches, lying under the pillows of three different persons, in separate births, were all stopped at the same time, though their owners were not sensible of any shock. The rate of a very exact chronometer was considerably altered. a portion of the steel from one of these watches thus magnetised, Mr. Scoresby constructed a compass, the first instrument of the kind probably which ever received its magnetic properties from the clouds. Mr. Scoresby examined the nails of the ship, and the knives and forks, and found they had imbibed the magnetic fluid

Though accidents by lightning are of frequent occurrence, yet it is probable that no similar example has ever been detailed with so much accuracy, accompanied by so many curious facts, as that now given by Mr. Scoresby. In the discussion which followed the reading of this notice, some facts were brought forward touching the efficacy of conductors in attracting lightning. An instance was mentioned in which a vessel unprovided with a conductor, lying in a harbour surrounded by others, all of which had hoisted their conductors during a thunder-storm, was alone struck by the light-

At the dinner at the New College, an opportunity was offered of discriminating from among the entire body now collected, the distinguished individuals who, each in their departments and in their provinces, had become eminent, so as to deserve the title of Lions.

Cambridge was strongly, worthily, and ably represented in the persons of Airy the astronomer, Whewell the mathematician and mineralogist, Sedgwick the renowned champion of geology, Babbage the logarithmetical Frankenstein. Each Society of London had sent forth its deputies; Davies Gilbert and children from the Royal Society, Brown the boast of the Linnean, Murchison, Fitton, and Greenough from the Geological, Vigors the manager of the fessor Hamilton, whose florid elequence christened the assemblage the Solemn Session of Science—the Amphytrionic Council of Learning. Scoresby was deputed from Liverpool; the venerable patriarch Dalton from Manchester; York sent forth the Rev. Vernon Harcourt the founder of the Society, and Lord Milton the ex-president; while Buckland, Convbeare, Rigand, Daubeny, and the brothers Duncan-the restorers of science in the University of Oxford, performed most ably the duties of entertainers.

The catalogue might reach the extent of Homer's, with as many more illustrious names as those already given; but it must be closed with the mention of two, as it were, from the ends of the earth; Sir Thomas Brisbane appeared on behalf of Botany Bay, whither it is agreeable to find that science has suffered transportation along with crime; and Mr. Lea, of Philadelphia, connected with some of the most eminent societies in the United States.

The account of one day's proceedings will afford a tolerably correct notion of the whole week.

At ten o'clock, the portico and passages of the Clarendon were crowded with groups gathering from all parts, who, after informing themselves of what was to happen in the various departments, from the affiches attached to the walls each morning, either betook themselves upstairs to the section whose proceedings best suited their taste; or lingered in the reading-room, well stored with papers and pamphlets; or may-be took a listless stroll in one or other of those delightful college-gardens - realisations of all that is told of the boasted groves of Academe. A pleasant and instructive hour, too, might be spent in the Ashmolean Museum, which now possesses a collection not unworthy of the University, thanks to the amiable brothers Duncan, who may be termed its renovators and re-founders.

At one, the Society united, and met in the

are anticipated by the shippers to remunerate | knives, for instance, sustained the weight of a | theatre, to hear one or other of the reports it various branches of science, which had been bespoke at the previous meeting at York, and had been prepared by their various authorduring the year. They were ten in number and will be considered most important conv. butions to science, and the names of the author the most distinguished in their various deparments that this country can boast. As manof them were too long to admit of heing rea entire to the meeting, and as a dry abstrac would give but a poor notion of their value are character, it will be advisable to offer here nathing more than a list. They are announced for publication together, in a cheap form, in the course of a few weeks.

L. Professor Airy on the Progress and Present State & Astronosmy, especially in this Country.

II. Mr. Lubbock on Tides.

III. Professor Cumming on the Progress of Themo-

III. Professor Cumming on the rangement of the Court of t

At the general meetings in the thestre, E well as at the occasional lectures in the evening. places were reserved for the ladies; Dr. Buckland having, with due consideration, ordered: Zoological. The deputies from Edinburgh certain number of BLUE tickets to be strack were Brewster and Forbes; from Dublin, Proandience.

Perhaps the most interesting occurrence during the meeting was the ceremony of conferring the Doctor's degree on Faraday. Brewster, Robert Brown the botanist, and Dalton author of the Atemic Theory. It took place on Thursday, on which day the usual routine was dispensed with, and the master and heads of colleges assembled in convocation, at ten o'clock.

The theatre was thronged. The undergraduates occupied the gallery; beneath it was placed a semicircle of ladies; while in the front seats sat the cardinal-like conclave of doctors of the University, in all the pomp of scarlet gowns, the vice-chancellor in their centre, and interspersed among them the most distinguished members of the Association, who had thus her expressly picked out and placed in posts of honour; while the si wolks crowded the floor of the building. After some preliminary business, the above-named savans were ushered in through the crowd to the steps in front of the vice-chancellor's seat, and severally presented to him by the orator, who recited their several names and merits in a Latin speech; site which, the vice-chancellor rose to receive them. and assigned them seats among their fellowdoctors, which they took possession of amidst the plaudits of the gallery, who, on such occasions, enjoy a liberty of expressing their approbation or disapprobation of individuals, similar to that exercised by the gods of a London playhouse at a pantomime

As the name of Dalton was announced, ass the venerable old man made his appearance. the applause was redoubled. We should guest his age to be past 70, and it struck us that his countenance bore something of the Newtonia caste in it.

It excited surprise with some to find that the Quaker sage had so far overcome the prejudices of his sect as to be induced to don the scarlet robe. To account for the fact sem to such an extent as to be capable, four weeks tinguishing the colour scarlet, and hinted that sive in the neighbourhood. what to other eyes appeared a bright red, might by him be mistaken for Quaker dun, or sombre olive. A meeting for scientific purposes, however, was an opportune occasion for poses, nowever, was an opportune occasion for a concession of prejudices. The University of Oxford had, on this occasion, in contradiction to the character for bigotry with which she is usually upbraided, delighted to shew honour to four persons, without regard to their being dissenters in creed from herself, solely in testimony of admiration of their high merits. Such an act redounds equally to the credit of those who have conferred and to those who have received the honour. The members of the Society of Friends, who have always held high rank among the followers of science, and many of whom were then present—for instance, Mr. Rickman the distinguished architect of St. John's College, Cambridge, Mr. Fox of Falmouth, and many others—appeared to look with peculiar complacency on the proceedings of the morning.

Sir Thomas has displayed his devotion to science by recollected that he is noted for a peculiarity states the event, of attracting fron; many of the the noble foundation of the observatory at Paramatts.

The life of Dalton has been one of toil, and till lately, he still discharged the ungrateful duties of a mathematical teacher, for the paltry remuneration of a few pence an hour. trifling testimony of respect, though it comes tardy, yet, from such a quarter, could not fail of being gratifying to the patriarchal philo-

As soon as the convocation broke up. robes were quickly thrust aside, and gowns and trenchers gave place to boots and spurs ; and in a few minutes a regiment of cavalry, two hundred strong, was assembled on Magdalen Bridge, in obedience to the appointment of Dr. Buckland. The Professor soon made his appearance, and, armed with the insignia of the geologist, the bag and hammer, put himself at the head of this class à cheval, which forthwith sallied out to explore the geological wonders of the neighbourhood. Instances have repeatedly been brought forward of the affinities between science and fox-hunting. The equestrian class of Dr. Buckland affords another proof of their intimate connexion; and wee to that daring geologist, who, untried in clearing hedges, ditches, and five-barred gates, engages to follow the scientific pack. He may perchance hear the first blast of the Professor's whistle; but he runs the risk of being thrown out, and very probably off, before the first burst of his eloquent and instructive harangue.

In the present instance the list of casualties was but small; the Professor, probably in consideration of the bad horsemanship of some of his suite, and likewise on account of the many pedestrian followers, conducting his troop at a slow pace, and making frequent halts; now to explain the connexion between agriculture and geology; now stopping by the side of a morass, which gave him an opportunity of in-troducing the subject of Irish bogs, and the impossibility of reclaiming them. At Shotover Hill, an interesting geological locality, he explained the superposition of the beds of the lias, which are well exposed to view there. He dwelt at some length on the stratum termed Kimmeridge clay. This bed is prolonged into Dorsetshire, and in it, at Weymouth, lies what is called the burning cliff. The cause of this combustion is the enormous quantity of pitch with which the stratum is charged at that spot, which, having been accidentally ignited, continues to burn, smouldering under ground. The estate of Lord Eldon, Encombe, lies upon this bed, and so much greater is the quantity of pitch there than at Weymouth, that during a thun-der-storm the smell of it becomes quite offenis now at a considerable distance from this spot; but should it spread in that direction. nothing can save the estate from total destruction, so large is the quantity of bituminous matter to feed a conflagration, if once excited there.

At Shotover Hill are seen some of those shaley beds so productive in monsters of the Saurian class; many of them of such a size, that their huge jaws would have made but a mouthful of a man and horse. The formation of crystal of selenite, which is daily going on here, is exceedingly curious.

The Professor explained in what manner tracts of marshy land might be drained, by taking advantage of the position of the substrata; and pointed out an instance where a suggestion of his own had been attended with the most complete success. The connexion of certain plants with particular soils next claimed his attention. The ground under his feet was covered with the weed called colt's-foot; a quantity of barren clay, dug out of the quarry hard by, had recently been spread over the surface of the ground. In a few weeks it bore a most luxuriant crop of colt's-foot, though the plant was not known in the neighbourhood before. The explanation of this is, that seeds of this plant are continually carried about in the air; but finding no congenial soil, take no root. No sooner, however, is the clay turned up from the depth of thirty or forty feet below the surface of the earth, than the floating seed collects and flourishes upon it.

In some cases, seeds lie long dormant in the ground; and it appears that Dutch clover must, at one time, have overspread the whole country: for so sure as you spread a quantity of soap-boilers' ashes over the ground, up will spring a crop of Dutch clover. The clover has long ago flourished on the spot-has exhausted the elements necessary for its support. When-ever these are supplied by the application of the potash, the seeds are revived and again sprout forth. The lecture occupied about six hours, to the delight of all present; and we only regret that neither our memories, nor space allowed us, will permit a more detailed account of it.

The bones of the Megatherium, which formed the subject of Dr. Buckland's evening lecture (see L. G. 807), were extracted at great expense by Mr. Parish from the bed of a river.

Their discovery was singular. A peasant, passing a river at a very dry season, saw something sticking out of the water. He threw his lasso over it, gave a tug, and brought ashore the enormous pelvis of the animal. The rest of the bones, consisting of the greater part of a skeleton, were obtained by turning aside the current, by means of a dam, constructed for the purpose above the spot, which extended into the channel.

It is a convincing proof of the perfection of the science of modern comparative anatomy (a perfection due almost wholly to the genius of Cuvier), that from the aspect of a single bone, say a tooth or a toe, the entire history of an animal now no longer in existence, and which has not existed in the memory of man, its haunts, its mode of life, habits, and food, can the more correctly and surely ascertained, than the figures of Mars or Mercury, or any other ancient deity, on an ancient sculptured frag-ment, can be determined by their attributes of the cock, or caduceus, or the like.

Dr. Buckland, who, in addition to that admirable faculty which he possesses of illustrating fa-

The burning cliff however abstruse in other hands, excels in the art of putting every one near him in good humour, did not let the present opportunity slip. He observed, that from the digging propensities of the beast, it might have been properly termed Old Scratch. And though all allusions to politics had hitherto been avoided, yet from the nature of his food, viz. yams, potatoes, and the like, he must indisputably rank as a radical: and certainly he did not force his way deep enough into the ground to become obnoxious to the appellation of boroughmonger.

The Professor's jokes will lose much in the repetition; but the best proof of their excel-lence were the aching sides, and hearty good humour, in which he sent his audience home to had Thus terminated Saturday of this agreeable week. The members had not, however. dispersed on Sunday. On that day a very excellent sermon was preached in St. Mary's Abbey, when Mr. Dalton, still in his red gown, was observed in the seat of the doctors, attentively listening to the very sensible discourse which emanated from the pulpit.

Thus ended the second meeting of the British Association. The experience of another year will produce many improvements in arrangement, and free the sectional meetings in particular from much of the confusion which this time impeded somewhat their proceedings. This may be truly said, that no one could have left Oxford without feelings of gratification at the kindness, attention, and hospitality, with which every individual of the Association was received by the members of that University.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE public support given to this Society is altogether unprecedented. At the monthly meeting, on Thursday, about thirty persons (amongst whom were the Marquess of Abercorn and other members of noble families) were elected into it; and during the last month, the incredible number of 34,000 individuals visited the gardens. The balance on the month's proceedings, in favour of the institution, was 9181.5s. A sale of the duplicate animals had taken place. The prices obtained, though not high, were satisfactory; and the council intend to practise the same measure from time to time, as occasion may require. A long report on the state of the farm was read and adopted. A member earnestly urged an extension and improvement of the museum, in order that the facilities afforded for the study of comparative anatomy might become more available to men of science. On the table was placed an egg of the curassow, which was dropped in the gardens; a circumstance of rare occurrence, there being only auother instance (in Holland, we believe,) of these birds producing eggs in Europe. The curassow is analogous to the American pheasant, large and beautiful. From certain experiments at the farm, it appears that carnivorous mammalia fed with two meals daily, do not continue in equally good condition with those which have the same quantity of flesh daily in one meal only. It further appears, that in the instance of the leopard, the temper changed for the worse; and thus animals of the genus felis might become more dangerous in a menagerie from the ferocity they would acquire under such treatment; and that, in another instance, the habits were altered as regarded exercise—a diminution of which, in confined animals, must be injurious to health. The inference deduced is, consequently, in favour of the accustomed able faculty which he possesses of illustrating fa-mode of feeding the purely carnivorous animals miliarly any subject upon which he may touch, with one meal daily.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

KING'S COLLEGE.

IT has seldom fallen to our lot to be present at a more gratifying spectacle than that we had the opportunity of witnessing on Friday, the 6th instant, in the large theatre of this Institution. We allude to the public distribution of prizes, which took place in the afternoon of that day, when his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury officiated as chairman, for the purpose of presenting to the most distinguished pupils in the College, as well as to those in the junior department, or School, the rewards that had been assigned to them by their precentors for their proficiency and good conduct during the past session. The interest of the ceremony was not a little enhanced by the reflection, that a period of scarcely nine months had elapsed since the first dawning of the Institution for the great purposes of education, when its Council were called upon thus publicly to testify their approbation of the progress which had been made by these youthful labourers in the field of knowledge, and that, too, in a manner so well calculated to stimulate them to a renewal of their exertions.

Such must always be the satisfactory result, when Religion, and its concomitant, Morality, are made the groundwork of a sound and liberal system of education, and when the mind of youth is taught to believe, that without a proper inculcation as well as appreciation of these sacred principles, all the learning that may be acquired, all the talent that may be possessed, are alike unprofitable and unavailing.

On this important subject, however, it would be superfluous in us to make any further observations, after the able manner in which the learned Principal of the College (the Rev. Mr. Otter) delivered himself on the day in question. It was obviously a source of the most heartfelt satisfaction to those parents who were present, and who had committed their sons to the bosom of this great and promising Institution, to hear the reverend preceptor dilate on the happy consequences resulting from the blending of religious with useful instruction; nor less so, to learn, in addition to the commendations of the professors and masters themselves, from the acknowledgments made by the Bishop of London and the Rev. Dr. D'Oyly (members of the Council), both of whom had carefully and critically perused the examination papers of the pupils, that those papers were not only highly honourable to their authors, but that they would even do credit to an institution of much longer standing than that in which they were then assembled. Amongst the many splendidly bound volumes that were lying on the table before the most reverend Chairman, we distinguished a monument of the genius of the accomplished translator of Oberon, Mr. Sotheby, which, it transpired, he had placed at the disposal of the Council, as the first prize in Classical Literature, to be given to the successful candidate among the College students.

As regards the system of instruction pursued in the School, by the able masters appointed to it, it appears to us to be at once judicious and well calculated to implant in the breasts of the pupils (of whom, we understand, there are at this moment two hundred,) a spirit of the highest emulation - a means which is far more likely to prove efficacious than measures of the most rigorous coercion. It was indeed gratifying to witness the exhilaration of a tiny urchin, not more than eight or nine years old, who it was stated could read Cornelius Nepos,

-standing on tip-toe, to receive at the hands of the highest dignitary of our church, the reward to which his good conduct and assiduity had entitled him!

Amongst the numerous friends and supporters of the Institution assembled together on this interesting occasion, we distinguished the Bishops of London and Llandaff, Lords Brownlow and Henley, Sir Robert Inglis, Rev. Drs. D'Oyly and Shepherd, Rev. J. Lonsdale, Wm. Cotton, Esq., Ald. Winchester, &c. &c. The remainder of the company were of the most respectable description, including many ladies; and the only subject of regret was, that, owing to want of room (although the theatre afforded accommodation for at least 800 persons), many were compelled to go away disappointed, being unable to effect their entrance.

We cannot conclude this notice without expressing our sincere hope, that an institution commenced under such favourable auspices. and entitled, therefore, to the support of every well-wisher to the welfare of the rising gene ration of this mighty metropolis-almost a kingdom in itself—will continue zealously to pursue the path it has chosen, and carefully endeavour to inculcate in the hearts of the youths committed to its care, the combined advantages of its own appropriate motto,-" Sancte et sapienter."

We subjoin the names of the parties to whom the prizes were awarded.

Senior Department.

Senior Department.

Theology. — 1st, J. A. Frere; 2d, H. J. C. Smith; 3d, E. Sleap; 4th, John Smith; 5th, Wm. Winchester.

Classics, Senior Class. — 1st, J. A. Frere; 2d, E. Sleap. —

Junior Class. — 1st, John Smith; 3d, George Sweet.

Mathematics. — 1st, R. A. Gordon; 2d, W. Pocock; 3d, F. W. Shaw; 4th, Robert Peppercorne.

Raglish Literature. — H. J. C. Smith.

French Literature — H. J. C. Smith.

French Literature — H. Tritton; J. E. Cooper.

Junior Department.

Sisth Class. — Matthison, Hatchard, Fincham, S. Williams, Boileau, Garvock.

Fifth Class. — Stone, Robinson, Canton, Warner, Collington, Hartley.

Third Class. — Hillard, Bourne, Calvert.

Second Class. — Foggo, sen., Heisch, Harrison, Nortis, Bailey, Collison.

First Class. — Bucke, Chapman, Rhodes, Shaw.

French Class. — Bucke, Chapman, Rhodes, Shaw.

We almost forgot to mention, that prizes were also presented by his Grace to the most distinguished pupil in each of the district Grammar-Schools in union with the College: with the exception of that at Stockwell, which is of very recent formation. The following are the names of the youths to whom these prizes were awarded.

Newman, Hackney Church of England School. Christie, St. Peter's, Pimlico ditto. Prout, Kensington ditto.

RIGHT Hon. C. W. W. Wynn in the chair. The donations were, from Madras Committee of the Society for Propagation of the Gospel, upwards of twenty volumes in Tamul and English, printed at the Vepery mission press, including the Pilgrim's Progress, Book of Common Prayer, Selections from the Old and New Testaments, Beschi's Grammar, &c. &c.; from the Rev. R. Yuille, missionary at Selenginsk, two MS. Lexicons in Tibetian and Mongolian, &c.

General Hardwicke exhibited a lithographic sketch of a man well known at Lucknow, some years back, for his ravenous appetite, being able to dispose of a whole sheep, for a morning meal, without inconvenience. The print comprises a portrait of the individual and of his girú, or priest, who wore a singular beard, about five feet in length. On each side are three compartments, in which are displayed Saturday.—Ed.

the different stages of the process of killing an eating a sheep raw, as executed by the subier of this account.

The paper on the architecture of the Him dus, by Ram Rag, with a large volume : drawings of sections, elevations, &c. of a lumns and buildings, and fifty-two beautifi drawings of the pillars in Trimulnaig's Chool try, at Madura, which were alluded to in the report of the council, were laid upon the table.

The paper read was an account of the Bakk tyári Mountains, by J. H. Stocqueler, Esq. 6 these mountains, which separate Khuzista from the south and east of Persia, no part culars have as yet been made known. Accidentation baving obliged the author to cross them in his road to Isfahân, he has in this paper drawn u a brief sketch of their characteristics, and the geographical position and names of the few in habited places to be found within their limits Though they do not extend over a greater space than two degrees of latitude and three or longitude, yet, from the ruggedness of their sides, it occupies ten entire days' travelling w cross them.

There was exhibited, and much admired, a fac-simile and translation of the Cufic Tombstone, described by Mr. Haughton in the second volume of the Society's Transactions: executed and presented to him by Miss Forbes, whose MS. Arabic Grammar was formerly noticed.

PINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Waiting for the Times (after an Adjourned Debate). Painted by Haydon; Mezzoint by T. Lupton. London, R. Ackermann. A HUMOROUS print, in which a reader engage upon a double sheet of the Times newspaper, is hidden, all except his legs, by the enormous paper; while another politician is impatiently waiting till he has done with his obviously not very short-lived task. We trust the latter is not a Berkshire freeholder; for we are sure, from his looks, he must be so incensed at the bestower of so much useful knowledge, that he would not give his vote to the proprietor of Bearwood, and (largely) of the Times, for keeping him so long from his truly "adjourned debate." The engraving preserves the charactet of this very clever composition to perfection.

The Author of Waverley. By W. Crombie. Ackermann.

A COLOURED sketch. If the face were as like as the limbs and attitude, it would be, what it is not—a striking resemblance. It only preserves the personal characteristics of this extra ordinary individual.

Landscape Illustrations of the Prose and Postcal Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.; with Portraits of the principal Female Characters. Part I. Chapman and Hall.

A PUBLICATION which, although small in its form, promises to be of great beauty. This first Part contains "Rose Bradwardine," engraved by W. H. Mott, from a picture by C. R. Leslie, R.A.; "Interior at Abbousford," engraved by E. Finden, from a drawing by D. Roberts; "Mirkwood Mere," engraved by E. D. Roberts; "MIFEWOOD Mere," engraved by E-Finden, from a drawing by G. Barrett; "Doubt Castle," engraved by E. F. Finden, from a drawing by J. D. Harding; and "Stirling Castle," engraved by E. Finden, from a drawing by G. F. Robson. Of these, the "Interior Abbaseford" would be almost at any period at Abbotsford" would be almost at any period, but is especially at the present moment, when in all the pieces we have witnessed. As for late, too loud and boisterous in his declamathe revered but stricken owner of the building is endeavouring to regain the shelter of its classic roof, the most deeply interesting. In the little typical illustration which accompanies this charming plate, it is justly observed :-"When the grave shall have closed over the remains of this eminent man-and long may that day be averted !- a pilgrimage to Abbotsford will become an object of equal attraction as to the town which gave Shakspeare birth: the contemplation of a room in which the precursor of so many wonderful volumes was for a long time suffered to remain neglected, will be an object of deep interest to every visitor. The chamber may be altered and destroyed, but the hand of the artist will have transmitted it to the latest posterity."

DRAMA.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Friday and on Tuesday there were concerts at this theatre, in which Paganini gave some of his unequalled and indescribable performances. A friend, with whom we were, and who heard him for the first time, was too much delighted to admit that the player who elicited these tones, equally extraordinary and enchant-ing, could, as vulgarly alleged, have entered into a compact with the old one; but he strongly inclined to a new belief, viz. that the devil was in the fiddle. If so, he surely is the most melodious and enchanting of fiends, and fit to emulate angelic strains. The one-string arie, and the exquisite variations of various beautiful pieces with which these concerts usually conclude, are beyond all idea, and must be heard and felt to have their wonderful effect appreciated. The rest of the evenings were pleasingly filled by Miss Shirreff, Miss Inverarity, Mr. Bennett, and other vocalists; the band skilfully led by T. Cooke; and the whole ably conducted by Sir George Smart. The houses, as they should be where such talent is exhibited, have been well attended, though not inconveniently crowded.

By the by, in the way of dramatic gossip, which the public seems to like so much, if we may judge by the quantity of it in every newspaper, we may notice the pretty and intelligent boy whom Paganini has indulged with a trip to England, and whom we have seen at the King's Theatre, the Adelphi, and elsewhere. This is his son by the lady whom he so inhumanly murdered, but who, after her sad catastrophe, contrives to live very gaily in France, where the assassin supports her in good style; and had to come down handsomely (we believe) before she permitted his child to accompany him. It is said that Paganini has realised little short of a Plum-consequently that he neither gambles nor murders pour passer le tems; but is, on the contrary, rather careful, of what he earns; and, in this respect, neither like a common felon nor a common man of genius.

In addition to these concerts, M. Laporte has commenced a series of French plays and ballets, which are no less successful. The great attractions are Mile. Mars in the former, and Mille. Taglioni in the latter; and they are indeed lions worthy all the wild beasts of Mysore. In Mile. Mars the art of acting is almost, in every one of her characters, carried as near perfection as we can imagine-nothing overcharged, nothing left undone. She is a study for the profession-a great treat to the lovers of the drama. We ought not to omit saying, that M. Armand plays excellently up to her

Taglioni, we observe little or no difference in her. Perhaps she is somewhat more embon point; but the same exquisite grace and sentiment still mark her performance; La Napolitains is as captivating as ever; and the fascination of her style unimpaired. It would be invidious to institute a comparison between her and Heberle; both are admirable dancers,—the latter, in general, displaying more quickness and agility, the former relying on movements which seem to proceed from feeling. We do not know which is the most striking; but Taglioni interests us in parts which we have not seen her animated compeeress attempt : after all, the critic's post between them is a very Macheath-sort of situation; and he may either sing or say, "How happy could I be," &c.

The performances last Thursday consisted of Molière's comedy Le Misanthrope, and the pleasant little piece La Jeune Femme colère, the original of our Day after the Wedding; Mdlle. Mars being the Celimene of the first, and the Rose (Lady Freelove) of the second; each followed by a divertissement. Again we must say, we trust our English actresses will make a point of attending these performances to the extent of their opportunities. We anti-cipate the best possible consequences to our drama from familiarising both performers and arams from familiarising both performers and audiences to the chaste, natural, and elegant comedy of the French stage. Nothing can exceed the mingled grace and humour of the accomplished actress M. Laporte has so fortunately induced to visit us; and we were delighted to see the house filled with an elegant and attentive audience. Mdlle. Taglioni, "la déesse de la danse," as Mdlle. Mars is "la reine de la comédie," obtained, as usual, a rapturous encore in the Tyrolienne, from Guillaume Tell; and her brother, with his fair bride, Mde. Gladstre Taglioni, M. Théodore, and the rest of the artistes, received repeated marks of the favour of the audience. "Crowded and fashionable houses" will be at this rate no longer the last empty puff of a failing lessee; but the well-merited reward of good taste, enterprise, and industry.

HAYMARKET.

On Monday a new drama, in three acts, called A Duel in Richelieu's Time, was performed for the first time, and received with great applause. It is a translation from a French piece of the same title acted at this theatre during the spring, and possessing as it does a great deal of strong interest, with good situations, and a tolerably well-developed plot, is likely to have a considerable run. The actors seem to have taken more than ordinary pains with their several characters. Miss Taylor, who plays the heroine, a long and very trying part, has added greatly to her former reputation. has two scenes in which not only pathos and delicacy, but much occasional force are required, and, we are happy to say, that she sustained the burden in a manner which afforded the utmost satisfaction. We have been, from the first, admirers of the versatility displayed by this young lady, and if she will only allow herself sufficient time for study - assume a little more confidence—and endeavour to articulate her words more distinctly, we have no doubt that in a very short time she will raise herself to a high station in more than one branch of her profession. Cooper, in the early scenes as a confiding, and in the dénouement as a jealous and infuriated husband, exerted himself stretion; a fault that we must earnestly beseech him to amend. Vining, as the rival and favoured lover, shewed the audience that he was capable of something more than the silly fops which usually fall to his share in the drama, and that he might be employed in melodrame, and the lighter parts of tragedy, with advantage to his employers; not that we wish to impose upon him any additional business at present. only wonder how he and one or two others whom we could name, are able to discharge their duty at all this sultry weather—four and sometimes five pieces of a night, and the actors on the stage from seven in the evening till one the following morning. The dresses are handsome; but the courtiers of the French monarch are not the persons exactly of that make and shape and bearing calculated to shew fine clothes to advantage. We think, also, that these gentlemen might as well be instructed how to speak the names of the dramatis personæ; or if that be beyond their comprehension, surely they might be taught some uniform pro-nunciation of the simple title of " Monsieur le These sort of matters are too little Comte." attended to at this theatre.

On Wednesday two singing ladies, Miss Bellchambers and Miss Williams, appeared for the first time (at least so the bills asserted), in the Marriage of Figaro. They were both well received, and will prove useful auxiliaries in the operatic department.

Young Mathewa's little piece of The Wolf and the Lamb improves greatly by repetition; and Farren's acting, which is quite out of his usual style, is in the highest degree laughable and true to nature. The house has hitherto been but thinly attended.

ENGLISH OPERA: OLYMPIC.-To Miss Percy, improving nightly, and Bartley, who has appeared here since our last — to Miss Kelly, appeared nere since our last — to hiss kelly, who is always a great attraction, and to Miss Somerville—we had on Wednesday a revival of Bombastes Furioso, to let loose all the drollery of Reeve, well supported in the other characters by Penson, Salter, and Mrs. C. Jones. Laughter was, of course, the order of the night. The new piece, by the ever-entertaining and witty Dick Peake, is, Friday, too late for us to notice till we trust it has delighted full houses for a week. It is founded on the famous M. Montague sweep-story: the origin also of our May-day blacky-viced gambols.

STRAND THEATRE.

MRS. WAYLETT is really shewing what a law-less minor can do. After the Golden Calf, extremely well performed, we, the other night, witnessed a Husband Wanted—one of the liveliest and most laughable one-act pieces, from the French, we have seen for a great while. The heroine, Miss Ayres, is pretty and animated enough; Williams in the old uncle, Credulous, would serve for a capital example of the good old style; and Abbot gives us all the vivacity and humour of a first-rate comedian. Glib, a roguish servant, is cleverly done by Mr. Forrester; and Stump, a Yorkshire gardener, is excellent in the hands of Mr. Mitchell, whose knowing looks and dialect shew him to be fully equal to this difficult line of character at any theatre.

SADLER'S WELLS.

ALAs for time and space! we have not yet got to Sadler's Wells; but we have sent, and our report is most favourable. Full houses, a sucnuously in the author's cause. He was, how-cession of new pieces, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam in ever, sometimes, as he has frequently been of full force every night. Merriment and (on a Cockneys say) nothing could not be better.

SIGHTS OF LONDON.

WE seldom miss sights worth seeing in Lon-WE seldom miss sights worth seeing in Lon- Cheap Literature, Very!—We acknowledge don, and certes have seen many in our day not five pennorth of the Halfpenny Magasine, worth the trouble; but we were late this week in going for a look at the double-sighted boy at the Egyptian Hall, as he had previously departed for the country. All we know of " Lewy Gordon" therefore is from Mathews's laughable description and imitation, and the report of others, who speak of this exhibition as one of very clever and unaccountable deception.

But our visit to the Hall was not altogether unprofitable, for we took the opportunity to inspect a magnificent collection of Stained Glass in the great room, by Albert Durer.
This splendid specimen of the art of painting on glass represents the life of a saint, in many compartments, from infancy to canonization. The groupings are often admirable; the costume throughout, with all its ornaments curiously executed, is extremely interesting; and the colouring of almost matchless brilliancy and effect. The gradations in the same hues are peculiarly striking; and the whole, for design, portraiture, and general skill, affords a noble proof of the genius of Albert Durer, as well as of the perfection of the medium in which it is here displayed. This superb collection, 240 square feet, has been brought from Germany by Mr. Curling, and was intended to embellish the parish church of Hitchin, Herts; but the necessary subscription fund has not (unfortunately for that church) been raised, and the glass is now on exhibition, and, we believe, for sale. It eminently deserves the attention of the admirers of the arts.

In a lower apartment we experienced another treat from an examination of the Prince of Canino's Etruscan Fictile Vases, Bronses, and other remarkable antiquities, dug up on his estate near Viterbo, and supposed to illustrate the site of Vitulonia the capital of ancient Etruria, or of Volseium the capital of the Volseientes. The beauty of these amphore, &c., their remote date, the designs and inscriptions which they bear, and other circumstances, render them of the deepest interest to the classic and antiquary. They certainly throw a new and strong light upon all the theories connected with the earliest history of the two nations in the world most deserving of investigation, the Greek and Roman; and also reflect some rays on the annals of Egypt, and, per-haps, of India. At all events, were it only as examples of various arts, of domestic utensils, of female ornaments, of armour, of mythological superstitions, and of the customs and habits of the people who used them, they are possessed of great attractions, and suggest a multitude of strange reflections on the time when the gods were of baked earth, and yet their worshippers so ingenious and civilised! A few hours of a few days may be most pleasantly spent in viewing these antique remains.

VARIETIES.

Anglo - Germanic Advertiser. - Any design which can promote the literary and scientific intercourse between this country and Germany must have our warmest approbation, and we therefore rejoice to see a journal projected for the rapid interchange of the intelligence possessed by either people. The prospectus states recent occasion somewhat broad) farce keep that it is to be in alternate columns of pure the well-pleased audiences in constant laughter; German and classical English, and to consist of and all goes so well at the Wells, that (as the articles best calculated to interest readers in both nations, such as reviews, dramatic criticisms, choice extraots, &c. &c. It is to appear weekly in London, and at a very moderate price.

> i. e. ten Nos., which we have read, and, with little exception, approve as a well-made-up miscellany.

> The Weekly Miscellany. — Another, and another still. This No. I., at one penny, is as entertaining and instructive as any of its precursors, aiming at greater originality and going farther back and abroad for its selections. have really so many little contemporaries now, that we are quite bewildered with the numerous family of Periodicals. Being almost entitled to be considered the GREAT GRANDFATHER of them all, we feel we have much to answer, and more, we fear, than can be well provided for.

Commemoration of Sir Thomas Gresham. This ceremony took place on Thursday at St. Helen's church, Bishopsgate, where a sermon was preached to a numerous congregation. Mr. Alderman Copeland and others, endea-vouring (as we noticed last week) to impart greater efficacy to the bequests of this distinguished citizen, gave, on the present occasion, a premium for the best composition in sacred music, which was awarded to Mr. Chas. Hart.

Sir Walter Scott arrived at Edinburgh, after a passage in the James Watt steamer of fortysix hours: - poetical genius borne over the ocean by the genius of the mechanical arts!

New Diorama.—We are glad to have a new Diorama; for such an addition to the Zoological and Colosseum attractions of the Regent's Park enhances the pleasures of a tour in that quarter. The subjects are, Paris from Mont-Martre, by M. Daguerre, and the Campo Santo of Pisa, by M. Bouton; and the talents of these artists guarantee the accuracy and beauty of the spectacle.

Fine Arts.—That fine and curious collection of paintings, by the old masters, which we noticed some weeks ago, and which for some time past has been in course of exhibition at Exeter Hall, is, we perceive, about to be broken up and scattered by the auctioneer's hammer, As the collection contains some very choice specimens of art upon sacred subjects, we cannot help expressing a hope that they may not all go into the hands of dealers for exportation, to adorn churches on the continent, but that some will be retained for the ornament of our own ecclesiastical edifices, rich in every requisite but this one.

Cuba .- A work has lately been published at Paris, under the title of Centurie des Lépidoptères de l'Ile de Cubs; by M. Poey. The author has availed himzelf of a residence of eight years at Cuba, to study the lepidoptera of that island. His work contains the descriptions and representations of a hundred kinds. eighty of which are entirely new. In general, M. Poey gives a plate of the male and female, above and below; frequently one of the caterpillar and the chrysalis. The plates are executed with great fidelity and accuracy, even to the nerves of the wings; and, when necessary, of a size larger than nature.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Lit. Gazette Workly Advertisement. No. XXVIII. July 14, 1838. The Cabinet Annual Register for the present Year,

rith some improvements.

Dr. Bewring is said to have already made great progre in the preparation of the Autobiography of Jersey Be-tham for the press, with copious extracts from his Cen-spondence with distinguished persons during the last hil century.

century.

The Miscellaneous Papers of the late Major Ressil, F.R.S. &c. &c. with Nolas on the whole, and some 0s-servations made during a recent Survey of the British Channel and the Coast of Cornwall, by T. Webb, M. Civil Engineer: who has also in the press, a Work, it is a superior of the Government and Landowners of Gis Britain, on the Encroachments of the Sea upon the Shors of the Kingdom; with Suggestions for arresting its structive progress, and for preserving the Land from a future Ravages.

The Council of the Royal Society are, they say, pre-future Ravages.

The Council of the Royal Society are, they say, preparing for publication a new and well-arranged Caisiogu of the Scientific Works in their Library; and also a Abstract of the Papers read at the Evening Meeting since the beginning of the present Century.
The Law and Practice of Elections, by C. P. Work worth, Eq. of the Inner Temple; and also, in separation works, the same for Scotland and for Ireland.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Wordsworth's Poetical Works, 4 vols. fcp. 11 4s. bds. Excursion, fcp. 7s. bds.—Turner on the Hone's Foot royal 8vo. 7s. 6d. cloth.—Dodsley's Annual Registr Vol. LXXIII. for 1831, 8vo. 16s. bds.—Lord Mahor's His royal 8vo. 7s. 6d. cloth. — Dodsley's Annual Resister Vol. LXXIII. for 1831, 8vo. 16s. bds.—Lord Mahoris His tory of the War of Succession in Spais, 8vo. 12s. bds. Rev. P. Wilson's Sarmona, Vol. 11. 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Fort Risbne, fcp. 6s. bds.—Edge's Calculations relating to Equipment, &c. of Shipe of War, royal 8vo. 1l. & Hol. Bd. Scient Library, Vol. VI. Carne's Liws of Emment Missionaries, fcp. 6s. cloth.—Roger's Reform Act, with Notes, &c. 18mo. 5s. 6d. bds.—Kidr Picturesque Companion to Richmond, &c. 18mo. 2s. 6d. sewel; India proofs, 7s. sewed.—Inne's Outlines of General Knowledge, 18mo. 1s. sewed.—Hansard's Debates (M. Serie, Vol. IX.), Vol. 1. of Session 1831, 2, royal 8vo. 1l. 10s. 6d. hl.-bd.—Arnold's Dramstic Skeines, 3 vols. 8vo. 1l. 11s. 6d. bds.—Fortune-Hunning, by the Author of "First Love," 3 vols. 8vo. 1l. 2s. 6d. bds.—Stevens on the Blood, 8vo. 1&s. bds.—Landscape Illustions to Scott's Works, Part I. 12mo. 2s. 6d. sewei-Boy's Suppressed Evidence on Miracles, 8vo. 10s. bds.—Herry's Memoirs, 18mo. 4s. 6d. cloth.—The Four Gopels, in Greek, from Greisbach's Taxt, fcp. 3s. 6d. cloth.—Stories from German Writers, on Lock's Systen, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Ellis on Life and Fire Issuraes 8vo. 3s. bds.—Gallery of Shakspeans, Marchant of vince, 9 Etchings, 16mo. 2s. sewed; Othello, 12 Etching, 16mo. 2s. sewed; Othello, 12 Etching, 16mo. 2s. sewed; Othello, 12 Etching, 16mo. 2s. sewed; Othello, 19 Etching, 16m

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

40° Again we have to request, in order to avoid what may cause delay, that all correspondence be address. To the Editor," and not personally,—at least, on its

We are sorry we cannot encourage G. H. in his spin-ons. Writing poetry is a had trade, and publishing it worse.

Mr. Arenhold's letter, denying the application of tortun

Mr. Arennous setter, denying the application or tortun in Hanover, in our next.

We have very many late arrivals to acknowledge the week, as usual: it is not, therefore, our fault if the communicants suffer disappointment.

We have received an odd No. of Chember's Journal which we have examined to find the soly, but cannot dis

We have received an odd No. of Chamber Journal which we have examined to find the softy, but esmot discover.

We are obliged to "A Subscriber of 11 Years," but we do not think it would become us to enter upon the a planations he requests. The old proverh, "Let ever herring hang by its own head," appears to us to be sound one; and so long as the Literary Genetic maintain the charter and influence, established by years of a siduous labour, great expenditure, well-directed scritus (which have called into action many previously said sources of intelligence), and homourable independent we shall consider it most incepadient to altar it is to allightest degree, though there were five hundred novice added to the low-priced periodicals of the hour. We have seen too many of these spring up and fall in correct was success—to pay much regard to the repetitor such doings. We are satisfied with our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the our own plas, or weight in literature, our reak in the received were not inclined to attend meetings of a "society the Protection of Booksellers;" but as we are of opinitat booksellers know well enough how to protect the selves, we have not thought of attending. And besident on the protection of the outer and out of the outer of the regard the Literary Gestit to make or outer. Our outer of the public of entirely a different character

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

MALL.
The Gallery, with a Selection from the Works of the Ancient lasters of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English chools, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till Six in the Admission, 1s.—Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

ROYAL MANCHESTER INSTITU-

Tion, Sighth Annual Exhibition.

Pictures intended for Exhibition in this Gallery will be received until the Stat July; those from London until August 4th. Pictures to be addressed to F. W. Winstanley, Ed. Boyal Issatuation, and forwarded by Pickford's Boat, with whom mecessary arrange-

MINIATURE PAINTERS and ARTISTS generally, are solicited to inspect his very extensive and elegant brock of Or-Molu Miniature Frames, Matt, Morocco Cases, &c. by W. Miera, (Maker, by appointment, to Her Majesty), at No. 111, Strand, where, each Branch of the Trade being now conducted under his own immediate inspection, he is enabled to exacute Orders in the shertest possible time, as well as to regulate his prices lower than any other maker.

A liberal Allowance is made to Artists and to the Trade, and on Country and Foreign Orders.

W. Miers, No. 111, Strand, near Waterloo Bridge.

A MEMBER of the UNIVERSITY of CAMBRIDGE, who is reading for the Highest Mathematical Honours, and has distinguished himself in his College Examination, could be happy to devote an hour or two daily to any Gentlemes preparing for the University.

Address, post-paid, A. M., Messrs. Hatchards, Piccadiny.

DRIVATE PUPIL. — A Married Cleagyman, for some years Tater to a Nobleman, and sub-groundly receiving 81x Pupils into his House, a moderate distance from London, would be glad to fill a Vacancy with a Gentleman's don whose Health or Education may require meet than common stitution.

Letters addressed to the Rev. H.S., Mr. Redwell's, Bookseller, No. 48, New Boad Street, Lendon, will be daily ferwarded to him in the Country.

THE PROPRIETORS of a Respectable PERIODICAL (in consequence of Dissolution of Partnership) would be happy to treat with any Gentleman for the size of the Copyright, Societ, Engravings, and Stornettpe Plates of the Work. The sale is nearly 2000, and might be greatly stilled the Prop. seems if solid and solid the greatly stilled the Prop. seems if solid and the Prop. seems to see the control of the Stories of the Stories and the Stories of the Stories of the Stories and the seems of the Stories of

Just 104

SERIES of SUBJECTS from the WORKS of the late R. P. BONINGTON. Lithe-traphed by J. H. Harding. Atlas etc. price 21, 190., Proofs, W. St. "These shadder."

44.87. These sketches all beiray the quick and investigating eye, he rapid and energetic hand, and the plantic power of a varied genius. The whole collection has been beautifully lithegraphed to the collection has been beautifully lithegraphed. ne rapid and energetic hand, and the plastic power of a varied centus. The whole collection has been beautifully litthegraphed y liarding.—4its..

The Fish-Market, from a Picture by the ate R. P. Boulngton, engraved in merzotinto by J. P. Quilley-live of the Plate 505 inches by 165. Frints 15. 15. 7 Freed, 17. 115. 64.

Printed for James Corpenser and Son, Old Bond Street-

Mr. Collins's New Print.

THE FISHERMAN'S DEPARTURE.

Finished Proofs of this Engraving may now be seen (and mpressions secured, in the order subscribed for) upon an early application at Messrs. (clonagh), Son, and Co.; Moon, Borys, and iraves; Molteno and Graves; Carpenter and Son, Old Bond itreet; or the Publisher, Francis Collins, 56, Great Martborough itreet.

TO BOOKSELLERS.—The Advertiser offers his services to take the superinstendence and active art in the management of the Business of a Bookseller and tationer, either in London or the Country. He theroughly uncreasands his Business, was breight up in one of the first Houses in the Trades and has for many years filled dituations of trust and esponsibility References gsponsibility.

References of the highest character will be given; and Letters, ost-paid, addressed to C. B., care of Mr. Groembridge, Panyer
.lley, Paternoster Row, will be immediately attended to.

This day is published,

This day is published,

CATALOGUE of highly-curious, as well as valuable and useful Books, isolading the Libraries of tev. Wm. Harris, D.B. of Honton, in Devon; Rev. Dr. Ranoph, Parties, D.B. of Honton, in Devon; Rev. Dr. Ranoph, Isolation of the Company of the North Company of the Company of the Company of the Company of the Company of Boglish History, with many property of the Company of History and the many of the Company of History of the Company of History of the Property of the Company
Capt. Learn's Views in India.

Just published, in imperial sto. price lie. piain, and its.
India Proofs, Part I. of a

ERIES of VIEWS in INDIA, comprising
Sketches of Scenery, Antiquistes, and Native Character.

Drawn from Manne and on Same.

By CAPTAIN JOHN LUARD,

Of the 16th Leanors.

Smith, Eider, and Ce. 65, Corabili.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

HISTORY of the WAR of the SUCCES SION in SPAIN.
By LORD MAHON.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Zampl's Latin Grammar, New Edition.
In 8ro, price 10s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the LATIN LANGUAGE. By C. G. ZUMPT,
Doctor in Philosophy, Professor in the Joschimsthal Gymnasium,
Translated from the German, with Additions,
By the Rev. JOHN KENRICK, M.A.
2d addition.

By the Rev. JOHN KENRICK, M.A.
2d edition.

"Far superior to any existing grammar that we know. To indiscriminate enlogy we are always average; but this is a production which cannot be too strongly recommended."—Monthly Review, Dec. 1824.

"It is, no the party of the production of tion which causes be seen to see the seed of the seen seen is 1824.

"It is, on the whole, far superior to any other in use amongst us."—Journal of Education, Jan. 1831.

"The Chapter on Latin Metre, now added to the Translation, is also published separately, for the convenience of purchasers of either of the former editions.

Frinted for B. Fellowes, Ludgate Street.

The following recent peblications, by the Rev. John Kenrick.

1. Exercises on Latin Syntax, adapted to Zumpt's Grammar. 2d edition, 8ve. price 5s. 2. A Key to Exercises, adapted to Zumpt's ammar. ad edition, 8vo. price 60.

Grammar. 3d edition, 8vo. price 5s.
3. An Abridgment of Zumpt's Latin Grammar. For the Use of Schools. 19mo. price 2s. bound.

Episcopal Church in India.

In 2 vols. 8vo. price 11. 6s. boards, with a Pertrait by Dean, and a Map,

HE LIFE of the Right Rev. T.

FANSHAW MIDDLETON, D.D. late Lord Stabep of Calcutta

alcutta.

B) the Rev. CHARLES WEBB LE BAS, M.A.
Professor in the Bast India College, Hertfordshire, and Inte Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Pani's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

In 4 large vols. 8ve. price 2f. 8s. boards, the 2d edition, revised and corrected, of
NEW ANALYSIS of CHRONOLOGY A NEW ANALYSIS of CHRONOLOUY and GBOGRAPHY, HISTORY and PROPHECY, in which their Elements are attempted to be Explained, Harmonised, and Vindicated, upon Scriptural and Scientific Frinciples, tending to remove the Imperfection and Discordance of preceding Systems, and te obviate the Cavits of Scriptor, Jewa, and Infection. By the late Rev. WILLIAM HALES, D.D. Rector of Killeandra, in Trained, and fermarity Fallow of Triangly Callege, and Franceser of Oriental Languages in the University of Dublin.

Potent for J., G., and F. Blyington, St. Panl's Churchyard, ity of Dublin.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchysed, and Waterlee Place, Pail Mail.

OBSERVATIONS on the HEALTHY and DISEASED PROPERTIES of the BLOOD.

By WILLIAM STEVENS, M.D.

John Murray, Albemanic Street.

Complete in 2 vols. 8vo. price 4l. in beards,
LORA MEDICA.

This elegant, useful, and extremely cheap Publication is new complete, in 31 Numbers. In preceded the cheapment, is need only be stated that each Number contains fit accurate and well-closured desineations for the contains and the contains the contains and the contains the Bloomfeld's Grock Testament.

In 9 large and closely printed vols. Sve. price 26s. beards, (dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Archbishop of Canter herr.)

THE GREEK TESTAMENT, with

English Notes, Critical, Philological, and Exemptical.

Braglish Notes, Critical, Philological, and Exemptical.

Of Sidney College, Cambridge; Vicar of Betwooke, Entland.

Expressly adapted to the use of Academical Students (including the First Classes in Public Schools) and Candidates for Holy Orders; though, at the same time, intended as a commedient Manual Edition for the use of Theological Readers generally.

Prinzed for Longman, Rece, Orme, and Co., J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Murray; Whittaker and Co.; and J. Bohn, London: and J. and J. J. Deighton; T. Stevenson; and R. Newby, Cambridge.

In pest 8ve. price 7s. &f. beards,
THE ORIGIN, SCIENCE, and END of Principle of Christianity, or, an Expectation of the Inward Principle of Christianity,
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Pan's Churchyard, and Waterior Place, Pall Mall.

In 4te. 21. 24. baseds, Val. III. (New Series) of TRANSACTIONS of the AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY, hald at Philadelphia, for Premoting Useful Knowledge. (Published by the Society.) "Most of the papers display both philosophical ability and assiduous investigation."—Literary & Gastie.

Sold in London by Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co.

Benealogies of the Royal Families of Burope: a Now Work

The Regist Fastilites of Bus ope: a How Work for Harrow School.

Price Sa. 6d. half-bound and lettered,

MAPS and TABLES of CHRONOLOGY and GENEALOGY, illustrative of the History of Europe: Selected and Translated from Monaiser Kechis "Tablean des Revolutions de l'Europe," for the Use of Harrow School.

School.

 The present Work was undertaken with a view to fileatrate a Coune of Elementary Lectures on Modern History, lately introduced at Harrow School: the repetition of the Map of Englement of the Map of Englement of the American Englement Periods of History, the Genealogies of the Royal Houses, and the Chronological Table from the overthrow of the Western Empire, will render this work, it is hoped, a uneful companion to the historical works of Gibbon and Rusself, of Mr. Haliam and Mr. Sismondi.

London: Baldwin and Cradock.

In 1 large vol. 5vo. with the Population Return of 1831, and Maps, 18v. boards, DINBURGH GAZETTEER, or Compendious Geographical Dictionary. Compendious Geographical Dictionary; forming a complete body of Geography, Physical, Political, Statistical, and Commercial. Abridged from the larger Work.

Printed for Longman, Rees, Orne, Brown, Green, and Longman, London; and A. Black, Edinburgh.

Of whom may be had. Edinburgh Gazetteer, or Geographical Dictionary, 6 vols. 8vo. 8t. 5s. boards.

Also, as an Accompanisons to the above Works,
New General Atlas, constructed by A. Arrowamith from the latest Authorities, containing 56 Maps, royal 446.
886- half-bound; coloured, 2f. 15s. 66.

Twitor's British Shells.

In Scalecap Svo. with 10 caloured Plates, comprising Figures of 150 Specimens, 10s. 64. cloth, MAUAL of the LAND and FRESH-WATER SHELLS of the BRITISH ISLANDS; arranged according to the more Modern Systems of Classification, and described from perfect Specimens in the Author's Cabinet.

By "TURTON, M.D.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

New Editions of the following popular School Basks by the same Author:

Guy's School Geography, with 7 Maps, 12th tien, royal lame. Sr. bound in Key to ditto, ls. 6d.

Guy's Astronomy, many Plates, royal 18mo.

Guy's General School Question-Book on all bjects tending to enlarge the boundaries of Juvenile Know-ige, &c. A new and improved edition, 15mo. 4s. 6d. hand-nely bound.

Guy's Chart of History, on a sheet, coloured, Guy's British Primer, half-bound, 6d.

Guy's British Spelling-Book, 34th edition,

Guy's New British Expositor, 12mo. 1s. 6d.

Guy's New British Reader, 12000. 3s. 6d. bd. Guy's School Ciphering Book, on fine post stug paper, see Se etc. half-bound. Key, price only 6d. Guy's Tutor's Assistant, or complete Scho-a Arithmetic, 7th edition, 12me, price only 2r bound. Guy's Key to the Same, 12mo. 4s. 6d. bound.

THE EDINBURGH NEW PHILOSO-PHICAL JOURNAL, No. 98, April—1810-00PHICAL JOURNAL, No. 98, April—1819.
Containing, among other interecting Articles, Estimate of the Philosophical Character of Dr. Prisatley—On the Russian Vapour Bath, by Dr. Traill, of Liverpool—On the Vitality of Toste sectioned in Stone and Wood, by Preferent Backtand—On the Fundamental Types of Organization, by Dr. Traviranus—Physiological Investigations arising from the Mechanical Effects of Property of the Prisatles on the Animal Frame, by John Dalton,

Also, price fe.

The Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Jour-net, No. CXII. July 1882. With a Pieto.

Adam Black, Scinburgh; and Longman and Co. London.

Ellis's Latin Exercises.
Price 3s. 6d. bound, the 13th edition,

COLLECTION of ENGLISH

A COLLECTION of ENGLISH EXERCISES, translated from the Writings of Cicero, for School-boys to re-translate into Latin, and adapted to the Principal Rules in the Eton Syntas, with occasional references to other Gramman Writing and Co.; J. Richardson; Baldwin and Cradeck; J. G., and F. Rivington; Harvey and Darton; Sherwood and Co.; E. Williams; Whittaker and Co.; Hainston and Co.; Simplin and Marshall; Cowe and Co.; Holdsworth and Ball; J. Souter; Poole and Edwards; and G. and J. Robinson, of Liverpool.

and to.; Simple and Edwards; and fi. and J. Robinson, of Liverpool.

Incomplete the property of the formation of a Key to this Work, by extracting the country of the formation of a Key to this Work, by extracting the country of the works of the country of the works of the country of the formation of the works of the formation of the particulars essential to a correct exemplification of the Kules, the utimost conformity to the original, as far as the idea of the formation of the two languages will allow. The Ether has also prefixed some remarks on the Lain Verb; and it is hoped that this excellent Manual for the student of Lain will now be found so near to a state of perfection, as not to require any material alterations in future.

A Key so the Second and Third Parts of

A Key to the Second and Third Parts of Eliu's Exercises, with References to the Passages in Cicero. 12mo. 3d edition, price 3s. bound.

Regers' Reform Act.
In a pocket size, price 5s. 6d. boards,

THE PARLIAMENTARY REFORM
ACT. 2 Will. 4.c. 45. with Notes containing a complete THE FARLIAM ENIAR RETURN!

ACT, 2 Will. 4, c. 45, with Notes, containing a complete Digest of Election Law, Instruction to Officers, &c. as altered by that Statute, and with Analytical Tables and copious Index.
By FRANCIS NEW MAN ROCERS, Esq.

Of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

London: Printed by his Majesty's Law Printers, for J. and
W. T. Clarke, Law Booksellers and Publishers, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn.

Lincoln's Inn.

N.B. This Treatise contains the Act in full.

Translations from the German.

N HISTORICAL SKETCH of SANSCRIT LITERATURE, with copious Bibliographical Notices of Sanscrit Works, and Translations from the German of Adelung, with very numerous additions and corrections. Sec. boards, 10s. 6d.

The Mythology of the Greeks and Romans, ranslated from the Pith German Edition of Charles P. Moritz, smc. boards, Plates, 62.

Tennemann's Manual of the History of Phiophy, by the Rev. Arthur Johnson, M.A. 8vo. boards, 16s. 6d. Prof. Heeren's Historical Researches into the Politics, Intercourse, and Commerce, of the Carthaginians, Ethiopians, and Egyptians, 2 vols. 8vo. Maps and Plans, boards, Heeren's Political History of Ancient Greece, Svo. boards, 10s. 6 - Manual of Ancient History, 8vo. boards, 15s.

Niebuhr on the Geography of Herodotus, and the History of the Scythians, Gets., and Sarmatians, 8vo. 6s. Oxford, D. A. Talboys; Whittaker and Co. London.

Price 6s. the Twenty-third No. of

THE BRITISH CRITIC—QUARTERLY
THEOLOGICAL REVIEW—and ECCLESIASTICAL RECORD.

RECORD.

Contents.—Mirabeau and the French Revolution—Mitford's Life and Works of Milton—Turner's Sacred History—Hall's Second Series of Fragments—Cooper on the Public Records—Ancient Chronology—Babbage on Machinery—Theological Library; Shattleworth's Consistency of Revelation—Christus Crucifixay; Shattleworth's Consistency of Revelation—Christus Crucifixay; Sermons; Hall, Mortimer, Wood, Duantoy—Clerical Education—Edilburgh Sessional School, and Parochial Institutions—Burges's Antiquities of Rome—State of the Dioceses in England and Wister—Proceedings of the Universities. Frinted for J., O. Wangford, St. Paul's Churchyard and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Bishop Mant's Sermons.

Price 11. 1s. boards, the 6th edition (the Three Vols. in Two) of SERMONS for Parochial and Domestic Use, designed to illustrate and enforce, in a connected View, the most important Articles of Christian Faith and Practice.

designed to illustrate and enforce, in a connected View, the most important Articles of Christian Faith and Practice.

By RICHARD MANT, D.D.

(Now Lord Bishop of Down and Connor), Domestic Chaplain to the late Archibishop of Canterbury.

Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piece, Pall Mall: and J. H. Parker, Oxford.

RAMMAR of the GERMAN LAN-GUAGE.

By GEORGE HENRY NOEHDEN, Ph. D. LL.D.
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co.; T. Cadell; J.
Booth: Baldwin and Cradock; J. Booter; Dulan and Co.; Trenttel and Co.; Simphin and Marshall; Black and Co.; and W. J. and J. Maynard.

Of whom also may be had, by Dr. Noehden,

Exercises for Writing German, according to the Rules of Grammar. 13mo. 5th edition, 8s. boards.

Rabenhorst's Pocket Dictionary of the German and English Languages. By G. H. Noehden, LL.D. Ph. D. 3d edition, 13s. bound.

DONNEGAN'S GREEK and ENGLISH OTTHEWAN'S OFFICER BING ENGINEER

This Edition

Intains nearly 1400 closely printed pages, in 3 columns. Half e Work has been re-written, the remainder greatly improved, d above 500 pages added. A liberal allewance to Schools and exchers. Lendon: J. P. Dore, Piccadilly.

THE NEW NUMBER of the QUAR-TERLY REVIEW is published this day.

Contents.

1. Memoirs, Correspondence, and anadised Writings of Di-

American Ornithology. By Wilson, Lucien Bonaparte,

II. American Ornithology, my variant of Health, and Dr. Richardson.
III. Todd's Life of Archbishop Cranmer.
IV. Dr. Granville's Rules for the Preservation of Health, and he Attainment of a Long Life.
V. Rights of Industry, and the Prelongation of the exclusive Privileges of the Bank of England.
VI. Lord Nugent's Memorials of Hampdon. Life of Charles I. By I. D'Israeli, LL.D.

D'Israeli, LL.D. . Lord Mahon's War of Succession in Spain-I. Mrs. Somerville's Celestial Mechanics-

IX. Stages of the Revolution.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

New Works for Summer Reading.

"The clerer sutheress of Country Houses' has given an admirable picture of the amusements and occupations of the aristocracy during a country residence." HT.

Fifteen Months' Pilgrimage through untrodden Tracts of Khuzistan and Persia, in 1831 and 28. By J. H. Stocqueler, Esq.

Mrs. Jameson's New Work, Characteristics of Women, Moral, Poetical, and Historical. With 50 beautiful Vignettes, designed and etched by the Author.

Woman's Love, a Novel.

WOMBIL'S LOVE, B. POVEL:

"It has the style, manner, and power of Madame de Genlis,— the writer of beautiful sentiments par excellence, and contains passages of analytical examination into the heart and its agitations, worth of our best and most elegant writers."—Specialer.

passages of analytical examination into the flexit superceiters. "Specifiers and most elegant writers." "Specifiers haunders and Otter, Public Library, Conduit Street." "S At this extensive Establishment the persuas of all New Publications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or country. Terms on application.

Lindley Murray's Elementary Works, with the Author's

ENGLISH GRAMMAR, comprehending the Principles and Roles of the Language, illustrated by appropriate Exercises, and a Key to the Exercises. S vols. 8vo. 8th edition, 91th boards.

English Grammar, 12mo. 45th edition, 4s.

Abridgment of Lindley Murray's English lth edition, la bound

English Exercises, adapted to Murray's En-

Key to the English Exercises, 19th edition,

Key to the English Exercises, 19th edition, . d. bound. The Exercises and Key together, 4a. dd. bound. Introduction to the English Reader; or, a election of Prose and Postry, 8ca. 37th edition, 3a. bound. English Reader; or, Pieces in Prose and oetr, from the best Writers. Sist edition, 4a. 4d. bound. Sequel to the English Reader; or, Elegant elections in Prose and Poetry. 7th edition, 4a. 4d. bound. Introduction an Lecteur François; ou, Results of Participation des Editions are l'Explication des Editions are l'explicatio il des Pièces choisies; avec l'Explication Phrases difficiles. 5th edition, 3e. 6d. boun

Lecteur François; ou, Recueil des Pièces, Pross et en Vers, tirée des Meilleurs Ectivains, pour servir à réctionner dans la Lecture. 5th edition, 5s. bound.

English Spelling-Book, with Reading Les-is, sdapted for Children. 28th edition, 1s. 6d. bound. s, adapted for Children. 39th edition, 17.64. bound.
First Book for Children, 20th edition, 6d.

Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co., and Harvey and Darton, London; and Wilson and Sons, York.

Of whom may be had, Life of Lindley Murray, by Himself. 8vo.

Grammatical Questions, adapted to Murray's ammar. By C. Bradley, A.M. 20. 6d. bound. First Lessons in English Grammar, designed as an Introduction to Murray's Grammar abridged.

Dr. Buller's Geography, Allases, &c.
In 8vo. new edition, St. boards,
CKETCH of MODERN and ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY, for the Use of Schools.

By SAMUEL BUTLER, D.D.

Archdeacon of Derby, &c.

By the same Author,

Atlas of Modern Geography, consisting of 23 coloured Maps, 8vo. 19s. half-bound-

Atlas of Ancient Geography, consisting of coloured Maps, with a complete accentuated Index. 8vo. 12s. 18-bound.

General Atlas of Ancient and Modern Geography, 43 colored Maps, and 21 Indexes. 4to. 94. half-bound.

" The Indexes contain the latitude and longitude of all the places; and in that of the Ancient Atlas the quantities are marked.

Outline Geographical Copy-Books, in 4to. ntended as practical Exercises on Dr. Butler's Atlases. 4s. each, sewed: 7s. 6d. together.

Outline Maps of Ancient Geography, selected Dr. Butler from D'Anville's Ancient Atlas. Praxis on the Latin Prepositions; being an Attempt to Illustrate their Origin, Signification, and Government. Sto. 4th edition, 6s. 64. boards; 7s. 64. boand.

Key to the same, 8vo. 6s. boards.

. Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Published this day, by Messra. Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

HE HEIDENMAUER; or the ctines.

By J. F. COOPER, Esq.
Author of the "Bpy," &c. &c.

11. Excursions in India. By Capt. Thos. Soner, Slat Regiment. 2 vols. with Plates. Comprising two over the Himalaya Mountains, to the Sources of the Jamie By Capt. Thos. 80

"Wherein of antres vast, and deserts life, Rough quarries, rocks, and hills, whose heads touch here It was my hint to speak."

It was my hiat to speak."

III.

Fortune-Hunting; a Tale of Modern LE.

By the Author of "First Love." 3 vols.

IV.

Private Correspondence of a Woman Pashion. 2 vols.

Dramatic Stories. By T. Arnold, Es

The Highland Smugglers. By J. B. Frac. VII.

Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalies.
By the Author of "Darnley," &c. 8 vols.
VIII.

Froissart and his Times. By the late Barr

St. Loger. 3 vols.

"It is a real service to literature to reside the animatela picture-que narratives of Proissant (whose writings may tracharacterised as the Romance of History) familiar to the progenerally."—Globs.

THE MESSIAH. — A second edition of the mew Poem, entitled "The Messiah," by the Author "The Omnipresence of the Deity," is now published, and the ordered of all Bookeellers in Town or County.

250, Regent Street, London, Office of the British Magazin.

THE UNITED SERVICE JOURNAL and NAVAL and NAVAL and MILITARY MAGAZINE, for contains, among others, the following important Papers, Arms and Arts—Maritime Speculations, No. I. Farrant War.—Observations upon Naval Architecture of Cannal in the error by the contains, and in the error of the Naval Architecture of Castra-Dibbition of the montain R.N.—On the Nautical Atmassive Probation of the remaining the state of the lat of July—Letter for the state of the State of Cannal The British Cavalry on the Pernancia (state of the State of the Navy. By Capt. Charlet N. Charlet N. Capt.
LEANINGS in NATURAL HISTORY,

With Local Recollections.

By EDWARD JESSE, Esq.

Surveyor of His Majesty's Parks and Palaces.
Being a Companion to the Journal of a Naturalist.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On Monday will be published, in 1 vol. beautifully orange of the price 7s. 6d.

I H E V I S I T.

N.B. This little Tale is intended to illustrate it for the higher class of the English Arisocrasty.

Extract from Saturday's Atherson.

"The announcement of this little tale states that it is it in a common consideration. The typography is singularly that, and the engraved ornaments are of a very superior for it in the engraved ornaments are of a very superior for it in the engraved ornaments are of a very superior for it in the engraved ornaments are of a very superior for it deserved y attract theories; and the illuminated itermine; ledgant. Whether called, rather that engraved to the rank of the fair author of the story, we shall ensure the common style, but indicates an enting appropriate the common style, but indicates an enting appropriate the common style, but indicates an enting appropriate week; we the less regret this delay, as it will not be publication of a very anniable mind, perfectly familiar with class of life which the author has undertaken to decribe dipping into the story, there appears in it a greater derromance is an, from the simplicity of the style, and the case of the narmite, we had anticipated."—Alexanse, 13 James France, 315, Regent Street.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPT the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Walington Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 18, Scrutt Moulton Street. Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 95, Royal Extert Marileorogal, Ave ue and Schappell, 94, Action Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 809.

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The History of Charlemagne. By G. P. R. James, Esq. 8vo. pp. 510. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

THERE is little either of interest or instruction in the earlier annals of any country. The same brief sketch might serve for all: migration. pillage, bloodshed, conquest, and settlement, these have laid the foundations of every European kingdom. It is not till the actions of the many become merged in the reputation of one_till some individual arises who stamps his own character on the age, foresees the future, and takes advantage of the past - that the historic page deserves the industry of the antiquary, and the analysis of the biographer. The period then becomes of importance; the arts of peace are added to those of war; the victory has a consequence beyond a battle, which is won to-day and lost to-morrow, only to be fought over again; security gives an idea of property, that first foundation of justice; fixed laws are set apart, and one judgment becomes the precedent of another; and, as all experience proves, this commencement of equity, founded on stability, has always been effected by one master-mind. It is a curious coincidence that our two great nations set out on the race of civilisation together: Charlemagne was securing and organising France, while Alfred was uniting and cultivating England. Such is the period, and such is the man, to the elucidation of whose character, to the report of whose actions, Mr. James has devoted his research and his talents. It is a task well worthy of his ability. We care little to know a headroll of savage names and savage deeds, the strongest emotion produced by which is disgust; but we do care to know how law was first establish. ed, how commerce was first promoted, and how the foundations of future peace and prosperity were laid. We quite agree with Mr. James in his high estimate of the qualities of Charlemagne. He was a singularly great man, and, like all great men, far in advance of his lage; and never was the influence of individual character on the general destiny of the human race more strikingly evinced than in him. The protection which he extended to the church of Rome was one instance, among many, of his clear-sighted policy. In these days of disdain for superstition, and knowledge of its abuses, scant justice is done to the really beneficial sway exercised by the church in the darker ages. What little peace was inculcated was by her preaching; what little knowledge there did exist was garnered in her cloisters; and what little encouragement was extended to other than military talents was held out by her power. The Roman Catholic church was essentially democratic; most of her great men were low-born; all feudal distinctions were confined to those of noble blood; but offices and power in the church were the incentive and the reward of exertion and ability. We and monkish tyranny;—we believe that never was authority that has not been abused, and | never yet came good unaccompanied by evil: still, on the whole, the fear and reverence entertained for the clerical interference was a benefit, and a salutary check on that fierce and rude age. Charlemagne was wise in aiding such a tribunal; it suited his time, when any appeal was better than that usually made to the sword.

Mr. James has entered on his subject con amore. He states that the present work is the result of some years of patient and industrious investigation; and that such is the fact, must be obvious even to the lightest reader, so carefully has one authority been brought to elucidate another, and so minutely has any disputed point been pursued through all its bearings. To that first great merit, veracity, our author may well lay claim; and we say first great merit—for what is the ingenious hypothesis, if the fact on which it is founded be untrue? and yet, for the sake of a favourite theory, how often is the truth wilfully concealed! Now, it is but justice to Mr. James when we observe, that he takes no position without most carefully giving his reasons of preference, and referring to the various authorities. His style is at once animated and clear. The battle of Roncesvalles will be a fair specimen of the first; and the sketch of the administration of justice will evince the second.

Battle of Roncesvalles. - "The Pyrenees. extending in a continuous line from the Bay of Biscay to the borders of the Mediterranean, rise in a long straight ridge, the superior points of which are but a few yards lower than the summit of Mont Blanc. In the highest part of the chain there are occasional apertures; and from the main body of the mountains, long masses of inferior hills are projected into the plain country on either side, decreasing in height as they proceed, till they become imperceptibly blended with the level ground around. Between these steep natural buttresses, narrow valleys, sometimes spreading out into grand basins, sometimes straitened into defiles of a few yards in width, wind on towards the only passes from one country to another. The roads, skirting along the bases of the hills, which, to the present day, are frequently involved in immense and trackless woods, have always beneath them a mountaintorrent, above which they are raised, as on a

(now Roncesvalles), the woods and mountains around them suddenly bristled into life, and they were attacked on all sides by the perfidious Gascons, whose light arms, distant arrows, and knowledge of the country, gave them every advantage over their opponents. tumult and confusion, the Francs were driven down into the bottom of the pass, embarrassed both by their arms and baggage. The Gascons pressed them on every point, and slaughtered them like a herd of deer, singling them out with their arrows from above, and rolling down the rocks upon their heads. Never wanting in courage, the Francs fought to the last man, and died unconquered. Rolando and his companions, after a thousand deeds of valour, were slain with the rest; and the Gascons, satiated with carnage, and rich in plunder, dispersed amongst the mountains, leaving Charlemagne to seek for immediate vengeance in vain. The battle must have been fierce and long, and the struggle great, though unequal; for, during the lapse of many centuries, tradition has hung about the spot, and the memory of Rolando and his companions is consecrated in a thousand shapes throughout the country. Part of his armour has there given name to a flower; the stroke of his sword is shewn upon the mountains; the tales and superstitions of the district are replete with his exploits and with his fame; and even had not Ariosto, on the slight basis which history affords, raised up the splendid structure of an immortal poem, and dedicated it to the name of Rolando, that name would still have been repeated through all the valleys of the Pyrenees, and ornamented with all the fictions of a thousand years."+

Administration of justice. — "The general government of the state remained, as I have before observed, in the hands of the monarch, who, without any minister to divide the fatigues or support the responsibility, devoted every spare moment to its affairs, and soon learned to carry it on in whatever part of the world he happened to be. But the local administration was distributed amongst provincial officers, having the title of duke, to the care of each of whom twelve counties were intrusted. The counts placed under these officers were, in fact, the judges of the land, and had power to summon to their court any one within the territory subject to their jurisdiction. Neglect or refusal to obey this summons was visited with a severe law, had not ambulatory magistrates been ap- time; but it does so slowly and by degrees, as pointed to proceed through the kingdom, to necessity prompts the desire of alteration, and the case."

The state of art and commerce was more sion of the time.

facility with which ponderous and unwieldy form. objects were transported for considerable dison many occasions, and were uniformly carried of their best legacy from the past — a great in vehicles of French construction. A regular example." system of port duties also was established, the mentioned; and it would appear, from the taking; and we cannot give Mr. James higher threatened to prohibit the commerce between be corrected in a second edition: the illustra-England and France as the severest punish- tions are equally interesting and curious. ment he could inflict on Offa, sovereign of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Mercia, who had given him cause for anger. These facts, as well as the laws concerning mercantile transactions, in which various articles of luxury are expressly mentioned as in common use and as ordinary matters of traffic, tend to shew that art had reached a greater height amongst the Francs at this time than has been generally supposed. The vases and cups of gold and sliver, carved and embossed with a thousand complicated figures-the silver tables, richly chased, representing cities and countries - the bracelets, rings, and ornamented belts - together with the praises bestowed on the workmanship,—prove that the arts of luxury, which always follow far behind those of necessity, were known, cultivated, and esteemed at this period. In addition to this, the fact of tablecloths of fine linen having been then in use, shows the perfection to which a branch of industry had been carried that always speaks a considerable degree of refinement in the nation by which it is practised. The skilful manufacture of iron also, and the strict and severe laws which forbade the exportation of arms, afford another instance of the superiority of the France at that time to the nations round about them: and a thousand other circumstances might be adduced to shew, that—however much literature and taste were still inferior to what they appeared in some of the ages which preceded, and in some which followed-yet the necessary and the convenient arts were carried to a height which we do not usually attribute to the eighth century."

We shall conclude our extracts with two admirable remarks.

penalty. At the same time, the counts them-"The feudal system, the seeds of which had word Sanscrita is the passive participle of acc. station; and any denial or perversion of right ferent directions, but was far from possessing sition sam to the grade verb eri, and by inc. was punished by loss of land and rank. The that great and extraordinary form which it afdistant menace of such punishment, however, terwards assumed. Each particular age in the would have been little effectual in procuring world's history brings forth the peculiar insti-the constant and clear administration of the tution suited to the character of society at the render judgment themselves in particular cases experience presents the mode. No sudden and to take cognisance of the conduct of the dukes general changes have ever been attended with and counts-and to see justice impartially exe- permanent success; for although, by reiterated cuted. These officers were called missi do- experiment, and the accumulated experience of It is composed of fourteen vowed minici; and, though I do not find it any where many, it is impossible to say what degree of diphthongs, and thirty-four consonants. expressly stated that their times of visitation perfection may be ultimately reached, it would were uncertain, and consequently their recepseem that the mind of man is incapable of contion by the counts unpremeditated, yet many ceiving at once any great and universal system. reasons exist for believing such to have been Each age may improve upon the last; and each individual epoch may produce and perfect the scheme of society necessary for itself,—at once advanced than belongs to our general impres- the consequence of its existence, and the type of its character. But still the creation of great "Various collateral proofs of the extent of institutions is like the sculpture of a statue, this commerce are derived from the letters and and a thousand slight blows from Time's chisel annuls of the day, amongst which proofs one are required to change the marble ruggedness of the most convincing is, the fact of the great of the mass into the perfect and harmonious

"The historian who wilfully or carelessly tances. Thus we learn that entire marble traduces a great man, is a robber of the worst have an influence upon each other in the columns and immense stone crosses were sent description. He robs the dead of their only change of terminations, and sometimes disoverland through the whole extent of France property-fair fame; and he robs the living tial letters. The rules for this permutation

We are glad to see that this life of Charlecollector-general of which we find distinctly magne is but the beginning of a great undersame authority, that the right of trading to praise than when we say, we do not wish more France was considered of great importance to than that the work should continue as it has the neighbouring countries,—so much so, in-commenced. The book is very beautifully got deed, that Charlemagne is reported to have up; and the few typographical errors can easily up; and the few typographical errors can easily

> An Historical Sketch of Sanscrit Literature, &c. 8vo. pp. 234. Oxford, 1832. Talboys. THE staple of this work is translated from the German of Adelung, by Mr. Talboys, the highly intelligent and enterprising printer and publisher, at Oxford, from whose press we have lately had several very valuable works rendered from the German into our own language. But the additions by himself form its most considerable and more attractive portion; every source within reach, including transactions of learned societies, reviews, essays, &c. having been diligently examined for further facts and illustrations, and the whole amalgamated in a manner which we hesitate not to say does him great credit. Indeed, the book is one of much interest to almost every reader, while to the Orientalist it is of peculiar value. Here he will find, brought under his eye in one portable volume, lists of treatises on the Sanscrit language, its grammars, dictionaries, comparisons of it with other tongues, chrestomathies, proverbs, ancient inscriptions, the Vedas. Puranas, Sastras, jurisprudence, profane literature, fine arts, drama, &c. &c.; together with critical notices, extracts, and other particulars relating to them. Yet it is obvious that there can be little matter in these pages suitable for extract; a few scraps here and there are all we shall select to illustrate it. We begin with the meaning of the word Sanscrit. " The

"It is the intention of the author of this work to follow up the present sketch of the life of Charlemagne by a series of volumes on the same principle, illustrating the history of France by the lives of her great men. Each volume, though forming a distinct work, will be connected with that which preceded it by a view of the intervening period."

posing the letter s when this compound is the in the sense of embellishment. Its literal nexing then is, adorned; and when applied: language, polished."

Of the alphabet, we are told: "The sque character of Hindoostan, which is used in pa ference to all others for writing the new language, the Sanscrit, still retains the me of Deva-nagari (or the writing of the gois. authors increase the number of letter fifty, and make sixteen vowels. The acpounds of these letters, called phala, for above eight hundred characters All the inscriptions hitherto deciphered an read from left to right, and contain particular signs for the vowels as well as the consonau. Of its structure: " The Sansorit possesses one very striking peculiarity. It is that extending to syntax the rules for the pemutation of letters in etymology. Similar rules for avoiding incompatible sounds in compound terms exist in all languages; but in the Sanscrit language, words merely in equent letters have been more profoundly investigate. by Hindoo grammarians than by those of 2. system of orthography which may be justermed euphonical. They require all or pound terms to be reduced to this standard and Sanscrit authors, it may be obserted delight in compounds of inordinate length the whole sentence too, or even whole periods may, at the pleasure of the author, he out bined like the elements of a single word."

We quote the following as curious, and is for the sake of noticing the identity of the numerals with the Greek and Latin: dri, at the control of the cont duo; tri, reus, tres; chatur, quatuot the study of the Indian scriptures was me general than at present, especially among a Bramans of Canyacubja, learned priests rived titles from the number of Peda vil which they were conversant. Since ere priest was bound to study one Veds, no E. was derived from the fulfilment of that dur but a person who had studied two Veda TE surnamed Dwivedi; one who was content with three, Trived; and one versed in its Chaturvedi: as the mythological poems were only figuratively called a Veda, no distinct appears to have been derived from a ked. ledge of them, in addition to the four set tures. The titles above-mentioned have be come the surnames of families among Brahmans of Canoj, and are corrupted vulgar pronunciation, into Dobe, Tiron.

Our next is from the Gayatri, or here verse of the Vedas, and we think eminested beautiful. "Let us adore the supremark. that divine sun, (opposed to the visible minary,) the godhead who illuminates all recreates all, from whom all proceed, to are all must return, whom we invoke to direct understandings aright in our progress to the his holy seat. What the sun and light to this visible world, that are the supportant to the sun and the sun and the support to good and truth to the intellectual and invis universe; and, as our corporeal eres have distinct perception of objects enlightened the sun, thus our souls acquire certain ker ledge, by meditating on the light of train rhich emanates from the Being of Beings: hat is the light by which alone our minds can e directed in the path to beatitude.' There is one beautiful hymn, beginning, 'May that out of mine, which mounts aloft in my waking ours as an ethereal spark, and which even in my slumber has a like ascent, soaring to a reat distance, as an emanation from the light of lights, be united by devout meditation with he spirit supremely blest, and supremely inselligent!' It ends: 'There is one living and rue God, everlasting, without body, parts, or assion; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodess; the maker and preserver of all things, oth visible,' &c."

oth visible, '&c."

On Sanscrit poetry there are some very ertinent remarks: we select one. "The sythology of the Hindoos is the great obstacle hich must ever prevent their poetry from ecoming popular in Europe. If the pantheon f the heathen deities of our own classic world equires a guide to Parnassus, or a Lempriere enable us to understand the poets of Greece and Italy, how much more shall we be at a sess where every thing is not only new and prange, but frightful and shocking?—where he great personifications of nature and mind awe not been softened down by the beau ideal? the Greeks to the perfection of human mmetry; but are still exhibited in their riginal, barbarous, and unwieldy forms; maisty by enormous stature, power by multidinous hands, providence by countless eyes, isdom by the trunk of the elephant, omniresence by innumerable bodies."

In the department of fable we have an acount of the origin of the Pancha Tantra, om which Pilpay's and other similar colctions have been drawn. "Amara Sucti, a arned and munificent prince, had three sons ithout capacity or diligence. Observing their version to study, the king called his counellors, and said to them, 'You are aware that ly sons are disinclined to application, and are capable of reflection. When I contemplate leir conduct, my kingdom is full of thorns, nd yields me no pleasure. Better is a dead on than one who is a fool. Better that a armily should become extinct, than that a son, adowed with their form, wealth, and family edit, should want understanding! If, thereere, their minds can be aroused to a due sense f their situation, do you declare it.' f their situation, do you declare it.' On this, no of his counsellors answered him, 'As life short, and to acquire a knowledge of sciences emands much time, some means should be aund of shortening the path of learning, and f communicating the substance of each science a compendious form; for it is said, the abda Sastra alone (philology) is a boundless zean, its difficulties are many, and the end of fe soon arrives. The essence, therefore, is to B taken, as the swan extracts milk from the rater. There is a Brahman, named Vishnu arma, celebrated for his perfect knowledge of ne sciences; to him intrust your sons, and he rill render them well-informed.' arma was accordingly sent for. 'Venerable frahman,' said the king, 'confer a favour pon me, by instructing these princes, and endering them superior to their companions: a recompense for which, I promise you lands of arge extent. Vishnu Sarma replied, ' Hear,) king, my words. I am not a retailer of nowledge for lands and wealth; but if I do ot instruct your sons in the Niti Sastra, I vill forego my own name.' The king deliered his sons to him, and retired."

The number of Hindoo deities is said to be not fewer three hundred and thirty millions!

With this we conclude, cordially thanking Mr. Talboys for this agreeable accession to our information respecting Sanscrit literature, and complimenting him on the clear and correct style in which he has clothed his publication.

Fifteen Months' Pilgrimage through untrodden Parts of Khuzistan and Persia, in a Journey from India to England, through Parts of Turkish Arabia, Persia, Armenia, Russia, and Germany, performed in the Years 1831-32. By J. H. Stocqueler, Esq. 2 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

CONSIDERING the "untrodden" ground trodden by Mr. Stocqueler in the earlier part of his "Pilgrimage,"-if that may be so called, which was no pilgrimage at all, -we confess to having been disappointed in these volumes; the first of which, principally devoted to little-known tracts, is not particular enough, and the last, principally devoted to well-known places, is far too particular. Where we desire it, we have the most scanty-where we do not want it, the most superabundant information: much more about Hanover than about the Chabean territory as if it were easier to make a book from guidebooks and preceding tourists, than from actual observation. Indeed, the second volume of the Pilgrimage, - a mere common route from Odessa to Helvoetsluys, with descriptions of Vienna and Berlin, and an episode respecting the Polish general Skyrznecki, - might well have been dispensed with, or compressed into some twenty or thirty pages in Volume I.; or, if absolutely necessary to have two volumes, it would have been better in the author to have tried to spin the narrative out somewhere about Bubehan or Buctiari, rather than about Prussia and Poland.

Still, however incompetent a traveller may be, from want of previous cultivation, to make the best use of a journey over lands rarely visited, or even to describe in a satisfactory manner the novelties he has actually seen, there must be something to be gathered from such accounts as he can and does furnish. In Mr. Stocqueler's relation we discover matters which it shall be our business to extract, for the sake of our readers, and in justice to him.

It is prefaced by a very short and complimentary, but exceedingly well-turned dedication to the Duchess of Cambridge; and we soon after get into Khuzistan and Iran, where the author was driven about in various directions, through several causes; and, against his will, instead of following a more beaten path from the Persian Gulf to Turkey, was compelled to traverse a portion of the country hardly, if at all, touched upon by Europeans. Pass we, therefore, the voyage from India, Muscat, Bushire, and Bussorah; an attempt to reach Bagdad, and a return, owing to wars and pestilence; another attempt for Shuster, &c. &c. and come at once to the more creamy portion of these travels.

"Reaching Mahummarah," says the author, "I delivered letters to the sheikh of the Chabeans, and was furnished with a guard, or rather a guide, who was to guarantee me against the attacks of the people who inhabit the villages on the bank of the Karoon. A few miles beyond the village of Herat on the Hafar, all trace of the date-grove was lost, and the river's banks presented merely a narrow range of tamarisk and other wild shrubbery. I walked on shore, while the trackers slowly drew the vessel up the stream, and crossed, during two hours' stroll, not less than five dry beds of ancient canals between Herat and Derissee, on the left bank of the river. Little else attracted my attention during the voyage. The shores one would imagine to be totally deserted. but for the occasional appearance of the antelope, the hare, the jackal, wolf, and lion; scarcely a bird, excepting a stray plover, pelican, or wild duck, disturbed the tranquillity of the scene. On May 11th we reached Ahwaz, and I lost no time, with the sid of a Cutch carpenter located here, who spoke Hindostanee remarkably well, in exploring the ruins of this once famous capital of Khuzistan. I have compared my memoranda made on the spot, and the data supplied me from the Arabic authors, with the sketch of Ahwaz appended to Captain Mignan's volume of Travels in Chaldea, and I must render to that officer the tribute of respect to which his accuracy and research entitle him. I believe I penetrated much farther eastward than Captain Mignan ventured to do, purposing to ascertain the termination of these ruins; but after a journey of thirty miles and upwards, I gave up the pursuit. It is worth mentioning, however, as in some degree confirmatory of the descriptions of Ahwaz by the Arabic authors, that on a subsequent visit to Bunder Mashoor (distant seventy miles S.E. of Ahwaz), I found some considerable ruins of precisely the same character as those at Ahwaz, and abounding with pottery, flint glass, and Cufic gems."

Will it be credited, that Mr. Stocqueler, who reasonably enough boasts of the additions he has made to our geographical knowledge, does not lay down Ahwas on the map with which he has favoured us, nor, indeed, one in ten of the places mentioned in his itinerary? And, what is yet more ridiculous, while he unceremoniously censures other travellers for their mistakes, or imputed mistakes, in nomenclature, he does not take the pains to make his own map accord with his own corrections, but gives us even the capital of Persia with a wrong name, Ispalian instead of Isfahan, as pedagogically and dogmatically insisted upon in the text.

After some dispute with his guide, our countryman says: " We left Ahwaz with many misgivings and apprehensions for the future. Nor were our fears unfounded. The next evening we reached the village of Weiss, but had scarcely made fast our boat, when the sheikh and about twenty followers came on board, while others lined the shore, and made an instant demand for one hundred plastres, in default of which they threatened to cut the Ingrézé's (Englishman's) throat, seize every other individual, plunder the cargo, and scuttle the boat. Remonstrances, threats, persuasions, promises—all were vain; the sheikh himself out away our sail from the yard, which lay fore and aft the boat, and a dozen swords were unsheathed to carry their murderous intentions into execution. In this dilemma, an individual of a sinister aspect, but with a remarkably smooth voice and insinuating manner, who had escorted another boat from Mahummarah, undertook to negotiate for me with the turbulent sheikh, and to save my throat for a small consideration. The sheikh consented to a parley; and as soon as it was concluded, left with his party, the negotiator remaining with me. The object of this agent was soon apparent. He was anxious to secure a decent prize for him-

[•] In concluding his preface, Mr. S. says, "he will hope for a little indulgence, when he affirms that circumstances which call him away from his native country, have precluded his submitting his manuscript in the first instance to any literary or book-making acquaintances; upon which, all we shall remark is, that the most ingenious of such acquaintances could hardly have taught him to improve, such is genuine talent, upon his own second volume.

mercy of the Weissites. After staying with Zobeirs from their position. The contending me an hour, he went away; but immediately returned with the sheikh and followers, and thus rendered all communication with Bussorah encouraged them to violence. Our incompe- quite impracticable. In fact I distinctly heard tency to cope with these people now obliged me the cannonading for the greater part of the to resort to stratagem. I went into my cabin, day. My situation was now extremely critical brought out my pistols and a bag of piastres, threw the latter on the deck, and declared that in my journey; my means were frittering away, as they had now robbed me of all that I possessed, I held life of no account, and should, on the first hostile movement, shoot the sheikh this dilemma I consulted my Greek acquaintand the negotiator. This produced a calm; they picked up the bag, and, murmuring, walked away; not, however, without robbing my servants and the nacquodah of their turbans, beds, and chibouks. On their departure I desired the trackers to go to work, that we might get out of this den of thieves, and proceed at once to Shuster. But the nacquodah advised a different course:-he had been on shore, had learnt that their intention was to surprise and attack us near Bundi Keel; and suggested that our escape from a second rencontre was impossible. Nothing then remained to be done but to return to Bussorah, and seek reparation for the injury sustained. Accordingly, favoured by the darkness of night, we loosened the picquet and suffered our boat to float silently down the stream; and should prohably have escaped scot-free but that the force of the current drove us against the bank, a short distance below the village, and aroused some of the inhabitants. In a moment the alarm was spread, and cries of 'El Frangi! El Frangi!' echoed along the banks. Fear lent us strength; we again got into the middle of the stream, and were instantly assailed by shots from pursuers. Lying down in the boat, we kept our eyes upon the edge of the bank, which was here about fifteen feet from the surface of the water, and only returned the fire when the shadows of men between ourselves and the sky enabled us to do so with effect. The pursuit was kept up for about two hours, without doing more harm than wounding one malah, and perforating a few of our spars. It was very evident that the people of Weiss had communicated our retreat to the sheikh of Ahwaz during the night; for when we approached the latter town at morning's dawn, we found a party assembled on the shore to watch our arrival. We therefore kept tracking on the opposite bank, and were deaf to all their invitations to cross over, until we had proceeded several miles below the river; when, seeing the old sheikh of Ahwaz come 'pricking o'er the heath,' alone and unarmed, we consented to approach and parley with him. He earnestly entreated me to pursue my journey to Shuster, and offered to accompany me and guarantee my safety; he said he was shocked at the conduct of his brother, the sheikh of Weiss, and was quite sure that the sheikh of Mahummarah would send for both his and his brother's head, when I told the story of my disasters. As I had no great faith in this man's assurances, and believed he was strongly inclined to help me out of the world, on the principle that 'dead men tell no tales,' I disregarded his entreaties, and pursued my voyage.
"May 16th.—Reached the palace of Sheikh

Samur, opposite Mahummarah, and found, short interval of my absence, had fallen to the boat, with a guide, the promised letter, arms, Zobeirs; the Turkish governor or motesellim, a carpet, and a small bag of clothes. Our had retreated with his suite to Mahummarah, course, for some hours, lay up the Karoon, self, and then leave me and my people at the tion, sent a large body of Chabeans to drive the parties now occupied the Shut-ul-Arab, and and distressing. I had been twice obstructed and the different roads to Europe known to

This is the most interesting passage of perEnglish travellers were closed against me. In sonal adventure which the work contains. As and the different roads to Europe known to ance. Nicolas, or Saheb Khan Nicolas, (for so he styled himself, by virtue of a firman from Futteh Ali Shah,) was a native of Corfu, acknowledging an English sire and a Greek mother. He had passed his earliest youth in nautical pursuits in the Archipelago; subsequently got a commission in a Sicilian regiment, when Lord William Bentinck was in Sicily; had visited England as a dealer in Grecian patients, or any Englishman not addicted t antiquities (a Lord Elgin on a small scale); then entered the Persian army as an officer acquainted with European tactics, and finished by joining the Bactiarian mountaineers and becoming a leader of hordes. For good services rendered the Prince of Oologerte Berugia, Nicolas was named governor of Shuster; but political convulsions had unseated my friend, and he was obliged to seek the countenance of the sheikh of the Chabeans. This man, compassionating my situation, and delighting in serving a native of a country which held, as he expressed it, so many 'dashing girls,' advised me to seize the opportunity which the campaign against the Zobeirs offered for the useful exercise of my medical acquirements, and to place my services at the disposal of Sheikh Samur. The experiment appeared a bold one to a man utterly unacquainted with the mysteries of surgery; but it seemed to offer the only means interest in more important matters; because of acquiring the sheikh's assistance in getting said he, 'I am already well informed in all the through the Chab territory into Persia. I accordingly waited on the sheikh; enumerated drawing to a close, I expressed to the sheik my powers as a hakeem; exhibited my medicinechest (which had been well filled at Bussorah); and explained the virtues of calomel, laudanum, rhubarb, and other medicaments. The a boat to be prepared for me, to take me no sheikh ordered me to be well entertained, gave nearest village, well supplied with horses. me a tolerably decent asylum near his palace, and twice visited me. It is needless to tire the reader with a detail of the vile experiments I made on the bodies of the wounded Chabeans; how many balls I extracted, how many wounds patched or plastered, and how many stomachs his visier, which were weak and diseased. I filled with nauseous nostrums. Suffice it to say, I endeavoured to avoid the destruction of affected, (though of course I knew not in which were the say, I endeavoured to avoid the destruction of human life, even if I did not succeed in affording its miseries relief. The sheikh was well I made him a present of a pair of green see pleased with my zeal, and more so with a box of ointment which I laid at his feet as a certain remedy for the impaired vision of his left eye. He had been stone blind from his childhood, but he held it disrespectful to be told so. passed seven days in quackery, and then waited on the sheikh at one of his afternoon levees, and acquainted him with my wish to proceed to Bebuhan through the Chab territory. He pro-mised me safe escort to Fellahi, the head-quar-Fellahi at his summons, bringing their ters of the Chabeans; and a letter of introduction to his brother, Mobader Khan, the Prince of The following morning I prepared to Chab. depart; and, as soon as the ceremony of a mutfrom a good-natured Greek residing there, that ton breakfast (for it was the feast of the Bai-I could proceed no further. Bussorah, in the ram) had been despatched, embarked in a small is of the middle stature, of a pleasing could where the sheikh had not only afforded him until we reached the mouth of the Jerahi, the protection, but had, for a pecuniary considers- ancient Pasitigris, when we took an easterly which view he encourages the resort to him.

direction, through a vast extent of morass inhabited by wild fowl, and swarming with musquitoes, whose incessant attack occasioned incredible torment. About midnight we proqueted the boat to some stout shrubbery extra left bank, and tried to repose. Early the ar morning our course was renewed; and re reached the sheikh's palace, at the eastern ctremity of the town, at about mid-day.

cending the river Jerahi, in an eastern diretion, conducts to Bebahan, or Bubahan, a differently spelled by the author; and there a northern course overland leads to Islahr. through the Buctiari mountains. Mr. 80. queler had found the character of a quack to serviceable to be abandoned in a hurry; z accordingly (though we doubt the propriety the assumption, either as regarded his unluis masquerading, who may travel after him a these parts,) we find him practising up Mobader Khan, who appears to be a verification high-spirited and unsuspicious barbarian!

" My own reception (says Mr. S.) was me flattering. 'Ah, ha! khoob! khoob! shahbas. (good, good, admirable!) exclaimed Mohaer Khan, in Persian—'you are now yourself. Its long since I looked upon an Englishman; but I do not forget that they are a great nate. He then discoursed with me about my plan for the future prosecution of my journey, at gave me some instructions for going through the Chab territory. Talking of hunting, at the Chab territory. Talking of hunting, amore especially of falconry, he told me that his deserts abounded with game, and that ill would stay with him, I should see herds of intelopes fall to his noble hawks. He was curies about our field sports, but shewed very live concerns Europeans and their empires.' Di my wish to depart, at the same time makes an offer of my services in the medical was himself and followers. He instantly communications appointed a fine young fellow as my extra desiring him not only to protect me from sult, but to see that all my wants were support throughout the march to Bebuhan free of on-He then requested me to examine the eyes? manner, nor how to apply a successful remediate tacles. Late in the evening I paid my reserve to my liberal host, and departed. Khan, prince of Chab, is the most powerfchieftain to the south-west of Persia. venues, arising from the exportation of the disthe manufacture of the abbah, and the custos levied on Indian imports, may amount was sixty thousand tomauns annually. He is he materiel of war. In this way he can comme the services of six or seven thousand care and about fifteen thousand infantry, indepenently of the wandering Illyauts, who inhi the deserts of Chab. In person, Mobader K nance, and graceful demeanour. He is read to possess much kindness of heart, and, at " same time, the courage of a lion. He is like tories of artisans and Europeans. ere two Russians at Fellahi during my visit, at the poor fellows had turned Mahomedans, ad seemed to lead but a miserable life, beveen the patronage of the sheikh and the diske of his followers. The language of the habeans is, to the west, Arabic; but the traerefore, for the most part, a wretched jargon; 1d as they have no modern literature, there is ttle chance of its purification. The costume the Chabeans is, like their language, a mix-They wear the Persian kabah, or green inic, loose trousers and slippers, the cummr, girdle, and a lilac cloth turban of the same rm as the Arab's. The sheikhs wear crimand gold brocade dresses on extraordinary casions, but for ordinary use content them-:Ives with crimson chintz, variegated with ellow flowers in imitation of gold. They geneally declined all presents at my hands, for fear offending their potent master; yet would tey, at almost every town, slily hint that a 'ilaut or fire-arms would be acceptable."

At Bebuhan we hear:

'' The khans and meerzas of Bebuhan are conderable consumers of coffee, but not after the shion of Turks, Arabs, or Europeans. It is ith them a kind of bon-bon, eaten in a pow-ired and roasted state, without having had by connexion with hot water. When Meer colam Hussein called on me, he was always companied by his coffee-bearer, who carried bout the fragrant berry in a snuff-box, and anded it frequently to the company present. he first time it was brought to me, deceived r its colour and quality, and strengthened in de delusion by its singular repository, I took pinch of the coffee and applied it to my nose, nidst the roars of laughter and looks of surcise of all the party. After the lapse of a few ys the vizier sent for me, and informed me at he had duly considered my situation, and as finally of opinion that nothing remained or me but to attempt the passage of the Bucarian mountains. I must frankly confess that ly blood ran cold at this intimation. No Enlidable heights, for they were the haunts of elentless blood-thirsty brigands, who held it ieritorious to destroy a Christian, and had roved their faith in this doctrine by the murer of numerous Armenian travellers. But I ad no alternative. Every other road was imassable to me; and ambition whispered that ome éclat and much public utility would atend the accomplishment of a scheme which no ne had hitherto dared to attempt. Besides, he shazadah had promised me a guide, and ackums, or passports, which the mountaineers vere bound to respect; nay, more, these very rigands were commanded to give me safe esort from one encampment to another. Thus ortified, my resolution was soon taken. tired two or three sumpter-mules for my serant and baggage, and a horse for myself. My nedicine-chest—my best friend—was tolerably vell supplied, my sword was well tempered, and my pistols true. On the evening of the oth of June, I had my 'audience of leave' of he prince of Bebuhan, and paid a visit to the izier; and the next morning at day-break comnenced my journey-not however without dire nisgivings as to its termination."

Of this interesting district we are told nolling, except that the tribes who inhabit it are numerous and hardy; and are only entertained with the details of the robbery of the traveller and his companions, who contrived, notwith-

There standing, to get to Isfahan. We must reserve a single page for our conclusion till next week.

> The Reformer. By the Author of "Massenburg." 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. senburg." E. Wilson.

A VERY well-told story, with much interest eller will find, as he advances eastward, that both of character and situation. We object gradually amalgamates with Persian. It is only to the title: the word "reformer" now is very far from indicating one of those visionaries whose doctrines of universal equality, whether in rank or property, only led to tumult. disorder, and discontent; -such as, for example. was the late Lord Stanhope, here introduced under the title of Lord Hopely. A slight discontent, that his brother-in-law, Mr. Pitt, was one morning denied to him, was, we believe, the cause that this eccentric nobleman added to his other projects-for in some new plan or other he was ever engaged—that of a frater-nal republic—refused to be addressed by his title, and actually apprenticed his son to a wheelwright. Among the other characters in the publication before us, that of Robert Kerr is delineated with great spirit and originality; the mixture of passion and unsettled principles. good and bad impulses contending together. are delineated with that intimate union which is the truth in real life. Many such a scene as the following may have taken place: we have only to premise, that Clara has been to see her father in Newgate, where he is imprisoned for seditious practices; that Robert Kerr has rescued her in a mob which has collected round the prison, and then followed her home.

"Confused and agitated as she was, Clara could not avoid noticing, that their route was as well known to her companion as to herself. He led the way, without query or inquiry, to the entrance, and threw open the gate. At the sound of its rusty hinges the door opened too, and Leeson appeared at it, having evidently been watching her approach with an anxiety legibly depicted on her countenance. Bless the child! how glad I am you've got back again! I've been miserable; and you knew I should be miserable; and it was very unkind of you to stop so long.' Clara threw herself on Mrs. Leeson's arm, and passionately exclaimed, 'Be quiet, Leeson! Do not say one unkind word to me. I cannot bear it to-night. You will drive me mad if you do.' 'Well, I won't! I won't, poor child! There, there, don't cry so. He'll soon be back. Providence will deliver him out of their wicked hands, never fear.' 'If Providence does not, I will, said Clara's companion boldly, and speaking for the first time. 'You! bless me! who are you?' exclaimed Leeson, now first looking on him. 'You!' and she shricked,—'why, surely you are not—and yet you are—Robert Kerr! Robert Kerr, at your service, aunt.' 'At my service! No, not you, indeed! nor at any body's service that is good; but at the service of every thing and every body that's bad. am sure it's sorrow to me to see your face again.' 'My unfortunate face! pray how has it offended you, aunt?' 'It is the most impudent, brazen face that ever I saw; and I don't care if I never see it again!' The only reply Robert Kerr made to his aunt was to push rudely past her, and to pursue Clara into the parlour, where, following as fast as possible, she found him seated in a chair opposite her young mistress, who was reclining her head upon the table, almost overcome with continued excitement. 'What are you doing here?' she roughly asked. 'I am looking,' he calmly replied, on the changes a few years have made in Clara Keith.' 'Clara Keith, bold face! How dare you call her so?' The man laughed scornfully. 'And how dare you sit down be-fore her? Times have come to a pretty pass fore her? I mes have come as a probability per indeed, when the footboy dare think himself company for the mistress! 'It is very true, I was her footboy once,' replied he, 'and I I was her footboy once,' replied he, 'and I ought to be thankful, and so I am, that I was so; for without it I should never have been the independent man I am. Sit down in her presence! Why, I would sit down in King George's, if I could get there. Old Keith gave me liberal notions. He taught me to be wiser and greater; and, despising the accidents of birth and fortune, to feel and assume the rank in creation to which I was born. There, that is a quotation out of one of his books: famous good books they are! They make men feel themselves men, and not sit down quietly and be slaves. He had me taught to read; and he wrote books fit for me to read; and I ought to thank him for being what I am; for else I might, and should, have gone on to the end of my days, walking behind Miss Keith in the street, and handing her plate at table, instead of walking with her, as I have done this night; and sitting with her, as I now do.' It would be impossible to describe the indignation with which Mrs. Leeson saw and heard him. system of politics, which breathed in every word Mr. Keith uttered, under whose influence Clara had daily lived, had certainly spread to Mrs. Leeson's mind, yet it was grafting on old prejudices, and not removing them; and for her old servant to call Miss Keith Clara, and her father, Jack; to sit in her presence, and treat her with impudent familiarity, was the climax of all crime. ' I am ashamed of you!' she cried, 'ashamed that any body belonging to me should not be better bred! but to think that you, whom my master saved from starving, when your own father, my poor foolish brother that was, left you to live or to die, whichever might chance; to think that you, whom he took into his house to do anything or nothing, whichever you liked best-you to turn out such an ungrateful, good-for-nothing, impudent, wicked—' 'Wicked I am,' he interrupted her, 'impudent lam, good-for-nothing I may be; but ungrateful—no! I am not ungrateful! I remember all the benefits I have ever received from Reformer Jack as well as you do; and perhaps I may pay them better: and I am ready to drink his health, or yours either, my little mistress that was, and yours too, old aunty that is, for all you abuse me so heartily. I bear no malice.' And so saying, Master Kerr, sans oérémonie, drew his chair towards the table. Mrs. Leeson, always anxious for the nourishment of the body, and intent on soothing and comforting her young mistress after her fatigue, had spread a tray, with her nicest care, in the hope of tempting her appetite. Their new visitor now drew this tray towards him with the utmost freedom, and, seizing the decanter of wine that stood upon it, filled the two glasses, being a tumbler and wine-glass, and pushing the smallest towards Clara, took the other himself. 'Come, now, rouse your-self, and let us drink your father's health, and confusion to his enemies. You pretend not to like gin; but wine, you know, is more genteel. You may like wine without being vulgar. The difference of the name is every thing. The fishwife, who tipples gin, is vulgar; but the countess, who tipples wine, is refined. So come, I am going to be elegant, to keep you company, since it is your humour; and drink wine with lence; and he breathed her name in a tone you instead of gin. Here goes! Here's honest which instantly aroused her. 'Clara Keith!' old John's health, and confusion to his enemies!' shouted Robert Kerr, standing on his lifted her eyes, and then sank again within it. feet, and flourishing his arms; 'hurra! hurra! She was speechless through surprise and terhurra!' Clara tried to shut out the dinning ror. Robert Kerr advanced close to her chair, sound; and Kerr approaching, seemed resolved and stood before her. 'Do not be alarmed, to force upon her the glass he had filled. 'What!' he exclaimed reproachfully, 'you wouldn't, would you, refuse that toast! I would drink it though in poison!' Clara, in increasing anger, though in poison! Clara, in increasing anger, What madness possesses you? Why have you! dashed it to the floor. 'You won't drink, not sought a place of safety?' 'Why have I won't you? very well. Will you eat, then? stayed? I stayed to follow to the grave him If you won't, I will; for I'm confoundedly, whom we alike mourn. Why do I stay? I hungry.' And so saying, he reseated himself, stay to serve his daughter.' 'Robert Kerr, and having handed to Clara upon a plate a you cannot. Think only of yourself.' I portion of the light food provided, commenced think only of you! Clara, hear what I have eating out of the dish. This was too much for Mrs. Leeson's patience. She was almost choked by passion. To think that she should have wasted her delicate cookery upon her brutal nephew, who could appreciate it no better than me, because it was his resolution-and go to one of the swinish brood, whose trough, in her opinion, would have done for him just as well; do as they please! It is the only place where We seemed to have entered an enchance while her young exhausted mistress, who, she men know their own dignity as men! It is garden, where the produce of Europe and Ata knew, had scarcely tasted food the whole of the the only place where the daughter of Keith day, sat fasting by, aggravated her beyond the lought henceforth to fix her dwelling !' 'It is blended together.' possibility of endurance. She stuttered with impossible! Clara faintly exclaimed. 'Imgranates—plantains, figs, and aprioris—like passion—' You—you—' 'What?' he inters possible? rather say it is impossible to stay; and citrons—walnut and mulberry trees, granupted himself to say. 'Beast!' 'Oh! is and so indeed it is. Does not the blood of your in the greatest quantity, and with the ket that all, aunt? If I began to call names, I could do it much better than that. If that is the very earth in which he now lies utter a tempted from the brows of the broken our your best, your best is but bad, like your fare voice? Is it only the ear of his child that is while our path was strewed with strawberns, here. Not half so good as a mess of lobscouse, deaf—only her heart that is cold?' 'His In every direction were blooming heads.

^{*} It is not a taking title now; for however good Reform may be in politics, and however much wanted in literary affairs, yet the public are rather fatigued with the name, and would like to repose on something else.—Ed.

Don't go into a passion, aunt; I dare-say it's heart!—for Clara could not now utter that violets and jasmine, with imnumerable 'new yery good for them that like it, but that is not name which death had hallowed—'His heart trees in full bearing.' It was a most love. me; but, as I say, never mind, don't be in a pet. I am going as soon as I've tasted your wine again. He filled another bumper- Here is to your health, Clara Keith; and to yours too, aunty; and don't look so sorrowful, mistress of mine that was. As I said before, if Providence does not very soon set your father at liberty, why I will; and so good night, and be merry.' Clara felt as if released from a part of her burden, when she heard the old iron gate clap after her persecutor; but was even more satisfied of temporary safety, when Leeson, returning from fastening it, drew the huge old bolts of the outer door into their sockets, put up the chain, and secured the key."
We will give another scene, by way of contrast, and then refer our readers to the volumes for their connexion and denouement.

" She was sitting in her own solitary apartment alone, as she had expressly desired, when the handle of the door gently turned, and some one entered the room. Supposing that no one but Leeson would use the privilege, she did not even lift her head; and Robert Kerr (for it was he) had full time to contemplate the changes that time and suffering in so short a period had caused. She was more thin and pale than ever - more subdued - more statue-like; there was not the adornment of a single curl to break the uniformity of her mourning garments; every tress was hid beneath the black crape cap, leaving only a glimpse of its colour, where it parted on the brow. She was sitting at a table with two long unsnuffed candles before her, leaning her cheek upon her hand. She was not weeping, though that was evidently employment her eyes were not unaccustomed to, for they were swelled, and blood-shot, and edged with vermilion. bert Kerr looked on her with undefinable feelings. Every trace of sorrow roused his passion against his opponents, but yet melted him into commiseration at the sight of her mute grief. It was impossible he could longer preserve si-

Clara Keith started a moment from her chair, he said_he tried to say it soothingly_' do not be alarmed, I beseech you.' 'Oh, Robert ist! I would drink it Kerr! she said, 'to see you here alarms me! days' tollsome marching to arrive, we here, in increasing anger, What madness possesses you? Why have you many interesting notices of the natives of the You won't drink, not sought a place of safety?' 'Why have I remote and seldom-visited mountain regard to say. You cannot, you ought not, you would bility. not stay with the murderers of your father. Pursue, then, the resolution he had adoptedwhich ought to be sacred both with you and America. It is the only place where men can with the richest and most various fruit-trees. father cry unto you from this land? Does not luxurious hue. Blackberries and raspleme never cried out for vengeance on his own foes, day, and birds sung from every brasch; to but only on the foes of his country. 'Are common dove and the kokila... the nightistic not the foes of his country his foes?' Tell me that, Clara Keith! And if there were no voice in the people... in the land... in his grave, still of the blackbird! The description of such is there should be a voice in your own heart, seens may tire the patience, as the enjoyment Clara Keith, which should cry, 'This land is accursed! Let us fly, lest we share its evil!' Robert Kerr, if I had the desire, I have not the phenomena of these regions, but to convert the means.' Robert Kerr's eyes flashed joy- as truly as I can, a picture of the most of fully. 'Thanks to — to Fortune! but I lightful scenery, and most lovely spots on 22 have. my proffer. suming, encroaching, insolent. I grant it __ perhaps, of 'green fields.' nay, hear me! But now, for the future, only tance we see only the cold and barren 'rank condescend to embrace my offer, and you shall of eternal anow,' we think of these hills with find how humble, how attentive, how entirely terror, and wonder how human beings or at your command I will be. I will become exist in so desolate a region; and while men your servant once again, Clara-Miss Keiththe most attached and faithful servant mistress thoughts engrossed with the awful granden ever had; and though I will treasure my principles, those principles which I learned of your father, in my heart; no part of them that can give you offence shall ever be visible in your presence."

The end we leave in the work itself, which has infinitely more of originality and attraction than a great majority of its competitors.

Captain Skinner's Excursions in India. [Second notice.]

IT is now our agreeable task to accompany Captain Skinner to the source of the river Jumna, which journey he accomplished in company with his brother, and attended by some sixty or seventy coolies, &c. &c.: the season was May and June; and on reaching the summit of the Budraj chain, we are told-

"One of the Hindoos, who had gained the highest part, stopped suddenly, and making a low salaam, called out, as loudly as he could, 'Jumoona! Jumoona!' upon hearing which, threw down their leads, and the servents the cooking-pots, and thought of nothing but in beautiful river beneath, winding with the most swiftness round the bases of the keppeaked hills. The sight restored my follows to the strength and spirit that many of the were fast losing."

Between this point (May 4) and the serof the river, at which it required twenty-infrom which we select the following. First a the landscape scenes, where an existing is cadia is found, with shepherds carrying pe toral crooks, tending their flocks, and pipes on reeds of ancient form and musical cap-

"We did not (says Capt. S. in one place long keep possession of so magnificent a prespect, but lost it in our passage through thick and beautiful wood of pines interspend indeed of every quarter of the world ... WE Apples, pears, and pour 'Thanks to — to Fortune: out I inguists scale; y, and then 'habbing,' he said, 'nay, turn not away face of the earth, I hope I may be excused by offer. You have hitherto seen me as now and then 'babbing,' a little too mean encroaching, insolent. I grant it — perhaps, of 'green fields.' When from a deweary progress over trackless mountains, all only of the scene, we fall, as it were by acdent, into bowers where Armida might have bound Rinaldo for ever! it will be difficult ! avoid running the risk of preving tedious " those who have no admiration for the pendlel nature. At such a hazard even, I must ventur to paint."

Another spot is thus described :-

"We burst upon a beautiful lawn, perfectly level, and enamelled with every description is simple flower_daisies, cowalips, primross, va lets, and crocuses of every hue. It was strounded by a fence of pale rhodelendron; all other parts we had met this plant as a lant tree_here it had dwindled to a shrub. About was a line of rugged peaks capped with most which in many parts descended to the book of the meadow. Nature never appeared frolicsome. This spot seemed to be the redeevous of all seasons. There was winter his coat of snow; summer reposing in a strice berry-bed, or smiling from the branches every one ran to catch the first glimpse of the Jumna among the mountains; the coolies bell; and of autumn we experienced energi n the fallen leaves, which, still to concentrate he various periods of the year, fell from the ranches of the trees that stood among the As I looked round with a glass, I could discern, on one side of the mountains, fields of grain quite green, and but just above the earth; on the other it was harvest-home, and the partridges were busy in the stubble. I would have given any thing to have re-mained some days here, but there was no water, and I could not persuade my servants that the snow was equally good; they should die, they declared, if they touched it, and trembled at the bare idea. We could have made strawberry ice in a most delightful manner-collected the snow with one hand, and picked the fruit with the other. In vain did I represent its comforts, and its beauties were quite lost upon them. I swallowed snow till I was as cold as ice, to convince them, but they were still inexerable. The peak of Bunderpuch, towering above us like a rock of alabaster, was quite close - one ridge only intervening - the one I had abandoned, and the snow upon it seemed very deep indeed; the sky was clear and blue as Italy's, and not a speck appeared upon the snow-white mountain. I saw an eagle soaring above it. We had disturbed several, for we had towered to their pride of place.' They flew within shot; but I learnt from the 'ancient mariner,' how sad it is to kill the spirit of the place, and let them fly in peace."

From the country, so finely and graphically made visible to our home-kept eyes, the transition is easy to the people; and here, as is usual where humanity is contemplated amid the splendours of nature, the contrast is not the most gratifying. At Luckwarie, a neat stone-built village, Capt. S. observes,...

"The women are busy reaping, for that and drawing water seem to form their regular occupations. They are fair and good-looking, with small and strong, but neat figures; their dress consists of a coarse linen petticoat drawn round the waist, with a little jacket, and abundance of rings from the nose to the toes. The manner of dressing the hair is most picturesque; they allow it to grow very long, and add plaited wool to it, dyed red. When this tail reaches the ground, they weave a large tassel at the end of it; sometimes it hangs loose, and at others they twist it round the head, the tassel resting on the crown, when it serves the purpose of a turban. In this village I have seen the prettiest women I have met with in the East; their charms, however, are not properly appreciated by the Himalaya gallants, one wife being the property of a family of brothers; four seems to be the mystical number; for all I have questioned on the subject answer, 'We are four, and have one wife between us.' This is a custom still common in other parts of the East; among some tribes on the Malabar coast, and in the kingdom of Kandy in Ceylon, it is generally practised. It is a usage, however, scarcely fit to be tolerated, and in the abolition of which I should think all parties concerned would be glad to join; but that all-powerful word, 'Dustour,' reconciles every thing in the East—it is the custom; and 'bus,' that is enough, is the usual reply to all objections to an existing habit. In this village there is a temple, and the first we have met with; it is built of wood, and of similar shape to the pagodas of the plains. Its doors are covered with plates beasts, however, hang in the porch like votive castom, for they had more women in their polished chisels. An old man with whom I represent an elephant, and declared that he thought it remarkably well cut for a man who had never seen one. I could not deny the justice of this remark."

Further on, at Nonano, another village-"We passed (says the narrative) a great number of fruit-trees-figs and plantains, with I usually, on plenty of white raspberries. entering a village, make for the spring, which has ever been the signal for the women to come forth with their pitchers; and while my tent is erecting, I always find a shelter beneath the trees that overhang it. I learn a great deal of the village news, too. I found that we were the first white men - 'Sahib logué'-that Nonano had ever sheltered. became objects of great curiosity, and finding that we were rather disposed to encourage it. we soon had a drawing-room (for ladies formed the principal part of our visiters) at the waters of Nonano. I asked a pretty woman, of about eighteen years of age, who had come out to present us with a bowl of raspberries, how many husbands she had; 'Only four,' was the reply. 'And all alive?' 'Why not?' She questioned me in return, and asked where my country was. When I told her it was several months' journey from this, there was a general murmur of incredulity: 'It is not possible,' they all answered. 'And where is your wife?' was the next inquiry. On my declaring I had none, a universal cry of 'Bah, bah! Djoot, djoot!'—a lie, a lie!—shewed how little they believed me. Where such beings as bachelors and spinsters after fourteen or fifteen years of age are unknown, no wonder they should receive with doubt such a declaration. I found it impossible to convince them of my veracity, and I fear I lost a little in the estimation of my mountain friends by asserting so palpable an absurdity as any man being without a wife appears to them.

"We are now in the province of Rewacen; and I think there is a slight superiority in the people and their villages. They are taller, and have something of a Tartar countenance; and in this valley they have supplied our wants without much pressing. Their grain, too, is not the only thing they are disposed to sell; for had I been a Turk, I might have made at least two additions to my harem. An old man, whom I met soon after leaving Tullie, offered me the fairest of his daughters for sixty rupees, and seemed considerably mortified on my declining the bargain: and this morning a respectable-looking man came from some distance on the same errand. 'I have something to sell,' said he, 'taking me on one aide with an air of mystery—this is no uncommon thing, by-the-by; for, as if ashamed of trade, they conceal the smallest articles under their cloaks, and even a pot of honey is displayed with as much caution as a smuggling pedlar shows his contraband ware - ' I have something to sell,' said he; 'and as I am a poor man, I hope you will buy - very cheap - a little girl, so big,' measuring about four feet from the ground, 'and only eighty rupees. She is my daughter, and my only child.' 'What!' I interrupted, 'sell the only child you have?' 'I must live,' was his laconic answer, given with the most perfect sang froid. 'She is the prettiest girl of brass, and the figures of Hindoo mythology in the village,' he continued, urging the barabout it are too well sculptured to be the work gain; 'and as I cannot afford to marry her, I up; we had entered the precinct of the most of the mountain artists. Some birds and must sell her.' He said in excuse, it was the venomous little insect I had ever met with: it offerings, that are evidently the work of un- villages than they knew what to do withcertainly more than they seem to care about. was conversing seemed a little piqued at my My servants have tried to buy a lamb, while laughing at the strange animal intended to many are frisking about, but they refuse to many are frisking about, but they refuse to part with them. 'The sheep give us clothing,' say they. 'And the women, I suppose, wear it out,' said I. 'Sach bat' - very true - was the reply. The fair sex is but little appreciated indeed, or probably I should say, too much esteemed, for each has four husbands at her beck, although the gallant that submits to a quarter of a heart can scarcely value the possession. No wonder, however, they should have a superfluity of women; yet I cannot think that the cost of maintaining them can be very burdensome, for I notice that after they prepare the food for their lords, they sit quietly on one side till their husbands' appetites are appeased, and then receive the remains, which come to them sometimes fear-fully reduced. Their clothes, too, are the most whimsical contrivances - too light indeed for comfort - they are scarcely enough for decency. They seem to wear them till they literally drop from them, never washed and never mended: they are most completely things of 'shreds and patches.' We should be puzzled to know how they could get into them, were it not evident that they never get out of them: they hang about in such singular tangles and eccentric festoons, that is would seem a more simple process, as well as a more modest arrangement, to convert a net into a cloak or petticoat. A sultan of the East once censured his daughter for being indelicately drest: she was covered from head to foot with forty folds of Dacca muslin. What would be have said had his empire extended to Rewaeen? To conclude my story of the father, I found that he had kept his daughter in reserve at a short distance from the seat of conference: and on finding his persuasions not so powerful as he anticipated, suddenly, to overwhelm me at once with the 'stage effect,' brought her blushing to my presence. With the best grace I could, I begged her to excuse me; and praying that she might find a family of mountain youths in her own village more calculated to make her happy, bade farewell to the merchant, who would coin his blood for gold, and the lady, who, to say truth, seemed so little struck by the interview, that she went smiling away, ' nor cast one lingering look behind.' "

Our next characteristic sketch is a humorous picture of dancing extempore and without the incitement of a fiddle, which even in the hands of Paganini could scarcely excite more.

"On arriving at Tulli (says our author), tired to death. I was surprised to observe, as I looked down upon the village from a hill above it, that all the people who had assembled to gaze upon us were jumping and skipping with the greatest activity and in the most grotesque manner, striking their bodies on several parts, and performing such strange antics, that I conjectured it was a national dance got up in celebration of our arrival, not supposing it likely that a stray sect of jumping dervishes could have established themselves in so out-of-the way a spot. As I approached the village, however, I found that not only my servants, but my brother and myself, in spite of our fatiques, were unconsciously joining the dance, and striking ourselves in good earnest. I thought of the electric eels in some river in Africa, and fancled a similar phenomenon hung is a miniature wasp, scarcely larger than a sand-fly, with a green body, and a pair of forceps that inflict its wounds unmercifully. We have lost all chance of rest, and it is ludicrous in the highest degree to observe the effects of the bite upon the people. They break suddenly off, in whatever occupation they may be engaged, and after jumping and beating themselves for a few moments, resume their work, in which, however, they are soon interrupted for more exercise. They are covered over with black spots, in which I am bidding fair to rival them-for these little insects never fail to leave their marks. We are situate on the slope of a hill, surrounded on all sides with pine-trees, and I imagine that circumstance may be the cause of so many insects, for the heat is not particularly great; the thermometer stands at 74°."

At another place of rest we hear of a like species of torment:—" The accompaniments of heat, innumerable flies, have kept me at war all day, and the renewal of a stinging tor-ture has driven us nearly frantic. The insect upon this occasion is larger than a wasp: they fly about in hundreds, and add to the torment of the former small insects by the constant apprehension of a bite; for we can see them approach too plainly, and find it impossible to guard against them.

But to return to the natives. "At Rana and this village a great deal of cloth is made. The women are not employed in this work, and every man makes for himself as much as his own sheep will give him, in the simplest way, in front of his own door. A villager never moves without his distaff and a little basket on his arm, which contains his wool; and as he walks along, he spins his thread: even when carrying loads they are thus accompanied, and appear, in consequence, never to be idle. It is strange to meet in these wild passes with men, each sturdy enough to make a Hercules, armed with a distaff and a work-basket.

" I have often wondered at the inconsistency of people (and it is much the case all over India) who hold the animal in the highest veneration, and beat it with the utmost inhumanity at the same time. If I were a cow, and could choose my lot, I should prefer the profane country of 'beef-eaters,' to the one where I might be adored in precept, but in practice most cruelly treated. Although I do not anticipate much improvement to the cattle by a further inter-course with the plains, yet the people must benefit materially; the greater communication likely to ensue from the late establishment in the hills, and the increasing taste for travelling among them, must eventually spread a degree of civilisation throughout. At present they are sunk in a wretched state of degradation, and, save in the gift of speech, are little higher in the scale of humanity than the monkeys that infest their woods. Their religion, if it can be so called, consists in listening to the muttering of one whom they term a Brahmin, ragged and illiterate as themselves; in venerating streams and fountains, because they know not whence they spring; in deeming sacred any phenomenon of nature they cannot account for; in adoring a mountain because it looks like a buffalo; and in worshipping the cavity of a rock, because they fancy it resembles a cow's mouth. Social ties or affections they can have no notion of: their marriages are infamous, and a father offers his only child for sale. In dirtiness the men are only surpassed by the women. I have already described the dress of these remarkable specimens of the softer sex, with their hair countenances. Although carrying water for the use of the house is one of their principal occupations, they are so chary of their labour, that they take care never to consume a drop of it even on their own persons. They have similar ideas of luxury to the peasants of more civilised nations: their work at an end, they bask in groups in the sun, playing with the tangles of each other's hair, and cautiously laying on one side the object of their search when they have taken it. The ground about their villages is literally teeming with vermin, and their abodes present too filthy an exterior to tempt me to pass the threshold. The children are not quite so dirty as their elders, merely because they are not so old; but give great promise of rivalling them-for they grow in dirt as they advance in years. It is melancholy that such A wilderness of sweets; For Nature here wantoned as in her prime, And played at will her virgin fancies, Pouring forth more sweet, wild above rule or art, Enormous bliss ".

should be so inhabited."

Before we close, and as yet only with the first volume, we must add that very little of the distinction of castes is known in the Himalaya range.

"Idleness is the great privilege of the priestorder. They do not work themselves, but fag their women without much mercy; and at the period of harvest hire from the adjoining villages as many servants as they may need. As no one in this village could read or write, I did not gain much information regarding their religious ceremonies. 'Oh,' said the Brahmin I spoke to, 'we have no particular manner of praying; we put some ghie on a fire, and go round it, repeating some words till it is melted, and 'bus,' that's all.' "

(To be continued.)

Tales Historical and Domestic. By W. H. Harrison, Author of "Tales of a Physician," &c. No. I. the Lost Deed. Pp. 48. London, 1832. Jennings and Chaplin.

EMBELLISHED with a fine engraving by F. Bacon, after a drawing by H. Richter: the present No. I. seems to introduce us to a series of tales likely to be equally moral and pleasing. Some folks, they say, always contrive to mar a story in the telling of it; but we endeavour never to mar any story we have to review by telling even parts of it. We shall, therefore, have little to say of the Lost Deed, or of the talents of the author, which are so favourably known by his preceding works, except that the narrative is easy, the circumstances related natural and not overstrained, and the lesson instructive. We ought to add, that being our-selves obliged to ask for a portion of the forthcoming No. II. in order to come to the dénoument, we would advise Mr. Harrison to conclude his tales as often as he can within a simultaneous publication, and rather give two or three Numbers at once, than divide readers from what interests them during intervening months. The production is so cheap (for the plate is worth thrice the price), that this plan cannot but be generally acceptable.

Standard Novels, No. XVII. The Prairie. By J. F. Cooper. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE really must most cordially praise the progress of this work; embodying the mass of our lighter literature, neat, portable, prettily ornamented, and singularly cheap, it deserves unihanging in savage irregularity about their versal recommendation and encouragement.

The Prairie is the last but one of Coopers American novels - productions which open an entirely new vein of fiction, equally is teresting and fertile; with a value, too, quite independent of their attraction as narraise. being the most vivid and exact picture d. country whose face is now almost who changed, and of a race that have almost une passed away. The vignette of this volume, a presenting the grave of the old hunter, is the control of the contr of poetry, and also a very sweet engraving Pickering.

The Scripture Garden Walk, comprising to Botanical Exposition and Natural History of every Plant occurring in the Sacred Senstures. With appropriate Reflections and Original Poetry. Pp. 372. London, 1822 Hatchard and Son.

An extremely well-meant and a no less wellexecuted and truly Christian design. A volum: very pleasing and instructive to read, illustrating at once the science of botany and the holy Scriptures, while it teaches the mind to loss even through the minutize of nature to the Almighty Source of all, cannot but be gratefull; received by a very large class of the community. It is a delightful book for youth, and the poetry interspersed gives it an added charm.

Fort Risbane; or, Three Day' Quarante.
By a Détenu. 18mo. pp. 266. Lond. 182 Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE passengers of a Calais packet are thron for three days, on landing, into Fort Risbane. W perform quarantine for cholera; and while there they converse on every sort of subject - referm. political economy, education, the church, liter-ture, &c. &c. &c. Some shrewd remarks occur: but the machinery is ill contrived for the discussion of any interesting or important question; and the whole is too dull to be sught but i failure.

A Grammar of the English Language 🧗 By Richard Hiley. 12mo. pp. 282. Los. 1832. Simpkin and Marshall; Hamits.

Adams, and Co.; Rivingtons.
WE observe little difference between this po the many grammars, said to be improvement on former publications, which are perperually issuing from the press; and as we stumbled in the preface, we do not feel disposed to trus implicitly to a guide who tells us, p. vii. that grammar may be said to be to the scholar what the chart is to the mariner-a guide " direct him AGAINST the rocks and quickens which might interrupt his course." In general regards, the rules, &cc. are clear enough, and the book altogether as good as most others

The Poetry of Truth. By John Maule, M.P. pp. 63. London, 1832. Hamilton and (%) Nesbit.

"I WRITE not for the world," Dr. Mark commences in his advertisement perfixed; and he leaves us to wonder why then does he publish Because, he tells us, "I write for the people of God for those who understand that Christ kingdom is not of this world. I write not is those who are commonly called the religion world; for I know no essential difference between them and what they call the world [a hard his

• We have received the annexed anonymously: "M On perusing Fort Risbane, you will, no doubt feel to following characters, amongst the others so ship retrayed in the volume:

Cyclopate ... De Rawring.

a in the volume:
Cyclovate

Scrinium

M'Culloch

Mrs. Scribbleton

Dr. Lardner.

M'Culloch

Lady Mary Shephed

at the pseudo-saints]. I write for those 'who are taught of God,' 'who are born again of the Spirit,' 'who are of the true circumcision,' &c. These, and these only can understand me." The doctor then proceeds, oddly enough, to his poetry; and begins by invoking, of all others, the genius of Byron!!

"Oh, that the mantle of thy genius bright My spirit might enfold, and on me blaze."

A mantle blaze! Truly the doctor does not write for the critical, the poetical, and profane world. He seems to be a well-meaning enthusiast.

Beauties of the Rev. George Crabbe. Pp. 129.

London, 1832. Wilson.
WE have little to say in favour of the work before us: there is nothing in the biographical sketch, and the selections are rather mutilations - published we know not by what right.

Kidd's Picturesque Pocket Companion to Richmond and its Vicinity, Hampton Court, &c. 24mo. pp. 122. London, 1832.

A VERY pretty and concise companion to places which cannot be visited too often either for picturesque beauty or agreeable association. The descriptions are correct and good, and the illustrations from New London to Hampton Bridge, by G. W. Bonner, are numerous, and executed in the best style for a publication of this kind. We are not aware of any previous production to give the information here supplied; and when we consider the multitudes whom it is calculated to assist in enjoying the delights of a trip up the Thames, we are surprised that it has not been done many years ago.

The Heidenmauer. By the Author of "the Pilot," &c.

[Second Notice.] As these volumes are at this moment affording very general entertainment to all the lovers of fiction, we refrain from the further extract which we originally proposed to insert, in justice to his merit; though we cannot but remark on the versatility of Mr. Cooper's genius, which imparts equal life to the wild Indian, the weather-beaten sailor, the picturesque pirate, the romantic and mysterious tyranny of Venice, and the bold feudal spirit of the middle ages. In this very work Hurich, the burgomaster, is a perfect Flemish picture.

The Ladies' Museum. New Series. Edited by F. W. N. Bailey. London, 1832. Simpkin and Marshall.

As it is our custom to notice new contemporary publications, and also changes when they occur in their respective dynasties, we have to say of this new series, that Mr. Bailey has collected together a very amusing miscellany. We regret we have not room for Miss Jewsbury's touching stanzas, as they would be a favourable specimen of the pages before us.

Select Library, No. VI.; Lives of Eminent Missionaries, Vol. I. By John Carne, Esq. London, 1832. Fisher and Co.

Or this interesting volume, or rather of the first missionary biography, that of John Eliot, which it contains, we were enabled to insert a Review some weeks ago, which renders it only necessary for us now to say, that all the rest of the volume is in keeping with its opening. There is a dedication to Sir A. Johnston; from whom Mr. Carne acknowledges to have received "valued communications" for his life of the celebrated East India missionary Swartz, of whom there is a pleasing portrait, as well as a characteristic vignette of an interview between Eliot and the American savages. The account of the early mission to Tranquebar, 1705, and The account the historical sketch of the Moravian mission, which sprung up a century before, are full of curious information; and, together with the Lives of Swartz, Hans Egede, John Kiernander, W. Hocker, and J. Antes, combine all the intelligence of truth with the excitement of romance. The numerous incidents and adventures related, the pictures of foreign lands and of the habits of their people, the spectacle of virtuous and enthusiastic men braving danger and death in the pursuit of a great object, and the reflection how much of civilisation and human destiny has sprung, and continues to flow out of these labours of love-impart so deep and lasting an interest to the publication, that we can hardly imagine any production more worthy of popularity. The fine spirit, too, in which it is written, is another strong recommendation,-a spirit of fervent piety, utterly free from cant, and of just admiration, naturally inspired by the contemplation of the missionary's perils, and trials, and purposes, with-out leading to exaggeration. From his own-extensive travels in the East, Mr. Carne has also obtained an acquaintance with places visited by some of the parties, and could thus illustrate their narratives by local observation; so that altogether, in the subject, in the mode of its treatment, and in the improving tenor of its every page, there is all that can merit the warmest approbation; and we cordially thank the author for taking up the useful design, and for executing it in so excellent a manner. The sequel must be looked for with eager expecta-

Death-bed Scenes and Pastoral Conversations. Second Series. By the late John Warton, D.D. Edited by his Sons. 8vo. pp. 543. London, 1832. Calkin and Budd.
THE useful and exemplary production of a very worthy and well-meaning man. It gives the account of a clergyman's efforts and experiences among those committed to his charge. and these Death-bed Scenes will be a desirable acquisition to many a pastor's library, both in the way of precept and example.

Aldine Edition of the British Poets, No. XXI. The Poetical Works of John Dryden, Vol. I. London, 1832. Pickering.

A MOST carefully collected and revised Life of Dryden precedes this edition of his works, to which we cannot give higher praise than by saying it is continued as it commenced.

Alfred; or, the Wayward Son. By Thomas Hirst. 12mo.pp. 140. London, 1832. Hamilton and Adams; Simpkin and Marshall; Rosewarne Belper.

WE can only say that we do not agree with our author's own estimate of his pages; still, as it is a more comforting one than ours, we are sorry to disturb it.

Fruits of Solitude. By Sibella Elizabeth Hatfield. 12mo. pp. 212. London, 1832, Longman and Co.; Whittaker and Co.: Plymouth, Nettleton.

TASTE and poetical feeling are evident in this little volume, but it wants that originality which alone makes a striking impression on a public, to whom the generality of these slight tomes are indeed the ciphers of literature.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TORTURE IN HANOVER.

To the Editor, &c.

SIR,-I hope to render a service, as well to you as to the legislation of my country, by dissolving an error which has slided into the 789th numero of your generally esteemed London Literary Gazette, and sending you the following notices, by the publication of which, in one of the next numeros of your above-mentioned Gazette, you will perform an act of justice to the government of my country.

Amongst the Varieties, in No. 789, (from the 3d of March, A.c.) we read an article entitled "Torture in Hanover," which publishes the "astounding fact," that the actual torture is still applied at this day to extort confession from criminals in the kingdom of Hanover.

This pretended fact, however, is not only false, but it is not even contained in that periodical work from which the author of the article in question will have learned it; for the treatise (besides this wholly misunderstood) in the Hitzigsche Annalen for 1831, upon which he relies, is in the first volume, No. 33 of the first part, and this whole part is inscribed, Criminal Rechtssprüche der Justiz-Canzlei zu Celle, aus den Jahren 1815 bis 1827, and treats a trial ended on the 7th of May, 1820-I mean, that this trial cannot furnish authentic evidence of the existence of torture in our kingdom on the 3d of March, 1832! If the author of the "Torture in Hanover" will have authentic evidence for the non-existence of torture in Hanover, he may ask every law-knowing Hanoverian subject, and he will learn that, for a great part of the Hanoverian dominions, the torture has been abrogated about the midst of the past century; that for the rest, as much as I could experience by the most solicitous informations, the actual torture (wirkliche Folter) has not been applied since almost thirty years, the real territion not since 1809; and as to the verbal territion, it cannot have been applied since 1822; for on the 25th of March, 1822, consequently not only the actual torture, but also the real and verbal territion for the whole kingdom of Hanover.

If above I mentioned that the author of Torture in Hanover" had not at all understood the quoted treatise of Hitzig, I must defend my assertion by the following explanations :-

1. As to torture in general, and as it has been applied formerly, the author of the abovementioned article may please to learn, by our former laws, that the torture ought to be pronounced by a formal sentence; that this sentence could never take place but if there existed the strongest evidence (indicia), by which a jury would have been induced to pronounce immediately the condemnatory sentence, and that the criminal had still then the right to choose a defender against the application of torture. Was the torture nevertheless pronounced, the beginning was made with the verbal territion, that is to say, the executioner explained to the criminal, by producing the required instru-ments, all the degrees of torture to which he would be exposed if he persevered in his ob-duracy. Was this, however, the case, the real territion followed, the executioner adapted to the criminal the singular instruments of torture, but without doing him any hurt (absque tamen dolore); and if the criminal not even then would condescend to speak truth, it was only now that the actual torture could be applied. From these strictly observed proceedings, one may see that the words real and | The Louvre, the National Gallery of Prance. | state of Poland, and the devoteines of the verbal territion are not only "modest appella- No. 100, Pall Mail; or, the National Gal- who espoused the cause of her independent tions" for what one calls torture in the strictest sense.

2. As to the final remark concerning the recantation, I must add, that in the treatise of Hitzig it is only said, "The recantation of the thief could not produce an effect upon the sentence, because the explicit repetition of a confession brought forth during the torture is only then required, if the actual torture has been applied, and particularly because the contents of the confession, brought forth during the verbal territion, had been so exact with regard to all the stolen things, and the circumstances under which the theft had been committed, that there could not remain the least doubt of its truth."

I beg to forgive the many blunders of lan-guage I am sure to have made; and remain, with the greatest regard, Sir, your most humble and obedient servant,

L. ARENHOLD, Physican June 94, 1939.

The paragraph, which the preceding letter (which we insert literatim) professes to refute, was extracted from a Review of Hitzig's Annalen, in the well-known German periodical, the Morgenblatt. We sincerely rejoice to learn that it was founded on a misapprehension of the reviewer's; and that the law no longer authorises the executioner even " to adapt to the criminal the singular instruments of torture, but without doing him any hurt"- blessed be the tender mercies of the tormentor !-- a practice which, as it appears from the explanation of our correspondent, was not completely abolished in Hanover till the year 1822.

PINE ARTS. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

View of the Old and New London Bridges, previous to the Demolition of the Old Strue ture in 1832. From a drawing by W.

Knight, Resident Engineer to the New Work. London, F.C. Harding. In looking at this print, so valuable to the architect and antiquary, we are almost tempted to launch out with Burns's "Dialogue between the twa Brigs o' Ayr;" but we must resort to more sober observation, if we wish to inform our readers. The design is happily conceived and executed; and Mr. Knight has conferred a benefit on the public in thus preserving and contrasting two objects of singular interest and beauty. In doing so he has evinced equal taste and judgment. On the one side we see, and posterity will see, the venerable structure of the year 1176; and on the other the splendid novelty by which it has been superseded, after an interval of nearly 700 years! How may imagination wander over that space!—even looking back to the crowd of events with which it is filled, it seems an eternity; what is it to look forward to the equal era—to the year 2500! Aha, we are lost. But the contrast in regard to the progress of science is remarkable. The ancient bridge, with its twenty openings and nineteen enormous piers (from 25 to 35 feet thick), to impede the river and its navigation has yielded to the lighter fabric with only five openings, the largest 152 feet wide, and four piers of smaller dimensions, in propertion to the arches, than any bridge that we know of in the world. 700 feet of piers and starlings are reduced to 92. Nor are the details of the masonry, so carefully represented in this print, less striking. Indeed, we consider it quite a tressure for our portfolio.

lery of England. Dedicated to Earl Grey, First Lord of the Treesury. Lithography. London, J. Hogarth.

WELL done, Contrast again! Well may the print be inscribed:

"Look here upon this picture, and on this,
The counterfeit presentment of two bothers!"

England looks wondrous shabby, and as foolish as shabby in the comparison. But we trust that a wiser and better course is about to be adopted.

The Beggar's Daughter of Bednall Green, as edited by Dr. Percy: with an original Preface. Illustrated with Engravings on wood, executed by, and under the superintendence of, Branston and Wright, from Designs by Harvey. Jennings and Chaplain.

THE story of "prettye Bessee" is well known; but the present preface throws additional light on some portions of it, and contains several curious notices of the district in which the scene of it is laid. The graphic illustrations are eight in number; and to those who have seen the recent edition of The Children in the Wood. by the same publishers, it is only necessary to observe, that they equal in execution the embellishments of that exquisite ballad. Our favourites are the Separation of the Daughter from her Parents, and the Father dropping Sovereigns — we beg the antiquary's pardon — Angells with the Gentlemen, for his Child's Partion.

Biographic Gallery of the Polish Revolution, dc.dc. By Joseph Strassewicz. No. I. Folio. London, Treuttel, Würtz, and Richter.

Ossian sings of the "shades of a hundred beroes," and few songs possess greater interest: we are here promised the likenesses of a hundred gallant Poles, who have distinguished themselves in the late sanguinary struggle; and it is but reasonable to suppose that the work will be eminently popular. The fasciculus before us contains five striking lithographic portraits of individuals whose names and misfortunes carry interest and sympathy along with them, with fac-similes of their sutegraphs, and biographical netices (in Franch); the whole forming a historical gallery of our Polish contemporaries. Himself a refugee, it will readily be believed that M. Straszewicz has penned these memoirs with strong feeling; and that Valerian Lukasinski in his chains, Claudine Potocka, Uminski, the aged Bielinski (who died in 1829), and L. M. Comte Pac (a Frenchman born at Strasbourg, and one of the Florentine family of Pazzi), whose biographies fill this Number, are painted with affectionate admiration. From these memoirs it appears that the principal insurgents had, under the titles of Freemasons, of which there was a lodge in every regiment, and afterwards of Faucheurs, been engaged since 1821 in a plot to overthrow, not only the dominion of Russia in Poland, but to organise a potent conspiracy in Russia itself. On the death of Alexander in 1825, the ramifications of this design were detected and traced, and many of the parties concerned, including Lukasinski and Uminski, were tried and condemaed. Imprisonment and punishment was their sentence; so that the revolution of November found in them ready and energetic partisans. Bielinski was a patriotic civilian, and Comte Pac a brave and skilful officer, much attached to the fortunes of Ponistewski and Napoleon. These brief sketches possess very considerable interest, and throw much light on the recent

The portraits are printed in a spirited and striking style.

William Wordsworth. Painted by W. Bonil: engraved by J. Bromley. London, Mos. Boys, and Graves; Oxford, Ryman; (sr. bridge, Roe.

THIS is a delightful specimen of messotinto it the engraver, and of taste in the paint.

There is a contemplative grace and digniy in the head, the ample forehead and intelligent eye, and an easy firmness in the figure, which well befit the poet. We wish, however, that the features had been more distinctly market and that peculiar characteristics had not been sacrificed to general expression. The countrance of Wordsworth is a very fine one; and every line on it tells to the observant phynognomist. We cannot, therefore, in justice, approve of their being smoothed away, though it be to render this production a capitaing pacimen of art. We had rather it had been more strikingly like, even had it been less prominently beautiful.

The Countess Gower and the Lady Elizabeth
Leveson Gower. Engraved by Samuel Cousins, from a picture by Sir T. Lawrence, late P.R.A.

A NOBLE-SIZED print, one of Mr. Country finest productions: can we give it higher praise Of the original picture we have already spaker in the Literary Gazette with the admiration which it must elicit from all who see it. Als: when shall we again have a painter who has great a mastery over the technical difficults of his art united so intense a feeling of all the constitutes elegance and refinement in nature

New Sporting Magazine. Our contemporary is almost resolved to con vert our quiet study into a betting-room, and our love of the ink-stand into a rage for the ? cing stand. His print, lately received, of a neck and neck contest, by A. Cooper, and engaged by J. R. Scott, is all but alive, and the actual both of horses and riders, admirable. The olde piece, the "Spring-bok," is pretty, but would

MUSIC.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

The Western Garland: a Collection of Original Melodies. Composed and arranged for the Voice and Pianoforte by Musical Professors the West of Scotland. The Words by the Author of "The Chameleon." Long. 1832, J. Willis; Glasgow, Mackellar 18 Robertson; Edinburgh, Purdie, Paursan and Roy: and J. Robertson.

This very graceful volume, graceful in ere sense, with its sweet rhymes and sweet made lodies, comes from beyond the Tweed, and it every way worthy of that national music white character for interest and pathos has long been established. Some of the airs are quite delicies and echoed by fitting words. The following song, the versification of which is singular harmonious, is very exquisitely set :-

"Oh! not upon so cold a shrine
Let thy young trust be pheed:
Them's not a feeling once was mine.
But now hath run to waste.

By the by, we observe the name of one emindifies in is spelt (how pronounced we cannot rell) Schrodwille Mr. Stooqueler (see a preceding Review), who we are the locase communion with him, make it skyllicks in Baldwin and Cradock. These are embellment, the Magazine, but also reposite paints.

I would not have thee, sweet one, taste
The evils I must dree,
Nor wish this tomb—my heart—re-graced
With bridal wreaths from thee. with bridal wreaths from thee.

I cannot look thee back the love
That hovers round thine eye,
Although there be enough to move
A stole in the sigh,
Which heaves, though all unconscious why,
Thy breast, ingenuous yet:
Mine labours too, in vain, to try
The lesson of 'Forget.'

We do like in Mr. Atkinson his sincere love of poetry, and the true and national spirit in which he desires that his works should be a volume is elegantly got up, and will, we predict, be the favourite which it deserves to be.

GERMAN PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. Schloss, of whose activity and zeal as a purveyor and importer of German literature we have more than once had occasion to speak in terms of eulogy, has submitted to our inspection a number of recent publications from Germany, some of them very novel in appearance, and others of singular value to those branches of the fine arts and sciences which they illustrate. It will, however, require a few days, at least, to enable us to examine as we ought, before reporting upon them, the works on natural history and other interesting or important subjects; and we this week merely take our pen to notice two or three of the lighter productions.

1. Scenen aus dem Tiroler Volks Leben von Richter. VI. München, in der literarisch artistischen Ansalt.

THESE are coloured lithographs of the costume and aspects of the Tyrol, of which six subjects are, as it were, framed on brown cartridge paper. They are very simple and very natural, and afford a very correct idea of the people and their manners

- 2. Randseirhnungen zu Goethe's Balladen und Romansen. Von Eugen Neureuther. Heft III. 1829.
- 3. Baierische Gebirgsliedermit Bildern, gemichnet von Eugen Neureuther. 1831.

THESE productions are curious, from the manner in which, to use a common phrase, they are got up. Goethe's ballads are surrounded, or otherwise embellished, with outlines of mingled imagination, beauty, and grotesqueness— trees, figures, devices, flowers, banquets, pro-cessions, mythological subjects, &c. &c., as the various themes suggest. The style is very original, and, we are of opinion, need only be seen to excite immediate imitation in this country. The last-mentioned performance is similar in character, but the compositions are, we believe, from unpublished manuscript sources; and the music is generally given on the face of the page. Snatches of it which we have heard played are extremely pretty. The outlines are replete with talent, and might fur-nish studies for the painter and sculptor in the higher walks of art.

DRAMA.

COVENT GARDEN.

PAGANINI finished his four nights on Tuesday with great éclat; and we rejoice to see that they are to be encored. The theatre has always been full, as it has also been to the French plays. On Monday the latter were unconscionably long - near one o'clock ! When will managers learn that the public are much better playhouses on account of the inconveniently late hours and fatigue to which they would expose themselves and their families?

HAYMARKET.

On Thursday a new piece was produced at this theatre, called the Court Jester. It is described in the bills as a comic drama : but as there is quite as much of the serious as the comic in its composition, a melodrama would, perhaps, have been a more appropriate title. The incidents been a more appropriate title. of this little production are not of the most probable description. A schoolmaster, in an obscure village, who has all his life been "cudgelling his brains" about finance and government, is suddenly carried off to the court of a German or Italian prince, introduced as a pro-fessional jester, and in that situation, however strange it may appear, assists at a privy council of importance, bullies the prime minister and courtiers, and is rewarded for the confusion he has made, by being raised to the rank of premier in the dukedom of his highness. This is the farcical portion of the drama. The serious is equally improbable, inasmuch as the niece of this very pedagogue, who is travelling about on foot with her-bread, and cheese, and claspknife in her side-pocket, and who represents herself as the widow of a youth who has been killed in battle, is discovered to have been privately married to the aforesaid prince, under a feigned name, and in the end is acknowledged as his wife, and the partner of his throne. From such materials (French, we believe) much, of course, cannot be expected. The first act is dull and tediously long; but the scene at the council-table, in the second, has some amusing equivoque, about it, which carries the piece successfully to the close. It is, however, either very loosely written, or the actors are not so perfect as they should be;—and although it may serve to fill a gap for the present, can never be of much value to the treasury of the theatre.

ENGLISH OPERA: OLYMPIC.

On Friday, the Climbing Boy, a three-act drama by Peake, was produced at this theatre, and with such deserved success, that it has been and with such deserved success, that it has been acted every night since, and will, we doubt not, run, as a favourite should run, through the season. The story of a lost child, the Sweep (Miss Henderson), involves in domestic trouble and sorrow Sir Gilbert Thorncliffe (Mr. Perkins), his daughter, Mile. de Monneville (Miss Somerville), and a worthy Catholic priest (Mr. F. Mathews); and the pathetic situations and serious dialogue suited to them is relieved by the comic humours and sparkling wit of a less interested group of characters, who, never-theless, are all necessary to the plot and its dénouement. These consist of Mr. Strawberry (Bartley), a philanthropist of the most natural school; of his maiden aister, Prudence (Mrs. C. Jones), who is what her name indicates; and of Jack Ragg (Reeves), a sweeper of crossings. Of a more mixed description are, Jacob Bussard (Mr. W. Bennett), a hypocritical villain in the service of Strawberry; his young wife (Miss H. Cawse); and Slinker, a poacher (Mr. Salter). We will not rob one of our readers of the enjoyment of seeing the story developed upon the stage; but will only assure one and all of them, that they will be highly entertained by it. The parts are throughout ably performed; and the piece itself affords full opportunity for every thing that can engage the managers seart that the puone are much perter opportunity of provoke hearty bursts of laughter. satisfied with performances which has till attention and provoke hearty bursts of laughter. eleven, or half-past eleven o'clock? and that Bartley is excellent with his impulses of feel-hundreds and thousands refrain from going to mg; and Reeve broad and rich in his farcical colouring of Jack Ragg, the sole friend of the Climbing Boy, till Mr. Strawberry takes a fancy to him. The few scenes Mr. Salter has to play are very forcibly sustained; and Mr. Bennett acquits himself with equal credit in the odious part of Jacob Buszard. Miss Cawse is pretty and piquant; Miss Somerville sings, though feebly, very sweetly; and Miss Henderson is a fair black prince. Mrs. C. Jones not only acts well, as she always does, but sings a medley parody so charmingly as to elicit a cordial encore; and Messra. Perkins and F. Mathews complete the list of meritorious performances in this clever production. Mr. Peake has allowed himself to push the ludicrous to a considerable extent in several places; but he has done it so skilfully and with so much talent, that the risibility of the audience is kept in constant requisition; and ever and anon they are treated with an additional stimulus by a smart rapartee or laughable witticism. The scenes with Strawberry and the Sweep, on the debut of the latter from the chimney; and with the Sweep and his crony Jack recalling the delights of May-day, are irresistibly droll. But, altogether, the Chimbing Boy is a capital hit, and should be seen by all who love a night's genuine dramatic ampsement.

In the after-piece, on Friday, the Picturesque, Miss Ferguson sported the most bewitching eyes in the world; and Miss Pincott contested the point with a very supreme lustre of orb. The house was well filled, and the entertainments from first to last of the most pleasing order.

UNBEHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Strand Theatre. A figured carpet is spread on the stage during the whole of the Goldon Calf; so that it decks alike, in a manner more original than consistent, the floors of fashionable drawing-rooms, mean lodgings, and even the apartments in a sponging-house. There is much aim and little effect in this introduction of carpets en the stage. It originated at Drury Lane, in Lord Glengall's comedy of the Follies of Fashion. That at present at the Strand Theatre is better, however, than its predecessor - a certain red drugget, which covered only half the stage, and which was ever and anon rolled up by the gowns, or catching the feet of the actresses. On a recent occasion, the proprietress was all but reduced from a perpendicular to a horizontal by tripping over it; whereon Miss Matley (I believe), who was on the stage at the time, uttered an interesting little shriek, and "La! ma'ara!" I spake in my last of a table-cover which dees constant duty for a cloak at the Cobourg; and now beg leave to call attention to Mrs. Waylett's pretty French shawl, which, in nearly every piece at this theatre, condescends to act the part of a table-cover!

Haymarket.-July 9. A Duel in Richelieu's Time. While I was admiring the correctness of the costumes, a female in a straw bonnet and black veil quietly walked across the private study of Le Comte de Chalais. It was quite excruciating to hear Mr. Younge incessantly addressing De Chalais as Monsieur le Count. Cooper, as Le Due de Chevreuse, appeared uncertain as to the rank he had conferred on his spouse, for he called her alternately " the Countess __ the Duchess."

Covent Garden. - July 9. French plays on English boards. In l'Héritage a Covent Garden library scene was used; and conspicuous assid French people, lenguage, story, and abode, was a large portfolio, inscribed in large gilt letters with the word " maps," Sadier's Wells, July 11. - During a terrific add, that these evening lounges are most grati-lages, with their attendant gardens, groves, combat in a raw-head-and-bloody-bones melodrama, the sword of one of the combatants broke. His fierce opponent, instead of instantly availing himself of this advantage, quietly waited till some kind and invisible agent should supply the deficiency, and lo, he waited not in vain, for swords anon came tumbling in on either side of the stage, though the scene represented a lonely wood. The vraisemblance produced by such a manœuvre was perfect.

King's Theatre, July 14.—The curtain has turned methodist; for, with more scrupulousness than courtesy, it hurried itself down as soon as the Sabbath had commenced, shutting out Heberle and the other principal dancers, amid the shricks of the stalls, who feared that some of their favourites would be severed in twain, or otherwise damaged. As it would have been a compromise of dignity for the dancers to squeeze off at the side, the curtain was dragged up again, discovering the stage completely covered with Arcadian youths, scene-shifters, sylphs, and dandies.

Queen's Theatre, July 16.—Things go on somewhat more smoothly here than when I made my last report : but still portions of landscape remain in cottages, and fragments of drawing-rooms in forests, and the actors and actresses talk about their 'earts, call upon

'eaven, &c. &c.

King's Theatre, July 17 .- In one part of Tancredi no fewer than three scenes were successively lowered, one in front of another, and were then pulled up again, lowered again, and changed after the manner of the penny pictures in a peep-show. It must have been very pretty amusement for the scene-shifters, but was infinitely annoying to the house. In Otello, Roderigo's serenade in the last scene was sung by Otello (Donzelli) himself! This is really unwarrantable. Desdemona had not time to die. nor Otello to kill himself, before the fall of the curtain, owing to the clumsiness of Donzelli. who, in stabbing Mde. Devrient, so entangled the dagger with her hair, that they were obliged to stand fidgetting and fumbling till the curtain obscured them from sight.

SIGHTS OF LONDON.

The British Gallery .- The collection, chiefly of old masters, but possessing some pictures by Sir Joshua and Bonington, and now exhibit-ing in the British Gallery, has been opened on the last two Monday evenings by tickets from the patrons and directors, and these superb paintings seen, under the light of gas, by numerous and elegant assemblies. The effect altogether is very fine, and the contrast between the stately and gorgeous forms on the portrait canvass, and the gay and beautiful living forms gazing upon them with admiration, tells a touching, but not unpleasing, tale of Time and his works and changes. There on the walls live still in mimic life the fair and noble of Holbein, and Titian, and Vandyke; and here, moving around-how different in costume, in look, and in character !- breathing subjects to employ the highest art of the Holbeins, Titians, and Vandykes of our age, should such be found with the mantle of genius descended upon them. The effect of the fictitious light is good upon some of the paintings; while others lose by it. The darker pieces, grave and solemn in colouring, are in the latter predicament; while those of brighter hues flash out upon the vision. But we have already offered such remarks upon the Gallery as its school of treasures seemed to demand; and we need now only fving and delightful.

The Diorama. - One of our greatest annual treats is the opening of the Diorama. It is a The pictures this year are, "A View of Paris, from Montmartre," painted by M. Daguerre, and "The Campo Santo of Pisa," painted by M. Bouton. We cannot say that they are superior to any of the works which have been heretofore exhibited by those able artists, but they are equal to any; and were it not, perhaps, that the novelty of the effect is in some degree worn off, we are persuaded that they would excite as high a degree of public curiosity and interest as any of their predecessors. It is certainly judicious to contrast an out-of-door view with an interior. At the same time, in the present, as in most former instances, we give the preference to the latter, which seems to be better calculated for the display of all the extraordinary and fascinating resources of the dioramic art, and for the attainment of that perfect deception which will not permit the spectator to persuade himself that he is gazing merely at a plane surface. That ancient and once magnificent mausoleum, the Campo Santo of Pisa, is peculiarly suited to this purpose, in consequence of the opportunity which it affords of opposing deep gloom to sharp and splendid light, and of harmonising them by the intermediate agency of reflections and half-tints of every description. We must not be supposed, however, to underrate the View of Paris, which is beautifully executed, and to which the occasional breaking out of the sun gives great spirit and animation.

Panorama of Milan. - What a delightful invention is a panorama! With a rapidity to which the utmost speed attainable by the assistance of steam-vessels and rail-roads is sloth. and without fatigue or expense, to be transported to distant regions, and placed amidst some of the greatest wonders of nature and art! For instance, to be able in a moment to walk out of Leicester Square into Italy, and by ascending either one staircase or another, to find one's self in the heart of Florence or Milan! The lower circle of Mr. Burford's panorama has lately been opened with a highly interesting representation of the last-named city, and the country by which it is surrounded. painted by the proprietor from drawings taken by himself in 1830. Of course, the principal feature of the view is the magnificent and farfamed cathedral, the finest specimen of the pointed style of architecture in the world; built entirely of white marble, replete with elegance, richness, and variety, and finished with an exquisite delicacy, rivalling that of the celebrated Taj Mahl, of the East. The difficulties which Mr. Burford must have had to encounter in the perspective of this vast and complicated structure, can be appreciated only by a few: those difficulties, however, he has happily surmounted, and the effect is singularly splendid and impressive. The palaces, churches, and other public and private buildings of Milan, are likewise admirably depicted, although they are all rendered comparatively unimportant by the stupendous edifice to which we have adverted. "Beyond, the eye ranges to an immense distance over the rich and fertile plains of Lombardy, Piedmont, and the Venetian States, luxuriant with every description of rural beauty, intersected by rivers and lakes, and thickly studded with towns and vil-and vineyards: - the northern horizon, from east to west, is bounded by the vast chain of the Alps, which form a magnificent semi-circle at from eighty to one hundred and twenty miles distance; Monte Rosa, Monte Cenis, Monte St. Gothard, the Simplon, &c. covered with eternal snow, being conspicuous from their towering height; towards the south the view is bounded by the Appennines, extending across the peninsula from the Mediterranean to the Adriatic; and on the south-west, the Piedmontese hills, in the neighbourhood of Turin, appear a faint purple line on the horizon, so small as to be scarcely visible.'

* From this remark we must, however, except the magical "Village of Unterseen."

Vauxhall Basaar .-- On Monday the humane friends of the Institution for the cure of Deafness, having been baffled in consequence of the wet weather in their preceding attempt to realise a sum for the benefit of this charity, by the sale of fancy articles and toys in the Regent's Park, made a second and more successful effort in Vauxhall Gardens. During the day there was rather a stirring sale of trifles by the fair and lively stall-keepers who undertook this benevolent design; and the gratification of purchasing a pincushion from a duchess, or a Grimaldi from a countess, was not diminished by the idea that the price would be applied to the relief of a fellow-creature. Perhaps, if we were to investigate the principle of these Bazaars, we might disapprove of them, as tending to supply a market which should be left to remunerate the labours of the ingenious and industrious poor; but, at least on the present occasion, we will not examine the question too minutely—for the purpose was excellent, and the means pleasing. In the evening there were illuminations and fireworks; and throughout the whole time, more than twelve hours, thanks to a dry Saint Swithin, the weather was most propitious.

VARIETIES

The Frazinella.-It is well known that when the fraxinella is approached at night with a candle, it darts forth little flashes of light. This has been usually attributed to the existence of an ethereal vapour, which surrounds this plant at the time of its flowering. M. Biot has shewn the fallacy of such an opinion, and has proved that the phenomenon is the result of essential and inflammable oil, contained in small vessels at the extremities of the branches, which vessels burst on the approach of any inflamed body, setting at liberty the essential oil, as that contained in orange-peel is set at liberty by pressure.

Ouvarovite. - Such is the name given to a new kind of precious stone, said to have been found in Russia; in its texture resembling granite, but of an emerald green in colour.

Gialo Antico. - Another mineral treasure has, it is stated, been discovered in the R. Empire. It consists of rich quarries of reddish yellow marble, veined with white, equal to the gialo antico of Lacedemonia. The site is about twenty wersts from Simpheropol, in Tauris.

Washington Irving. — His countrymen are fête-ing their distinguished contemporary at New York. It is, we hear, his intention to make an extensive tour through the United States and our North American provinces; of which we may, we trust, look for an account worthy of his candour and distinguished abilities.

[•] If, however, the lady promoters of these Fairs judiciously employ deserving parties to manufacture the various articles for them, our objection will fall to the ground, and the reverse become the argument.—Ed. L. G.

We hear, with much Sir Walter Scott .gratification, that Sir Walter Scott has reached his home at Abbotsford in safety. When wheeled into his favourite room, the library, he revived more obviously than those who love him had ever hoped to witness. Come what will, it is consolatory to think that our illustrious countryman is where it is most fit he should be; and neither on " a foreign strand," nor in a London caravanserai.

Every Man's Paper .- Another threepenny No. I.!!! Well, let them come. It calls a certain great association a "Society for the Diffusion of Useless Knowledge," and proposes to supply the desideratum it leaves unoccupied. The selection of matter is good; and the reviews, criticisms, &c. fair and reputable both to the honesty and talents of the writers.

The Original .- Our contemporary has published a very amusing pleasantry in its advertisement, where it gives a double-column list of its eminent contributors — all fictitious and ludicrous names, but quite as efficient as those so puffingly paraded by publishers, whose works are not supported by intrinsic merit. We observe in some of these cases, Heaven bless the mark! the "distinguished individuals" thus shewn up, have been anxiously denying their association with the other mighty unknowns!

Conspectus of Butterflies .- We had intended a brief notice of this volume, by Mr. Rennie, in this No.; but we perceive that an injunction has been moved against it by Mr. Stevens, on the ground of piracy. Mr. S.'s work costs a guinea and a half; the piracy (if it be so) 7s. 6d.; and both seem to us to be too dear, according to present prices.

The Ladye Chapel.—The Bazaar at the Surry Zoological Gardens netted 420l. for the restoration of this ancient structure; upon which Mr. Gwilt, the architect, has commenced his labours. Out of this matter has arisen a suggestion well deserving of being carried into effect, namely, the formation of a Society to protect all deserving national institutions, remains of antiquity, &c. from falling into decay or being destroyed We promise such our most zealous support.

Results of Cholera .- In 1831, the burials in the six metropolitan parishes on the south side of the river, from June 16 to July 13, amounted to 214; and during the same period this year, to 346, being an increase of 132. The general official report of July 18 shews an increase of frightful magnitude, namely, new cases in England and Scotland 620, deaths 188, recovered 270, remaining 1265; in Ireland, new cases 462, deaths 169, recoveries 301:- a thousand and eighty-two attacks of the disease in twenty-four hours, and three hundred and fiftyseven of them fatal. July 19, the report of cholera in England and Scotland, new 467, deaths 178, recovered 277; Ireland, new 655, deaths 254, recovered 428 = 1122 new cases, and 432 deaths. In Paris, on Wednesday the 18th, 170 died. We ought to remark, that the heat of the weather has since moderated.

North London Literary and Scientific Institution.-The thirst for useful knowledge has led to this establishment in Clerkenwell (see former Lit. Gazettes); and on Thursday evening, last week, the giving of lectures commenced by an address from a no less distinguished man than Mr. Babbage, who invited the attention of operators in the arts and sciences to every odd or new appearance which might occur to them;—from the notice of apparent accidents had sprung many of our most valuable dis-Mr. Partington followed, and decoveries. livered a clear and able lecture on the steamengine. The auditory was numerous and respectable.

Serpents. _ M. Duvernoy, who has devoted much time to the study of the organisation of venomous serpents, has ascertained that, besides the venomous teeth in front, the existence of which has long been known, they have in the hinder part of the jaw longer and stronger teeth, of as great malignity. He is also inclined to think that the secretions of the lachrymal glands in some descriptions of venomous serpents, do not go to moisten the eyeballs, but enter the mouth, and assist in communicating saliva to the food.

New Battering-Ram. - On Tuesday morning, a steam-coach, out on an experimental airing, made a wrong turn in the Harrow Road, and not only forced its way through a garden railing, but absolutely knocked in the side of a dwelling-house, and almost smothered the astonished inmates. Fortunately there were none killed or wounded.

African Expedition. - The name of the smaller steam-vessel engaged in this expedition is the Elburka. The Colombine, a sailing vessel of 170 tons, also goes out to the mouth of the river.

Atmospheric Phenomenon. - The Northern Bee contains the following report from Mos-cow:—" In the month of March this year, at the distance of thirteen wersts from Wotokolamsk (100 wersts from Moscow), the fields in the vicinity of the village of Kurjanowa, to the depth of about two inches, and to the extent of 80 or 100 square toises, were covered with a substance which fell from the air in the form of snow. but of a yellowish colour. At first sight it seemed to consist of flocks, which felt almost like cotton; but after being kept some time in a glass, it dissolved, perhaps by the mixture of the aqueous parts of the snow along with which it had been gathered up, into a kind of resin, which had the colour of amber, the elasticity of Indian rubber, and a smell of boiled oil and wax. In its primitive state, this substance when brought near to the fire kindled, and burned with a flame like that of spirit-ofwine: in its resinous form, it begins to boil and crackle on the fire like resin, but does not kindle .- (St. Petersburgh, 27th May.)

Dr. Laribba .- An individual of this name died at Lima in February, leaving behind him thirty MS. volumes on general geography.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Lil. Gasette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXIX. July 21, 1828.]

Elements of Materia Medica, by A. T. Thomson, M.D. A Collection of the Exercises which have obtained rises in Charter House, from 1814 to 1832. Memoir of the Court and Character of Charles the First, by Lucy Aikin.

A new edition of an Introduction to Botany, by Bancks, A new edition of an Introduction to Botany, by Dancas, F.L.S. with improvements. Outlines of the First Principles of Horticulture, by John Lindley, Esq.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

James's History of Charlemagne, 8vo. 16s. bds.—De Grey, a Poem, 8vo. 5s. cloth.—Thackrah on Health and Longevity, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—The Heidenmauer, by the Author of the "Spy." 3 vols. post 8vo. 1l. 1l. 6d. bds.—Skilnes's Excursions in Indla, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 4s. bds.—Skilnes's Excursions in Indla, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 4s. bds.—Gilly's Memoir of Felix Neff, 8vo. 9s. 6d. bds.—Wayland's Sermons, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Biblical Cabinet Atlas, plain, 18s. cloth; coloured, 21s. cloth.—Ainger's Parochial Sermons, 12s. 6d. bds.—Introduction sux Annuaires, &c. de la Langue Françoise, royal 18mo. 6s. cloth.—Smith's Grecian Antiquities, 12mo. 4s. 6d. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

June.	Thermometer.			Thermometer.
Thursday · · 21	From	45.	to	70.	29.90 to	29.84
Friday · · · · 22	• • • • •	51.	• •	67.	29-62
Saturday · · 23	• • • • •	49.	• •	67.	29-60 ₹	29.70
Sunday 24		47.	••	69.	29-76
Monday · · 25	• • • • •	47.	••	69.	29-95	29.99
Tuesday · · 26		43.	• •	71.	30.03	30-09
Wednesday 27	i	45.	• •	74.	30.14 正	30-22

Prevailing wind N.W.
Rain fell on the 21st, 22d, and 25th—the other four days generally clear.
Rain fallen 625 of an inch.

June.	1 Th	ermo	mete	Barometer.
Thursday 28	From						30.34
Friday 29	1				30-35
Saturday · · 30		53.	••	74.	30-32
Sunday 1	1	41.		77.	30.27		30.23
Monday . 2					30.14
Tuesday . 3	1	41.	••	71.	30.10
Wednesday 4		46.	• •	79.	29-98	to	29-94

Prevailing winds, N.E. and S.E.

The particularly favourable weather of the past week has enabled many to secure a good crop of hay.

July.	Th	ermo	mate	Barometer.
Thursday 5	From	52.	to	74.	29-95 Stationary
Friday · · · · 6					29.89 to 29.76
Saturday · · 7		45.		71.	29-73 . 29-84
Sunday 8		40.	• •	71.	29.86 . 29.81
Monday · 9	1	50.		73.	29-83 Stationary
Tuesday · · 10		55.	• •	73.	29.84 . 29.87
Wednesday 11	1	55.		77.	29-71 . 29-67

Prevailing wind, S.W. Except the 5th and 10th, generally cloudy; showers at Rain fallen, .05 of an inch. Ramonton. CHARLES H. Latitude ····· 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude ··· 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

F. H. N. of Cambridge, if he would write verses to Emma, ought in justice to us to have paid the postage, as we cannot see that either the lady or the poet are worth eightpence of our money.

We have a sufficiently high opinion of P. O.; but as he has a much higher one of himself, we beg to close our correspondence.

We have a sufficiently high opinion of P. O.; but as he has a much higher one of himself, we beg to close our correspondence.

"Old Vinegar" has lost, if ever he possessed, acidity, and has become quite mothery.

The Story-Telier.—We have received No. V. of this very agreeable miscellany, and notice the explanation it contains respecting our remark on the questionable right of appropriating the productions published in other works. We readily concede to our contemporary that in many instances this may be done without injustice, and that the Story-Teller seems honourably inclined to carry its system into practice with fairness and discretion; but still there are also many cases where the selection and republication of the gens belonging to others is a real and substantial injury. Few periodicals have been plundered in this way more than the Literary Gazette; and it is curious enough that, by an accident we are sure, in this very No. of the Story-Teller there is a besulfull little poem, "The Monks of Old," by G. P. R. James, taken from us without an acknowledgment. Having said thus much, we may add that the No. is altogether very entertaining: the medallion of Byron, which accompanies it, is not so good as that of Scott, which we formerly mentioned.

is not so good as that of Scott, which we formerly mentioned.

Curious Facts in Natural History.

Portmouth, 18th July, 1832.

Sir,—Observing in a recent Liverary Gazette the following paragraph relating to the Zoological Society—"On the table was placed an egg of the curassow, which was dropped in the gardens—a circumstance of rare occurrence, there being only another instance (in Holland, we believe) of these birds producing eggs in Europe;"—I beg to observe, that a curassow in the possession of a gentleman in the Gun Wharf of this place has laid several eggs, having commenced laying while in company with the male bird (now dead), which she has continued up to the present time, having laid two eggs within the last few days. One of her eggs is deposited in the museum of the Philosophical Society of this town, another is in my possession, and the proprietor of the bird has himself several of them. My object in addressing you is to correct an error; and while upon this subject, it may not be irrelevant to state, that during the present summer a lace-back paroquet, the property of a gentleman of the same place which has been many years caged, has dropped several eggs, one of which is deposited in the museum of the same Institution.—I am, sir, &c. Ggo. Yollow, Preserver of Specimens to the Institution.—Eararum.—I our last No., p. 441, col. 3, Review of "the Visit," line 9, for "rushes," read "rustics."

* We are much obliged to our correspondent for this

We are much obliged to our correspondent for this communication—Ed. L. G.

[•] We have just heard, and mention it with sincere regret, that Mrs. Ridgway, the wife of the very respectable bookseller and publisher in Piccadilly, has fallen a scriffce to this malady, after a few hours' illness. By the many literary and political men of all ranks who have been so long in the habit of making their pleasant lounge at Mr. Ridgway's, this event will be much lamented; for the good sense and superior intelligence, the pleasant manners and the kind attentions of Mrs. Ridgway, caused her to be viewed by the whole circle in the light of a friend. — Ed. Le G.

ADVERTISEMENTS,

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

J MALL. The Gallery, with a Selection from the Works of the Ancient asters of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English thouls, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till Six in the Evening.

Admission, 1s -Catalogue, 1s. WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

Preservation of Cresby Hall.

T a MEETING held at the City of London Tavern, to late into consideration the best means to be opted for pre-crying and restoring Croub Hall, in the City of orden, W. T. Copeland, Esq. M.P. and Alderman of the Ward, the Chair. London, W. in the Chair,

It was Recoved unanimously—
First—That it is highly expedient to preserve from destruction ast rare and beautiful specimen of the domestic architecture of the fifteenth century, known as Grosby Hall, in the City of that freenth century, known as Crosby Brais, as the Combined Combi

An etotiowing Subscriptions were immediately announced:—

W. T. Copeland, Esq. 45 5 6 Francis thantry, R.A.

Mrs. W. T. Copeland 5 5 F.R.S. F.S. A.

Miss Copeland 9 2 9 C. Wentworth Dilke, E.S. A.

F.S. A. 5 6 William Extfold Esc. 4 A

Mis Copeland

W. Cotton, Esq. F.R.S.
F.S.A.
Mrs. W. Cotton
John Cotton, Esq.
Sir Robert Wigram, Bart.
F.R.S. F.S.A.
Downger Lady Wigram
W. Wigram, Esq.
Octavity Wigram, Esq.
Octavity Wigram, Esq.
W. Ciebert, Esq.
Mrs. Janes Capper, Esq.
Mrs. John Capper

S. J. Capper, Esq.
Mrs. Barber

Mrs. S.J. Capper
Mis Hackett
Joseph Barber, Esq.
Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Hore, Esq.
Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Hore, Esq.
Mrs. Barber

Mrs. Mistore

Mrs. Hore, Esq.
Mrs. Hore, Esq.
Mrs. Hore, Mannaged

F.S.A. Mrs. Blore Marquese of Mrs. Blore Most Hon. the Marquese of Landowne, F.R.S. 8 Most Hon. the Marquese of Northampton, F.R.S. 5 Right. Hon. Earl Brewnlow, F.R.S. F.S.A. a. Rt. Hon. Lord Ebrington 8 Right Hon. Lord Rugness, M.P. F.S.A. Sight Hon. the Solicitor General Sir Wm. Blizard, F.R.S. 6

General
Sir Wm. Blizard, F.R.S.
Hon. Col. Sir E. Cust,
M.P.

M.P.

*Hon. and Rev. H. C.
Cust, F.R.S. F.S.A.
Hon. and Rev. Richard
Cust

*Sir Stephen Richard
Glynne, Bart. F.S.A.

Glynne, Bart. F.S.A. Hon. Thomas Grenville, F.S.A. F.S.A. Sir Abraham Hume, Bart. Sir R. H. Inglis, Bart.

Sir Abraham Hume, Bart Sir R. H. Inglis, Bart. M.P. F.R.S. F.S.A. Sir James Shaw, Bart. Chamberlain of London Sir Jeffrey Wyatville, F.S.A. Sir H. Williamson Mr. Sheriff Pirie Mr. Aiderman Farebro-ther ther

Mr. Alderman Thompson, M.P.
Matthias Attwood, Esq.
M.P.

Pelix Booth, Esq. Thomas Brunton, Esq.

The gentlemen to whose names a star is attached form the Committee, by whom Rubscriptions will be received, and by the following Bankers:—Mears: Barnets; Coutts and Co.; Drummond and Co.; Glynn and Co.; Hammersley and Co.; Hankey and Co.; and Williams and Co.

S. J. CAPPER, Hon. Sec. Crosby Square, June 90.

TO BE DISPOSED OF, and taken possession of immediately, a good Circulating Library and Stock in Trade, Stationery, and Fancy Stationery, &c. (the Business may be much improved by adding the Printing and Binding), in a Provincial Town, where there is no other Library. It would take from 5000. to 5000. to take possession.

Apply for Particulars to Mesers. Whittaker and Co.
Are Maria Larse, London.

Direct to C. B. All letters paid.

ROYAL SOCIETY.—The Council of the Royal Society intend publishing a new Catalogue, arranged according to the Subjects of the Scientific Works in the Lubrary of the Society, the price of which, to Subscribers, will be, in 800. 101. The Council also propose publishing the Abstracts of the Papers read at the Evening Meetings of the Society, from the beginning of 1980, and which have been printed in the Philosophical Transactions. The price of this work to Rubscribers will also be, in 800. 100.; on large paper, 11. printed uniformly with those who have now published for the present vear. Persons intending to subscribe are requested to inform Mr. Hudson, the assistant-Secretary, whether it is their with to subscribe for either or both of those works, and whether for the 800 or the 6400 odition; and in such case, their early intimation is particularly desired, as no subscription can be received after the present menth. The Subscription is not limited to Pellows of the Society.

EIDODENDRON.—Mr. Burgess begs to LA inform his Friends and the Subscribers to the Bidded-dron, that No. IN., which completes the Work, is new published, and may be had of the Artist, or at J. Dickinson's, Frintseller, 114, New Bond Street.

New Drawing-Book.

Just published by Mesars. Dobbs and Co.

PROGRESSIVE DRAWING-BOOK. FRUUTENSIVE DRAWING-BOOK, imprited by a first property of the firs

MECHANICAL PERSPECTIVE; or,

M BCHANICAL PERSPECTIVE; Or,
Decription of a Pocket Instrument for Sketching from Nature, and of a Machine for Drawing in Perspective from Ground
Plans, &c. By I'R. RONALDB, Esse,
I delution, 4c. 6d.
Held by R. Hunder, St. Paul's Churchyard; Taylor,
Architectural Library, Holborn, &c. 6c.
The Instruments thom here a read by J. Care, 181, Strand;
Blobyntel, 26, Charing Costa &c.
They differ executally from the Camera Lucida.

Dat published.

A N K S of the L O I R E.

By LOUIS PAREZ, Brighton.

Part L containing Four Views—Chateaudun—Chiteau d'Angers—Chiteau de Bions—and Chambrain Descriptive Letter-press of Toppes and Chambrain Illustrations.

Folio, price to Nubernberg, 10s.; Non-subscribers, 18s.;

"There are few rivers in Europe the banks of which furnish finer or more frequent subjects for the pencil than the Loire. We hope that the present effort to introduce this grand and beautiful scenery to the English amateur will meet with the success it deserves. They are drawn with much firmness and precision, and the lithographic execution size dees Mr. Parez great oredit.—Litterary Gassitit, May 18th, 1828.

"The inten No. of a new work by Mr. Louis Parez, M.S.A. Nermandy. The views admit a pleasing attent of scene, while the topographical accompaniments and historical sedece add the charm of literature to the attractions of eart. Investe features in the property of the little of of the li

Price 2s. 6s. the first Part of

ANDSCAPE ILLUSTRATIONS to the Prose and Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.; with Portraits of the principal Female Characters.

Contents: C. P. Leville P. A.

Doune Castle ... J. D. Harding,

Ritring Castle ... Addrass.

G. F. Robsom.

Addrass.

The flattering reception given to the previous edition of the "Landscape lilustrations of the Waverley Novels" has induced the Proprietors to re-issue the Work in its present form, and as such a reduction in price as will place it within the reach of every lover of the fine arts.

To give an additional interest to the Work, it is their intention to additional interest to the Work, it is their intention to affect the state of the Novels and Poems; a
A part will appear once a fortinght; and new Plates are in preparation, to include the Poetical Works of Sir Waiter Scott.

For the accommodation of Purchasers of the Previous edition, Proof Impressions of the Portraits, royal 8vo., price 1s. 6t. each, may be had: they will also be done up in Parts, each containing four Portraits, price 3s. on plain, and 6s. on India paper.

The few ramaining copies of the early impressions of the Landcapes may still be had, in Twenty Parts, India proofs, royal 4to., price 7s.; a royal 8vo, price 1s. 6t. each.

London: Chapman and Hail, 100 Strand; Moon, Boys, and Graves, Pall Mall; Jamee Fraser, 8to, Regent Street.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Price 6d.

N the PURSUIT of KNOWLEDGE; an Address delivered before the Law Society in the University of London, as the commencement of the Session.

By DAVID WIRE.

By DAVID WIRE.

Second edition.

"All those who are desirous of being instructed in the dignified sciences of law and jurisprudence, would do well to glame first at this Work, which has the advantage of being clear and brief."—Attenueum.

"A production which does great credit to the author's talents and scholarship."—National Omnibus.

Printed for John Taylor, Rechiciles and Publisher to the University, Upper Gewer Street.

How Work by the Anthor of the "Spy," &c. Just published by Henry Colbura and Richard Busis New Burlington Serest. In 3 vols. post 8vs.

THE HEIDEN MAUER; or, the Benedictines. tines.
By J. F. COOPER,
Author of the "Spy," &c. &c.

Excursions in India. By Capt. Thos. Sti.ner, Sitt. Regiment. Comprising a Walk ever the Emain Mountains, to the Sources of the James and the Gauge.

"Wherein of antres vast, and de Rough quarries, rocks, and hills, where heads to It was my hint to speak."

Fortune-Hunting; a Tale of Modern Like By the Author of "First Love." 3 vois.

Private Correspondence of a Woman d Pachien. 2 vols.

Dramatic Stories. 3 vols.

The Highland Smugglers. By J. B. France, Reg. Author of the " Kuzzili

Henry Masterton; or, the Young Caralier. By the Author of " Darmley," &cc. 8 vols.

VIII. Froissart and his Times. By the late Barry

FIGUREAU AND INSTITUES. By the late Barry Loger. 3 cols.

"It is a real service to literature to reader the minuted and picturesque narratives of Froissart (whose writes may real section characterised as the Romance of History) familiar to be paid generally."—Globe.

Also, just ready,
Legends of the Rhine and Low Countries
By the Author of "Highways and Byways," Sc. 2 vol.

THE FIFTH VOLUME of FRASER'S MAGAZINE is new completed, and may be had by size of all Booksellers, Stationers, and Newsman, price its 64 and bound in green cloth and lettered; or if preferred in Number, Standard Novels, Vol. III.

Complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and beautifully embelling price 6c. with a new Introduction by the Ankor.

price 6. with a new Introduction by the Atlanting

HEPRAIRE

By COOPER.

Heary Celburn and Richard Bentley, New Barlington Street.

Of whom may be had, by the same Aubig, not a single sich complete in 1 vol. nearly beand and tilescent, picta. The Spy, a Tale of the Neutral Ground. The Pilot, a Tale of the Ses. The Last of the Mohicans, a Tale of Ame-

The Pioneers; or, the Sources of the Su-

And on the lat of Augu The Pastor's Fire-Side. By Miss June

HISTORY of the WAR of the SUCCES-SION IN SPAIN.

By LORD MAHON.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Price 2s. 6d. foolscap 8vo. extra beards, embellished with an appropriate Prontingience, containing a distant View of Resel Hall. near Halls. Price 2s. 6d. foolcap Evo. extra bearus, appropriate Prontispince, containing a distant view of health, near Hailfars, REFILECTIONS and ADMONITOR'S EFFICE TO THE STATE OF A SEMINARY, as retiring from the distince of his station.

By JOHN FAWCETT.

London: Simplific and Marshall, and Wesley and Britis, flating themers! Hail Court: John Heaton, London; Harling, Hailing, W. Moore, Huddersfield, J. Stanfield, Bradford; W. Nicth, Namehester; and all Beckestlers.

MANUAL of GRECIAN ANTIQUI. A MANUAL of GRECIAN ANTIQUE TIES; being a Compendious Account of the Husert and Customs of the Ancient Greeks, with an Appendix to the Greek Cotenge and Currency. Compiled for the use of Scientian and Private brudents.

and Private Students.

By G. H. SMITH,

Teacher of the Classics

John R. Priestley, Govent Garden.

Price Sc. boards.

A DVICE to a YOUNG MAN upon first his Nephew By the Rev. EDWARD BERENS, M.A.

Priced for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. fault, Cherchyst, and Waterloo Place, Pau Mall; and J. H. Parker, Oxferi

In 8ve. price 2a. beards.

Let UNREV BALED RELIGION, and on the succeive limitence of Christianity; delivered in the English Caperia. Rome, during the Sundays of Advent 1200, and of Lord of English By the Rev. RICHARD BURG 1885, Chapting. Princed for J., Cy. and P. Rivingron, St. Pan's Chartoprik and Waterlee Place, Pail Mail.

In 18mo. price 4s. in cloth beards,
TATURAL HISTORY of RELIGION;

TURAL HISTORY of RELIGION; or, Youth Armed againest Indéditir and Religious By the Rev. R. TAYLOR, Curate of Intri, in the County of Durham.

a This very important and eriginal Work is divided into Eight. Chapters, under the following heeds: The Delty-The Creation—The Human Soul—Man a Fallen Creature—The Heather World—The Plan of Redemption—The Personal History Je-us Christ—Redemption. Its arguments will be most useful to all Christian readers, and they will greatly assist the young divine in explaining difficult passages of Scripture. The book, indeed, abounds with original views of the Sacred Velsume.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradect.

New edition, in 4to, price 3l. 3s.

DURNET'S PRACTICAL HINTS on PAINTING. Illustrated by nearly One Hundred Etchings from celebrated Fletures of the Italian, Piensish, and Butch Schools.

"The library of no lover of the fine arts can honosforward be considered complete without Mr. Burnet's work."—Literey of the fine arts can honosforward be considered complete without Mr. Burnet's work."—Literey of the fine arts can honosforward be considered complete without Mr. Burnet's work."—Literey of the Parts and 8 hade, 18s.; en Colour, 1l. 1ls. 6d.

1st.; on Light and Shade, 18s.; en Colour, 1l. 1ls. 6d.

1st. 4t. A few Copies remain of the large paper, with India Proofs of the Plates, and a Pertrait of the Author. Freach boards and lettered, 6l. 6s.

red, 61. 6s. Printed for James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

Honor of a Greek and Latin Works.
In 19mo, price 1s. 6d. bound,
SELECT LATIN PHRASES, taken from the best Authors. the best Authors.
By NATHANIEL HOWARD.

By the same Author,
Series of Latin Exercises, adapted to the Rules in Syntax, particularly in the Eton Grammar. 18mo.
3, 6d.

Key to the same, 12mo. 2s. 6d. bound.

Ley to the same, 12mo. 2s. 6d. bound.

Introductory Latin Exercises to those of Clarke, Ellis, and Turner. 18mo. new edition, 2s. 6d. bound.

Vocabulary, English and Greek, arranged systematically, to advance the Learner in Scientific as well as Verbal Knowledge. 18mo. new edition, 2s. bound.

Introductory Greek Exercises to those of eliton, Dunbar, and others. 18mo. 3d editios, 5s. 6d. bound.

London Vocabulary, Latin and English, 1s. 6d.

6d.
 London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brewn, Green, and Co.

New School-Books, Greek and Latin.

PRAXIS on the LATIN PREPOSITIONS; being an Attempt to illustrate their Origin, Signification, dec. By NAMUEL BUTLER, D.D.

Head Master of Shrewbury School.
Svo. 4th edition, 6t. 6t. boards; 7s. 6d. bound.

Key to the same. 8vo. 6s. boards.

Delectus Sententiarum Græcarum ad usum ronum accommodatus, sum Notulis et Lexice. On the Plan Valpy's Latin Delectus. 9th edition, 4c.

of Valpy's Latin Delectus. Pth edition, 4s.

Greek Exercises in Syntax, Ellipsis, Dialects, Procedy, and Metaphrases, adapted to the Grammars of Rice, Wettenhall, Moore, Bell, and Holmes. With a concise but comprehensive Syntax. By the Rev. W. Nelisen, D.D. &c. Svo. 8s. boards; with the Key, 8s.; the Key separately, 8s.

Latin Procedy made Easy. By John Carey,
LLD. 18mo. 3d edition enlarged, 7s. beards.

Terminationes et Exempla Declinationum et Conjugationum, itemages Provise oue maribus. One Genna

Conjugationum, itemque Propria que maribas, Que Genus, et As in prasenti. Englished and Explained for the Use of Young Grammarians. By Charles Hoole, M.A. Revised by T. Sandon, of the Uranmar School, Lincoln. 1. 64.

Exercises to the Accidence and Grammar; or, an Exemplification of the several Moods and Tenses, and of the principal Rules of Construction. By W. Turner, M.A. New edition, 8s. bound.

Student's Manual; being an Etymological and Explanatory Vocabulary of Words derived from the Greek. By R. H. Black, LL.D. 4th edition, 2s. 6d. boards.

Etymological and Explanatory Dictionary of Words derived from the Latin. By B. H. Black, LL.D. 2d edit. 5s. 6d. boards.

(t. St. Sed. Deards.
Progressive Exercises, adapted to the Eton cidence. By the Rev. James Winfield. 6th edition, 5s. 6d. London: Longman, Rece, Ormie, Brewn, Green, and Co.

Major Rennell's Works.

In 8 vols. 8vo. price 1l. 4s. boards, (or with an Atlas of Maps, price 2l. 1ss)

A TREATISE on the COMPARATIVE GEOGRAPHY of WESTERN ASIA.

Hy the late MAJOR JAMES RENNELL,

Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh; Member of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh; Memor of the Royal Institute of Paris, and of the Imperial Academy of St. Fetensburgh; and Fellow of the Royal Society of Göttingen.

Frinted for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mall.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

1. The Geographical System of Herodotus examined and explained by a Comparison with those of other Authors, and with Modern Geography. A new edition, printed from the Author's revised Copy, and containing the original Maps and Portrait. In 8 vois. 8 to. price 11. 8 s. boards.

and Pottrait. In 8 vols. Sto. price 11. 8s. boards.

2. Illustrations (chiefly Geographical) of the History of the Expedition of Cyrus from Bardis to Babylenia, and the Retreat of the Ten Thousand Greeks from thesce to Trebi-tonde and Lydis. With an Appendix and Three Maps. 4cs.

3. Observations on the Topography of the Plain of Troy, and on the principal Objects within and around it, described or alluded to in the Iliad. With a Map, 4to. 7s. 6d.

In 18mo, the 2d edition, corrected and considerably enlarged, price 5s. boards,

GREEK and ENGLISH MANUAL LEXICON to the NEW TESTAMENT, with Examples of the Irregular Infections, &c.
By J. H. BASS.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradeck, Paternoster Row. In presenting a new edition of this little Manual to the public, the author has been induced to submit the whole to a strict revision, to correct many errors, and to amplify and extend the definitions of all important words. The quantity of new matter, indeed, which has been thus incorporated, may almost entitle the present edition to be regarded as a new work.

The attention of the Heads of Schools and Tutors is invited to the following List of the improved Series of DINNOCK'S CATECHISMS of the ARTS and Sciences, Nine-pence each. They are embel-lished with Frontispieces (engraved on Stori), Portraits, Maps, and Woodcuts.

Agriculture Algebra, 2 Parts Anatomy natomy ncient Geography ncient History rchitecture rithmetic Astronomy Bible and Gespel His Bible a-tory Botany British Biography Do. Geography, viz.— Pt. 1. England and Wales meetice meeting of the colory of the Jews of the colory of the Jews of the color of &c.

Chemistry
Christian Religion
Chronology
Classical Biography
Conchology
Drawing
Electricity
English Grammar
English Law Land Surveying Latin Grammar Latin Grammar Logic
Mechanics Medicine
Mental Philosophy
Mineralogy
Modern History

Evidences of Christi-Morality (ties mitty anity print Catechism French Grammar General Knowledge Natural History Natural Philosophy Scology Geometry Marigation Friends Grammar Perspective erspective neumatics Pneumatics Postry
Religion
Religious Denominations Rhetoric
Bacred Geography
Scripiure History
Spanish Grammar
Trade and Counteroe
Use of the Globes, 2
Parts, Terrestrial and Celestial Zoology-

and Celestiai
Zoology—
Part I. Mammalia
S. Birds
S. Fishes
4. Reptiles
5. Insection
6. Crustacea,&c.
7. Mollusca

English Law Modern History 7. Mollusca
These Catsohisms are intended to form the basis of every branch of useful knowledge, and are of themselves, in fact, "an Epitome of the Arts and Sciences." The style in which they are written is at once clear and simple, conveying instruction to the youther index of the Arts and Sciences. The style in which they are written is at once clear and simple, conveying instruction to the youther indicated mind in a manner unattainable by the use of more elaberate and comprehensive works. In short, while they fix on the mind the leading facts in history, and the fundamental principles of sciences, the memory is relieved from the burden of retaining a mass of minuties with which larger books necessarily abound.
The following may be had, with an explanatory Map to each, 1s.—Modern Geography, Bible History, History of England, For the nee of young persons studying French, the History of England, Geography, and Bible History, are translated into that insurance, i.e. such.

The Botany, with coloured Figures of the Twenty-four Linman Orders, i.e.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH PART of the

Lain, Buenos Ayres, Building, &c.
Lain, Buenos Ayres, Building, &c.
Adam Black, Edinburgh; Simpkin and Marshall; Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; Hamilton, Adams, and Co.; and Jennings and Chapitis, London; and John Cumming, Dablis.

Histories for Schools.

Published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.
In 12mo. the 19d edition, Sc. bound and lettered,

In 18mo. the 33d cellion, 6s. bound and lettered,

DINNOCK'S Improved Edition of GOLD—

SMITH'S HISTORY of ENGLAND, with a Dictionary, Biographical, Historical, &c.; explaining every difficulty, 8 kmg the proper sound and meaning of the Words, and rendering every part casy to be understood; with a Continuation of the History, from the Peace of Amiens up to the Year 1821. To which are added, several new Chepters, copious Notes and the Severeigns and comprehensive Genealogical Tables of the Sovereigns of England; with Portraits of all the Sovereigns and the Junier Branches of the present Boyal Family, and coloured Map, containing the Anelwett and Modern Divisions, &c. and many other valuable improvements.

2. Pinnock's Edition of Goldsmith's History of Greece, on the Plan of the "History of England." with Mano of Greece, on the Plan of the "History of England," with Maps and Frontispiece. In 18mo. St. 6d. bound and lettered.

3. Pinnock's Edition of Goldsmith's History

Rome, with Maps and Plates. In 18me. Se. 6d. bound

4. The History of France and Normandy, from the Accession of Clevis to the Battle of Wateries, by W. C. Taylor, A.M. In 12mo. with a Map, &: beand and intered.

5. The Historical Miscellany. By W. C. Taylor, of Trinity College, Dublin. In 18mo. 4s. 6d. beand and lettered.

Taylor, of Triaity College, Dahlin. In 18me. 4c. 6c. beams and lettered.

"This is an instructive volume for the yeathful stadent, introduced as Supplement to Pinneck's Grecian, Roman, and English Histories. The first half of the volume is occupied with the complete of the state of the volume is occupied with the control of the state of the periods, in which the author has particularly read and state of the period of the state of the period of the state of the period of the

THE Rev. J. DUNCAN'S ENGLISH
EXPOSITOR, or an Explanatory Spelling-Book; containing an Alphabetical Collection of all the most useful and elegant Words in the English Language, divided into Syllable and property Accented; together with a short and easy Definition of each Word, accompanied with Initial Letters, denoting the different Parts of Speech to which each Word is appropriated. To which are added, several Useful Tables. The whole divided into Short and Easy Lessons, calculated for Teaching in Classes. Frinted for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Naria Lange.

Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

New editions of the following are published:

Pinnock's Child's First Book, or an Easy
Key to Reading; consisting of Monosyllables only, arranged in such a way as to give the correct Sounds of the Voweis in their various situations, thus laying the foundation for Spelling and Reading on unerring principles. 26.

2. The Mentorian Primer, or Pinnock's
Second Book for Children as an Early Age; in which considerable patin have been taken to adapt it to their capacities. 64.

3. Pinnock's Explanatory English SpellingBook; comprising sumerous Seculius and Bending Lessen.

3. Pinnock's Explanatory English Spelling-Book; comprising numerous Spelling and Reading Lessens, proceededly arranged, and claused according to the capacity of Learner; a short Catechism on the Arts and Sciences, and the fundamental principles of English Grammar, the Church Catechism, Dr. Watts' Catechism, &c. 18mo. 1s. 6d. beaud.

4. Pinnock's First Spelling Book for Children, containing a Selection of Spelling Lessens only, in natural and appropriate gradation; intended as an introducetory assistant to "Duncan's English Expesitor." 18mo. 1s. bound.

5. The Child's First Meaning-Book, on a Plan entirely new; containing, first, Words of One Spilable, the Meanings of which are well explained by Words of One Spilable, the Meanings of which are well explained by the Arts as sufficiently explained by easy Words of Two Spilables. 1s.

suplained by easy Words of Two Syllables. 1s.

Historical with several Engravings, 5s. bound and lettered,
THE LITERARY and SCIENTIFIC CLASS-BOOK.

By the Rev. J. PLATTS.

By the Rev. J. PLATTS.

By the design improved.

This work contains popular descriptions of the most interesting and useful objects of science, written in plain and familiar language. The design of the compiler has been to collect a series of residing lessons which should combine both information and amasement, and which should combine both information and amasement, and which should awaken the attention of youth to the study of the natural sciences, by the destain of such facts as the study of the natural sciences, by the destains of such facts as the study of the study of the study of the study of the content of a series of reflections on the works of the creation control of a series of reflections on the works of the creation control of the study of the principle of the surface of the post of the creation of the study o

Pinnock's Juvenile Reader, 1s. 6d.

Explanatory English Reader, 4s. 6d. Introduction to English Reader, 3s. History of the Bible, Se. Children's Preceptor, 2s. Duncan's English Expositor, 1s. 6d.

In 18me, with Woodcuts by W. H. Brooke, P.S.A.

THE MYTHOLOGY of GREECE and ITALY, shridged for the Use of Schools.

Author of "Outlines of History" in the Cabinet Cyclopedia. "This admirable adaptation of Mr. Krightley's larger work, which we soliced in a former Namber, to the younger classes of emdests, is precisely the volume which has long been wanted in formention the property of the control
Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
The Mythology of Greece and Italy, insended chiefly for the Use of Students in the Universities and the Higher Classes in Schools; with Twelve Plates, etched on Steel by W. H. Brooke, containing several subjects from the Antique.
8vo. 18c. Of whom may be had, by the same Author

3d edition, in repail tene. 3s. 6d. neatly bound and lettered, embellished with nurerous Engravings, illustrating Mamorrs, Customs, and Curiostics.

RUDIMENTS of GEOGRAPHY; designed to Assist the Memory by Comparison and Classification.

By W. C. WOODBRIDGE, A.M.

This Geography is accompanied by an Atlas, enhibiting, in canascine with the Gattines of Construes, the prevaiting Religious, forms of Government, degrees of Civilination, the comparative size of Towns, Rivers, and Mountains, and the Climates and Productions of the Earth. In repul tito, coloured, is, hit-bd.

This Atlas has been compiled from the best authorities, and contains all the late discoveries of Parry, Weddell, Denham, and Climanation.

Ciapperton.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Meria Lane.

In 8vo. price 18v.; in merocce, 18v.; and large paper, 6t. Se.

BIBLIOTHECA SCOTO-CELTICA; or, an Account of all the Books which have have Princed an Account of all the Books which have been Printed the Gaelic Language. With Bibliographical and Biographical cose. By JOHN REID. John Beld and Co. Giasgow; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Maria Lang, London.

The Little Girl's Own Book, by Mrs. Child, uther of "The Mether's Beek." 6th edition, considerably enged and improved, 18me. in eleth, 6s. 6d.; with gittedges, 6c.; overceo, 6s. 6d.

Published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

THE ELEMENTS of MODERN

GEOGRAPHY and GENERAL HISTORY; containing an accurate and general Precription of all the Countries, States, &c. American World, as determined at the Congressith the Manners and Customs of the Inhalatrons. To which with the Manners and Customs of the Inhalatrons. To which are added, Historical Notices, and Quections for Examination.

By GROBERTS.

With Maps and other Engravings, de. 6d. bound and lettered.

2. Epitome of Classical Geography, illustrated by Historical Notices of the most celebrated Nations Antiquity, by W. C. Taylor, A.M. With Maps, engraved by Sidney Hall, &c. bound and lettered.

3. Elements of Astronomy; containing an

3. Elements of Astronomy; containing an accurate and compendious Description of the general Phenomena of the Heavens, and the Heavens Bodies. Ac. To which is prefixed, and the Earliest Period to the Rise and Progress of Astronomy, from the Earliest Period to the Present Day. By A. Ficquot. In Item 68, bound.

4. A Companion to the Globes; comprising the various Problems that may be performed by the Globes, pre-ceded by the subjects to which they refer, and accompanied by more than One Thousand Examples and Re-apstulatory Exercises, &c. To which is added, a concist Astronomical Introduction, and an Appendix, containing the derivations of the Names of the Constellations, &c. By T. Linnington. The 3d edition, 4s. 6d. bound and lettered.

A Koute a the alicance

A Key to the above, 2s.

A Key to the above, 2s.

5. A Celestial Atlas; comprising Projections of the Planisheres, and particular constructions of the Signs of the Planisheres, and particular constructions of the Signs of the Zodiac, and the Constellations in each Hemisphere, exactly as they appear in the Heavens, in a series of 30 beautifully entered Maps, which are illustrated by scientific descriptions of their contents, and by Catalogues of the Stars from the First to the Start Magnitude inclusive, shewing, by inspection, in successive columns, their names, magnitude, right ascension in time and degrees, and their declinations, with the annual difference of both; the whole accompanied by Astronomical Problems and Exercises, analogous to those performed with the cleastifioldly but adapted also to nautical and telescopic observation. By A. Jamieson, Ll.D. In sto. 25t. plain, or 31z. 6d. coloured.

6. An Atlas of Outline Maps of the Heavens, adapted to Dr. Jamieson's "Celestial Atlas," for the Use of Schools and Private Instruction. 4to. 16t.

Schools and Private Instruction. 4to. 16s.

In 18mo. the 5th edition, newly arranged and much improved, with new set of Engravings, 6s. 6d.

SYLLABIC SPELLING; or, a Summary Method of Teaching Children to Spell and Read with facility and pleasure. By Mrs. WILLIAMS.

N.B. This edition contains a variety of teatimonials in favour of the system from some of the most respectable professors of the English language, as well as from several parents, whose children famused and interested by this novel mode of instruction) have learned in the course of a very few months to read correctly, and with perfect case, the longest and most difficult words.

"The object of the useful little book before us is to reduce the difficulties of learning to read; and the author sets about the task in a way that entities her to the thanks of all mannind. Her book is a primer—but the child will want no other book: for when this is properly thumbed, the pupil will be able to read the Encyclopedia through aloud."—Spectator.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

By the same Author,

By the same Author, Conversations on English Grammar, 4th

History of the British Nobility.

Now ready, the 4th edition, for 1852; in 2 vois. comprising the recently created Peers and Raronets, and illustrated with upwards of 1500 Engravings; among which is a fine Head of His Majesty, after Sir Thomas Lawrence's celebrated drawing.

DURKE'S GENERAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE of the BRITISH EMPIRE.

This New Edition of Mr. Barke's popular work, in addition comprising, exclusively, the whole Hereditary Rank of England, Ireland, and Scotland, (exceeding Fifteen Hundred Families), has been so extended, as to embrace almost every individual in the remotest degree allied to those eminent house; so that its collateral information is now considerably more copious than that of any similar work hitherto published.

Burke's Extinct, Dormant, and Suspended

Burke's Extinct, Dormant, and Suspended Burke's Extinct, Dormant, and Suspended Peerage. A necessary Companion to all other Peerage. Beautifully printed in double columns, uniformly with his Peerage and Baronetage. Price il. 8s. bound.

This Work comprises the whole of the Peerages which have been suspended or extinguished since the Compacts, particularising the members of an expension of the Peerages which have been suspended or extinguished since the Compacts, particularising the members of an expension of the Peerages which have been suspended or extinguished since the Compacts of the peerage of Compendious French Dictionary.

In Ismo. price 10s. 6d. bound, the 6th edition,

DICTIONARY of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES, in conformity with the French Academy; in Two Parts, French and English, and English and French, in which are introduced many thousand useful Words, not to be found in any other French and English Dictiomary. With a copious Introduction on the Pronunciation of the French Language, and on the Varieties in the Declinable Parts of Speech.

By M. DE LEUITAG

Parts of Speech.

By M. DE LEVIZAC.

Thoroughly revised and greatly improved, by C. GROS.
London: Frinted for Baldwin and Cradock; Longman, Rece, and Co.; Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; Balas and Co.; E.

Williams; and Holdsworth and Ball.

Be in the complication and subsequent improvement of this work, it has been the aim of both the author and editor to adapt if or the purposes of tuition, by the exclusion or modification of all words which are unfit to be presented to the eye of youthful readers.

Published by Messrs. Colbura and Bentley, New Burlington Street. The Third and concluding Values of JONA 15

Burlington Street.

The Third and concluding Volume of Surlington Street.

The Third and concluding Volume of SI JONAH BARRINGTON'S PERSONAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES.

This Third Volume of Sir Jonah Barrington's Personal Sketches abounds still more than the two preceding in recy anecdotes of the true lithermian character, and is particularly rich in the humours of the Irish Bar. The following names figure conspicuously in this new Volume:—Chief-Justice Clommort Chief-Baren Velereton, Avonnore, and Hussy Burg's Curran Connection of Ulare—Judge Fletcher—Judge Burg's Curran—Connection Struck, and Clare—Judge Fletcher—Judge Burg's Curran—Connection Struck, and Clare—Judge Fletcher—Judge Fletcher—Sir Judge Burg's Sir John Burke—Sir Hercules, Langreish—Mr. Dundas—Baauchamp Baginal Harvey (Leader of the Rebels in 1729)—Mrs. Bushe—Sir Judkin Fitzgerald, &c.

Memoirs and Remains of Lady Jane Grey, by Sir Harris Nicolas. A new and cheaper edition, in small 870. with time Portrait, 81. 64.

Memoirs of Sir James Campbell, of Ardking-las, (formetly Sir James Callander). Written by Himself. In 8 vol., No. with a Fortrait, 24c.

Sir James Campbell is feather of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan. He served during the greater part of the Seven Years' War in feermany as Alde-de-camp to feneral Mostips—visited most of the Germany of the most elebrateral Mostips—visited most of the German Courts—bad femiliar intercourse with Voltaire—was a member of the most elebrated London Clabs, the 'Savoir viver,' the 'I andemonium' &c.—held the post of Secretary to the British Embasys at Paris on the eve of the Revolution—journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Parisian society during the Alited occupation of France."—Globe.

IV. IV.

Mémoires et Romances, mises en Musique, MACHIMITES EL MORIBRICES, HINES EN MAUSIQUE, de Hortense, Ducherse de Saint Leu, Ex-Reine de Hollander embellañed with Twelve Plates beautifully engraved on Steel, from the original Designs of the Duchess; her Memoir, Portrail, and Facsimile. In I vol price 25r. nearly bound.

N. B. Axa very few cop ex of this unique and interesting publication have been printed, those who desire to possess it are requested to send their orders forthwith to their respective Book or Music-sellers.

Memoirs of the great Lord Burghley, Secretary of State in the Reign of King Edward VI. and Lord High Treasurer of England in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth; containing an Historical View of the Times in which he lived, and of the many eminent and illustrious Persons with whom he was connected; with Estracts from his Frivate Correspondence and Journals, now lites tublished from the Originals. By the Rav. Dr. Nares, Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. The Third and concluding Volume.

"This elaborate work is of the highest national interest: It embraces and discusses a multitude of great historical, blographical, religious, and political questions, and throws much light upon an era of almost unparalleled national and universal importance."—Literary Gazette.

VI. Memoirs of the great Lord Burghley, Secre-

David Garrick's Memoirs and Correspondence

David Garrick's hiemotrs and Correspondence the the most celebrated Persons of his Time; now first published from the Originals. The Second and concluding Yolume.
This property of the Second and concluding Yolume.
This property of the Second and concluding Yolume.
The Second and Control of the Second and concluding Yolume.
This property of the Second and Control of the Persons of the greatest emisence in the Political, Literary, and Dramatic World. Among other Names, besides those of the leading Nobility, may be mentioned, Washurton Burke Johnson - Hume - Gibbon - Sir Joshan Reynolds - Goldsmith - Robertson - Junius - Beattle - Churchill
-- Mason - Cumberland - Bowell - Colman - T. and J. Warton Dr. Burney - Sheridan - Murphy - Dr. Hoadly - Mrs. Montaga - Mrs. Coviety, &c.

Price & boards,

INTRODUCTION aux Annuaires de la société des Professeurs de Langue Française en Angleterre. Royal Bino.
Contenu Introduction—Statuts—Exposédébut de la Société L'Homme, Poeme—De la Philanthropie—Le Pour et le Contre—Ma Première Campagne—Création d'un nouvel Empire—Les Visiteurs—La Vision—Remarques sur l'Histoire de Bourgogne—
Les Couxins, ou Fretin et Le Bas—Le Poète—La Plainte du Berger-Pièces détachées. Dulau and Co. 37, Seho Square.

In foolscap 8vo. 3d edition, 6s. cloth,
OMAN in her Social and Domestic Character.

Character.

"This is not only elegantly written, but is evidently the work of a mind which education and moral feeling have qualified to speak apon the subject." La Belle Assemblée.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

No. I. price One Penny, of the UIDE to KNOWLEDGE.

UIDE to KNOWLEDGE.

Conducted by Mr. W. PINNOCK.

With Original Articles by Frofessor Reanie, the Editor, &c. and Seven splendid Engravings.

Buccessive Nes. will have additional attractions.

Also, in 16 nears 45 and 18 and 18
Also, in 16 pages 4to. with neat Wrapper, No. I. price only Three-pence, of the Graphic and Historical Illustrator, edited by Edward W. Brayley, Eq.; containing Original Articles by eminent Literary Characters, and Six fine Engravings.

James Gilbert, 293, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Rew; and all Booksellers.

Library of Nodern Fiction.

In 50 vois- post 8vo. price 10t. neatly bound,

THE MODERN NOVELISTS; a Selection of the best recent Works of Fiction, from the Pens of the most eminent Authors, among which will be found. Works of Mr. Ward (the Author of Tremaine), Mr. Lister the Author of Uranby), Mr. Theodors Hook, Mr. Horace Smith, Mr. Crattan,

A selection of this cheap and unique Collection is limited, those who are desirous of procuring sets are requested transmit their orders forthwith to their respective Booksellers. Fublished for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

AN ESSAY on INDIGESTION, as the A Boore of various Maladies, Mental and Corpore with an improved Method of Treatment. Medicinal and Detection of the Maladies
Also, by the same Author Change of Air, or the Pursuit of Health as Recreation; illustrating the beneficial Influence of Sediy for cire Choice of Series and Temporary Relaxation from Size institution and preservative of Health. New edition, prodimproved, price 8. 64.

S. Highley, 28, Fleet Street.

THE INVALID'S HELP to PRAYER and MEDITATION, containing a Variety of Payer Adapted to all Conditions of Men, with Directions for payer Reseling, and other Helps to Devection, forming a complete Vinual for a Sick Room. Also, Prayers in Behalf and on the las of Friends.

Friends
By the Rev. E. P. HANNAM, M.A.
Author of "The Hospital Manual," and Curate of the Nev
Church, St. Pancras, Middleser,
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Faul's Churchyut,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

In 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards, the Second Volume of ERMONS.
By the Rev. PLUMPTON WILSON, LLB.
Rector of Ilchester.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyni, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

The Second Edition of the former Volume,

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

The Grafty of England.—Proparing for publication, COLBURN'S GENEALOGICAL and HERALDIC HISTORY of the COMMONES of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, qualified by Lended foperty to become Members of Partiament.
The neveity and stillity of this undertaking combine to institute the common state of the common state

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.

In monthly volumes, amail 8 co. 6s. in cleth.*
On Aug. 1, being Vol. 33 of the above, Vol. 11. of ISTORY of the WESTERN WORLD.
(4 vols.)—United States, concluded.
On Sept. 1, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. 17.
Published July 8, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. III.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

On Friday, 27th July, 1839, will be published, price 6d the fr.
No. of a Weekly Journal of Foreign Science and Literans the French Language, to be called

E CERCLE; Journal de la Littérature et des Arts, Théâtre, Critique, Moraus, Mois fra-calses, &c.

The object of this undertaking is to lay before the British Polic and Foreigners, extracts from the literary press of the conent, and too make known, as much as possible, that while amusing and instructive in French literature.

Fenwick the Forquet and Copper, 11, Taylstock Street, Cert. Garden, to whom Communications for the Editor, and War for Raviers, are to be addressed.

Is, St. Paul's Churchyers, July. E.
In the press,
THE REV. CHARLES SIMEON
WORKS. The first six volumes, containing the properties and openiness six yet and grates and openiness six yet and grates. The Rev. Thomas Hartwell Horne, B D. is preparing tanders, applicable to every part of the Work.
Lendon: Holdsworth and Ball.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPTING LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Services of Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Monline Strate, Street; and also by J. Chappell, 98, Reyal Exclusion Marilsongh, Aw Maris Lene, Ladgate Bill: A. Edinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Aire and Ca. Glasgow; and J. Cumming Dublin.—Agridance of Ca. Glasgow; and J. Cu

J. MOYES, 98, Castle Street, Leisester Square-

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 810.

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Mirabeau's Letters, during his Residence in England; now first translated from the Original MS. To which is prefixed an Introductory Notice. 2 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Wilson.

IT is always an advantage to know what foreigners think of us; for it is only by a reference to the opinions of others that we correct our prejudices; and a prejudice destroyed is as good as a discovery. The general interest of such observations is heightened when they are made by a clever and celebrated individual; and Mirabeau's letters have all the shrewdness and point for which he was so remarkable. Few men ever possessed in a higher degree the precise species of talent which was calculated for the precise period that called it forth: fiery eloquence, moral audacity, keen perception,—these marked and made the orator of that disturbed and passionate time. An actor on a melo-dramatic stage, he knew his audience, and moulded them at his will. The letters before us were written amid the difficulties of his earlier career; but are full of thought, quick observation, and ready inference; while they abound in lively sketches of the then existing state of society: it is curious to observe how much of alteration has taken place. The fault of the work is being in two volumes, when there is hardly more than material for one; the consequence is, that the deficiency is made up by all sorts of odds and ends; a speech of Lord Chatham's - long extracts from Mrs. Graham's history of England a translation of Mendelssohn's answer to Lavater - and one of the silly, not to say revolting, sequel given by Rousseau to his Emile, &c. &c. Having entered our protest against she expansive style of book-making, we proceed to the letters themselves, and hope that bur extracts will give some idea of their wariety.

The pavement .- " Nothing struck me more forcibly than the sight of those flag-stone pavements, which caused that excellent man, La Condamine, to fall upon his knees, and exlaim, 'Thank God! I am in a country where they who are obliged to go on foot have not peen forgotten!""

Climate of England .- " Is it not this scarceness of fine weather in England, that will explain why this country has produced so many great poets, and so few excellent painters? eldom do you see Nature clothed in all her peauty. Nature, in all her charms, is like a mistress whom you can catch a glimpse of only now and then. But, in other countries, such 18 Italy, Switzerland, and in some of the southern provinces of France, she is a woman with whom you are accustomed to pass your life. Her charms no longer possess the same attraction, nor produce such lively sensations. The vivacity of these impressions is sufficient The vivacity of these impressions is smallest; they mannest upon an occasions. What, then in the princess—set is liberty; since the little that is found in one train of the princess—set it to rights when it because, to copy nature with the pencil, it is not or two good laws places a people, in other resufficient to have received a strong impression: spects so little favoured by nature, in the very seen to run after it with all his might when a artist must contemplate his model at leisure; he must have fine weather in order to seize the proper light which he intends to distribute on the objects he is imitating. It is only under a pure sky that true colours are to be found — colours lively and brilliant."

Arabian apologus.—"I was continually complaining of the strokes of fate, and the severity of men. I was without shoes, and possessed of no money to purchase any. I one day went to the mosque of Damas, and I there beheld a man who had lost both his legs. I praised God, and I no longer complained of wanting

"There was a certain husbandman, in a certain kingdom, who lived in a certain place, under a certain hill, near a certain bridge. This poor man was somewhat of a scholar, and given to country learning, such as astrological predictions of the weather, and the like. One night, in one of his musings about his house, he saw a party of soldiers, belonging to a prince at enmity with his own, coming towards the bridge. He immediately ran and raised the drawbridge; and calling all his family, and getting his cattle together, he put his ploughs, his household furniture, every thing he could collect, behind it. By these means he arrested the progress of the enemy till daylight, when all the neighbouring lords and gentlemen saw their enemy as well as he. They crowded on with great gallantry to oppose the foe; and, in their zeal and hurry, throwing our husband-man over the bridge, and his goods after him, effectually repelled the invaders. This accident proved the safety of the kingdom; yet no one ought to be deterred from serving the public, on account of what happened to this rustic; for, though he was neglected at the time, and every one said he was an honest fellow, and no one's enemy but his own in exposing his all, and that nobody said he was every one's friend but his own, the man had the privilege that he, and none other than he and his family, might beg on that bridge in all times following.

Mirabeau's opinion of England. - " I am not, I can assure you, enthusiastically disposed towards England; and I now know enough of this country to tell you, that if her constitution be the best known, its administration is the very worst possible: if the Englishman be the most free individual on the globe, the English people are one of the least free that exist. I will even go farther; and my opinion is, that, individually speaking, we are better than they. The land which produces grapes is superior to that in which coal is found, even by moral influences. I will not say, like Monsieur de Lauraguais, that the only fruit the English possess are roasted apples, and the only polished thing they have is steel; but they have nothing in them to justify the ferocious pride which they manifest upon all occasions. What, then, the resources of this art require more time: the | first rank? What cannot a constitution effect; since this one, although incomplete and defective, preserves, and for some time will continue to preserve, the most corrupt people on the face of the earth? How great must be the influence of a few favourable data over mankind, when this people, ignorant, super-stitious, headstrong—(observe, this is actually the case)-grasping, and almost of Carthaginian character, are better than most others known, because they enjoy some civil liberty! The man who thinks and reflects upon the nature of things, will exclaim—' How admirable!' He who does not, will have found an insolvable problem. Do not, however, imagine that this country is known: the more I think of it, the more I am convinced that we comprehend only what we can see. I defy you to form an idea of the ridiculous prejudices which exist respecting England; sometimes calumniated, and then again praised to the skies, through the most disgraceful ignorance."

Its language. - " But what is particularly vexatious is, that having learned English tolerably well with your eyes, it is very possible that your ear may not comprehend a syllable. Not only I do not know a language the orthography of which agrees less with its pronunciation, but I know of none the pronunciation of which is so difficult, so capricious, so uncertain. One would feel inclined to believe that the writing and the pronunciation of this language are separated by a lapse of many centuries. 'You write bread,' said Madame Denis, Voltaire's niece, to her English master—'you pronounce bred: why don't you simply say, du pain?' "

Stage "At the representations of Macbeth, Richard the Third, King Lear, and other pieces of Shakspeare, whatever the most barbarous cruelty or the most refined wickedness can possibly conceive, is presented to the view. What these pieces want in regularity, is abundantly compensated by the choice of incidents of a nature most affecting, and most capable of har-rowing up the soul. If in these plays love display itself at all, it is in the most striking effect which filial or conjugal affection can produce. The English stage has certain usages extremely annoying to a Frenchman, who is not accustomed to them. The last scene of every act is constantly interrupted, and sometimes in the most interesting part, by the tinkling of a little bell, which apprises the music to be ready to play in the interval between the acts. The actresses who perform the principal characters drag long trains after them, which have four corners, like a carpet, the breadth proportioned to the importance of the character; and they are followed by a little boy, in quality of a train-bearer, who is as inseparable from them as the shadow from the substance. This page, sprucely dressed, and muffled up in a livery made to suit his stature within two or three inches, keeps his eye constantly fixed upon the train of the princess-sets it to rights when it violent emotion causes the princess to hurry from one side of the stage to the other. This he accomplishes with all the phlegm and seriousness natural to the English." Nous avons changé tout cela.

The ensuing remark on Cromwell is curious, when we consider from whom it comes.

"All states would, in every age, be subjected to revolutions of the same nature, if Providence did not take care to produce but few Crom-Venal souls, fanatical heads, ambitious men, all the instruments of tyranny, are of every age and every country: they resemble wheels in proper order, which to be set in motion want nothing but the grand spring."

Mirabeau's remarks on English patriotism: "The patriotism of the ancients had even a military, a savage fierceness in it, which seemed essential to its being. Indeed, it is a virtue which required a wild and daring cast of thought, generally measuring the welfare of the state, not against a cold, temperate resistance of temptation, a moderation of sentiment, or the distates of philosophic reflections, but against life itself; friends, kindred, family, all were to be sacrificed at the shrine of their country. Patriotism and death were ever hand in hand; it was a ferocity in the mind nearly allied to fury, nothing calm or temperate. The man was hurried away by the impulse of a violent passion, rather than urged by the calls of reason; hence arose an enthusiasm which sometimes burst forth into the noblest actions and the most exalted sentiments. But as to modern times, and our own country in particular, the constitution of the government destroys the very idea of a patriot. The regularity of all the movements of the state, the nature of the modern art of war, and the universal power of law, have brought every thing to such a standard, that we can have no idea of patriotism. What are the rules by which it may be judged? what are the signs by which it may be known? The mob will ever have their patriot,-but surely the thinking part of mankind should understand their constitution better than to suppose every man who opposes the court a patriot. The true patriot, if the term be allowed to express an uncertain idea, must, in such a government as ours, often be in power; sometimes with the court, sometimes against it; but our patriots always lose their characters when in office, whatever the motive, and can never regain it but by violent opposition. In short, there is so much nonsense and contradiction in the character of patriots in this kingdom, that the moment any one makes pretences to the virtue, he should on all hands be treated either as a visionary fool or a designing knave. The men amongst us who have, at different times, flourished in this harlequin's jacket, have ever been railers at men rather than at measures. If you would fix an idea to the word patriot, and adapt it to this country, you ought to describe a man in parliament who looks at measures alone, totally forgetting who are the conductors, and who, in all his conduct, both in and out of place, adheres steadily to certain plans which he thinks favourable to the happiness and liberty of the people."

"The national debts of this country are certainly very considerable; but it seems preposterous to predict ruin to the state because the right hand owes to the left; and as to the debt due to foreigners, it is comparatively light."

The anecdotes in the Appendix are not very new; but many, from Mirabeau's letters, appear to us original. We subjoin a few of the most striking :__

"Paris, a city of pleasure, amusement, &c., are _ that is, we know every thing except in in which four-fifths of the inhabitants die

"I would apply to metaphysicians what Scaliger said of the Basque people,- 'It is asserted that they understood one another, but I do not believe it!'''

"The most rational and therefore truest remark that has been made with respect to the great question—which is the better, the married interest him more than the number of star, or the single state? is the following: 'Whichever resolution you come to, repentance will follow."" that, in several passages, where mankind are reproached with crimes and abominations, the sacred writer calls them the children of men; when folly and weakness are described, they these letters came into the translator; po are called the children of women."

"All is vanity amongst men, their joy as well as their sorrow: it is better, however, that the soap-bubble should glitter with gold, or wear an azure tint, than be overcast with clouds, or what painters of nature call a dim obscurity."

" Calumny is like the wasp that teases, and against which you must not attempt to defend properties of the vital fluid. To non-medic yourself, unless you are certain to destroy it; readers it will appear strange, that till will otherwise it returns to the charge more furious than ever.

" If you wish to please in this world, you should muster resolution sufficient to allow in the solid parts of our frame. Esters yourself to be taught many things which you know, by persons who know nothing about them."

"Love, which lives in storms and often increases in the midst of treachery, cannot always resist the calm of fidelity."

"Vices are more frequently habits than they cated to the human mind the plan to be pursued in order to reconstruct the edifice of the sciences, we can hardly feel admiration for those great men who have succeeded him; such as Boyle, Locke, &c. He lays out the ground for them, or marks the spots that are to be cultivated or taken possession of, like Cesar, who, being master of the world, after the battle of Pharsalia, gave away kingdoms and provinces to his partisans or to his favourites."

" R. says that he has been acquainted with women from every country in Europe: the Italian thinks she is beloved only when her lover is capable of committing a crime for her; the English woman, when he is ready to perform a rash act: the French woman, a silly one."

"Proverbs are the fruit of the experience of every nation, the good sense of every age reduced to recipes.

"Little minds triumph over the errors of men of genius, as the owl rejoices at an eclipse of the sun."

" Man passes his life in reasoning on the past, in complaining of the present, and in trembling for the future."

"Our ignorance! This word will undoubtedly shock, for we have the pride of an ancient people: we think we know every thing-have exhausted every thing. Yes, we have exhausted every thing; but in what? In futile sciences, in frivolous arts, in modes, in luxury, in the art of pleasing women, and the relaxation of morals. We go through elegant courses of chemistry; we make charming experiments, delicious verses; strangers at home, little in- actly in proportion as it loses that where formed of any thing abroad; this is what we been the cause of its dark has. In a life which is proper for us to know. This asserties will, perhaps, be thought severe or false to persons who fancy that we excel in physic and the exact sciences. But, in granting the is it the description of science to which is flecting man ought to devote his time? De not the study of his social and civil state 04 cern him more nearly? Ought not this : the order of chemical affinities? It is, hovere. the science of which we think the less. We are passionately fond of poetry; we discar "I have noticed, when reading the Bible, seriously about music—that is, we have great regard for playthings, and make play things of our most important concerns"

There is a very satisfactory account of be session, and the translation is executed with much spirit and fidelity.

Observations on the healthy and diseased Pr. perties of the Blood. By William Steres. M.D. 8vo. pp. 504. London, 1832. Murra. DR. STEVENS has, in the present work, large contributed to increase our knowledge of the a very short period the attention of path logists has been exclusively directed to the study of the organic changes which take plan the errors of humorism, the medical theese has run hitherto into the opposite extreme " solidism.

" Incidit in Syllam cupiens vitare Charybin."

The blood has been almost entirely ordlooked, as though it were a fluid unchanable in its quantity or quality. The world are passions."

the French pathologist Andral, and the sent one of Dr. Stevens, will, however, we commencement of the sixteenth century, indiare inclined to believe, tend to open the coated to the human mind the plan to be made of the of the medical world, and, we trust, will lest them to a more scientific and more success: mode of treatment of a number of discord which have as yet baffled the efforts of it most acute.

The author sets out with proving that it red colour of the blood is caused by the same matters contained in it, and not by the presence of oxygen, as is generally supposed:

own words are—
"It is, I believe, a common opinion is the arterial colour of the blood is produced." the absorption of oxygen into this fluid: shall afterwards, however, endeavour to prethat this is not only an error, but one that is been the cause of great mortality in the particle of medicine. When oxygen is broad into direct, or even into indirect, count vil venous blood, it instantly reddens the cole It is not, however, the absorption of experwhich causes this change; for it is not addition that this gas produces its effect is brightening the blood, for scarlet is the manning colour of the vital current, and this it over another cause. I have ascertained, by nurt rous experiments, that all the acids bisch the blood; and my conviction is, that care acid, and not carbon, is the cause of the colour in the venous circulation. Once however, possesses, as I shall afterwards possesses, a powerful attraction for carbonic acid; when venous blood is exposed to the air, etts in the lungs or out of the body, oryge brightens its colour, not by addition, but attracting or removing the carbonic and inc the venous blood, and this becomes bright of actly in proportion as it loses that which emperature the acid is rapidly removed by the xygen; when this is effected, the blood is entirely to the presence of the saline matter Quarterly Review. We shall pick out one or urified, and instantly recovers its natural or which is invariably found to exist in it while two anecdotes: if they please our readers, they carlet appearance. Oxygen, however, is especial to life; for, without this, the heavy of venous blood arises from the presence of Boerhaave's method of curing the agus.—

The physician who believes the mind and arises in unison, will remember how that -terial; and when the fluid which we use is colour." afficiently impregnated with saline matter, rincipal saline ingredient in the blood, and putrefaction.

e either absent or deficient. agulated, and immerse this in distilled water, tiful arterial hue. water rapidly attracts the saline ingrethe carbonate of sods, or any of the neutral its, on the black clot, not merely the red,

t a colour that is highly arterial, is immeately produced; or when we make an artiial serum, by impregnating water with any the neutral salts, and then take the black out of the clear fresh water and immerse in this equally clear saline fluid, it is immeately changed from black to a bright red When we take this scarlet clot out of e saline fluid, and immerse it again in disled water, it soon becomes black; but when , remove it from this, and immerse it again the clear seline fluid, it again changes to a h scarlet; and this we can repeat, even with B same clot, as often as we please. Now, as ese experiments prove that, when the saline atter is withdrawn from the blood, it becomes ick, and when this is restored, it recovers its terial colour, we may then, I believe, safely fer that the saline matter of the vital current aring matter, and, of course, of the red colour the blood." the true cause of the red colour of the co-

From his experiments, it appears.

eleterious gas, which is the canse of the im-urity in the venous circulation, would not be smoved in the pulmonary organs. But the of the atmosphere can only affect the colour of truly celebrated great man, on a certain occa-arlet colour exists in the blood independent the blood inasmuch as it possesses a powerful sion, cured the ague. That complaint was very f oxygen, or, at all events, oxygen of itself affinity for carbonic acid, which it takes from prevalent in his neighbourhood, and he had annot produce either the red or the arterial the blood by attracting it through the delicate treated it with indifferent success; when his ppearance; for when we cover the crassamembrane that lines the bronchial vessels and noble conceptions of the united agency of mind tentum, when it first coagulates, with a layer air-cells of the lungs. 4thly. That the re- and matter suggested the following treatment. f distilled water, or any other fluid which moval of the carbonic acid from the blood by pes not contain saline matter, the acid may the action of oxygen does not produce a change premoved by the oxygen or absorbed by the in its colour, unless there be saline matter acater, but the colour becomes darker than it tually present, to impart to it the arterial tint ad been before. On the other hand, when the moment the carbonic acid is removed. e immerse the black and saltless crassa-5thly. That acids, alkalies, electricity, and entum in any clear saline fluid, the colour every thing which destroys the neutrality of possible. At the time the attendant addressed stantly changes from dark venous to a bright saline matter, gives to the blood a dark ris change is produced when we make the ciples that the blood is indebted for its stimu. entered the room, apologised again for the reperiment, as I have frequently done, even in lating properties; without them it is but a doctor's absence, and turned and paid great a atmosphere of carbonic acid."

vapid, stagnant, and useless fluid, incapable attention to the irons that were heating. One nat it is the presence of this substance which is A practice of many years in the West Indies is chief cause of its colour, which property it led the author to direct his attention to the ares with all the neutral salts, while acids investigation of the proximate cause of the ad alkalies invariably blacken its hue, which many dreadful fevers which are the scourge of room, the doctor came not; and more and likewise the case when the saline substances the western world. He found that in all the more were their attentions directed towards likewise the case when the saline substances the western world. He found that in all the malignant fevers, the blood, when drawn, was "When we cut out a piece of the red cras-black and dissolved; but that on the addition had a strong base to play upon: the red-hot mentum from healthy blood which has just of a neutral salt, it instantly resumed its beau. irons were for the use of the ague-patients; mentum from healthy blood which has just of a neutral salt, it instantly resumed its beauents out of the clot. In proportion as this him the possibility that the administration of room; they were soon, every one of them, in kes place, the colour changes, and in a short salts to patients labouring under those fevers, a violent perspiration; and the doctor came ariod it becomes perfectly black; from this might be more likely to restore them to health not till one o'clock, and the ague-fit came not e may infer, that black is the natural colour than the uncertain and nugatory practice then at all. To his inquiries he found all well; and the colouring matter; for it is only red so in vogue. This idea he carried into effect, ng as it remains in immediate contact with a and was so eminently successful, that he has the symptoms of his complaint. And taking line fluid. When we take this black clot out since extended the same plan of treatment to them into another room, one by one, with care, the distilled water, and expose it directly to cholera, a disease in which, as is well known, e air, it remains black; or, if we immerse it the blood presents a black and pitchy appear-dismissed them, saying that he hoped they a jar of pure oxygen, the oxygen can now ance. This plan has been tried in London; would recover without having recourse to any more redden its colour, than it can change and out of 226 cases of cholera, there were violent remedy. In truth, agitation had exe colour of the blackest ink. There is but only about 20 deaths, and upwards of 200 cited that apprehension which completely cured ne way by which the red colour can be re- recoveries. Should this treatment be found, ored, and that is neither by air, iron, nor on a full and candid trial, to be as beneficial as yen, but by restoring to the blood the sa-the doctor states, we have no hesitation in he matter which it has lost; and when we saying, that he will deserve to rank with the rinkle or rub a small quantity of the muriate Harveys, Jenners, and Davys-men who have and here a circumstance occurred, not unearned immortal gratitude from their suffering fellow-creatures. The author, however, must expect that opposition which is ever the lot of those whose theories and discoveries tend so materially to overturn preconceived opinions and long-cherished prejudices. We happen to know that both Dr. Stevens and his plan have already, in certain quarters, been stigmatised with no gentle epithets. Lamentable as it is, men are every day to be found who wilfully and obstinately shut their eyes to all improvement; and, like the mole in the fable, cry out see it.

> The Double Trial; or the Consequences of an Irish Clearing. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THERE is much deverness, and more oddity in these volumes - rather resembling the amusing reminiscences of some eccentric individual, than a novel, although a narrative intersects listen to no excuse, apology, or explanation, the whole. The author has some sensible remarks, and some that rather border on prejudices; and becomes very violent in his wrath life at your second, if you'll fire at mine.

He desired about a dozen patients, whose fit of the ague came on about the hour of the meridian, to come to him at ten o'clock. They were shewn into the same room; and after a little while were informed that the doctor was busy, and would wait upon them as soon as them, he placed a number of irons in the fire, which he increased to a considerable size. It also appears that it is to these saline prin- After the eleventh hour the servant again He then shews that muriate of soda is the of supporting life, and tending rapidly to of the patients inquired the use of the irons, incipal saline ingredient in the blood, and putrefaction. the purpose of an operation on the patients who had the ague. This was soon whispered from the one to the other. The man had left the the now red-hot irons. Surmise and conjecture ful arterial hue.

This striking fact immediately suggested to case.

They looked; they walked about the the time had passed, and not one had upon him and caution, and some trifling medicine, he them of their disorder."

Duel between two friends.... "They had been schoolfellows at Eton: very early in life they both entered into a celebrated Irish regiment; known to the world, that rivetted their friendship. One day, after dinner, at the mess, some badinage took place between them, which cer-tainly was not so far removed from schoolfamiliarity, nor so sufficiently adapted to the precision of military punctilio, as by some of the company was considered absolutely necessary. Two officers, well known for their love of duelling, took up the subject, and at length gave them to understand that they must have a shot or two at one another, or leave in disgrace the regiment. The two officers were a that there is no sun, because they cannot of the sister kingdom. The fate of the young friends was inevitable, and their very kind instructors in the necessity of the measure voluntarily offered their services, as seconds, in the affair. As they walked to the field of blood, without a grain of animosity against one another, but of no little displeasure against their friends upon the occasion, who would

'Agreed,' replied Trolloppe. When they came cavillers who had ventured to challenge the upon the ground, and all due preliminaries had taken place, off went their pistols together in a straight line at their seconds. The major and the captain were startled, and were found very ready to settle the affair without further proceedings.

Rowland Hill's method of illustrating the old proverb, that "short accounts make long friends."

"He had just concluded his sermon, when he said, 'One word more, my Christian bre-thren. The next is our quarterly meeting; and there are many of you here to-day, who may not then be present: therefore you may as well go into the vestry, and pay your money directly; for though I may be able to go on pretty well if you be not present yourselves, yet it is impossible I can get on at all, if I don't have your money."

We shall only say, in conclusion, that these pages afford great variety of odds-and-ends of entertainment.

The Works of Lord Byron: New Edition.
Vol. VIII. London, 1832. Murray. THE great interest which the preceding volume of Lord Byron's works - being the first of his poetical writings—has excited, will, we think, be increased by the one now before us, containing as it does the whole romance of Childe Harold, the most original and felicitous of all the great poet's serious efforts. The following is the editor's account of this remarkable poem.

" The first canto was commenced, as Lord Byron's diaries inform us, at Joannina in Albania, on the 31st of October, 1809; and the second was finished on the 28th of March, in the succeeding year, at Smyrna. These two cantos, after having received numberless cor-rections and additions in their progress through the press, were first published in London in March 1812, and immediately placed their author on a level with the very highest names of The impression they created was his age. more uniform, decisive, and triumphant, than any that had been witnessed in this country for at least two generations. 'I awoke one morning,' he says, 'and found myself famous.' In truth, he had fixed himself, at a single bound, on a summit, such as no English poet had ever before attained but after a long succession of painful and comparatively neglected efforts. Those who wish to analyse with critical accuracy the progress of Lord Byron in his art, must, of course, interpose their study of various minor pieces, to be comprised in the ninth volume of this series, between their perusal of the first and second cantos of Childe Harold, and that of the third; which was finished at Diodati, near Geneva, in July 1816, and records the author's mental experiences during his perambulations of the Netherlands, the Rhine country, and Switzerland, in that and the two preceding months - the poetical auto-biography of, perhaps, the most melancholy period of his not less melancholy than glorious life, - that in which the wounds of domestic misery, that had driven him from his native land, were yet green, and bleeding at the touch. This canto was published by itself, in August 1816; and, notwithstanding at once the proverbial hazard of continuations, and the obloquy which envious exaggeration had at the time attached to Lord Byron's name, was all but universally admitted to have more than sustained the elevation of the original flight of Childe Harold. A just and generous article, by Sir Walter Scott, in the inspiration of this magnificent canto, but had a more powerful influence than Lord Byron, gratefully as he acknowledged it, seems to have been aware of, in rebuking the harsh prejudices which had unfortunately gathered about some essential points of his personal character. The fourth, and by far the longest canto, in itself no doubt the grandest exertion of Lord Byron's genius, appears to have occupied the nearly undivided labour of half a year. It was begun at Venice, in June 1817, and finished, in the same city, in January 1818; and, being shortly afterwards published in London, carried the author's fame to the utmost height it ever reached. It is at once the most flowing, the most energetic, and the most solemn of all his pieces; and would of itself sufficiently justify the taste of the surviving affection that dictated for the sole inscription of his tombstone, — 'Here lies the Author of Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.' It has been our object to do now for this great work, as far as our means might permit, what the author himself would, of course, have wished to do for it, had he survived to see it produced in such a form of publication as the present. We have endeavoured to equip it with such a body of Notes and Illustrations as may render its often evanescent hints intelligible throughout to the general reader, of what we must already consider as a new generation. From Lord Byron's own Letters and Diaries,—from the writings of Sir John Cam Hobhouse, the truest and sincerest, as well as ablest of his friends, to whom the fourth canto is dedicated in terms of the most touching kindness and manly respect, - and from various other sources, we have collected whatever seemed necessary to explain the historical and statistical allusions of the poetical pilgrim; and, though by no means desirous of overloading his pages with merely critical remarks, we have not hesitated to quote here and there a peculiarly striking observation, called forth by some signal specimen of grandeur of thought or grace of language, ere yet the first impression of such beauties had been dimmed by familiarity, from such contemporaries as Sir Walter Scott, Sir Egerton Brydges, Mr. Jeffrey, or Professor Wilson. The original MS. has furnished many variae lectiones, which may probably be interesting to an extensive class of the poet's readers. One, and the most important, in order to avoid repetitions on the margin, we mention once for all here: in the first draught of the opening cantos, the hero is uniformly 'Childe Burun.' Some splendid fragments, which the author never worked into the texture of his piece, will also be found in the notes to this edition; nor, after the lapse of twenty years, will any one, it is presumed, complain that we have printed in like manner certain complete stanzas, which Lord Byron was induced to withhold from the public, only by tenderness for the feelings of individuals now beyond the reach of satire."

Of the interest imparted to the text by the numerous explanatory notes, we have, in the outset, a striking instance in the following lines from the stanzas in which the Childe penned his last "Good Night" on his native land:

" Come hither, hither, my little page !*
Why dost thou weep and wall ?
Or dost thou dread the billows' rage,
Or tremble at the gale ?

But dash the tear-drop from thine eye; Our ship is swift and strong: Our fleetest falcon scarce can fly More merrily along.'

Let winds be shrill, let waves roll high, I fear not wave nor wind; Yet marvel not, Sir Childe, that I Am sorrowful in mind;* For I have from my father gone, A mother whom I love, And have no friend, save these slone, But thee - and One above.

' My father blear'd me fervently, Yet did not much complain But sorely will my mother sig Till I come back again.'

Fill I come back again.

4 Enough, enough, my little lad!
Such tears become thine eye;
If I thy guileless bosom had,
Mine own would not be dry.

Come hither, hither, my stanch yeomm,; Why dost thou look so pale?
Or dost thou dread a French foeman?
Or shiver at the gale?'
Doem'st thou I tremble for my life?

Sir Childe, I'm not so weak;
But thinking on an absent wife
Will blanch a faithful cheek.

Intrinsically striking as these stanzas are, they become so in a tenfold degree, when it is shewn that they are not mere fancies of the poet's brain, but part and parcel of his own

Amongst the varia lectiones are some stanza on the far-famed Convention of Cintra, omitted by the poet at the entreaty of his friends, which can now offend no one, and will amore many.

" In golden characters, right well design'd, First on the list appeareth one 'Junot;'
Then certain other glorious names we find,
Which rhyme compelleth me to place below:
Dull victors! baffled by a vanquish'd foe,
Wheedled by conynge tongues of laurels due,

6 "Seeing that the boy was 'sorrowful' at the syntion from his parents, Lord Byron, on reaching (illustrated in the best of the boy, was to his mother, the want Murray. 'Pray,' he says to his mother, the want Murray. 'Pray,' he says to his mother, the want his a great favourite.' He also wrote a letter to the father of the boy, which leaves a most favourable increasion of his thoughtfulness and kindliness. 'I have been says,' sent Robert home, because the country wind I am about to travel through is in a state which revoit it unsafe, particularly for one so young. I allow readeduct from your rent five and twenty pounds a yea for the expense of his education, for three years, provided do not return before that time, and I desire he may keen should be a sin my service.'—E." considered as in my service.'-E.

† " Here follows in the original MS.

' My mother is a high-born dame, And much misliketh me; She saith my riot bringeth shame On all my ancestry:
I had a sister once I ween.
Whose tears perhaps will flow:
But her fair face I have not seen
For three long years and moe.

Methinks it would my bosom glad To change my proud estate,
And be again a laughing lad
With one beloved playmate.
Since youth I scarce have pass'd an hour
Without diagust or pain,
Except sometimes in lady's bower,
Or when the bowl I drain.—E."

Or when the bowl I drain.—E.

‡ "William Fletcher, the faithful valet; who after service of twenty years ('during which,' he say, she lord was more to him than a father,') received the parmin's last words at Missolonghi, and did not qui he remains, until he had seen them deposited in the family as a constant source of pleasantry to his moster; so a constant source of pleasantry to his moster; so a constant source of pleasantry to his moster; in a valiant: he requires comforts that I can dispense what had sighs for beer, and beef, and tea, and his wife not the devil knows what besides. We were on night is in a thunder-storm, and since nearly wrecked. In the cases he was sorely bewildered; from apprehensions of famine and besetitt is the first, and drowing it to exceed he was sorely bewildered; from apprehensions of famine and besetitt is the first, and drowing it is second instance. His eyes were a little butt by the his ning, or crying, I don't know which. I did what I can be seen that the second instance will be seen the second instance will be seen to the second instance. His eyes were a little butt by the history of the second instance, he was served one faithfully, and Sally is a good west will be seen that the second instance will be seen to the post hard the second instance will be seen to the post hard the second instance. I shall settle him in a farm for has served me faithfully, and Sally is a good west will be seen the second of an field, there are not included, this humble Achates of the post hard most included, this humble Achates of the post hard will say he deserves to do so.—E. ‡ "William Fletcher, the faithful valet; who, after

Stand, worthy of each other, in a row—
Sir Arthur, Harry, and the dizzard Hew
Dalrymple, seely wight, sore dupe of t' other tew.
Convention is the dwarfish demon styled
That foil'd the knights in Marialva's dome:
Of brains (if brains they had) he them beguiled,
And turn'd a nation's shallow joy to gloom.
For well I wot, when first the news did come,
That Vimiera's field by Gaul was lost,
For paragraph ne paper scarce had room,
Such Pæans teemed for our triumphant host,
In Courier, Chronicle, and eke in Morning Post:

In Courier, Chronicle, and eke in Morning Post:
But when Convention sent his handy-work,
Pens, tongues, feet, hands, combined in wild uprost;
Mayor, aldermen, laid down the uplifted fork;
The bench of bishops half forgot to more;
Stern Cobbett, who for one whole week forbors
To question aught, once more with transport least,
And bit his devilish quill agen, and swore
With foe such treaty never should be kept,
Then burst the blaant's besst, and roard, and raged,
and—slept!
Thus upto Hawer appeal?

and—slept!

Thus unto Heaver appeal'd the people: Heaven, Which loves the lieges of our gracious king, Decreed, that, ere our generals were forgiven, Inquiry should be held about the thing.

But Mercy cloak'd the babes beneath her wing; And as they spared our foes, so spared we them; (Where was the pity of our sires for Byng?) et knaves, not idiots, should the law condemn; Then live, ye gallant knights! and bless your judges' phlegm!

We must also give the close of the first canto as it stands in the original MS.

as it stands in the original MS.

"Ye, who would more of Spain and Spaniards know,
Sights, saints, antiques, arts, enecdotes, and war,
Go! hie ye hence to Paternoster Row—
Are they not written in the Book of Carr?
Green Erin's knight and Europe's wandering star!
Then listen, reader, to the man of ink,
Hear what he did, and sought, and wrote afar;
All these are coop'd within one quarto's brink,
This borrow, steal,—don't buy,—and tell us what you think.

There may you read with another buy and the standard of the standard

There may you read, with spectacles on eyes, How many Wellesleys did embark for Spain, As if therein they meant to colonise, How many troops y-cross'd the laughing main That ne'er beheld the said return again: How many buildings are in such a place, How many leagues from this to yonder plain, How many relics each cathedral grace, And where Giralda stands on her gigantic base. There may you read (oh. Phebus, save Sir Jo

Yet here of —— mention may be made,
Who for the Junta modell'd sapient laws,
Taught them to govern ere they were obey'd:
Certes, fit teacher to command, because
His soul Socratic no Xantippe awes;
Blest with a dame in Virtue's bosom nurst,—
With her let silent admiration pause!—
True to her second husband and her first:
On such unshaken fame let satire do its worst."

In place of the beautiful stanzas to Inez, which contain some of the dreariest touches of sadness that ever Byron's pen let fall, the following are in the first draught of the canto:

"Oh never talk again to me
Of northern climes and British ladies;
It has not been your lot to see.
Like me, the lovely girl of Cadiz.
Although her eye be not of blue,
Nor fair her locks, like English lasses,
How far its own expressive hue
The languid azure eye surpasses!
Prometheus-like, from heaven she stole
The fire, that through those silken lashes
In darkest glances seem to roll,
From eyes that cannot hide their flashes:
And as along her bosom steal
In lengthem d flow her raven tresses,
You'd swear each clustering lock could feel,
And curl'd to give her neck caresses.
Our English maids are long to woo,
And frigid even in possession;
And if their charms be fair to view,
Their lips are slow at Love's confession:

But born beneath a brighter sun,
For love ordain'd the Spanish maid is,
And who,—when fondly, fairly won,— Enchants you like the girl of Cadis?
The Spanish maid is no coquette,

Enchants you like the gut of Canit?
The Spanish maid is no coquette,
Nor Joys to see a lover tremble,
And if she love, or if she hate,
Alike she knows not to dissemble.
Her heart can ne'er be bought or sold—
Howe'er it beats, it beats sincerely,
And, though it will not bend to gold,
'Twill love you long and love you dearly.

The Spanish girl that meets your love Ne'er taunts you with a mock denial, For every thought is bent to prove Her passion in the hour of trial.

When throughing foemen menace Spain,
She dares the dead and shares the danger:
And should her lover press the plain,
She hurls the spear, her love's avenger.

And when, beneath the evening star,
She mingles in the gay bolero,
Or sings to her attuned guitar
Of Christian knight or Moorish hero,
Or counts her beads with fairy hand
Beneath the twinkling rays of Hesper,
Or joins devotion's choral band,
To chant the sweet and hallow'd vesper;—

In each her charms the heart must move
Of all who venture to behold her;
Then let not maids less fair reprove
Because her bosom is not colder:
Through many a clime 'tis mine to roam

Where many a soft and melting maid is, But none abroad, and few at home, May match the dark-eyed girl of Cadix."

Among the suppressions in former editions of the fourth canto is the following remarkable stanza:

"If to forgive be heaping coals of fire—
As God hath spoken—on the heads of foes,
Mine should be a volcano, and rise higher
Than, o'er the Titans crush'd, Olympus rose,
Or Athos soars, or blasing Etna glows:—
True, they who stung were creeping things; but what
Than serpent's teeth inflicts with deadlier throes?
The lion may be goaded by the gnat.
Who sucks the slumberer's blood?—the eagle?—no: the bat."

In a note to the third canto, we have Sir Walter Scott's personal description of the

"The first and second cantos of Childs Harold's Pilgrimage produced, on their ap-pearance in 1812, an effect upon the public, at least equal to any work which has appeared within this or the last century, and placed at once upon Lord Byron's head the garland for which other men of genius have toiled long, and which they have gained late. He was placed pre-eminent among the literary men of his country by general acclamation. It was amidst such feelings of admiration that he entered the public stage. Every thing in his manner, person, and conversation, tended to maintain the charm which his genius had flung around him; and those admitted to his conversation, far from finding that the inspired poet sunk into ordinary mortality, felt themselves attached to him, not only by many noble qualities, but by the interest of a mysterious, undefined, and almost painful curiosity. A countenance exquisitely modelled to the expression of feeling and passion, and exhibiting the remarkable contrast of very dark hair and eye-brows, with light and expressive eyes, presented to the physiognomist the most interesting subject for the exercise of his art. The predominating ex-pression was that of deep and habitual thought, which gave way to the most rapid play of features when he engaged in interesting discussion; so that a brother poet compared them to the sculpture of a beautiful alabaster vase, only seen to perfection when lighted up from within. The flashes of mirth, gaiety, indignation, or satirical dislike, which frequently animated Lord Byron's countenance, might, during an evening's conversation, be mistaken, by a stranger, for the habitual expression, so easily and so happily was it formed for them all; but those who had an opportunity of studying his features for a length of time; and upon various occasions, both of rest and emotion, will agree that their proper language was that of melancholy. Sometimes shades of this gloom interrupted even his gayest and most happy moments."

Some beautiful touches of contemporary criticism are gracefully dispersed through the notes. We have room only for one or two. Of the stanzas in the third canto, descriptive of a thunder-storm, which the poet witnessed on the Lake of Geneva, Sir Walter Scott observes:—

"This is one of the most beautiful passages of the poem. The 'fierce and fair delight' of a thunder-storm is here described in verse almost as vivid as its lightnings. The live thunder 'leaping among the rattling crags'—the voice of mountains, as if shouting to each other—the plashing of the big rain—the gleaming of the wide lake, lighted like a phosphoric sea—present a picture of sublime terror, yet of enjoyment, often attempted, but never so well, certainly never better, brought out in poetry."

A fac-simile of the first draught of these remarkable stanzas we are promised in a future volume. The following splendid remarks, on the concluding address to the Ocean, is from the pen of Professor Wilson.

the pen of Professor Wilson.

"It was a thought worthy of the great spirit of Byron, after exhibiting to us his pilgrim amidst all the most striking scenes of earthly grandeur and earthly decay, -after teaching us, like him, to sicken over the mutability, and vanity, and emptiness of human greatness, to conduct him and us at last to the borders of 'the Great Deep.' It is there that we may perceive an image of the awful and unchangeable abyss of eternity, into whose bosom so much has sunk, and all shall one day sink, of that eternity wherein the scorn and the contempt of man, and the melancholy of great, and the fretting of little minds, shall be at rest for ever. No one, but a true poet of man and of nature, would have dared to frame such a termination for such a pilgrimage. The image of the wanderer may well be associated, for a time, with the rock of Calpe, the shattered temples of Athens, or the gigantic fragments of Rome; but when we wish to think of this dark personification as of a thing which is, where can we so well imagine him to have his daily haunt as by the roaring of the waves? It was thus that Homer represented Achilles in his moments of ungovernable and inconsolable loss for Patroclus; it was thus he chose to depict the paternal despair of Chriseus Ви в имы жири Эни подифриявно дидинень."

The tone and the temper—the spirit of kindliness, and at the same time of justice—in which the poetry is evidently edited, must be grateful in the highest degree to the relatives and personal friends of Lord Byron, and induce them, we trust, to step forward to render this, the first and only uniform edition of his works, as complete as possible. In the view of Baccarach on the Rhine, and the Castle of St. Angelo, Turner has absolutely outdone his usual outdoings. They are both exquisite.

^{* &}quot; Blatant beast'—a figure for the mob, I think first used by Smollett in his 'Adventures of an Atom.' Horace has the 'bellua multorum capitum:' in England, fortunately enough, the illustrious mobility have not even

[†] The worthy knight, since this was printed, has ceased to be "a wandering star," and has gone to that bourne "whence no traveller returns."—Ed. L. G.

[•] In making this remark, we take the opportunity of noticing the Papers by Lady Blessington, now in the course of publication in our contemporary the New Monthly Magazine; where her ladyship details her reminiscences of the bard, and throws much light on his character, with all the grace and tact of which the polished pen of a highly intelligent and accomplished female is capable.—Ed. L. G.

Characteristics of Women, Moral, Poetical, and Historical. With Vignette Etchings. By Mrs. Jameson, author of the "Diary of an Ennuyée," " Memoirs of Female Sovereigns, &c. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Like ordinary life, it must have its ordinary purposes, and its harsh and bitter parts; the worthless has to be rejected, and the evil to be discerned; such, indeed, is its usual and necessary employment: but it has its nobler use and its higher hour - and these are when we dwell on the favourite passage, and detect the hidden beauty, that to which enthusiasm is the only pioneer. He can know little of nature's leveliness who but casts a careless glance around, as , to which all motives are to be referred." he hurries along the beaten path: he only appreciates who pauses to mark the variable light and shadow, who sees the wild flowers in the grass under his feet, who listens to the song of the wind among the leaves, and who links with the objects around some charm of association or of sentiment. Even as we enjoy nature, so should we enjoy a great poet; we may be delighted, but we know nothing of him on a first reading. We must be excited—we must be proud of his page-his words must be grown familiar before we understand them or him: to admire will teach us to appreciate; and, as Wordsworth says, with equal truth and beauty,-

" And we must love him, ere to us He will seem worthy of our love."

It is in this spirit that Mrs. Jameson has written on Shakspeare:

"The very music of his name has gone Into her being."

world of grace, passion, feeling, and thought, women we meet in society?—Alda: Not to home, or the instinct which teaches to the beautiful in its delineation of woman, as it was the levelling spirit of persifiage has been long watched it, pitying, as it flitted, poor hit has the task (if task we may call such a labour cation which fosters it. Women, generally ing against the black thunder-cloud, ill, sing of love) been performed; for even the most sneaking are hyperterminations. are in those creations of a mind which was as of love) been performed; for even the most speaking, are by nature too much subjected to a few giddy whirls, it fell blinded, affigure perfect picture may have a new and lovely suffering in many forms—have too much of and bewildered, into the turbid wave benefit thrown upon it; and we learn best its fancy and sensibility, and too much of that and was swallowed up for ever. It remissions that we have too much of that and was swallowed up for ever. It remissions that we have too much of that and was swallowed up for ever. It remissions that the fact of Ophelia; and now with the swallowed up for ever. It remissions that the fact of ophelia; and now with the swallowed up for ever. It remissions that the fact of ophelia; and now with the swallowed up for ever it remissions. Nothing tion, to be naturally satirical. I have known I think of her, I see again before me that per can be finer than the tact with which Mrs. but one woman eminently gifted in mind and done have in the swallowed up for ever. can be finer than the tact with which Mrs. but one woman eminently gifted in mind and dove, beating with weary wing, berildered Jameson enters into the infinite varieties of person, who is also distinguished for powers of amid the storm. It is the helphones of feminine character—nothing more delicate than satire as hold as margilless, and she is such a feminine character—nothing more delicate than satire as bold as merciless; and she is such a Ophelia, arising merely from her innovante the discrimination with which she marks the compound of all that nature can give of good. and nictured without any indication of walboundaries of feeling; and there is a lofty purity, a generous warmth, which pervades the whole work, and gives a singular truth-like life to its delineations. Women, from narrow circumstance and peculiar position, are too little alive to their general elevation:— now, a book like this, so calculated to raise and to elevate, is common cause, and the moral beauty of the individual will find readiest belief from the admirer who advocates the excellence of the whole. These pages are in reality a beautiful and touching commentary on the heart and mind of woman. Will our readers excuse our being critical, and join with us in being charmed by the following passages?

Motives to write.—" This little book was undertaken without a thought of fame or money: out of the fulness of my own heart and soul have I written it. In the pleasure it if praise or profit come beside, they come as a wicked queen for this gentle and ha surplus. I should be gratified and grateful; creature is one of those beautiful rele but I have not sought for them, nor worked for them."

Effects of experience.—" Long experience of what is called 'the world,' of the folly, duplicity, shallowness, selfishness, which meet us at What is the perfection of criticism? We every turn, too soon unsettles our youthful should say, The discovery of the beautiful creed. If it only led to the knowledge of good creed. If it only led to the knowledge of good with a kind yet melancholy complesses and evil, it were well; if it only taught us to lovely being she has destined for the kink a despise the illusions, and retire from the pleasures of the world, it would be better. But it duced as scattering flowers on the game destroys our belief — it dims our perception of Ophelia, is case of those effects of course; all abstract truth, virtue, and happiness; it poetry, in character, and in feeling at our turns life into a jest, and a very dull one too. natural and unexpected, which fill the ere. at It makes us indifferent to beauty, and incredulous of goodness; it teaches us to consider - like the nightingales singing in the groves self as the centre on which all actions turn, and the Puries, in Sophocles. Again, in the false > it is in direct contradiction to the mild and would send his son into the world to see in serious spirit of Christianity; I fear it, because we find that in every state of society in which keep his only daughter as far as possible inc it has prevailed as a fashion, and has given the every taint of that world he knew so well tone to the manners and literature, it marked So that when she is brought to the court, six the moral degradation and approaching description of that society; and I despise it, a scraph that had wandered out of bounds because it is the usual resource of the shallow and yet breathed on earth the air of paradis and the base mind, and, when wielded by the When her father and her brother find it necesstrongest hand, with the purest intentions, an sary to warn her simplicity, give her leave inefficient means of good. The spirit of satire, of worldly wisdom, and instruct her war reversing the spirit of mercy which is twice scanter of her maiden presence; for the blessed, seems to me twice accursed ;-evil in Hamlet's vows of love ' but breathe like and those who indulge it - evil to those who are fied and pious bonds, the better to beguin: the objects of it.

Satire. - " Medon: I have pleasure in re- the moment she appears on the scene and the minding you that a female satirist by pro- dark conflict of crime, and vengeance, is fession is yet an anomaly in the history of our supernatural terrors, we know what most know that mos Into her being."

She has chosen her subject admirably—the female characters in Shakspeare. What a world of grace, passion, feeling, and thought a world of grace, passion, fe our nature; but to a state of society in which the brooding storm; but so it was - 104 compound of all that nature can give of good, and pictured without any indication of reliand all that society can teach of evin ness, which melts us with such profound pro-Medon: That she reminds us of the dragon of Ophelia is so young, that neither her mind at old, which was generated between the sunherm from heaven and the sime her person have attained maturity; she is not her person have attained maturity; she is not her person have attained maturity. beams from heaven and the slime of earth?— aware of the nature of her own feelings; the Alda: No such thing. Rather of the poware prematurely developed in their full for erful and beautiful fairy Melusina, who had before she has strength to bear them, and be the full for the full for the full fair them. every talent and every charm under heaven; and grief together rend and shatter the total but once in so many house man fact and shatter the total together rend and shatter the total but once in so many house man fact and shatter the total together rend and shatter the total together rend and shatter the total together rend and shatter the together t but once in so many hours was fated to be-texture of her existence, like the burning find come a serpent."

however strong, are sentiments when they to hide than to reveal the emotions of he run smooth; and become passions only when heart; yet in those few words we are mode at the corrected." ouposed.

Ophelia appears to us as delicately sketched

"The situation of Ophelia in the story is that of a young girl, who, at an early age, is brought from a life of privacy into the circle of numan nature it has opened to me, in the early times, at once rude, magnificent, and opened to me, in the beautiful and soothing images it has placed before me, in the exercise and improvement of my own faculties, I have already been repaid:

| A court — a court such as we read of in those | Titian-like complexion of the south. Where the person of the placed immediately about fair-haired, blue-eyed daughter of the person of the person of the queen, and is apparently whose heart seems to vibrate to the person of the favourite attendant. The affection of the local person of the south. Where the person of the south. Where the person of the person of the south. The affection of the south. The affe touches, one of those penetrating glasss in the secret springs of natural and femini-feeling, which we find only in Shakper. Gertrude, who is not so wholly abandoned to that there remains within her heart some sea of the virtue she has forfeited, seems win her son; and the seens in which the is into make the heart swell and tremble within its of Ophelia, the Lord Chamberlain Polonia. learn all it could teach of good and evil, but we feel at once that it comes too late: for fice poured into a crystal vase. She says very bills. Nice distinction.—"A woman's affections, and what she does say seems rather intended perfectly acquainted with her character, since with what is passing in her mind, as if she had thrown for the character, the character with the ch as any of Sir Thomas Lawrence's most exquithrown forth her soul with all the gloric site drawings.

"The situation of Ophelic is the state of the state of the situation of Ophelic is the state of the state of the situation of Ophelic is the state of the state of the situation of Ophelic is the state of the state o innate, a part of her being, 'as dwell it' gathered lightning in the cloud,' and we see fancy her but with the dark splendid ever in the country of the coun Titian-like complexion of the south. While it silent depths of her young heart, far more than she is loved.

"The love of Ophelia, which she never once confesses, is like a secret which we have stolen from her, and which ought to die upon our hearts as upon her own. Her sorrow asks not words, but tears; and her madness has precisely the same effect that would be produced by the spectacle of real insanity if brought before us: we feel inclined to turn away, and veil our eyes in reverential pity and too painful sympathy."

We cannot do more than allude to some very original remarks on Hamlet's character: and just enumerate Portia, Juliet, Imogene. and Lady Macbeth, as being admirable in perception, and beautiful in expression. The vignettes are pretty and fanciful, the production of the accomplished author, whom we most cordially commend and congratulate: she is worthy to be priestess even at the immortal shrine of Shakspeare.

The Family Library, No. XXXIII. Letters on Natural Magic. By Sir David Brewster, K.H., &c. &c. London, 1832. Murray.

OF the Family Library, which is announced for completion in three more Numbers, this is a very fitting and instructive portion. Sir David Brewster, than whom for philosophical attainments few men could be found more able to expound and explain by science the multitude of circumstances which, in darker ages, passed for magic and supernatural appearances, has here performed that task as it was to be expected at his hands. From acoustics, hydrostatics, mechanics, optics, chemistry, &c. &c., he has shewn how in former times the deceptions of state-craft and priest-craft could be and were performed; and also how spectral illusions, extraordinary natural phenomena, and tricks of every kind, have throughout perplexed mankind. Most of these subjects are illustrated by cuts, which place them beyond our reach for extract: and we must therefore be content with a general tribute of our praise for the ingenious and useful manner in which the work is executed, and one or two selections for the sake of themselves. The following feats of real human strength relate to one Thomas Topham, about 31 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches high, and who exhibited about a century ago.

" l. Having rubbed his fingers with coalashes to keep them from slipping, he rolled up a very strong and large pewter-plate. 2. Having laid seven or eight short and strong pieces of tobacco-pipe on the first and third finger, he broke them by the force of his middle finger. 3. He broke the bowl of a strong tobacco-pipe placed between his first and third finger, by pressing his fingers together sideways. 4. Having thrust such another bowl under his garter, his legs being bent, he broke it to pieces by the tendons of his hams, without altering the bending of his leg. 5. He lifted with his teeth, and held in a horizontal position for a considerable time, a table six feet long, with half a hundred weight hanging at the end of it. The feet of the table rested against his knees. 6. Holding in his right hand an iron kitchenpoker, three feet long and three inches round, he struck upon his bare left-arm, between the elbow and the wrist, till he bent the poker nearly to a right angle. 7. Taking a similar poker, and holding the ends of it in his hands, and the middle against the back of his neck, he brought both ends of it together before him, and he then pulled it almost straight again. This last feat was the most difficult, because than of loving; and yet, alas! loving in the the muscles which separate the arms horizontally from each other are not so strong as those which bring them together. 8. He broke a rope about two inches in circumference, which was partly wound about a cylinder four inches in diameter, having fastened the other end of it to straps that went over his shoulder. 9. Dr. Desaguliers saw him lift a rolling-stone of about 800 lbs. weight, with his hands only, standing in a frame above it, and taking hold of a frame fastened to it. Hence Dr. Desaguliers gives the following relative view of the strengths of individuals:

Strength of the weakest men . . 125 lbs. Strength of very strong men . . 400 Strength of Topham 800

The weight of Topham was about 200."

The following is also curious: "One of the most remarkable and inexplicable experiments relative to the strength of the human frame, which you have yourself seen and admired, is that in which a heavy man is raised with the greatest facility, when he is lifted up the instant that his own lungs and those of the persons who raise him are inflated with air. This experiment was, I believe, first shewn in England a few years ago by Major H., who saw it performed in a large party at Venice, under the direction of an officer of the American navy. As Major H. performed it more than once in my presence, I shall describe as nearly as possible the method which he prescribed. The heaviest person in the party lies down upon two chairs, his legs being supported by the one and his back by the other. Four persons, one at each leg, and one at each shoulder, then try to raise him, and they find his dead weight to be very great, from the difficulty they experience in supporting him. When he is replaced in the chair, each of the four persons takes hold of the body as before, and the person to be lifted gives two signals by clapping his hands. At the first signal he himself and the four lifters begin to draw a long and full breath; and when the inhalation is completed, or the lungs filled, the second signal is given for raising the person from the chair. To his own surprise and that of his bearers, he rises with the greatest facility, as if he were no heavier than a feather. On several occasions I have observed, that when one of the bearers performs his part ill, by making the inhalation out of time, the part of the body which he tries to raise is left as it were behind. As you have repeatedly seen this experiment, and have performed the part both of the load and of the bearer, you can testify how remarkable the effects appear to all parties, and how complete is the conviction, either that the load has been lightened, or the bearer strengthened by the prescribed process. At Venice the experiment was performed in a much more imposing manner. The heaviest man in the party was raised and sustained upon the points of the forefingers of six persons. Major H. declared that the experiment would not succeed if the person lifted were placed upon a board, and the strength of the individuals applied to the board. He conceived it necessary that the bearers should communicate directly with the body to be raised. I have not had an opportunity of making any experiments relative to these curious facts; but whether the general effect is an illusion, or the result of known or of new principles, the subject merits a careful investigation.

Of pieces of wonderful mechanism, we have the Invisible Girl and the Automaton Chess-Player described. The annexed is another neat specimen, and "was made by M. Camus for the amusement of Louis XIV, when a child.

It consisted of a small coach, which was drawn by two horses, and which contained the figure of a lady within, with a footman and page behind. When this machine was placed at the extremity of a table of the proper size, the coachman smacked his whip, and the horses instantly set off, moving their legs in a natural manner, and drawing the coach after them: when the coach reached the opposite edge of the table, it turned sharply at a right angle, and proceeded along the adjacent edge. As soon as it arrived opposite the place where the king sat, it stopped; the page descended, and opened the coach-door; the lady alighted, and with a curtsy presented a petition which she held in her hand to the king. After wait-ing some time, she again curtsied and re-en-tered the carriage. The page closed the door, and having resumed his place behind, the coachman whipped his horses and drove on. The footman, who had previously alighted, ran after the carriage, and jumped up behind into his former place. Not content with imitating the movements of animals, the mechanical genius of the 17th and 18th centuries ventured to perform by wheels and pinions the functions of vitality. We are informed by M. Lobat, that General Degennes, a French officer who defended the colony of St. Christophers against the English forces, constructed a peacock, which could walk about as if alive, pick up grains of corn from the ground, digest them as if they had been submitted to the action of the stomach, and afterwards discharge them in an altered form. Degennes is said to have invented various machines of great use in navigation and gunnery, and to have constructed clocks without weights or springs. The automaton of Degennes probably suggested to M. Vaucanson the idea of constructing his celebrated duck, which excited so much interest throughout Europe, and which was perhaps the most wonderful piece of mechanism that was ever made. Vaucanson's duck exactly resembled the living animal in size and appear. ance. It executed accurately all its movements and gestures; it ate and drank with avidity, performed all the quick motions of the head and throat which are peculiar to the living animal; and, like it, it muddled the water which it drank with its bill. It produced also the sound of quacking in the most natural manner. In the anatomical structure of the duck, the artist exhibited the highest skill. Every bone in the real duck had its representative in the automaton, and its wings were anatomically exact. Every cavity, apophysis, and curvature, was imitated, and each bone executed its proper movements. When corn was thrown down before it, the duck stretched out its neck to pick it up, it swallowed it, digested it, and discharged it in a digested condition. The process of digestion was effected by chemical solution, and not by trituration, and the food digested in the stomach was conveyed away by tubes to the place of its discharge. The automata of Vaucanson were imitated by one Du Moulin, a silversmith, who travelled with them through Germany in 1752, and who died at Moscow in 1765. Beckmann informs us that he saw several of them after the machinery had been deranged; but that the artificial duck, which he regarded as the most ingenious, was still able to eat, drink, and move. Its ribs, which were made of wire, were covered with duck's feathers, and the motion was communicated through the feet of the duck by means of a cylinder and fine chains like that of a watch."

The stories of clever inventions are possessed of much interest; and the whole volume is an | raised the flame of love in a young lady, to | excellent sample of philosophy in sport.

The Natural Son. 12mo. pp. 80. London, 1832 Simpkin and Marshall.

THIS, it seems, is an experimental canto, with a very pretty female portrait and a beautiful vignette; and the writer promises to continue his poem at intervals, in the same style, should it "engage the attention of the reviewers." As one of the clique, he has our immediate attention; for his production, together with many faults and blemishes, displays very considerable talent. It is, in short, one of the best approaches to Byron we have seen. The story, as far as we have gathered, is a love-affair between the natural son of a Lord Glengyle (said to be founded on recent facts) and Circe, the nom de guerre of the fair who flourishes on the frontispiece.

We quote the death of Glengyle.

A kneeling matron clasped the chilly hand, A Kneeing matron clasped the Chilly hand, Now wan and lifeless, shrunken up and dried, Unconscious of the pressure: life's last sand Had ebbed into the grave's eternal tide: Oh! there is something terrible and dread When mothers gaze upon their first-born dead. The mourner looked upon the faded face, Thrill'd with an awe, fearful and undefined: The frame was shorn of that celestial grace I ne traine was snorn of that celestial grace. Which animates the brow and stores the mind With light that is eternal: who can trace. The dying flash, that leaves the flesh behind, When from its mortal tenement of clay. The beam immortal bursts, and darts away?"

Then we find "lyre" and "Maria" for rhymes, and "drawn," "unshorn;" and the expression "brake their salt," which we do not understand; and "to darkle," another unintelligibility, and "wander" and "condor," and "Cramer" and "charmer," and "returned" and "turned," and a number of such blots, which, without noticing farther, we pass for a second quotation of the better kind. The natural son leaves a protector he had found, and determines to make his own way in the world.

"The sire's proud spirit rushed into his cheek, And his lip trembled when he tried to speak. ' Father,' he said, and took the pastor's hand, And pressed it for a moment to his lips:

The camel travels o'er the burning sand, And in the springless desert seldom sips he quenching water-drops: swiftly for land, Through stormy seasons, steer the lonely ships;

And both the camel and the schooners glide Safe o'er the dreary desert and the tide.

Sare o'er the dreary desert and the tide.

'An unseen Spirit, limitless in power,
Keeps guard upon the meanest creature's life:
There's not a leaf can fall, or fade a flower,
There never warrior perished in the strife,
Or sea-boy on the deep—until the hour
Predestined for their doom, was lapsed and rife:
The ravens did for good Elisha cater,
Who trusted, in his need, to his Creator.

"I hear, at deed of night, a battle-cry,
Of 'Onward, onward to the field!"—the voice
Commands me in my dreams, I know not why.
Yet ever was a soldier's life my choice; And knit by nature for the struggle, I Can ne'er, like Cocker, check a long invoice; But much prefer the sabre and the trigger To money-getting, fraud-like, by the figure.'

To money-getting, traud-like, by the figure.'
The curate shook his head—but answered not
As one in anger.—'The police,' he said,
'Have democratic laurels newly got—
And they are demi-military bred:—
Suppose, George, for a change, you try your lot—
One pound per week will furnish daily bread;
Besides, thou hast a pension from the peer—
Like him of Ross—of 'forty pounds a year.''

They parted—promising to meet again
In the metropolis betimes together:
But human projects oft are rendered vain, By intervening chance;—Fate cut the tether Of the gray curate's life;—and thus the twain, Like trading vessels, sundered in rough weather, That had for weeks rode out the ocean's roar, Parted."

And our hero becomes a sergeant in the new whose uncle he afterwards becomes secretary. And here we, and the canto, stop. There are some sweet single lines, and some bombast; but evidence of poetry throughout, marred by occasional had taste.

Stocqueler's Pilgrimage in Khuzistan, &c. [Second Notice: conclusion.]

AGREEABLY to our promise we return to give a page, finale, to this publication. After passing so barrenly through the far east of Persia, Mr. S. (who was, we believe, the editor of a Bombay newspaper, and therefore a practised writer) says -

"The reader, if he wishes for a description of Isfahan, must consult the valuable and elaborate works of Chardin, Porter, Malcolm, Ouseley, and others. I can speak of nothing that the lovers of oriental splendour delight to hear. Every thing, to my perception, spoke of misgovernment, poverty, and oppression. Ruined caravanserais, decaying mosques, deserted palaces, empty shops - these are now the characteristics of this once famous metropolis. Nature, I suspect, is not less bountiful than erst she was, for the bazaars are still abundantly supplied with the richest fruits and vegetables; but the hand of industry and the lights of science are wanting to control her luxuriance. Noxious vegetation now spreads itself unchecked over the fairest gardens, and while it affects the salubrity of the city, must sooner or later poison the soil, and obstruct the growth of useful products. The condition of the Armenian colony of Julfa, which has attracted the attention of former travellers, and excited their regrets, did not altogether escape my observation; and I am happy to be able to say, that there seems to be grounds for hoping that the industrious Christian community inhabiting this district will ere long see better days. The Persians seem to think that they have done their worst towards these people, or possibly they apprehend that Abbas Meerza, who it is expected will fix his residence at Isfahan on his accession to the throne, and who is notoriously favourable to the Armenians, will retaliate the 'woes and pains' of oppression upon those who may be rash enough to tempt his vengeance. In addition to this consideration, the Mussulmans begin to discover, that as long as they rob the industrious artisan and speculative trader of the fruits of his ingenuity and enterprise, they check all temptation to honest labour, and thus deprive themselves of those comforts and luxuries of life, which they are too indolent or ignorant to procure by their own exertions. Education - education of a wholesome character too ... is also doing something towards ameliorating the condition of the Armenians at Julfa. The Rev. Joseph Wolff promised a great deal on his visit, but to this moment Isfahan owes as little to his missionary efforts as Bushire, Bussorah, or any other town where he professed zeal for the welfare of the human race. A school has therefore been established pending the performance of Mr. Wolff's promises, and under all circumstances is making very considerable advances. It had been instituted about a month previous to my arrival, by a Mr. Mesroop David, a young Armenian, who had received his education at Bishop's College, Calcutta, and who had there distinguished himself by a translation into the Armenian tongue of Heber's ' Palestine.' He had returned to Isfahan, after an absence of nine years, on his way to Erivan, his native factures might have a great market, and support town; but was entreated by the Luke police; having first, in his journey to town, I town; but was entreated by the Julfa commu- sede the inferior merchandles from Russian youth of the colony. As far as resorting what institution could be considered as encouncing his labours, Mr. David had no ground of onplaint. He had upwards of one hundred at sixty scholars when I reached Isfahan, a numbered amongst them several 'childre's a larger growth '— priests who had learned perform divine service by rote, but who we totally ignorant of the history and princes of their religion. Money was, however, was ing to render this interesting establishmen efficient. The united subscriptions of the por inhabitants of Julfa did not exceed five tomass and a half per mensem, which was bare sufficient to furnish Mr. David with two many derate meals per day, far less to supply per and paper, and other means and appliance of instruction. He seemed nevertheles ver zealous in his undertaking, and cheerfully appropriated his private property to its effectual accomplishment. To spare him this sacrifice I addressed the resident at Bushire, begging that part of the sum subscribed at Mr. Wolff's suggestion for the benefit of the Christians there, might be applied to Mr. David's purposes, and I shall be rejoiced to find that the suggestion has been acceded to. The money could not be better disposed of. But it is not to be expected, notwithstanding the pane is Moslem persecution which the Armenians nor enjoy, that these latter can readily return to the zealous pursuit of those avocations which formerly brought them so much wealth. They must have some security in the permanent establishment of a liberal and rational government that their hives of honey will not again to rifled by the drones who infest their neighbourhood. Until then, Julfa will not make FET rapid advances in the road to prosperity, let will continue a mere receptacle for indoless and priestcraft. The present population of Julfa may be estimated at about two hundred and forty families, or nearly three thousand persons; and to supply their spiritual necessite there is an enormous proportion of bishops in priests. There are likewise a monastery and nunnery here, both of which are very se supported. I was permitted to visit the nunnery, and there saw twenty-four heavy ancient dames, mortifying themselves in come cloth, close cells, and condiments. The last abbess and her deputy received me very politics. and treated me to sweetmeats and anisette of their own making. They then led me to the chapel, the garden, and the galleries of the nunnery, in all of which I encountered in devotees, muffled up to the nose, siter its fashion of the Armenian ladies, and engage in the various operations of sock knitting smoking, and praying. Poverty and dirt and the distinguishing features of the whole su-

nity to remain, and afford instruction to the blishment." Between Isfahan and Tabreez, the author also deviated somewhat from the common route; but he supplies us with nothing W quote. Nor are we tempted, when beyond the latter place, to fill our paper with a droll, quest a learned, disquisition on the part of Nosh's at where the window was, and the eract # where the vessel took the ground on Month Ararat: and so, having nothing new about the Khoords on the way to Trebisond, or the way to Treb dismiss Vol. first, and need make very share work with Vol. second. In it the author is commends the establishment of English commerce, on an enlarged scale, with Arreroun and Trebisond, through which he thinks our mane

Germany, and Italy. The trade, he states, has increased within the last two years.

Having landed at Odessa, Mr. S. set his face homeward viá Brody, Lemberg, Lintz, &c. and at the latter place spent some days with the Polish chief Skyrznecki, (so he spells it, putting the y, we know not wherefore, three letters in advance of its true position) of whom he speaks in terms of warm admiration, and gives the details of his escape from Warsaw.

At Lemberg we are told: "Seven hundred Polish officers occupied all the hotels and lodging-houses; and, by their consumption of the necessaries of life, produced a sensible effect in the prices of provisions. They atoned, however, for the burden their presence imposed on the community by the amenity of their manners, and the spirit of gaiety they diffused throughout. The neutrality of the Austrian government offered no check to the sympathy of the Gallicians, and a delicious oubli of past misfortune was sought in perpetual mirth.

This is more creditable to the humanity of Austria than we have been accustomed to read in our newspapers; but Mr. S. does describe the Austrians, with all the constitutional faults in their government, as the happiest people on the earth. Even in Prussia, notwithstanding its military development, the people are well fed and contented; and in Holland they were quiet and abundantly provided for; only "there was a little political excitement at this time [a few months since], owing to the Belgic question, and the Dutch looked on each Englishman as a member of a busy, meddling nation, that would not allow them to adjust their own affairs."

We shall now conclude with three or four very short extracts.

Vienna. - "Here and there chance threw me into the society of grave and intelli-gent individuals, and from them I learnt that the emperor is adored; that his eldest son Ferdinand, the king of Hungary, is detested; that the death of the former will be the signal for the deposition of the latter; and that Hungary cries aloud for independence. I learnt nothing in the subsequent part of my journey to invalidate this interpretation of the state of public opinion. The Duke of Reichstadt is not popular in Austria. The upper classes complain of his temper, the middle ranks dislike his hauteur, and the soldiers murmur at his severity.

Anecdote of the Archduke Constantine: from Skyrznecki...." I solicited the general for some information as to the condition of the Polish army when the war broke out. He told me that no army in the world was in so high a state of discipline. 'Ah!' added he, 'Constantine little knew what a rod he was preparing for Russia when he trained his Polish warriors. We owe him gratitude and hatred both. Have you not heard how the soldier overcame the politician when he read of our doings in the field? 'Ha!' he exclaimed, 'those are my men : I taught them.' "

Anecdote of the late King's visit to Hanover, for those who can believe it, which we cannot.—
"The ancient splendour of Herrn-Hausen and Walmoden were, in fancy, seen to revive: numberless parties on a liberal and elegant scale were arranged; and when his majesty was announced to be within a few miles of the town, the whole community with one accord went out to meet him. In the entire course of his splendid reign George the Fourth was never honoured by so unequivocal a mark of his people's attachment. But how was it acknowledged? By a cold, repulsive, and ungracious demeanour-by an utter disregard of tian sect may read it with profit.

the unaffected homage of love and loyalty. His late majesty shut himself up in the old electoral country house at Herrn-Hausen; and, excepting when he dined with the viceroy, and exhibited himself for a few seconds at a window of his residence on the occasion of a fele in the garden, the Hanoverians were never blessed with a sight of their sovereign. The impolicy of this proceeding was manifest in the disgust which for a long time possessed the whole kingdom; but the Germans are an indulgent, forgiving people, and readily seeking an excuse for the king in his reported indisposition, endeavour to forget the offence put upon their zeal, in hopes of more consideration from his present majesty, whenever he may favour them with a visit."

We will venture to contradict this story on the strength of every account relating to his majesty's visit to Hanover which has yet met the public eye.

The Euphrates.—" I understand a highly intelligent officer of the British artillery, who has been engaged in surveying the Euphrates, has invented a boat adapted to the navigation of the rivers Tigris and Euphrates."

Familiar Lessons on the Use of the Globes. By Laura Phillips. Small 4to. pp. 56. Sherwood and Co.; Hailes; Cary.

A NICE and easy little book of question and answer, well adapted for tuition. It is the production of a daughter (if we are not mistaken) of Sir R. Phillips, and shews that the predilection for disseminating instruction has descended in the female line. A key is promised to the problems and questions. Miss P., we see, from the title-page, superintends a school which she has commenced at Brompton.

The Devotional Letters, &c. of Dr. Doddridge. 12mo. pp. 349. London, J. Gilbert; Renshaw; Jones and Co.

ANOTHER convenient though fragmental publication from the writings of the celebrated Dr. Doddridge, which have become common publishing property. These compositions are too well known to stand in need of our commendation.

Il Paradiso Perduto di Milton, riportato in versi Italiani da Guido Sorelli da Firenze. Terza edizione, rivista, coretta, e Toscanamente accentuata. 8vo. Londra. J. Murray; Dulau e Co.

IT is some years since Sorelli's translation of the Paradise Lost was very favourably received by the world and by scholars of taste and judgment. But if that publication deserved so well (which in truth it did), we can safely declare that the present is infinitely improved. A better acquaintance with the idiom of the English language has enabled the author to do much for his very difficult task; and he has finally rendered our great epic poet into choice, polished, and elegant Italian.

Sermons preached before the University of Oxford. By the Rev. Ed. Burton, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, &c. 8vo. pp. 145. Lond. 1832. Rivingtons; Oxford, Parker. To a body of sound divinity, according to the tenets of the established church, this volume adds a fine feeling of true charity, and the fair construction of other men's opinions. It is strenuous and direct in the cause in which the author believes; but yet tempered with so 24"—Saturn in conjunction with & Leonis: much discretion and candour, that every Chris- difference of latitude 10'. The ring of Saturn Fortune-Hunting. By the Author of "Woman's Love." 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

THERE is some amusing caricature in these pages, which, however, do not call for criticism. They have no pretensions beyond the amusement of an idle hour; and those who like pleasant exaggeration, though occasionally a little over-daubed, will find such supplied in Fortune-II unting.

Illustrations of Political Economy, No. VI.: Weal and Woe in Garvelock. By Harriet Martineau. London, 1832. Fox.

WHEN we say that this work continues as it commenced, we give it the highest praise. The present number sets forth the evil of imprudent marriages, the necessity of foresight, and the consequences of fluctuation in demand and supply. It is an imperative duty on the intelligent to make these volumes generally known: distribute them among the lower classes, and leave the simple yet great truths they inculcate to make their own way. Miss Martineau's plan of instruction is as excellent as it is original, and cannot be too universally diffused for general benefit.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR AUGUST.

22d 16h 54m—the Sun enters Virgo. Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

•	D.	H.	M.
→ First Quarter in Libra······	2	22	49
O Full Moon in Capricornus	11	2	27
Last Quarter in Taurus
New Moon in Leo
37

The Moon will be in conjunction with

Uranus in Capricornus	10	22	0
Jupiter in Pisces		6	28
Mars in Aries	18		7
Venus in Leo ······	26	Ò	13
Saturn in Leo		8	32
Mercury in Virgo		22	8
			•

1d - Mercury in conjunction with & Leonis: difference of latitude 4'. 2d—descending node. 11d—in conjunction with Saturn. 12d—greatest elongation (27° 26') as an evening star. 26d-stationary.

14d 9h-Venus in conjunction with Regulus. 21d-greatest north latitude. 26d-in conjunction with & Leonis: difference of latitude 4'. 30d 19h-with Saturn : difference of declination 32'. The planet Venus is now an evening star, but too near the Sun for satisfactory observa-

3d 0h 15m - Mars in quadrature. This planet will become increasingly splendid as a morning star during the autumnal months.

The Asteroids.—Vesta and Juno are too near the Sun to be visible. 30d—Pallas in the vernal equinoctial point. 4d—Ceres 21° north of Menkar in the constellation Cetus.

Jupiter will continue the brilliant ornament of the evening sky during the fall of the year. It rises this month, near the eastern point of the horizon, at the following times respectively: 1d 9h 13m—13d 8h 27m—25d 7h 41m.

Eclipses of the Satellites.

	D.	н.	M.	8.
First Satellite, immersion	7	10	43	40
	14	12	37	57
	21	14	32	90
	23	9	1	0
	30	10	55	35
Second Satellite	2	13	31	11
	27		37	43
Third Satellite	ì	14	33	52

is rapidly disappearing to the Earth. 28d - major axis of the ring 36"-83; minor axis of the ring 1".21.

8d 17h-Uranus in opposition.

The comet of Biela is approximating the terrestrial orbit. Its position in the early part [of the month will be above the head of Aries, progressing towards Perseus; its distance, however, will be too great, and the illuminated atmosphere of the brief night of summer too powerful, to admit of its being visible.

J. T. BARKER.

Dent ford.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

LONDON UNIVERSITY.

A FORTNIGHT ago we recorded the first award of prizes at the King's College: we have now the pleasure to describe a similar, though not a first, distribution at the University of London, on Saturday, the 14th, when the Bishop of Chichester presided.

Mr. Malden, the Greek professor, read an account of the state of the Institution, and dwelt upon the exertions which had been made by their successors to overcome the difficulties occasioned by the late schism among the professors, and the retirement of a portion of that body. The report farther noticed that the professors were henceforward to be formed into a senate, which should act in concert with the council elected out of the proprietary, in promoting all the objects of the Institution. It also alluded to the junior school, consisting of 139 pupils, many of whom would, in due course of time, pursue their more mature studies in the parent University.

Prizes of handsomely bound books were then distributed as follow :-

Greek.— Senior class, first prize, Mr. A. C. Gooden; second prize, Mr. J. Uwins. Junior class, Mr. J. Thompson and Mr. J. Lainson (equal); second prize, Mr. C. Dobson.

Latin.— Senior class, Mr. A. C. Gooden; second prize, Mr. C. Barton. Supplemental prize from Professor Key, Mr. J. Batten; junior class, Mr. J. Lainson and Mr. J. Thompson.

Mathematics.— Senior class.

CHIIG.

Natural Philosophy.—Mr. J. Williams, Mr. W. Christie, and Mr. J. Watson.

Philosophy of the Mind and Logic.—For general excellence: Mr. J. Woolley. Examinations: Mr. J. Woolley, lence: Mr. J. Woolley. Examinations: Mr. J. Woolley, Mr. W. Christie.
Mr. W. Mohatel.

Dr. Blair, Professor of English Literature, stated that he had not held any examination, but wished to distinguish one pupil in each class for assiduity, namely, in the senior class, Mr. J. Williams; in the junior, Lord W. Townshend.

7. Townshend.
Prize Essay in junior English class, Mr. S. Philips.
Prench.—Mr. T. Wheeler, Mr. S. Spalding.
English Law.—Mr. Harden, Mr. Heath, Mr. Hubbock

(equal).
Essay Prizes given by Professor Amos and by subscription among pupils: Mr. Hare, Mr. Hubbock, Mr. Heath,

Mr. Gale.

Certificates of general ability and good conduct were granted to several pupils in their respective classes.

After finishing this gratifying task, the Lord Bishop addressed the meeting, to remove a prejudice which he said had arisen against this Institution, as if it were indifferent, if not hostile, to religious instruction. It had been established for the education of those who dissented from the Church of England, and found obstacles in their children's way at Universities where tests prevailed to which they could not conscientiously subscribe. As these parties also differed on points among themselves, it was impossible for them to devise and prescribe a course of religious doctrine and discipline which should embrace the opinions of all; and therefore the University offered, clusive creed. His lordship then adverted to all the plates with similar praise,—we can not the excellent moral and religious effects which justly say that the greater portion of them see might beforeduced by the study of the Scriptures in the Hebrew and Greek originals; and also to an effort which had been partially made, though without success, to introduce a plan of Christian instruction; which, however, shewed that the friends of the Institution were not indifferent to the subject. In conclusion, he viewed the prospects of the University in a he viewed the prospects of the University in a favourable light; and bestowed a cordial meed (Cargill," engraved by R. Graves, from a set of praise upon the professors, the fruits of ture by W. Mulready, R.A.; "Suppersons of praise upon the professors, the fruits of whose exertions they had that day witnessed,

The Arraignment of Queen Katherine. H.

As performed at Covent Garden; and a very indifferent representation. The portraits of and "Tomkins watching Phete at the Four-Fanny Kemble, and the rest, are all unlike; tain," engraved by W. Humphrey, from a and the mixture of the stage scene and cos-picture by W. Collins, R.A. tume with the fiddlers in front, and the audience looking on, has the worst possible effect.

Devonshire and Cornwall Illustrated; in a Series of Views, from original Drawings by T. Allom and W. H. Bartlett, engraved on steel by Heath, Miller, Le Petit, Wallis, do great credit to its taste both in selection and &c. With Historical and Descriptive Accessoration. counts by J. Britton and E. W. Brayley, Esgrs. Fisher, Son, and Co. WE have frequently noticed this interesting work in the Literary Gasette, in the course of THE first of a very pretty and laudable deign its publication. It is now completed, and the to illustrate the beauties of the garden by result lies before us in one of the most splendid topographical volumes that we have ever seen; containing above a hundred and forty select views in a part of England distinguished by the picturesque character of its natural scenery, and enriched by numerous admirable specimens of architectural embellishment, ancient and modern. Of the execution of the work, it is asid with the strictest truth by the proprietors: teach the botanic names and distinctions on its furnish an interesting popular history of the its was commenced in good faith, and in its furnish an interesting popular and education. progress there has been no deterioration. The artists have achieved both honour for them. It is quite an ornamental book for the amateur selves, and credit for their employers." Nor gardener; and especially fitted to be a favourite is it one of the least recommendations of this volume, that it will prove in the highest degree amusing and gratifying, not only to those who may be under the influence of local associations and attachments, but to all who have any taste for the beauties of nature and art. The historical and descriptive accounts abound with valuable information, communicated in a style of great simplicity and clearness.

Villa Rustica. By Charles Parker, Architect. Parts II., III., and IV. Carpenter. THESE "Selections from buildings and scenes in the vicinity of Rome and Florence, arranged for lodges and domestic dwellings," shew great They are neatly executed on stone by Mr. Barnard; and, in combination with the plans and details, may furnish many valuable hints to the English architect or gentleman.

Moon, Boys, and Graves.

THIS number comprehends St. Ronan's Well, Redgauntlet, the Crusaders, and Woodstock. inequality of merit in the works of art of he distinctly presents to the eye, but in the which it consists must necessarily occur; and he leaves the imagination to complete although therefore we are markled and the consists must be supplied to the consistence of the consists must be supplied to the consistence of th Although in a publication so extensive, an most properly as he thought, a comprehensive and cheap education to every class and sect, which it consists must necessarily occur; and the leaves the imagination to complete without binding them to any precise and ex-exceedingly beautiful, and deserve the higher commendation. Our favourites in the Put under notice are - " Portrait of Sir Walter Scott," engraved by John Horsburgh, from picture by John Watson Gordon; "Wisterblossom exhibiting his Engravings," engrave by J. Geodyear, from a picture by C. R. Lesie, R.A.; "Touchwood's Visit to the Rev. Mt. at Redgauntlet Cottage," engraved by J. Mitthem.

The pupils who had profited by chell, from a picture by A. Frazer; "The Hawking Party," engraved by R. 6nva. from a picture by E. Landseer, R.A.; "Dr. PINE ARTS.

MEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Arraignment of Queen Katherine. H. Andrews. Lithography. London, R. Ackermann.

Andrews. Lithography. London, R. Ackermann.

Sperformed at Covent Garden: and a very sperfo graved by A. Fox, from a picture by J. Inskipp;

> Poynings, by D. Costello; Hodat Church; both on stone by T. Allom. THE pretty and interesting subjects which se notice here as separate publications of art, at embellishments of the British Magazin, and execution.

The Court of Flora. Part I. By Silvester Bell. London, E. Wilson.

THE first of a very pretty and laudable design monthly publication, containing in each hat two plates, so well drawn and so beautifully coloured as to merit the title of the Court of Flora. The first Part, containing the splendid Dahlia and the modest Sweet-Pea, bodes well d the whole performance: the former is particularly deserving of praise. Four pages of letterpress description are excellently adapted to teach the botanic names and distinctions and flowers __ their birth, parentage, and education with the fair sex.

Tombleson's Views of the Rhine, from Colors to Mayence. With Descriptions. Edited by W. G. Fearnside, Esq. Nos. I. and Il. London, G. Virtue; Carlsruhe, Creubane. In each No. are three nearly engraved plated of interesting, though oft-repeated subject; and the cost is Sixpence!! We really cannot st where cheapness is to stop, and daily look for some publication which the purchaser will be paid for taking. Steel, steam, and extensive circulation, may bring prints to this at het Really, these views are surprisingly low priced.

Satan in Council. Designed and engraved by John Martin. Pandemonium. Designed by John Martin, engraved by John Martin and

J. P. Quilly. Harding.
Two more of Mr. Martin's magnificent sens Now Series of Original Illustrations to all of illustrations of Milton. They are easily Editions of the Waverley Nevels. Part V. suited to the character of his genius. know of no artist, ancient or modern, but himself, who could in his peculiar manner have so powerfully embodied the sublime course tions of the poet; and that not only in what distinguishing qualities of these fine works; and they exhibit a grandour and a fecundity of invention that are quite astonishing.

The Right Hon. Lady Grey of Groby. By Thomson, from a Miniature by W. C. Ress. THE ninety-second of the female mobility, in La Belle Assemblée, is an amiable and su countenance, and very like a lady who might write such a book as the Visit.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

THE Elgin Marbles are at length in an apartment worthy of them. A simple but noble gal-lery having been built for the purpose by Sir Robert Smirke, they have been carefully removed to it from the dismal dungeon in which they were for so many years immured; and the exhibition of them is now open to the public, exhibition of them is now open to the public, and will continue so on the usual days (Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays), on which that portion of the British Museum may be gratuitously seen by all who choose to visit it. We have heard it objected to this new gallery that the light is too generally diffused; but we own that we do not think so. It would have been recordingly control to have preduced a second or the second of the second or the second of the second or the secon exceedingly easy to have produced a concentrated effect, which, on entering the room, might have been very striking and picturesque; but, in our opinion, if the architect had at-tempted any thing of that kind, he would, to use the proverbial phrase, "have sacrificed the substance to the shadow." It should be recollected, that the essential quality of these (as indeed of all) marbles is form; and that their beauty of form is such that every means ought to be afforded of tracing it even in its faintest indications: it should be also recollected, that there is not one of them which will not amply repay the minutest examination; and, cons quently, that there is not one of them which ought to be rendered subordinate to the rest by throwing it into comparative obscurity. may just observe, that some of our old friends appear to have new faces; but we are persuaded that this is entirely owing to a little gentle brushing, and that the directors of the British Museum have too much good taste to permit such a desecration as the slightest removal of actual surface.

A very interesting, although we presume a temporary, feature in the rich and varied show which the British Museum at this period presents, is the admirable collection of architectural casts from the capitals, friezes, &c. of the finest edifices of antiquity, formerly in the pos-session of Mr. Saunders, and purchased from that gentleman by Sir Thomas Lawrence for 5001.; and which Sir Thomas, in his will, directed should be offered to the president and council of the Royal Academy for half that sum. The offer was accepted; we imagine, therefore, that the collection has been merely deposited in the British Museum by the Royal Academicians until they shall be in possession of a building in which it may be advantageously displayed. To the young architect it will furnish as beneficial a school as the Antique Academy furnishes to the young historical painter.

Chantrey's behadful statue of Sir Joseph Banks has, within these few days, been placed in the hall of the British Museum. Its breadth, pose, and simplicity, contrast ouriously with the flutter, affectation, and excessive attention to detail, in Roubiliac's celebrated statue of Shakespeare. The former really thinks; the laster only appears to think. Do not let us be supposed, however, to underrate Roubiliac: he was a sculptor of great individual ability; his defects were those of his national character.

MODERN SCULPTURE.

WE have seen a specimen of the plates of a work about to be published in numbers, under the title of "Illustrations of Modern Sculpture;" edited by Mr. T. K. Hervey. It is one of the most beautiful productions of the graver that we ever met with; but we shall defer any critical notice of it until the appearance of the first number of the work. In the meanwhile, however, we extract from the prospectus a pas-sage, which will give our readers a satisfactory idea of the object which the proprietors have in contemplation.

" In the whole range of art, there is, perhaps, no one department in which we have produced works whose excellence may more undoubtingly put itself in competition with the excellence of all other ages and lands, than that of sculpture. Yet true it is, that it has failed to keep pace, in the public attention, with its eister arts; and that its treasures, and even the knowledge of them, are (comparatively speaking) limited to the few. The efforts of tasteful individuals, and of societies like that of the Dilettanti, have been principally directed to the illustration of ancient sculpture; and to the re-production, in every form. of these specimens of former ages, over which time has thrown a consecration, but from a large proportion of which it has, undoubtedly, taken a grace—to all eyes but those of an anti-quary. To ancient art, and those who have devoted themselves to its publication, it is not to be questioned that modern art stands richly indebted. But it is right that the latter should have credit for the use which it has made of the funds thus placed at its disposal; and greatly to be regretted that, in an age of dif-fused taste and spreading intelligence, the resources of wealth and talent should have been lavished, almost exclusively (as regards this department), on the past and the imperfect while the public are left in comparative ignorance of those pure and beautiful specimens in which our own immediate age is so abundant. and to which our own country has so largely contributed. It is with a view to supply this absent link in the chain of illustrated art, that the present work has been undertaken; and -at the same time that it is designed to induce a more popular attention to, and knowledge of, the treasures of modern sculpture-it is inings, and that in our humble opinion it possesses merit and promise abundantly sufficient to entitle the youth by whom it was executed to admission, not only as a probationer, but as a student; and we have reason to believe that several of the unsuccessful drawings by other hands were of equal pretensions. Perhaps there are already as many students in the Royal Academy as can be conveniently accommodated; or perhaps the Royal Academicians, contemplating with pain the present state and prospects of the arts in this country, think it benevolent, in the words of Fuseli, "to deter rather than to delude." We would willingly stiribute their conduct to any but partial, unjust, or capricious motives.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

USE OF PERENOLOGY.

Away with all doubt and misgiving, Now lovers must woo by the bool There's an end to all trick and deceiving. No men can be caught by a look. Bright eyes or a love-breeding dimple No longer their witchery fling; That lover indeed must be simple Who yields to so silly a thing.

No more need we fly the bright glances, Whence Cupid shot arrows of yore; To sculls let us limit our fancies. And love by the bumps we explore! Oh, now we can tell in a minute What fate will be ours when we wed; The heart has no passion within it That is not engraved on the head.

The first time I studied the science With Jane, and I cannot tell how, 'Twas not till the eve of alliance I caught the first glimpse of her brow. Causality finely expanding,

The largest I happened to see; Such argument's far too commanding, Thought I, to be practised on me.

Then Nancy came next, and each feature As mild as an angel's appears; I ventured, the sweet little creature, To take a peep over her cars: Destructiveness, terrible omen, Most vilely developed did lie! (Though, perhaps, it is common in women, And hearts may be all they destroy.)

The organ of speech was in Fanny; I shuddered, 'twas terribly strong! Then fled, for I'd rather that any Than that to my wife should belong. I next turned my fancy to Mary-She swore she loved nothing but me; How the look and the index could vary! For naught but self-love did I see.

Locality, slyly betraying
In Helen a passion to roam, Spoke such predilection for straying,— Thought I—she'll be never at home Oh! some were so low in the forehead. I never could settle my mind; While others had all that was horrid In terrible swellings behind!

At length 'twas my lot to discover The finest of skulls, I believe, To please or to puzzle a lover, That Spurzheim or Gall could conceive. Twould take a whole age to decipher The bumps upon Emily's head; So I said, I will settle for life here, And study them after we're wed. THOMAS SKINNER.

BIOGRAPHY.

tended to be executed in such a manner as will render it, at once, a valuable and graceful addition to the libraries of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur."

[It is only within the last two months that we reviewed, with copious extracts and strong commendation, the Grammar of the Turkish Language produced by this youth promise abundantly sufficient to entitle the youth by whom it was executed to admission, not only as a probability with the last two months that we reviewed, with copious extracts and strong commendation, the Grammar of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon to record. The following letter conveys all the information respecting him which we have been able to obtain, and must stand us in stead of a more regular obituary.—

Example 1.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist, the student, and the connoisseur.

The vice of the artist two months that we reviewed, with copious extracts and strong commendation, the Grammar of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon to record. The vice of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon to record. The vice of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon to record. The vice of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon to record. The vice of the Turkish Language produced by this youth, whose early death we have so soon

" Poor Davids died last Thursday morning, after an illness of only twenty-two hours, said to be cholera. I did not see him, nor even knew of his indisposition, until I was told of his dissolution. Had he lived, he would have

We are inclined to believe we have to thank the pleasant author of the Recursions in India for this contribution."—Bit L. G.

By the by, we understand that much dissatisfaction has lately been created by the rejection, on the part of the president and council of the Royal Academy, of the claims of a number of young aspirants in art, who had, in the usual manner, sent in drawings from the antique, for the purpose of heing admitted as probatiseness in the Academy; and this dissatisfaction has been greatly increased by a rumour that the drawings of some of the few candidates who have been admitted were of a very inferior description. Now, we have too frequently witnessed the warping effects of disappointment on the mind not to listen to such statements cow grand sails; but we can truly say that we have seen ease of the summercental disam-been of age next month. For so young a man, his philological attainments were truly surprising: in addition to the classical languages. and French, Italian, and German, he was critically acquainted with Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, and Turkish. His profession was the law, which he was about to begin to practise on his attaining his majority. He was an only son, and lost his father when a boy. His mother, who doted on him, nay, almost worshipped him, is, I understand, frantic with grief. I do not know whether you are aware that he was of the Jewish persuasion. Some time ago he gave, I think, two lectures on the philosophy of the Jews, and which gained him, from Mr. Huttmann, late secretary to the Asiatic Society, the cognomen of the Modern Mendelssohn. He has died, as you may ima-gine, sincerely and universally lamented by a large circle of friends, to whom his talents were a constant object of admiration."

DRAMA. GERMAN OPERA.

King's Theatre. - On Thursday, Wiegl's opera of the Swiss Family was performed at this theatre, for the purpose of introducing Madam Fischer. The music is of a very simple and pleasing character; two or three of the concerted pieces, with a chorus at the end of the second act, are very sweet, and were extremely well given, and deservedly encored. Madam Fischer has rather a pleasing face, with a figure cast in one of nature's large moulds. Her voice is powerful, but with a slight inclination to harshness in the upper notes; well cultivated, and quite under her command. The other parts are respectably filled, but not so well as usual. We cannot say so much for the dresses of the choristers, certainly a stranger mixture was never seen. Madam Fischer was called for after the fall of the curtain, and was much applauded.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, July 21 .- La Gazza Ladra. If it be necessary (but at such a theatre should it be so?) that one person should double, I mean quadruple, the parts of the podesta's servant, the officer, the judge, and the Jew, a person should be selected with sufficient versatility to avoid making so very striking a family likeness between these different personages as did Mons. B. Galli.

Queen's Theatre, July 23 .- After the first piece, a pause ensued of such awful duration that the house gave evidence of utter loss of patience. At last an actor came forward; and after what is vulgarly called a cock-and-bull whatever in the house, requested that they might be allowed to perform their last piece, and omit the middle one. To this the house agreed, thinking it better to witness The White Phantom than either to sit idle or create a riot. The piece commenced accordingly, and its first act was soon over; when a pause, to which the former was as nought, ensued. The long-brewing riot at length burst forth,—" manager" and "money" were called for, and sticks, legs, hands, and lungs, most pertinaciously exerted. Another actor hereupon came forward, and tried very hard to explain that the fault was upon a Mr. — 's shoulders, whose name I must not write for fear of a libel, for the speaker said he had absconded with certain monies—so that it was impossible the play could go on. The merits of this sequitur I see not, nor indeed did the house, story about there being no responsible person for spokesmen in pit, gallery, and boxes, roared out questions and recriminations till the man on the stage grew in a passion, and a thorough Babel of abuse and uproar ensued. It was evident that the actors would not continue the play, and for some time equally evident that the audience would not leave the house. Men were next sent into the boxes to cover the fronts thereof with their castomary pinafores; but the audience tore them off again; and one official was nearly pulled over into the pit by a long pendant piece of drapery, whereof a pittite had somehow gained the other end. As the audience would not consent to be thus expelled, a more effectual mode was hit on, and o' the sudden the whole establishment was involved in blackest darkness by the turning-off of the gas. As there was now, of course, no longer any hope of secing the merits of the case, I made a politic retreat, with as much expedition as (as Mathews would say) Erebus and sundry knocks would allow; but till I was fairly out of the street I heard the yells of the Pandemonium that raged within!

Strand Theatre, June 24 .- The most trifling manœuvre, so that it be not a usual one, is almost certain of being a failure. With this conviction I trembled when I saw preparations afoot for lighting a candle by striking a light on the stage. Keeley was the agent, and had exhausted all his gag before the tinder would catch. Ere the match would ignite, the tinder was out again, and the steel and flint were again in requisition. Whose supposeth the contre-temps over when the match was at last lighted, supposeth wrong; it was, of course, put out again by contact with the wick of the candle, and the whole elaborate operation once more deliberately attempted. None of the more deliberately attempted. actor's jokes on the difficulty of lighting up a match, &c. are worthy of report. Keeley was rolled across the stage in a wheelbarrow in one scene, and it had almost been over the scene as well; for the wheel starting off at an acute angle, came with so violent a concussion against the flat, as almost to give it a more literal right to its name. Why are such desperate difficul-ties as rolling wheelbarrows and lighting candles attempted ?*

VARIETIES.

Ventilation of Steam-Vessels .- Sir Alexander Crichton has invented a method for ventilating steam-vessels even more effectually than sailing-vessels have yet attained by any apparatus. It consists of tubes, so applied that a constant current of heated air from the chimney acts upon the interior, the hold, cabins, &c. and causes a perpetual change of atmosphere.

We wish the Quorra and its consort had been provided with this means of purification for their African voyage.

Travels .- In the year 1820 the government of the United States sent an expedition > explore the Stony Mountains, and the country to the west of that chain, to the ocean. After an interval of eleven years, news has been received of the proceedings of the traveller. They landed in Green Bay, in Lake Michigan, where they passed the winter. They then crossed Dog's Meadow, to the Falls of St. Anthony, on the Mississippi. They next proceeded 200 miles up St. Peter's River, in search of lead mines, and were so fortunate as to discover some of considerable importance. Her they passed the second winter. They then proceeded down St. Peter's River to the Mississippi, and down the latter to the junction of the Missouri, and up that river to the foot of the Stony Mountains, where they passed the third winter. In the middle of August they crossed the chain, and remained eight years on the western side of it. During this long period they were near the coast of the frozen ocean, and even passed over into Asia. In the vicinity of the Columbia they were overtaken by a storm, in consequence of which they were obliged to build huts, and to remain there nine months. The snow lay fourteen feet deep, and want compelled them to kill forty-one of their pack-horses for food. Among the various discoveries which they have made are extensive strata of salt, alum, iron, copper, gold and

The Jews .- We have been favoured by Mr. Hentze, bookseller of Breslau, with a printed paper, in German, which looks very like a preliminary to an attempt to gull the public, and in which attempt it would almost appear that we are expected to co-operate. It professes to give an account of a work submitted to the censorship at Cracow, with the title of " A Diplomatic Act and Epistle from Zion. by the legitimate heir to the throne of David. Siegfried Justus I. king of Israel, and high-priest of Jerusalem," which will very soon le published in the German language, and probably at the same time in English and Frech.
"This act," we are told, "contains seral very important documents relative to the restoration of the Jewish state; all of which have reference to an act that is said to have been submitted to the great powers in 1830." It's asserted that the transit of Mercury over the sun on the 5th of May last, was to be a sign of the reconciliation of the great family of (sol with Israel, and of the commencement of a new order of things for the benefit of mankind generally. Accordingly, all Israel is required in the epistle to keep that day holf, and w celebrate it with due rites henceformand and for evermore. Agreeable to the act, the king of Israel has established three orders, those of St. David, St. Solomon, and Siegfried, and also a consular institution to prepare the runion and organic activity of the dispersed Hebrew nation. To this story all we shall so is, Credat Judaus!

Travels in India.—Letters have lately been received from M. Jacquemont, a French the veller in India. He had quitted the dominions of Ramjek Sing after his return from (32. mere, and having found it impossible to pertrate into Persia by way of Afghanistan, he had returned to Delhi, with the intention of proceeding to the Persian Gulf by way of Bombay. Ramjek Sing had in vain colevoured to detain him, and offered him an office at his court: at his departure he made him magnificent presents of shawls and jewels. He seems to have a particular predilection for the French, and takes as many of them into his service as the jealousy of the English will permit him. His army is organised on the French system, and consists of between 40,000 and 50,000 men, with 100 pieces of cannon. His differences with the East India Company seem to be terminated for the present, though, from the relative situation of the two parties, it is difficult to foresee how long the peace may last. He lately had an interview with the governorgeneral of India, and made his troops exercise before the English. He is master of Lahor, Cashmere, and the provinces of Afghanistan on the banks of the Gudna, which provinces he subdued on the death of Mohammed Schah. (Paris, 29th June.)

General Cemetery .- The company formed by Mr. Carden, for the provision of an ornamented burial-place, on a large scale, out of the bounds of the metropolis, (near Hampstead,) has received the sanction of the legislature, and may now be considered firmly established. Arrangements have been made with the London clergy for the payment of a small fee for every body removed from their several parishes (5s. each, and 7s. 6d. for Marylebone). Nearly 10,000% has been paid for land, of which the company is empowered to purchase eighty acres; trees have been planted, and a boundary wall is nearly finished: the capital subscribed is above 36,000/.; above 22,000/. has been paid, and altogether about 15,000% expended. Every intelligent person must rejoice to see the nuisance of burying in churches and churchyards in the midst of a dense population abated. It has long been desirable, and Mr. Carden deserves well of his country for the zeal and perseverance with which he has so successfully laboured in this cause.

The Exeter Hall Ancient Pictures .- Mr. H. Phillips yesterday commenced the sale of these remarkable old masters, and other great productions of art; of the result of which we trust to give some (and a favourable) account in our next, which we cannot do till the sale of to-day is completed. They are, however, in good hands, as the recent improvement in his picture-sale prices bear witness, as it does also to the better feeling with regard to art, so long paralysed by politics.

Lord Dillon .- Among the deaths of the week in the newspaper obituary, we observe that of Henry Augustus Dillon Lee, 13th Viscount Dillon, at the age of fifty-five. His lordship was the author of a pamphlet on the Catholic Question in 1805; and of a Commentary on the Military Establishments of the British Empire, two vols. 8vo. 1811. More recently he published a remarkable work of fiction, founded on actual circumstances in Italy and Germany, and a poem. His lordship was much attached to literary pursuits. He had suffered long, though apparently a fine and vigorous man, from a consuming disease.

National Gallery, &c.—On Monday 15,000l. were voted in the House of Commons to commence the building of a national gallery, and accommodation for the Royal Academy, at Charing Cross. The whole cost is to be 50,000%; and we trust that the structure will be worthy of the country.

Mrs. Kilham. - Accounts of the death of this lady, one of the Society of Friends, and remarkable for her exertions in the cause of civilisation at Liberia, have been received. She was on her passage to Sierra Leone.

Iron Steam-Boat. - A wrought-iron steamboat, the first ever built in England, has just been completed for the East India Company, and is intended for towing vessels in the river Ganges. Her length is 125 feet, breadth 24, and between decks 11. The whole is of iron, except the deck, which is of plank. The iron is half an inch thick, in large plates, and fastened by 30,000 curiously contrived rivets. The engine is sixty-horse power, and it is calculated that she will not draw above I foot 11 inches of water. It seems there is some worm or insect in the Ganges that speedily destroys the wooden steamers, which has led to this novel expedient, at the cost of some 20,000%. The vessel will be launched to-day, near Westminster Bridge.

Guide to Knowledge, edited by Mr. Pinnock. Nos. I. II. III. IV.—Mr. Pinnock is so well known, and his talent for the edification of youth so justly appreciated, that we are not surprised to see him enter the list of the weekly penny competitors for the profusion of know ledge. These Nos. do him credit, and are well contrived, both by engravings and explanations, to render the study of geography equally popular and profitable. Their selections of natural history, and other branches of science connected with the principal object, are also very useful and attractive.

Origin of the Word Cotton .- That the ladies of ancient Rome wore muslin dresses, is taken for granted by a learned German antiquary,* on the authority of Horace, (Sat. I. ii. 101);† and certainly, if the isle of Cos, to which the poet in that passage alludes, had acquired note, in the Augustan age, for the fineness of its cotton, from plants which Egypt might have supplied at a much earlier period, it may fairly be allowed the honour of having given the current name to a material which the Germans persist in designating by the more significant, though homely, appellation of tree-wool. The above etymology, in regard to its local reference, may claim equal rank, or, at least, may deserve comparison with that of Skinner, which has been implicitly adopted by Dr. Johnson and later lexicographers.

"The Dutch entertain no pity for those who are in debt; they think that every person who contracts debts lives at the expense of his fellow-citizens, if he be poor; and of his heirs, if he be rich."-Mirabeau's Letters.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Lit. Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXX, July 28, 1832.]

[Lit. Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXX. July 28, 1828.]

An Argument, a priori, for the Being and Attributes of God, by William Gillesple.

Comparative View of the Industrial Situation of Great Britain, from 1775, with an Examination of the Causes of her Distress, by Alexander Mundell, Esq.

The third volume, containing the fifth and sixth vols. of the Paris edition, of Madame Junot's Memoirs.

A System of School Geography, chiefly derived from Malte Brun, by S. E. Goodrich, of America.

The Astrologian's Guide in Horary Astrology, the full Disclosure of that Science, &c. &c. by Rupertus Stella.

A Popular View of the Climate and Medical Topography of British America, by William Rees, Esq.

Memoirs of Sir David Baird, G.C.B., with numerous Letters of the most distinguished Military Characters of the day.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardner's Cyclopsedia, Vol. XXXIII. Western World, Vol. 11. 6s. cloth.—Lindley's Outline of Horticulture, 18mo. 2s. sewed.—Wordsworth on Elections, England and Wales, 8vo. 2ls. bds.—Finnelly on the Reform Bill, 19mo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Cockburn's Boundary Act, with Notes, &c. 12mo. 3s. 3d.—Double Trial, 3 vols, post 8vo. 1l. 4s. bds.—English School of Painting and Sculpture, Vol. 111. 18s. hf.-bd.—Cyclopedia of Practical Medicine, Vol. I. royal 8vo. 1l. 10s. cloth.—Edinburgh Cabinet Library, Vol. VIII. British India, Vol. III. 5s. cloth.—Robinson's Essay on a Lay Ministry, 12mo. 4s. bds.—Mendham's Plus the Nitsch, Beschreibung des häuslichen Lebens der Römer, 2 vols. 13mo. edited by Ernesti.

 Cofs tibi pene videre est Ut zusdam.

Fifth, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Sequel to Principle Practice, fcp. 3s. 6d. cloth.—Mogridge's Churchyard Lyrist, 12mo. 5s. cloth.—The Museum, by Charlotte Elizabeth, 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Greenland Missions, 12mo. 4s. hf.-bd.—Family Library, Vol. XXXIII. Brewster on Natural Magic, 18mo. 5s. cloth.—Wishaw's Classified Analysis of the Reform Act, 12mo. 3s. bds.—Jameson's Characteristics of Women, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 6s. bds.—Russell on Elections and Reform Act, 12mo. 9s. bds.—Edgeworth's Noveis and Tales, Vol. IV. Popular Tales, Vol. I. 5s. cloth.—Simeon's Works, Horze Homileticze, Vol. I. 5s. cloth.—Simeon's Vols. 1s. vol. 1. Genesis to Prakins, royal 8vo. 3s. cloth.—Arrowsmith's Grammar of Ancient Geography, 12mo. 6s. bd.; with Maps, 12s. bd.: Praxis on do. 12mo. 1s. 3d. sewed: Ancient Atlas for King's College School, 12mo. 5s. 6d. bds.—A Chart of Modern Europe, folio, 12s. bds.—Valpy's Classical Library, No. XXXII. Cexar, Vol. II. 4s. 6d. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

July.	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday · 12	From				29.85	to	29.83
Friday ···· 13	• • • •	53.	••	75.	29.74	••	29.72
Saturday · · 14	• • • •	54.		69.	29-95		29-99
Sunday 15		46.		73.	30-20	• •	30.29
Monday · · 16		51.		73.	30-22	••	30.14
Tuesday · · 17	• • • •				30-11	• •	30.04
Wednesday 18		50.		69.	30-00	••	30.04
	4. 337 -

Prevailing winds, W. and S.W.

Except the three first days, clear; rain on the 12th and 14th: a storm of thunder, accompanied by vivid lightning, on the evening of the 12th.

Rain fallen, 95 of an inch.

July.		The	ermo	nete	1 Barometer.
Thursday		From				30-06	to	30:11
Friday · · · ·		• • • •	40.		65.	30.13	••	30.16
Saturday · ·						30.18	••	30.20
Sunday····		• • • •	40.		62.	30-14	• •	30:13
Monday						30-13 9	itati	onary
Tuesday ···						30.11	• •	30.15
Wednesday						30-15	••	30.11

Prevailing wind, N.W.

Except the three first days, cloudy; a few drops of rain in the evening of the 24th.

Edmonton. CHARLES H Latitude · · · · 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Estracts from a Meteorological Register kept at High Wycombe, Bucks, by a Member of the London Meteoro-logical Society. June 1832.

Thermometer-Highest 75.50° 20th. Lowest 35 Mean 56:34166 Barometer—Highest ... 20-34100
Lowest ... 29-22 ... 5th.
Mean ... 29-62988

past l P.M.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The conclusion of our Review of Capt. Skinner's Ex-

The conclusion of our Review of Capt. Skinner's Excursions in India next week.

We have received No. I. of the Apollonicon, or Musical Album, and have to say (with our acknowledgments) that it is a very pleasant production. Musical anecdote, musical criticism, new music, poetry, and various other matters, make altogether a very agreeable miscellany. We have to acknowledge a letter from Mr. Stocqueler, justifying his map being exactly from Macdonald Kinnier's, without altering its orthography to render it correct according to his own remarks: but we remain of our first opinion, that this is an error to confirm errors. Mr. S. also defends the omission of other places mentioned on his route, because they are to be found in all good maps of Asia Minor: but if we were to have the trouble of referring to them, why give us amap at all?—especially one imperfect in its names of places, and defective in its literary.

imperfect in its names of places, and detection in imperfect in its names of places, and detection. An Original Preface to a new edition of Vortigern, by W. H. Ireland, is received. The writer complains bitcherly of the persecutions which have followed him for six-and-thirty years, ever since he duped the learned and knowing ones by his celebrated forgeries of Shakespeare papers, and led them to make a rather foolish appearance before the world. As a literary curiosity, we think the work well worth a reprint.

We have no knowledge of the expedition of Mr. Balley and an Oxford gentleman in quest of early MSS. relative to the New Testament; nor of the existence of any MS. hitherto undescribed, and of equal antiquity with the Alexandrian.

ADVERTISEMBNTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

MALL.
The Gallery, with a Selection from the Works of the Ancient saters of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English thoois, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till like in the Admission, 1s .-- Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Kooper.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE INSTI-TOTAL LIB-UFUN-TYNE INSTI-TUTION for the GENERAL PROMOTION of the PINE ARTS.

FINE ARTS.

The Committee of the above Institution beg to inform Artists that they have extended the time for receiving Pictures till the 15th of August. They have also to request Exhibition, at the Royal Actiony and the Sulfol's Street Exhibition, who intend to favour the Newcastel Institution, to forward their Pictures Immediately after the close of the above-named Exhibitions.

KERNLYMIDE and WALTON, 16, Westgate Breet, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Secretaries. A few Shares of the Institution, at 2% cach, having the privilege of free admission to the Annual Exhibitions, yet remain undisposed of. Application to be made to the Secretaries; or to their Agents in London, Mesars. Cuvelje and Enfeld, 8, Raymond Buildings, Gray's Inn.

THE DONCASTER FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL is at present Vacant. Annual value of School, nd, and Property [exclusive of the School and Library] and untary Allowance by the corporation of Doncaster for Teach; Classics to the Sons of Freemen of Doncaster, £100. Whenever the number of Free Scholars exceed twenty, £100. Freemen's Sons to pay the Master additionally for other branches of creation.

men's sons to pay the Master additionally for other brasches of education.

The Master to be at liberty to take Boarders, and also as Day Scholars, if he think fit, the sons of gentlemen, who may be non-freemen, and for those he may fix his own terms.

The office mast he filled by a Clerk in Holy Orders, heing a Graduate of one of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridges and College Exhibition is attached to the School. Candidates will be pleased to address their applications, with testimonials and references, postage free, to the I own Clerk, no ro before the 10th day of August next.

Doncaster is celebrated for its Schools; and the Master of the Pree School, taking into account the payment which may be made him by freemen's sons, the unlimited charges to nonfreemen's children, and the profits of loarders, may fairly calculate on considerable emolument and advantage.

Doncaster, July 7, 1858.

F. FISHER, Town Clerk.

TWO large MEZZOTINTO ENGRAV-INGS, from Milton's Paradise Lost, uniform in size with Belsbarzar's Feast.

Pandemonium. Designed by J. Martin, Esq. and engraved by Mr. Martin and J. P. Quilley.

Satan in Council. Designed and engraved by J. Martin, Eq. Prints, each, it. 11s. 64.; Proofs, 2t. 12s. 6d.; Proofs, before letters, 4t. 4s.

Three splendid Engravings are new ready for delivery.
Published by F. G. Harding, 34, Cornhill; and to be had of the principal Dealers in Town and Country.

OPORTO and LISBON.—Twelve general Views of these Cities from the most advantageous points are contained in the Pirit and Third Parts of Lieutenant-Colonel Ratty's Select Views of the Cities of Europe, with Key Plates, naming every principal object in each View, accompanied by accurate and connected descriptions. Each set of Siz Views, imperial See, prior 15a; or reyal tite. 15a; Proofs, 1a. 5a. The work complete in Goth bearing, imperial See, 4d.; reyal tite. 4d. 4s.; Proofs, 6d. 10s.

London: Moon, Boys, and Graves, 6, Pall Mail.

THE ART of MINIATURE PAINTING,

ME ART Of MINIATURE PAINTING and the Principles of Drawing.
By ARTHUR PARSEY,
Professor of the Art of Miniature Painting and Perspective.
Vide Reviews for February, March, April, May, June, &c. 188 Lendon: Longman and Co. Faternesser Rew; and to be had the Author, No. 16, Burlington Arcade; and all Beotsellers.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Wordsmorth's Pactical Works: Small Edition.
A new edition, complete in 4 vols. 24s. boards,
THE POETICAL WORKS of W. WOBDSWORTH, Esq. Including the contents of the former Edition in 5 vols. and some additional Pieces. The Excursion may be had separately, price boards. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Ce.

Second Edition of Rombotham's German and English Grommar.
In 18mo. revised and improved throughout, and finely printed by Hanasard, price 7c. neatly bound and lettered,
A PRACTICAL GERMAN GRAMMAR,

PRACTICAL ULRMAN URAMINAR.

With Exercises under each Rule; being a New and Easy Method of acquiring a thorough Knowledge of the German Language. Per the Use of Schools and Frivate Students.

By JOHN ROWBOTHAM, F.R.A.S.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradect, Paternoster Row; and T. and T. Boosey, Broad Street.

Of whom also may be had, by the same Anthor,
A Practical Grammar of the French Lan. guage, illustrated by copiess Examples and Emercies, selected from the most approved French Writers; designed for the Use of Schools and Private Students. In 18mo, price & beards. Important New Publications, Published by Mesors. Colburn and Bentley, New Surfacess Street.

CIR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PER-SIR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PERSOWAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES.

This Third Volumes of Sur Jonah Barrington's Foresond Statches absends still more than the two preceding in 1202 anecdotes of the two Historian character, and is particularly vish in the homoerrs of the Irah Bar. The following names Sigare complexessly is thin new Volume: —Chief-Junite Cloamedil —Ohief-Barres Yeiverton, Avenuore, and Hussy Surgh-Lorda Norberty and Clare — Judge Fletcher — John Philipto Curran — Connection
Byrne, Pitzgishom, Norestt, and Lysighe-Mr. Fleed—Fighting
Fitzgerial Mr. Martin of Gluivey—Nat John Sarbe-Sie Hercuies Langreish — Mr. Dundas — Beanchamp Baginal Marrey (Loader of the Robots in 1788)—Mrs. Busho—Sir Jeslien Pitegerald, &c.

II.

Memoirs and Remains of Lady Jane Grey, by Sir Harris Nicolas. A new and ch with fine Portrait, Se. 64.

Memoirs of Sir James Camebell, of Ardking-las, (formerly Sir James Callander). Written by Hissaell. In 8 vols. No. with a Portrait, 84.

"Sir James Campbell in the father of Mos. Thomas Sheridam. He served during the greater part of the Beven Year? War in Germany as Ade-de-camp to General Mostyna-valued most of the German Courts—had familiar insercourse with Velusire— was a member of the most celebrated London Clubs. He 'Bavoir vires', the 'Pandemonium', &c.—hadd the past of Secretary to the British Embory at Paris on the eve of the Revolution— journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Pa-rislan society during the Allied occupation of France."—Stebs.

Mémoires et Romances, mises en Musique, de Hortense. Ducheus de Naint Leu. Ex-Reine de Hollande; embellished with Twelve Plates besuilfully engraved on Stord, from the original Bosigns of the Duchess; her Memoir, Portreil, and Pac-timile. In I vol price 55s. nearly beend.

N.B. As a very few copies of this unique and inscreeding publication have been printed, those who desire to possess it are requested to send their senders forthwith to their respective Esch or Music-sellers.

Memoirs of the great Lord Burghley, Secre Memoirs of the great Lord Burghley, Secretary of State in the Reiga of King Edward VI. and Lord High Treasurer of England in the Reiga of Queen Elizabeth; containing an Historical View of the Times in which be lived, and of the many emineat and illustrieus Perseas with whom he was connected; with Extracts from his Frivate Correspondence and Journals, now inst published from the Originals. By the Rev. Dr. Nares, Regust Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. The Third and concluding Volume. "This elaberate work is of the highest anticeal interest: it embraces and discusses a multitude of great historical, biographical, religious, and political questions, and throws much light upon an era of almost unparalleded national and universal importance."—Literary Guzette.

David Garrick's Memoirs and Correspondence Dayld Garrick's Memoirs and Correspondence with the most celebrated Persons of his Time; now first published from the Originale. The Second and concluding Volume-This highly interesting and important work comprise speared of Twe Thousand Letters, from Fersons of the greatest eminence in the Political, Laterary, and Dramsult World. Ameng other Names, besides those of the leading Nobility, may be mentioned, Warberton Barke - Johnson - Hame - Uibben - Bir Joshus Reynolds-Goldsmith - Robertson - Junios - Beattie-Charchill - Manon-Cumberland - Bawell-Cohum-T. and J. Warton-Dr. Barney-Sheridan - Murphy-Dr. Headly-Mrs. Montaga-Mrs. Covilex. do:

Mri. Cowley, &c.

Bistory of the British Nobility.

Now sendy, the 4th edition, for 1823; in 2 vols. comprising the resently created Peven and Baremeis, and illustrated tith upwards of 1500 Engravings; among which is a the lines of His Majasiy, after Sir Thomas Lawrence's celebrated frawing.

DURKE'S GENERAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE of the BRITISH EMPIRE.

This New Edition of Mr. Barke's popular work, in addition to comprising, exclusively, the whole Hereditary Rank of England, Irviends, and Scotlands. (exceeding Pithees Hundsed Families.) is the remotest degree allied to those emisens houses; so that its confiniteral information is new considerably more copious than that of any similar work hitherto publishes.

Burke's Extincts. Dormant, and Suspended colineral information is new sessionably mere copious then that of any similar work hitherts published.

Burke's Extinct, Dormant, and Suspended Peerage. A necessary Companies to all other Peerage. Been tituly printed in double columns, subfernly with his Peerage and Barenetage. Price II. 5s. bound.

This Work comprises the whole of the Poerages which have been suspended or extinguishmed since the Compacet, particularing the members of case family, in each generation, and bringing the lineage, in all possible cases, through either colineralism for females, down to existing houses; it consecute in many instances the new with the old applitity; and it will, in all cases, have the cause which has influenced the revised of an extinct dignity in a new creation. It should be particularly noticed, that this new Work apperaism nearly as much to extant as as extinct persons of distinction; for though dignities pass away, it rarely occurs that whole families do.

Published by Colbum and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Dedicated, by permission, to the King. In reval 8vo. 16, 16s, half-bound,

In reyal 8vo. 14. 18s. half-bound, COMPANION and KEY to the HIS. COMPANION and KEY to the HISTOBY of England, consisting of copiess Genealogical and Biegraphical Details and Charts of the several Dynastics of the Briefsh Severaigns, with the illustrieus Paendites emanating from them; accompanied with an Epitome of the Briefsh, lazers, and English Nebility, condered as Hernditsry and Hierarchical; with the various Blassary of their Armorial BearingsBy GEORGE FISHEE, Asademy, Swaffham,
Also, separately, 5c. 6d. half-bound,
A Genealogical Atlas, composed of the Charts of the above Work, depicting the Decemi, through the various Dynastics, of British Sovereigns, with the several Branchings into the Families of Foreign Royalty and British Aristocracy.
Swaffham: Frinted by F. Biltis and seed by W. Simplin and
B. Earchall, Legalets.

Books for Smignants. Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Stre

NOTIONS of the AMERICANS.

By T. P. COOPER,

The coleirated American Revellet.

S value from

"Mr. Cooper's best is the best that has been written on America."—Worldy Review.

Three Years in Canada. An account of the actual State of that Country. By John Maragaste, Es. Cit. Engineer in the Service of the British Government. 2 web. He. The Service of the British Government. 2 web. He. The Maragaste is the most valuable work that we have hitherts am upon one of the most important colonies of the British engineer. It can be also be a serviced of the British engineer of the British engineer. It is indispanable."—

Two Years in New South Wales. By P. Canningham, E.q. R.N. Third edition, revised. 2 vols. is. "It is no exaggeration to say, that there is more practical and valuable information concerning the cettled districts of New South Wales, contained in this work, than in all the volumes pattagether which have been hitheren published on the condition of that promising colony."—Monthly Review.

Eight Years at the Cape. By Geo Thompson, Eq. 2 reis. See, with 40 Engravings. 1L 11. 4 "This is the completest book on the subject of this interest quarter of the world, and contains the best and most ration ascents of the important colony of the Cape."—After. By George Also, St edition, in 3 vote, price 14. Us. St.

Also, 54 ctimes, in.

Fitz-George,

"If all novels were like this, they would seen he in the hands of philosophers as well as fashionables."—True San.

"If a library he formed in Buckingham Palano, these volume should have a shelf to themselves."—Bulle Now Weekly Hessiage.
London, Stingham Wilson, 58, Royal Exchange; Edinburgh,
Waggi and Imans; Dublin, W. F. Wakaman.

Mr. D'Israeli and Lord Nugend.
In See, prion Sa. 64.

LIOTT, HAMPDEN, and PYM; or, a Reply of the Author of a Book entitled "Commentaries on the Life and Reign of Charles I." to the Author of a Book entitled "Book Memorials of John Hampden, his Party, see he Heavy Calbare and Reference in the Commentaries of the Commentarie ines." Heary Calburn and Bighard Bentley, New Burlington Street Of whom, and all Booksellers, may now be hel. Mr. D'Israeli's Commentaries, the Fifth and

MIr. D'1878611 8 COMMINICATION, 1989 AND A NEW CONCINCION YOUNG. So. 14r.
"The 'Commentaries on the Life and Reign of Charles L'fem by far the most impertant age that modern times have produced. More convious diffigures and support of the continuous continuous and the second support of the continuous continuous and seldom with so much success."—Quarterly Review, July 1832.

Mr. Copper's New Work, do.
Just published by Henry Colburn and Bichard Bestley,
New Burlington Surest.
In 3 vols. post Svs.

THE HEIDENMAUER; or, the tines. By J. F. COOPBR, Anther of the "Spy," &c. &c.

IL.

The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. New d cheaper edition. 2 vols. p 1 8m. 164 IIL.

Excursions in India. By Capt. Thos. Skinner, Alst Regiment. Comprising a Walk over the Hi Meantains, to the Sources of the Juman and the Gange. See, with Plates.

" Wherein of mitres vast, and deserts idle, Rough queries, resht, and bills whose heads touch heave, It was my him to quant."

Fortune-Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life. the Amber of "First Love." 8 vols.

Private Correspondence of a Woman of Fashion. Comprising Anadoses of the principal Parsauga is the Courts of England and France, in 1814 and subsequent per-

The Highland Smugglers. By J. B. Fraser, a. Author of the "Kuzzilbash." 8 vois. Esq. Author of the "Kazzilbe Also, just ready, Legends of the Rhine and Low Countries. By the Author of "Highways and Byways," dis. 8 vols.

11. Memoirs of Sir David Baird, G.C.B., together with his Correspondence with the most occurrence Military Characters of the day. 8 vols. 8vo. with Portrait and Maps.

New publishing, in weekly Nambers, price One Penny, and in Monthly Parts, price, with a Sopplement, Sixpence THE SATURDAY MAGAZINE, under the Direction of the Committee of under the Direction of the Committee of general Listrature and Education, appearand by the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge.

Part I. will appear July 31. ondon: John W. Parker, 445, (West) Strand; and said by all Sephelism and Howemen in the Kingdom.

Universal Dictionary of the Letin Language.

o very large volumes, royal 4to, price 61. 1ds. 6d. in canvass boards,

OTIUS LATINITATIS LEXICON COTIUS LATINITATIS LEXICON,

Consider tears JACOBI FACCIOLATI, opers as studio

BGIDI FORCELLINI, Alumni Seminarii Fatavini, lacubutumi Edidit, Anglicam interpretationem in locate allatini separaticam propertionem in locate paraticam separaticam fatavinam locate paraticam separaticam fatavinam locate paraticam fatavinam locate paraticam fatavinam desique et Horatili Tursellini de Particulis paratic, Auctarium desique et Horatili Tursellini de Particulis Latinum Orationis Libellium, etiam derarradi Siglarium Romanum, et Gesneri Indicem Etymologicum adjecti JACOBUS BAILEY,

A.M., Regies Societatia Literarum Socius.

*a In this edition the Appendix of Joseph Parlanetto has been incorporated, together with some additions by the Editor; neither is the English which has been introduced confined to the Italian passages of the foreign editions, but it has been inserted in other places as well; exceeding the other, as it does, by more than double the amount. A new Appendix has been added, consisting of the following strictes:—

1. A Supplement of more than Twenty

1. A Supplement of more than Twenty outside Mords; now first collected by the Editor.
2. Tursellinus's Treatise on the Particles of the Latin Language; the German being turned into English.

3. Gerrard's Siglarium Romanum; being the order and a Signarium momentum; being the most complete explanation extant of the Characters and Letters which occur in the Latin writers, and on the Roman Marbles, Stones, Coins, and other relics of antiquity.

4. Gesner's Etymological Index; in which all the Words of the Latin language are arranged under their respective roots.

all the Words of the Latin language are arrange.

The merits of the original work are too generally known to need being particularised in an Advertisement; and the effect which has been produced by the present edition upon the price of the foreign ones, proves indisputably that no edition of this book, however meritorious in other respects, will ever sell generally in this country, except it be in an English dress.

London: Published by Baidwin and Cradock, Paternoster Rew; and W. Pictering, Chancery Lane.

Oxford English Prize Essays.
COLLECTION of the ESSAYS which

A have obtained Prizes in the University of Oxford, from the year 1771 to the present time. A vois. crown 8vo. 11. 1ds. These volumes contain Essays, beades numerous others, by the following distinguished writers: Dr. Whately (Abp. of Dublin); Bishops Borgess, Coplestone, Mant, and Hober; Professor, Robertson (Astronomy), Rev. H. H. Milman (Peetry), Sandford (creek); Dr. Arnold, Rev. J. Keble, Rev. Daniel Wilson, Coleridge, Barl Eidon, Lord Sidmouth, Lord Testerden, &c.. Oxford: D. A. Talboys: Whittaker and Co., London.

Sophocles, literally translated into English over from the Greek, with Notes. The 2d edition, very much proved. Fro. boards, 15s.

Euripides. The Hecubs, Orestes, Phoenician Printing and Medes of Euripides, literally translated into English Prose, from the Text of Porson, with Notes. The 3d edition, revised and corrected. Sve. boards, 8.

The Hippolytus and Alcestis of Euripides, literally translated into English Prose, with Notes. Svo. bds. 4c.6d. Aristophanes. The Comedies of Plutus and the Progs, literally translated into English Prose, with co-

Notes. 8vo. 8s.

Æschylus, literally translated into English Prose, from the Text of Biomaeld and Schutz, with copious Notes critical and explanatory. 8vo. boards, 10s. 6d.

Æschyli Tragcedies, ex editione Stanleii Latine reddies, et ad editionem Grucom Schutzil accommodatus.
8vo. boards, 7s.

Peter Nicholeon's Algebra for Schools.

Just published, in 18mo. price 5s. bound,

THE SECOND EDITION of a PRAC.

TICAL SYSTEM of ALGEBRA, for the Use of Schools and Frivats Students.

By F. Nicholeon's and J. Row Botham, F.R.A.S.

"S" In this edition, the Authors have made many material improvements, not only in the Denmarks.

By F. Nicholeon and J. Row Botham, F.R.A.S.

"A tions, and of the Principles upon which Simple Equations of the Authors, and of the Principles upon which Simple Equations may be solved without transposition. Under the higher order of Equations, which have been materially improved, is a new Rule for extraoring the Cube Rose.

"From the perspicuity with which this Work is written, and the copious and well-selected examples it contains, it may be regarded as a valuable acquisition to scholastic literature."—

Northly Magashas.

"The examples are very numerous and well chosen. We consider that this Treatise deserves commendation for its subject."—Westminster Review.

A Kery to the above works of which and the Algebra, a persental and successive development of the difficulties of this subject. "Brow he works of which and the Algebra, a persental property of a master. Ifmo. price is, bound.

Londen: Printed for Baldwin and Cradeck; Whittaker and Co.; J. Dancan; and J. Rowbotham.

Climate in Consumption, &c.—New edition, $vo. 12s.

THE INFLUENCE of CLIMATE in CHRONIC DISEARES of the CHEST, DIGESTIVE ORGANS, &c.; with an Account of the Placet, reserved to by Invalide in Singland and the South of Envisor—their Merits in particular Disearch Directions for Invalide while Travelling and Residing Diseases—and Directions and Residing Abroad.

By JAMES CLARE, M.D. F.R.S.

Physician to St. George's Indirmary, &

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Sd edition, 534 pages 5ve. price 3e.

THE CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT
FOUNDED in ERROR.

"Lits evidently the product of a industrious, clear-headed, well-principled man, well-principled man, well-principled the production of the subject which he throughly comprehends." "Mothly Repository, Leadous Efficience Wilson, 58, Royal Eschange.

8. New Burlington Str ROOKS for TRAVELLERS, published by Heary Colburn and Richard Bentley

The Traveller's Oracle, or Maxims for Loco-motion. By William Kitchiner, M.D. New edition, 7s. 6d.

"Wirth and metion prolong life."

"We recommend the 'Traveller's Oracle' as a very amusing and instructive publication: it is west buying and reading, and will become, we doubt not, a popular book."—Atlass.

The Continental Traveller's Oracle. In

2 pocket vols. 18e.

"It is long since we have met with so clever a publication. There is a fund of sound sense and valuable counsel for travellers."—Literary Gazette. TIT.

Portugal; comprising Sketches of the State of Society in that Kingdom under Don Miguel: with a Narrative of the Auther's Residence there. By William Young, Eq. H. P. British Service. 8vs. 10s. 6d.

Travels to and from St. Petersburgh, through Flanders, along the Banks of the Rhine, through Frauds, Russia, Poland, Saxony, Silesia, Bavaria, and France. By A. B. Granville, M.D. F.R.S. F.L.S. M.R.S. &c. New edition, considerably improved, in 2 vols. 3vo. with a Map and 70 Plates, 36s. bd. "As a book for taurists to consult, Dr. Granville's is certainly a very superior guide; and its ornaments are another great recommendation to it."—Literary Gazette. "It should find a place in every drawing-room in England."—4ttes.

Italy, by Lady Morgan. Being the Substance of a Journal of her Residence in that Country; exhibiting a View of the present State of Nociety and Manners, Arts, Literature, &c. New edition, revised, in 3 vols 8vo. 98v. "This is a substantial account of Italy, which may be consulted for its facts by the historian, the traveller, and the topographer." Monthly Magazine.

Second edition, greatly enlarged, price 7s. 6d.

THE EFFECTS of ARTS, TRADES, and FROFESSIONS, and of CIVIC STATES and HABITS of LIVINO, on HEALTH and LONGSVITY: with Suggrestions for the Removal of many of the Agents which produce Disease, and shorten the Duration of Life.

By C. TURNER THACKRAH, Esq.

London: Longman, Resq. Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman; Simpkin and Marshall; Leeds, Bisines and Nowsome.

London: Longman, Nees, Urme, Brown, Ursem, and Longman; Simpkin and Marshali; Leeds, Bisines and Newsome.

Critical Notices of the First Edition of this Work.

"This is an exceedingly instructive essay. It is the production of a man intimately acquainted with the medical sciences, and is the only work in our language upon the subject."

"Mr. Thackrah's observations are deeply interesting to medical men. In fact, there is not a medical practitioner or a manufacturer in this empire who should not possess this work. It is repiete with information equality valuable to the one as the other."—Lond. Med. and Surg. Journal.

"Useful, in an eminent degree, do we consider Mr. Thackrah's inquiries and publication calculated to be. Fractical research has led him to an accumulation of facts, at once curious in themselves, and interesting to every living being."—Lits any Gasatte. We feel assured that wheever persues Mr. Thackrah's work will feel grateful to him for the valuable information he has collected upon the very important subjects to which he has directed his attention.—London Med. and r'Aysical Journal.

"Everw with repairs and the industry, ability, and philanthropy of its author."—Lance. "Everw eiter repairs of the kind. We feel and the property of the author."—Lance where the property of the author."—Lance where the property is a subject to the property of the author."—Lance where the property is a subject to the property of the author."—

Lance:

"Every other treatise of the kind falls infinitely behind the present in comprehensiveness and accuracy; which is indeed not to be wondered at, as he is the only medern author who obviously writes from careful personal observation."—Edin. Hed. and Sarg. Journal.

MORELL'S HISTORY of GREECE, from its Bartlest Paried to Let 2015 Trom its Barlies Period to its Final Sabjugation by the Remans; in a Series of Essays, accompanied with Reflections References to Original Authorities, and Historical Questions In 18mo. with a Map of Angient Greece, sixth edition, is, bds.

Morell's History of England, from the Period of the Ancient Britons to the Death of George III. In a Series of Esseys, with Reflections, References to original Authorities, and Historical Questions. In 2 vols. 18mo. fourth edition, II. in beards.

Morell's History of Rome, from its Earliest Records to the Death of Constantine. In a Series of Essays, with Reflections, References to original Authorities, and His-torical Questions. With a Mag, fifth edition, in Isano. 8t. bds.

Elements of Thought; or, First Lessons in the Knowledge of the Mind. 18mo. second edition, revised and sularged. By Issae Taylor, Frice 4s. 65. "At an elementary work it is truly valuable."—Wouthly Rep.

Allbut's Elements of Useful Knowledge, in Botany, Geology, Geography, History, Astronomy, &c. compiled for Young Persons. Fourteenth edition, much enlarged and improved. 18m. 4s. &c. half-bound. Holdsworth and Bell, 18, St. Pani's Churchyard.

DINBURGH REVIEW, No. CX. is just published.
Contents:—I. Paigrave's Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth—II. Corn.Law Rhymes, and other Fooms by the Author of the former—III. Political Condition of the Italian Mater—IV. Landen' Voyage and Discoveries on the Nigar—V. Recent Commercial Policy of British—VI. Inglis' Spain in 1830. Fresent State and Prospects of that Country—VII. Dr. Themson's Life and Writings of Cellen—VIII. The Americans and their petractors; Riv. Trolleys's Mamners of the Americans, &c.—IX. To an Felicies of Inserance—X. Resecti as the Anti-Papal Spirit of the Italian Classics—XI. Dumona's Recollections of Mirabeau; the French Revolution.
Longman and Op. Lendes; and A. Macki, Edinburgh.

In a convenient pocket volume, illustrated by highly finished Engravings, and original Music, price 7s. 6d.

KILLARNEY LEGENDS, arranged as a Guide to the Lakes.

ILLARNEY LEGENDS, arranged as a Guide to the Lakes.

Guide to the Lakes.

"Most charmingly illustrated, this unique Guide to the Lakes is a remedication of Mr. Orokar's delightful Legends of the Lakes, in two volumes, published about three years age. It is now a portable volume, with many interesting engravings, and the literary portion of it replate with the drollery of the author; while, at the same time, it is as good a guide as it is a pleasant companion to every picturesque beauty, striking charactem, and local euriosity about Killiarney."—Literary Gustic.

London: Fisher, Son, and Co.; and all Bookseliers.

In 2 vols. 8vo. the 3d edition, with 94 Characteristic Sketches, 21s. in cloth,

THE DOMESTIC MANNERS of the AMERICANS.

By Mrs. FRANCES TROLLOPE.

"This is exactly the title-page we have long wished to see, and we rejoice to asy, now that the subject has been taken up, it is handled by an English lady of sense and accusenes, who possesses very considerable power of expression, and enjoyed unusually favourable opportunities for observation."—Quarterly Rev. No. 98.

"Lively, pleasant, goalping."—Literary Gasetic, March 9th. London: Whitaker, Teacher, and Co. Are Maria Lane.

Of whom may be had,

Sketches of Portuguese Life, Manners, Cosme, and Character. With 20 coloured Plates, 8ve. 16e

Works of the Author of Petham and Eugens Aram, new and cheaper Editions.

Pablished by Colburn and Benties, New Barilagton Street.

A L K L A N D. A Tale.

By the Author of "Petham" and "Eugene Aram."

1 vol. poet 8 vo. 9 s. 6d.

Pelham; or, the Adventures of a Gentle-

The Disowned. 3 vols. 24s.

"If Pelham 'justly raised for its author a very high character, the 'Disowned' will raise it far higher."—Literary Gazette. IV.

Devereux. 3 vols. post 8vo. 24s. LIEVETCUX. 3 VOIS. DOST SVO. 24s.

Under the name of "Devereux," the Author of "Pelham" has here given the imaginary astobiography of a franch of Lord Bolingbreke, whose fortunes were in the highest degree singular and romantie. In addition to Lord Bolingbroke, who is a prominent actor in the story, Pope, Swift, Addison, Steate, Calley Clibers, Beau Fielding, Mr Godfrey Kneller, Ledy M. W. Montagu, the Duobess of Mariborough, and other public characters of the day, figure in the work.

Derny 8vo. price 10s. 6d. with a Map and Plates,

A THREE MONTHS' TOUR in SWIT
ZERLAND and FRANCE, giving a general Description of the Country, an accurate Account of the different Rootes, and affirding every necessary Information for the Guidance of fallows Travellers.

and afferding every necessary information for the Guideance of future Travellers.

By the Rev. WILLIAM LIDDIARD,
Author of "A Metrical Tale of Switzerland," &c. &c.

"The reader must be fastidises indeed, who, after having closed this volume, does not feel scene regret at parting with a companion who possesses the twofold recommendation of information free from parade, and the power of conferring amusements of the state of the second of the secon

Smith, Elder, and Co. Cornhill.

PRASER'S MAGAZINE, price 2s. 6d.

TRASER'S MAGAZINE, price 2s. 6d.

The August Number contains—
The Recollections of a Gentleweman, No. I.; Madame du Barti-Dector O'German—The Schoelmaster's Experience in Newgate, No. III.; Necessity of an Appeal Court-Geographical and Statistical Account of the All-in-super-Ees, or Fancy Islee—
The Bell of St. Brider's, by a Blactfriar's Man—Episties to the Literati, No. V.; Nathan Butt, Esq. to Dr. Bewring—Mary Hughes, a Tale-of the Welsh Highlands—Romantic Fostry of Spain—Discoveries of Modern Geologies, No. II.—Elizabeth
Brownriggs, a Tale—The Church of Ragisand and the LiberatiDomestic Manners of the British, by Colonel Hickory; Letters
V. and VI.—Secrel Instructions to General Welfe for the Conquest of Quebec—Gallery of Literary Characters, No. XXVII.; with a Portrait of Edward Lytton Bluwer—Chaimers on Political Economy—On the Contagious Character of the Chelera—Sir Sampel R. Mayrick, Bell Disuce, Ged of the Suo, and Ned Contain the Stone-cutter—Letter to the Primate of Ireiand on the State of the Irish Church and ether Matters, by Sir Mergan O'Doherty, Bart.

Bart.
James Fraser, 946, Regent Street, London; Waugh and Innes, Schuburgh; M'Phun, Glasgow; Grapdi, Liverpool; and Genat and Beleen, Bubble.

Ency lopedia Metrop Intana.

The Thirty-Fourth Part, price if. iz. boards,

NCYCLOP ÆDIA METROPOLI
TANA; or, Universal Dictionary of Knowledge, on an original Plan, comprising the two-fold advantage of a Philosophical and an Arphabetical Arrangement; conducted by the Rev. Edward Smithey, with the assistance of many of the most distinguished literary and scientific men of the British dominions, whose names are appended to the title-pages of each volume.

London: Printed for Buildwin and Gradock, and other Proprietors.

Co This Encyclopedia is in four divisions, a portion of each of which is comprised in every part, and, one completion, each

• a.º This Encyclopedia is in four divisions, a portion of each of which is comprised in every part, and, on completion, each division will be a distinct and entire work. These are—1. Pure Science—2. Mixed and Appined Science—3. History and Biography combined—4. Mise estaneous and Lexicographical, combining a Lexicom of the English Language, a Gazetteer, and a Technological Dictionary.

Nearly three-fourths of this important work are now before the Public, and arrangements are made for bringing out the future parts with increased activity. In the Divisions there have been completed of Pure Sciences one volume; of Mixed Sciences two volumes; of History and Biography two; and of the Mixed-laneous Department eight. A Republication has also been commenced in monthly parts, at 7s. each, which has proceeded to the Fifteenth Part.

Lindley on Fruit and Vegetables.
In 1 large vol. 16s. boards,
UIDE to the ORCHARD and KITCHEN
GARDEN; or, an Account of the most valuable Fruit and Vegetables cultivated in Great Britain; with Calendars of orks, &c.

By GEORGE LINDLEY, C.M.H.S.
Edited by JOHN LINDLEY, F.M.S.
Assistant-Secretary to the Horticultural Society of London.
London: Longman, Ree, Orm, Brown, Green, and Co. Assistant.S

Of whom may be had, by John Lindley, F.R.S. Introduction to the Natural System of Bo-

Synopsis of the British Flora, 12mo. 10s. 6d. Outline of the First Principles of Botany, 3s. Outline of the First Principles of Horticul-

Dr. Dibdin's Sunday Library, complete.

In 6 vols. small 8vo. with Nix Portraits of distinguished Prelates, price 3vo. in cloth,

SUNDAY LIBRARY, containing nearly

One Hundred Sermons by the following eminent Divines.

With Notes, &c...

By the Rev. T. F. DIBDIN, D.D.

Archbp. Lawrence	Bp. Van Mildert Dean Chandler	Rev. G. Haggitt
Bp. Blomfield — Gray — Heber	Archdeacon Nares Dr. Blair	J. Hewlett A. Irvine W. Jones (of
- Hobert - Horne	- Chalmers - D'Ovly	Nayland) C. W. Le Bas
HorsleyHuntingford	— Paley — Parr	- H. H. Milman - R. Morehead
Maltby Mant Newton	- Shuttleworth Professor White	Thos. Rennell J. H. Spry
- Newton - Porteus - J. B. Sumner	Rev. Arch. Alison C. Benson Joshua Gilpin	Sydney Smith Thos. Townson

A little library for a churchman, and a treasure for the piong the laity."—Literary Gazette.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In 8vo. price 3s. 6d. boards, with a Map, MEMOIR of FELIX NEFF, Pastor of the High Alps; and of his Labours among the French testants of Dauphiné, a Remnant of the Primitive Christians

Gaul.

By WILLIAM STEPHEN GILLY, M.A.

Prebendary of Durham, and Vicar of Norham.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

On Friday, 27th July, 1822, was published, price 6d. the First No. of a Weekly Joarnal of Foreign Science and Literature in the French Language, called ECERCLE: Journal de la Littérature et des Arts, Théâtre, Critique, Mœurs, Modes Françaises, &c.

The object of this undertaking is to lay before the British Public and Foreigners, extracts from the literary press of the Continent, and to make known, as much as possible, that which is amusing and instructive in French literature.

Fenwick de Porquet and Cooper, 11, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, to whom Gommunications for the Editor, Advertisements, and Works for Review, are to be addressed.

and Works for Review, are to be addressed.

Small 8vo. illustrated with 80 Woodcuts, 5s.

N. O. XXXIII. of the FAMILY
LIBRARY. LETTERS on NATURAL MAGIC.
Addressed to Sir Walter Rout,
By SIR DAVID BREWSTER.

September 1st will be published, Family Library, No. XXXIV.; being Lives of Scottish Worthies.

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

In a small vol. 18mo. price $2.6d. boards,

ERMONS to CHILDREN.

By the Rev. G. B. RLVTH,

Of Clare Hall, Cambridge,

Printed fer J., G., and P. Rlvington, St. Panl's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mail.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days,
H E O L I A D. A]
Printed for Baunders and Otley, Conduit Street.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, for August 1, and the E. L. BULWER. Esq. M.P. Labord by E. L. BULWER. Esq. M.P. Labord of "Petham," "Get Eugene Aram," &c. Will comprise, among other interesting Papers, by the most distinguished Writers of the day.—A Continuation of Lady Blessington', Journal of her Conservations with Lord Byron, including an original and yers singular Poem by his Lordship—The Politician, No. 1L.—The Arastoracy of England—Aimodeus at Large, No. VI. comprising the Tale of Kosem Kesamin—On the true Spirit of Religious Poetry—The Three earliest English Authors—Thoughts on Secondary Punishments—Biographical Netth of Paterson, Founder of the Dorien Company—The Bank Gail, Esq.—Our Anecdotage—The speaking Harleyuin—Monthly Commendary on Men and Things, &c. &c.

Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

On the 1st of August, to be completed in 2 vols. neatly bound and beautifully embellished, price 6a, each,

THE PASTOR'S FIRE-SIDE.

By MISS JANE PORTED By MISS JANE PORTER.

The following have already appeared in the present Series. Each Volume, price only ds. may be had separately.

th Volume, p.,...
The Spy,
The Filot,
The Ploneers,
Last of the Mohicans,
The Prairie,
Frankenstein, by Mra. Shelley.
The Ghost-Seer, by Schiller.
Edgar Huntly, by Brown.
Caleb Williams,
St. Leon,
Warany, by Godwin. by Cooper.

Caleb Williams, by GodwinSt. Leon,
Thaddeus of Warsaw,
Scottish Chiefa,
Discipline,
Self-Control.
by Mrs. Brunton.

Self-Control. 3

Hungarian Brothers, by A. M. Porter.
Canterbury Tales, by S. and H. Lee.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

On the let of August, embellished with a finely engraved Portrait of Lady Grey, of Groby, and several coloured Costumes,

THE COURT MAGAZINE,

Edited by the Hon. Mrs. NORTON,

Containing original Papers by Mrs. Shelley, Author of "Frankenstein"

The late Thomas Sheridan, Esq.

Lord Morpeth

Mrs. Lee, late Mrs. Bowdich

Mrs. Lee, late Mrs. Bowdich

Mrs. Norton

&c. &c. &c.

&c. &c. &c.

Ac.

No. I. for July, contains original Contributions by Miss Fanny Kemble C. Macfarlane, Esq. T. Roacoe, Esq. Mrs. Norton Mrs. P. Blackwood Tyrone Power, Esq.

Viscount Castlereagh P. Burke, Esq. Lord Nugent Lord Newark Rev. H. Caunter.

Published by Edward Bull, 36, Holles Street, Cavendish Square; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and Cumming, Dublin. Sup-plied also monthly by every Bookseller in the Kingdom. Price 3s. 6d.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE. -The Publisher TRASER'S MAGAZINE.—The Publisher best to announce that the Number for August will commence the 6th Volume, presenting a good opportunity for all who feel desirous of taking in his Journal monthly, which is supplied regularly on the lat of every Month by all Booksellers, Stationers, and Newsmen. Orders to be sent before the lat of August.

The Fifth Volume, just completed, may be had, in green cloth, price 16s. 6d. or in Numbers, price 16s.

216, Negest Street, July 25.

August 1 will be published, containing 17 highly finished Engravings, Part I. price 4s. of WESTMORELAND, CUMBERLAND DURHAM, and NORTHUMBERLAND ILLUS. TRATED, displaying their splendid Lake Scenery, Seats, &c. From original Drawings by Thomas Allom; with Descriptions by Thomas Kose.

London: Pisher, Søn, and Co.; and all Booksellers.

COLBURN'S GENEALOGICAL and HERALDIC HISTORY of the COMMONERS of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, qualified by Landed Property to become Members of Pathament.

The noveity and utility of this undertaking combine to invest it with no common claims to public attention. The highly in the work of Ference exhibiting an enter and award at the parties of the common claims to public attention. The highly in the content of the common claims to public attention. The highly in the content of the common claims to public attention. The highly in the content of the common claims to public attention to the large a distance, friendship, nearblourhood, patronage, or political constituency. That so distance, friendship, nearblourhood, patronage, or political constituency. That so distance distance, friendship, nearblourhood, patronage, or political constituency. That so distance is distanced for the purpose. but this obtacle has been in the present instance over ome by efforts and arrangements of long continuous, the effect of which, it is fully trusted, will insure the steady and satisfactors fulliment of the design. The high part of a few weeks, elegantly printed in rotal flow, with the Armonial Ensigns of each large continuous, the effect of which, it is fully trusted, will insure the steady and satisfactors fulliment of the design. The high part of the weeks, elegantly printed in rotal flow, with the Armonial Ensigns of each large continuous, the effect of which, it is fully trusted to Mr. Color of the carefully strenged to the common professor of course, obtain priority of meetion. Communications addressed to Mr. Color of the carefully strenged to the carefully and no obligation to become subscribers is imposed upon those who are kind enough to transmit the information required.

Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street. Charles Pos. of, Paterone Ros.

Will be pu

Price only One Shilling:

Edited by the Editor of "Figure is London."

The Fifth Number of this elegant and amstag Periodicit of contain Sixteen (1) richly Come Illustratess by Symour, viseveral highly facetious Articles by Thoms Bidth, Rep. 10. Moncrieff, E44.—Augustus Waiter Arnold, Ea; (see of the Arnor of "Dyramatic Stories")—"Figure in London".—The tire: Unmentionable, &c. &c.

N.B. Mis L. Sherrdan (Editor of the "Cente Offering" his promised her valuable assistance for No. VI.

Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, plentifully illustrated Augo 1, 2, 3, 8BQ 4, pignithmy musurate by Seymour, contain several humorous article by John Fox. Esq. (Author of "Paul Pry," &c.]—R. B. Pest, Esq. (Author of "Paul Pry," &c.]—R. B. Pest, Esq. (Author of "England")—W. T. Moncrieff, Esq. (Author of "England")—W. T. Moncrieff, Esq. (Author of "Auxiliate")—The Great Unmentionable, &c. &c.

*g. The whole of the Press has been nagularly manufacturing praise of this "little literary gra."

2. Canto XVII. of Don Juan, price only One Shilling 'Illustrated by Seymour, clegantly prine, unform with Mr. Murray's New Editions of Lord Byron Work

3. The Poetical March of Humbug, price

3. The Poetical March of Humbus pice Caricature Imitations of the principal popular feat of the American Caricature Imitations of the principal popular feat of the American Caricature Imitation of the Principal popular feat of the Resident Statistics of the Resident Caricature Caricatu

E M E T R O P O L I T A N.

Edited by THOMAS CAMPBELL, Eq.

Author of the "Pleasures of Hopes for August, will contain setical Article by Thomas

I. A Poetical Article by Thomas Moore, Eq. Asthor of Lalla Rookh."

II. Memoirs of the late Sir Jaa. XI. Letters from Puth Mackintosh, by Those Camp. XIII. Widowhood hell, Eq. 111. Pack of the Pale, by Lady XIV. The Pable Sir Jan Morgan

IV. Peter Simple, by the Author of Newton Forster by the Author of Newton Forster by the Author of Travels in that Country Carlon of Travels in the Country Carlon of Travels in the Country Carlon of Travels in the Carl

THE

Saunders and Otley, Conduit Street; Bell and Bradfat, E-burgh; J. Wakeman, Dublin; and sold also by all Bear and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Different of Useful Knowledge.
On Tuesday, July 31st, will be published,

HE GALLERY of PORTRAITS No. III. Containing Boyle, Turenne, and With, with Memoirs. Imperial 8vo. price 2s. 6d. sewed.

The British Museum; Exyptian Antiquities: being Part XXIV. of the Library of Entraining East-ledge, completing the 17th Volume. Price of the Part, is, see, of the Volume, 4.6 de, bound in cloth.

The Penny Magazine, Part IV. for July.

price 6d. sewed. All the back Numbers of the Penny Nagazine are constantly kept on sale.

Also, lately published The Quarterly Journal of Education, No. 1

Price 5s. sewed. London: Charles Knight, 13, Pall Mall East.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPS, the LITERARY GAZZTTB OFFICE, 7, Wellingto Sur-Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and I3, South Moulin Strait, Street; sold slao by J. Chappell, 96, Royd Extension, Mariborough, Ace Maria Lane, Ledgett Hill: A. Edithourgh, Smoth and Son, D. Roberton, and Alticus and Co. Glasgow: and J. Comming, Dubba. Agril of America, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Sparre, London.

J. MOYES, 90, Call Sparre, London.

J. MOYBS, 28, Castle Street, Leicetter Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 811.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Qanoon-e-Islam; or, the Customs of the Moosulmans of India: comprising a full and exact Account of their various Rites and Ceremonies, from the Moment of Birth till the Hour of Death. By Jaffur Shurreef; translated by G. A. Herklots, M.D. 8vo. pp. circ. 500. London, 1832. Parbury, Allen, and Co.

IT is seldom we have an opportunity of reviewing a work of a native of India, written for the information of Europeans. This is, however, the second example of the kind that has occurred within the year. Still, the present production was not originally composed in our tongue, but in the Hindustani, spoken in the south of India, usually called Dukhanee, the vernacular language of the author, whose oriental ideas, the translator, a medical officer on the Madras establishment, has clothed in an English dress. It, therefore, possesses a character of authenticity, and its descriptions of Indian manners and customs are distinguished by an exactness and fulness of information, which no European observer could ever expect to attain. The great variety of subjects em-braced in it is likewise a peculiar feature in the work. It leaves nothing untouched that refers to the Indian Moosulman, from the first dawn of his existence to the rites performed over his grave. It treats of every age and sex with equal precision; their fasts and festivals (particularly marriage and the mohurrum)— their vows and oblations for every month in the year-their different tribes and sects, saints and devotees-religious tenets, prayers, and ablutions-the calculation of nativities-necromancy—exorcism, casting out of devils, &c.— magic squares, amulets, charms, philters, &c.— nuptial festivities and funeral obsequies, costumes, ornaments, weights, measures, musical instruments, games, &c. &c. &c.

In short, it comprises whatever is either curious or useful relating to the important race of people who preceded the British in the government of India. And as the multifarious matters it contains are methodically arranged and divided, and furnished with a copious index and glossary, it will hereafter prove a valuable acquisition, as a book of reference, to the antiquary and man of letters. To those who delight to study human nature under all its aspects, the deep insight which this volume gives into the moral and intellectual state of the Indian population will afford a considerable degree of interest; and it may be of essential service to our countrymen who come in consoldiers and have to deal with that people as soldiers and subjects. But we shall let the book speak for itself. The following is an account of a Moosulman dinner-party:-

"The description of a Moosulman dinnerparty, whether among the rich or poor, is as follows: Having spread in the dewan-khana. or in the house, a carpet more or less rich, or simply a cloth, on the floor, the company take this precept. The nobility generally have two off their shoes outside of the door, and as dewan-khanas (one in which the company is they enter, call out Us-sulam-oon-ally-koom, (or peace be unto you.') It is not customary, and it is even disrespectful, to go in with their shoes; and moreover it is a sin to eat with shoes on. The landlord, or any other present, replies, wo ally koom-oos sulam (' and unto you be peace'); and if they be particular friends or men of rank, inquires after their welfare: they then take their seat next the wall, close to one another. After this, two servants in attendance, one with a basin in his hand, the other with an ewer of water, serve the guests with it to wash their hands;† commencing with the seniors, they all wash either one or both hands as they please. This office concluded, the servants proceed to lay a dusterkhwan of white cloth or chintz, in front of the guests, on the carpet; leaving the latter uncovered in its centre; after which they arrange the dinner on it; viz. plates containing polaco, Sernee, and rotesan (unleavened bread), cups with curries, saucers with chutnee and kubab, placing each one's share (or tora, as it is termed) before him. This being done, the landlord, or the senior present, calls out bismilla (as much as to say 'commence', 'eat, for Moosulmans never partake of a morsel without first uttering the word bismilla (lit. in the name of God), meaning to say, 'I commence in the name of God.' After this they commence eating, and that with the right hand, without the use of spoons or knives and forks. They loathe eating with the left hand. ± During the repast, two or three of the relatives act as surburans (or stewards), and supply what is wanted, while some are in waiting with gugglets (goblets) and cups to help any one that chooses to water. These stand in the centre of the dining-room. Dinner being finished, and the plates removed,¶ the basin and ewer are again brought, and the guests wash their hands as before; but, using lick the fingers: however, very few adhere to • " Of course on the ground, with their legs crossed;

" " A public room detached from the house."

baysun,  instead of soap, which is an excellent substance for removing the grease from the hands; if this cannot be got, they wash in pure water. But previous to washing the hands, it is the command of the prophet to received, the other in which the dinner is laid out); and when ready, the landlord respectfully says to the company, 'let us withdraw' (i. e. to the dinner-room). If there he a numerous party, first, part of them wash their hands and sit down to dinner; when these have done, the others follow the same practice. When dinner is over, they who please retire to the dewan-khana, where they first assembled. Here they spend the time in conversation, reciting pieces of Hindoostanee or Persian poetry, puzzling each other with riddles, com-posing acrostics, &c. Of the latter I shall present a few specimens :-

"A pair of pigeons, black and white,
Asunder always in their flight;
And though they range around the sky,
Yet from their cage they never fly.

Answer. 'Day and Night.'

There is a place I know full well,
Where lifeless persons only dwell,
In war 'tis peopled ev'ry rood,
In peace a desert solitude.

Answer. 'A chess-board, with its men elephants, camels,' &c.

Acrostic.

W ise king, thy gracious countenance I claim, I ask of thee my pure but secret aim. N ow, if you take a letter from each line, E re long, my heart's desire you will divine.

That most interesting occurrence, the meeting of a bride and bridegroom for the first time, is thus described :-

"On entering the house, the bridegroom alone is borne by the man, who carries him to the door of the dwelling, or to the court-yard around it, where he stops. The women then holding up a curtain between, and one of them baving brought the bride in her arms to the other side of it, they put into her hands flowers, sugars, and unboiled rice, and direct her to throw them three times over the skreen, on the head of the bridegroom, who does the same to her. This ceremony being concluded, the bridegroom withdraws to the male dewunkhana."

Then follows the neekah, or solemnisation of the contract of marriage, after which the bridegroom is indulged with a peep at the moon-like beauties of his bride, whom we are to suppose he has never yet seen, after the following formalities :-

"About five or six o'clock in the afternoon of the neekah-day, the mooshata (female jester) having fastened the sayhra on the bride's head, brings her on her lap and seats her on the cot. Then, having seated the bridegroom opposite to her, with their faces turned towards each other, and having a piece of red cloth held up as a curtain between them, she, holding one end of a long piece of red thread, puts the latter, along with some unboiled rice, into the bride's hand, and taking hold of it, makes her throw it over the curtain on the bridegroom's head. The sister of the latter, tying a gold or silver ring to the extremity of the thread, and also putting some unboiled rice along with it into the hand of her brother, takes hold of it, as is customary for natives to sit."

† "An act of cleanliness indispensable where the hands are used instead of spoons or knives and forks. In eating, men of rank have a servant standing on each side of them to wipe their hands each time they take a mouthful."

[†] The reason is stated by the writer; but this, like many particulars in the book, though essential to the complete illustration of habits, customs, and ceremonics, could not with propriety be quoted in a work like our.

could not with propriety be quoted in a work like ours.—

Ed. L. G.

"Vulgo gogglets."

"Several drink out of the same cup, which is washed out a little after every time that one has drunk."

"They repeat aloud, or whisper, or say silently in their hearts, the words Alkumio-billah, Praise be to God,' or Shookr-o-khoda, 'thanks' or 'gratitude to God,' or some other prayer, by way of grace after meat."

"Biguns, powder of chunna (or Bengal horse gram), of moong ke dai (green gram, phaseolus radiatus, Lin.) of tootour kes doi (pigeon-bean, cytisus cajan, Lin.) or of massh (black ulandoo, phaseolus max, Willd)," and makes him throw them to the bride. When | less not credit this; but the author can only they have thus thrown it (the ring) backwards and forwards three times, all the while singing some current epithalamium (called hujooloha), the mooshata desires the bridegroom to remove the curtain. After placing the bride and bride-groom on the bed, the female jester exercises her ingenuity in saying many witty things. On the bridegroom's mother or his sister requesting her to shew the bride's face to the bridegroom, she observes, 'The bride eclipses the moon in beauty; and were I to indulge him with a single glance, the poor fellow would go mad, and become distracted.' After two or three (lit. four) ghurrees [an hour] passed in this way, she places a bit of sugar-candy on the bride's head, and desires the bridegroom to pick it up with his mouth. That being done, she puts the same on her shoulders, knees, and feet: but instead of removing it in the latter case with his mouth, he offers to do it with his left hand (a thing totally inadmissible among them), which, of course, the mooshata does not sanction; and at this juncture amuses the bridegroom's mother and sister not a little, by insisting upon the performance; observing, that it is but right, since he has taken up the rest with his mouth, that he should do so in this case. After a few minutes, he is allowed to take it up with his right hand. Then the mooshata, singing, takes hold of the bride's head, moves it backwards and forwards two or three (lit. four) times, and does the same to the bridegroom; after which, holding a lookingglass between them, she directs them to look at each other in it. The bridegroom takes a peep, and obtains a faint glimpse of his fair one (immediately after which the Qoran is exhibited to his view), while the modest virgin does not so much as venture to open her eyes. They then give the bridegroom some milk in a cup to drink, and touch the bride's mouth with his leavings (hoping thereby to create a mutual affection between them).

The following recipe for catching thieves deserves record on account of its utility, if found true; and if otherwise, as shewing the state of mind of even the educated classes of Moosulmans.

"A certain method, which I have seen with my own eyes, is this. They apply some of any kind of lamp-black to the bottom of a kusund ks kutora (bell-metal cup); and having assembled a parcel of boys, direct them to place their hands, one by one, upon it. Whatever boy it may be on the placing of whose hands the cup begins to move, the thief-catcher keeps his hands upon those of the boy, and says, May the cup move towards him who is the thief; or, may it go to the place where the property is concealed;' and there is no doubt but it will happen as he wishes. To try the experiment, this teacher of the alphabet had it performed at his own house, when a girl had taken his sister's nuth', hid it in a jam (drinking-cup), and covered it with a khwancha (a small tray). On his sister's mentioning to him the circumstance of her nuth' having been stolen, and requesting him to endeavour to find out the thief, he assembled a few boys, and having applied a little lamp-black to the bottom of a cup, he got them to place their hands on it. On one of them so doing, the cup began to move, when he desired it to go in the direc-tion of the thief,—and immediately it proceeded to the closet, where they found the girl hid. He then desired it to proceed to the spot where the nuth' was concealed,—and it went straight to the cup in which the nuth' was hidden, and there remained stationary. Many will doubt-say that he has stated just what he had performed at his own house, and been an eyewitness to. People may either believe it or not, as they please.

It is but fair, however, to quote the author's remarks on the science of exorcism, by which he appears to estimate such supernatural acquirements at their true value. He says -This teacher of the alphabet (an epithet of humility, such as Oriental writers usually adopt in speaking of themselves, instead of saying the author') has for a long time cherished the greatest curiosity to dive into this mysterious science, and has, consequently, associated much with divines and devotees, exorcists and travellers, from Arabia and Ujjum, by which he has acquired some knowledge of it; but all the advantage he has derived therefrom may be summed up in a well-known proverb_ Koh kundun, moosh girruftun."

To dig a mountain up, and find a mouse!"

And at page 328 he again intimates his strong misgivings on the subject :- " In short, we have now considered the origin, birth, and nature of genii and devils. I have long been desirous of describing the manner in which the devil is cast out, and have therefore been more particular in mentioning his family connexions, names, pedigree, &c. This I have done in as concise a form as the extent of my poor abilities would permit. I have always been accustomed (having from my youth up had a great taste for it) to practise the reading of the dawut (exorcism), write amulets and charms, and, by consulting horoscopes, prognosticate future events. Many a time have persons possessed of the devil applied to this teacher of the A, B, C, for assistance; and whether owing to my reading dos (supplications), tying on an amulet, or burning a charm, or to the force of their belief, or to some wise contrivance of my own which I put in practice, they have been cured. I used to entertain great doubt and suspicion in my own mind as to the effects produced, and frequently said to myself, 'O God! what relation or connexion can possibly exist between genii and man, that the former should possess such powerful influence over the latter, or that by our merely reading incantations they should be cast out?" With these doubts in my mind. I was constantly employed in the search and investigation of the subject, by consulting very learned men and divines, and reading noted works on the subject, such as the Tufseer (commentary on the Qoran), Huddees (traditional sayings of the Prophet), and others, in order that I might acquire some knowledge concerning these matters. Whatever I have seen, heard, and read, I have related."

The ceremony of interment is conducted with great solemnity and reverence; and, in conclusion, "they lay the body on its back, with the head to the north and feet to the south, turning its face towards the Qibla (or Mecca, i. e. west); and after reading some sentence in Arabic, each person takes up a little earth or a clod, and having repeated over t, either in his own mind or in a whisper, the whole of the soora entitled Qool-hoo-Allah Qoran, chap. cxii). or this aet (verse)-Minha khu-luknakoom wufeeha noo-eedokoom o minha nookhray-jokoom tarutun ohkhra; i. e. 'We created you of earth and we return you to earth, and we shall raise you out of the earth on the day of resurrection'-puts the earth gently into the grave, or hands it to one of the persons who had descended into it to deposit it round the body. After that, having previous to burial had a small brick or mud wall but on each side within the grave, about a comand a half high, leaving room sufficient for laying the body, they place planks, or slabs stone or wood, or large earthen pots, resting the wall within the grave, cover them wa earth, and smooth the surface over with water forming it into the shape of a tomb."

In conclusion, the work contains much use information regarding Indian weights and mesures and games (from which the next edition of Hoyle might borrow a leaf), and the culination art, in which the Orientals are known to excel as well as regarding articles of the materamedica, and many Indian terms not yet a plained in any dictionary, including numerous substances, plants, &c. which could only have been described by a medical man. As the scientific terms for these, as well as their India names, their characters, and qualities, as given (both in Arabic and Roman characters, this part of the work will be an acquisition to medical science.

Memoirs of the Duchess d'Abranes (Madan Junot). Vol. III. 8vo. pp. 424. London 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE have little more to do than to repeat ou former opinion of this very amusing work Almost any sketch by an eye-witness of sac an eventful period would be valuable;—her full, therefore, of attraction are the records a a clever and shrewd woman, who possesses a singular and dramatic felicity of narrative! Of course Madame Junot has her prejudices. her vanities, and her own side of the question; but this only gives more nature to the picture. The present volume is not so interesting a those which detailed the earlier passages in Napoleon's career; still, it is full of entertainment and variety. We shall proceed to a few miscellaneous extracts.

Fox's Characteristics of Buonaparte.-"The First Consul at Malmaison, the First Consul at St. Cloud, and the First Consul at the Tuikries,' said Mr. Fox to me, 'are three men forming together the beau ideal of human greatness; but I could wish to be a painter, added he, 'to take his portrait under the three different characters, because I should have three resemblances of the same face, with three different countenances.'

The following is a striking instance of the levity with which destruction was dealt in the French revolution :-

"Passing once quietly along the streets Michau encountered one of those disorder mobs that were in the habit of parading Paris in those happy days, when the lamp por served for hanging up our gallant circumsthey would have made him join their markbut he resisted, and demanded, in the name of that liberty whose scarlet ensign was as usual conspicuous in the foremost group, that he should be suffered to continue his route in pursuance of his own affairs. The discussion was brief, the lamp was shattered, and poor Michan. already stripped of his coat, was on the puriof being hoisted in its place, when a fat fellow with his plump arms bare, and a red and job face, rushed into the midst of the banditti and snatched Michau from their grasp, exclaiming What are you about, simpletons?—don't vok know Punch of the Republic?' (the Comedi-Française was at that time called the Theire de la République.) And thanks to his title of Punch, with which his deliverer, the butcher's boy, had invested him, Michau found himself at liberty, and accepted the apologies which we hundred rascals offered as coolly for their lesign of hanging him, as if they had simply rodden on his toes."

[&]quot; " Every country in the world, save Arabia."

Curious conversation of Napoleon with Junot. The First Consul has been reproaching him vith making friends of his enemies :-

"' Of whom are you speaking, my general?' aid he, at length. 'Of M. d'Orsay, to be ure-he whom they call the handsome d'Or-Was he not on the point of being shot or a conspirator? and was he not sent to the l'emple? Fouché told me, the other day, that ie was a dangerous man.' Junot smiled biterly. 'My general, you have given me to inderstand in two syllables to whom I am inebted for all this, and I shall know how to hank him. I shall begin by saying that itizen Fouché has told you a falsehood, in sserting that Albert d'Orsay was a dangerous can and a conspirator. He is the most loyal nd honest man living, full of honour; and if n returning to France he has given his word o be faithful to the established government, e will keep it. I should have thought, my eneral, that as Fouché gave him the title of ay friend, you would have held him worthy of our esteem as a man of honour; for I could ot give my friendship to any one who was ot. But, my general, you should never have elieved that an enemy of yours could be my riend.' And Junot passed his hand over his orehead, which was dripping. Napoleon knew im too well not to be conscious how much he uffered. He approached him and pressed his and affectionately: Junot was suffocating. Come! don't be childish. I tell you I am ot speaking of you, my faithful friend. Have ou not proved your attachment when I was a fetters? would you not have followed me to 'I should have followed you to the rison?' caffold!' cried Junot, striking his fist upon he table with such force as to make every hing on it leap to the ground. Napoleon ughed. 'Well! don't you see, then, that it impossible for me to say any thing that hould go to your heart, and hurt you, Mon-eur Junot.' And he pulled his ears, his eur Junot.' And he pulled his ears, his ose, and his hair. Junot drew back. 'Ah! have hurt you,' said Napoleon, approaching im, and resting his little white hand upon unot's light hair, caressing him, as if he neant to pacify a child; 'Junot,' he continued, do you remember being at the Serbelloni alace at Milan, when you had just received a ound, just here, at this place.' And the ttle white hand gently touched the large icatrice. 'I pulled away your hair, and with-rew my hand full of your blood.....' The irst Consul turned pale at the recollection. and it is a remarkable circumstance that Naoleon spoke to me not less than ten times in he course of his reign of this incident at Milan, nd never without starting and turning pale t the recollection of his blood-stained hand. Yes,' he continued, with a movement as if to epress a shudder; 'yes, I confess at that noment I felt that there is a weakness inerent in human nature, which is only more xquisitely developed in the female constituon. I then understood that it was possible faint. I have not forgotten that moment, ry friend;—I have laid it by in a safe place is remembrance, and the name of Junot can ever be mingled in my mind with even the ppearance of perfidy. Your head is too hot, heedless; but you are a loyal and brave llow. You, Lannes, Marmont, Duroc, erthier, Bessières, at each name Napoon took a pinch of snuff and a turn in the latter not yet old, and both were dressed in in a tone of defiance, whether he would not be som, sometimes making a pause and smiling, rich stuffs, and adorned with fine pearls and snuch astonished to hear the most circumas the name recalled any proof of attachment, 'my son Eugene—yes, those are hearts which love me, which I can depend upon. Lemarrois, too, is another faithful friend. And that poor Rapp, he has been but a short time with me, yet he pushes his love even to an extent that might give offence; do you know, he scolds me sometimes?"

A Parisian shoemaker's idea of a lady's exertion. "Copp was a famous shoemaker; the same who, after a most attentive examination of a shoe, which one of his customers shewed him, complaining that it split before she had worn it an hour, detected at length the cause of such a misfortune befalling a specimen of his workmanship: 'Ah,' said he, 'I see how it is, my lady has been walking!""

Lesson in economy.—" There lived once, at Marseilles, a rich merchant, who received one morning, through the hands of a young man, a letter strongly recommending the bearer to his notice: the young man was of good fortune, and wanted only an introduction to society; he brought also a letter of credit to a large amount. The merchant, after having read the letter of recommendation, instead of either throwing it aside as waste paper, or shutting it up in a drawer, examined it, and finding that it covered one only of the four sides of the sheet, tore it in two, placed the written half in a leaf of his portfolio, and then, folding the other half, so that it would serve for writing a note, put it into another portfolio which already contained a number of similar papers. Having completed his little measure of economy, he turned towards the young man, and invited him to dinner for that very day. The youth, accustomed to a life of elegance and luxury, felt but little inclination for dining with a man who could thus appropriate the privileges of the chiffonnier, by depriving him of his waste paper; he accepted the invitation, however, and promised to return at four o'clock. But as he descended the narrow staircase from the counting-house of his banker, his mind rapidly reverted to the observations he had made upon that small gloomy room, with the two long offices which led to it, encumbered with ledgers that were half smothered in dust and smoke, and where ten or a dozen young persons were working in silence, whose faces appeared to his jaundiced eyes like perfect skeletons. He thought of the windows plastered with a thick coat of mud, through which no ray of the beautiful sun of Provence could ever penetrate; the little bowl of box-wood, filled with saw-dust, to serve for powder, the broken writing-desk, the dressinggown of the banker; and all these recollections rushing at once upon his mind, produced the reflection, 'I have done a foolish thing in accepting this invitation; but no matter, a day is soon passed.' The duties of the toilette were discharged rather for his own satisfaction than in compliment to the host who expected him; and that done, he proceeded to the street of Rome, where his banker's house was situated. As the latter had told him his wife did not live in the part of the mansion occupied by the counting-house, he begged on arriving to be conducted to the lady. A number of valets in rich liveries led him across a small garden, filled with rare and exotic plants, and after conducting him through several apartments sumptuously furnished, introduced him to a handsome drawing-room, where he found his banker, who presented him to his wife and mother; the former was young and pretty, the sparkling diamonds, which attested the wealth of the honest and laborious head of the family; he himself was no longer the personage his guest had seen in the morning; he seemed to have left behind, amongst the dusty ledgers and portfolios, the man of the black velvet cap and woollen dressing-gown; while the manners and conversation of fifteen or twenty visitors, who were assembled in the drawing-room, led to the inference that this house was one of the best, if not the very best in the city. Dinner was served, and the young stranger became convinced that it was so. The viands were excellent, the wines exquisite, the table covered with an abundance of massy silver plate; in short, the young traveller was obliged mentally to admit, that he had never partaken of more delicate fare, or seen a greater display of magnificence; and he was more than ever confounded upon ascertaining from one of the persons near him, that the banker gave a similar entertainment twice a week. coffee was serving, he ruminated on all that he had witnessed; but his young ideas had to arrange themselves into that mutual dependance of cause and effect which would easily have brought the whole to the level of his understanding. 'Young man,' said his host, tap-ping him on the shoulder, 'you are absent, and almost pensive: have you made a bad dinner?' But the expression of his eyes and the inflexion of his voice in pronouncing these words seemed to mean: ' Has not your fear of a bad dinner yet vanished?' The young man blushed, as if he had really heard the latter sentence; but the good financier understood his blush, and laughing said, 'No offence! you are too young to understand how masses are formed, the true and only power; whether composed of money, water, or men, it is all alike. A mass is an immense centre of motion, but it must be begun, it must be kept up. Young man, the little bits of paper which excited your derision this morning, are one among the means I employ for attaining it. 'A fine story this, that you have been telling us, Buonaparte!' said Josephine, smiling; 'to me the most marvellous part of it is, that you have been speaking for a quarter of an hour together, and that to women only.' not forget that, I assure you,' replied he, winking to us: 'do you think I should have preached in the same way to men? They never require it.' I was much struck afterwards by this idea of masses as the foundation of power."

Accuracy of the French police ... " This story reminds me of another and very amusing one respecting M. de Sartines. He had a friend for whom he entertained a fraternal attachment. Such friendships are sometimes dangerous; but be this as it may, his affection was as warm as two compatriots might be supposed to entertain for each other in Monomotapa, with no other civilised being near. His friend, on the other hand, thought it advisable to play the Monomotapian in earnest, but in quite a different sense, as will presently appear. One day, in the course of conversation, the friend said, 'The police is a fine thing, to be sure! I am sure nothing useful ever comes to your knowledge! you learn only what you are intended to know!' M. de Sartines grew angry. To doubt the alertness of his myrmidons was to dispute his omnipotence; for his credit at Versailles rested entirely on their unparalleled ingenuity in tracing the most difficult clues. He asked his friend stantial detail of every thing he had done and of the you will make me your confidant?' said for a whole week. A secret reflection 'Certainly not; it is your part to find out all made the latter smile at the proposal. 'Well, you want to know; I am mute.' M. de Sarhands the latter similar the property of the transfer of the first street in the property of the transfer of t and remember, all you may accomplish will impatience the next day's report; but was stand for nothing if a single hour is unaccounted for.' 'That is a matter of course,' ing-gown, the chocolate, all appeared in their hands upon it, and the execution of the enterprise was to commence the next day. On the no trace of him could by any means be found. second morning, the scout who was charged M. de Sartines flew into a passion and told his with watching the friend, and whose new scouts: 'I discharge you all, unless you bring surveillance allowed a holyday to the pick- me to-morrow such a report as I have repockets and cut-purses of Paris, made his appearance before M. de Sartines and delivered looked at each other as they left their master's his report; which specified that the party had cabinet. 'What is to be done?' said one to his report; which specified that the party had capinet. What is to be about a risen at nine o'clock, had put on his slippers the leader. 'There is no alternative,' replied and has and communicated his plan. The foland dressing-gown, had sneezed, yawned, and he, and communicated his plan. coughed for a quarter of an hour, then had lowing morning M. de taken chocolate, read the Mercure de France his slippers, and thrust his arms into the and one of Freron's bulletins; had written a sleeves of the dressing-gown so well described note, but it was not known to whom, because in the informer's reports, and was about to he had instantly put it into his pocket, where seat himself before a cup of that smoking and even an emissary of police could not follow: savoury coffee, the precise quality of which but it was a love-letter, that was ascertained, had been recited; his lips had just relaxed into for the paper was perfumed, and the note a triumphant smile of roguish malice, when his folded in a particular manner. It was de- valet announced three men who were earnestly cidedly a love-letter. After this the friend desirous to see him; 'they begged,' said the had walked to the Tuileries, taken a few valet, 'as a particular favour, to be admitted.' turns on the river terrace, then walked three times up and down a certain portion of the that they should be introduced, and then sent centre alley; had saluted Mademoiselle Ar- away his valet. 'M. le Comte,' said the chief nould three times, Madame Dugazon once, of the party, in a supplicating accent, 'you Mademoiselle Gaussin twice; then had dined at M. Le Premier's, because one cannot stay in the garden for ever saluting one's friends, however charming. After dinner he had been Madame Le Premier's partner at cribbage, had won eight louis, and nobly lost them again at quince. After this, he had been to the Opera, had directed his glass to all the boxes and scrutinised all the ladies-one especially. After the Opera he had supped with M. de Sartines; it appeared, said the report, that he must have made an indifferent dinner, for he supped like a half-famished man: he ate of five or six dishes, and, to do the spy justice, M. de Sartines found the delicacies of his table scrupulously recapitulated. But, Monseigneur, said the last lines of the report, my comrades and I found it equally impossible to discover what became of M. de ——— on leaving your hotel; his carriage drove with such rapidity that no human being could keep pace with it.' 'What, wretch!' exclaimed M. de Sartines, 'you have been wearying me to death these two hours, with insipid details about slippers and dressing-gowns, and eating; and then you lose the scent at the very moment it should be most acute. Take care that you succeed better to-morrow; I must know how every minute of M. de _____'s time is employed.' 'My dear friend.' said he should be a shoul next day, 'I have heard news of you, as I will prove at the end of the week. Ah! ah! ah! This is the way you proceed! stay, I will give you a bit of friendly advice: do not seek the company of actresses so much. Yesterday, at the Tuileries, you were seen with the most fascinating ones; I do not like to see you the dupe of such infatuation;—and afterwards at the Opera! Take my advice—choose better attention; we know of few memoirs more company. The real pleasures of the heart are not to be met with in so low a sphere. You understand me.' 'Yes, indeed,' answered his friend, 'and so much the more readily, that I have not waited to receive your advice before I followed it.' 'Really!' said M. de Sartines, Tris is, perhaps, the most valuable number with a look of surprise. 'Really, yes!' that has appeared of these admirable tales. for instance, by making savings instead said M. de Sartines. The two friends shook turn; but from midnight to one o'clock M. de - disappeared, as if by enchantment, and quired.' The good people thus menaced, had just put on M. de ____ was not inaccessible; he ordered would not deprive brave men, all fathers of families, of their subsistence. We come to beg you will save our lives; for if we are dismissed from our vocation, we shall no longer have bread, and no resource will be left us, but to hang or drown ourselves.' So saying, all threw themselves on their knees. 'My good friends,' cried M. de --, hastening to raise them; 'for Heaven's sake, what is the matter with you? How can I influence your fate? I do not understand you.' 'Alas! your wager with M. de Sartines is the matter in question; we are to inform him of your proceedings from minute to minute. We are proceedings from minute to minute. fully acquainted with them_but___ M. de But, began to unriddle the mystery. you understand, M. le Comte, it is impossible we can say that you are visiting Madame de Sartines at the hours when we are compelled to pretend that we lose sight of you; and yet we must speak. Either permit us to invent a falsehood, or change your direction.' M. de _____ looked at the chief speaker, and smiled. 'Thou art a clever fellow,' said he, throwing him a purse filled with gold. 'There, divide that with thy comrades—I lose my wager.' He tried their discretion no further, as may be supposed, but admitted the accuracy of their next report, and acknowledged himself vanquished; while M. de Sartines, rubbing his hands, repeated, 'I was confident of it! how could you think, my dear fellow, that any thing could be concealed from a lieutenant-general of police?' and afterwards added, 'I could only wish you were more regular in your habits; why? deuce take it, my good fellow, why can't you choose from good society?' " amusing.

Illustrations of Political Economy. No. VII. A Manchester Strike. 12mo. pp. 136. By Harriet Martineau. London, 1832. Fox.

When we consider how the prosperity England depends upon her commerce, which again depends on her manufactures, too gre attention cannot be given to so important subject. At this moment much misery to be found in our large manufacturis towns; and no one can deny, first, that the evils are capable of alleviation, at least; and secondly, that negligence and ignorance consequences are the chief sources of distres A work like the present is addressed universal to the masters, as shewing the evils to which their exaction or their indifference may leadto the men, as shewing the folly of confound ing the necessary and the wrong, and of e deavouring to obtain redress without know ledge of the true origin of their suffering. W have not hitherto given the "summary oprinciples" illustrated in each number; w will now insert them, to shew with wha truth and clearness Miss Martineau lays ther down, in the shape of axioms.

" Commodities, being produced by capita and labour, are the joint property of the ca pitalist and labourer. - The capitalist pays in advance to the labourers their share of the commodity, and thus becomes its sole owner .-The portion thus paid is wages. — Real wages are the articles of use and consumption that the labourer receives in return for his labour -Nominal wages are the portion he receive of these things reckoned in money .- The full from which wages are paid in any country consists of the articles required for the use anconsumption of labourers which that country contains .- The proportion of this fund received by individuals must mainly depend on the runber among whom the fund is divided .- The rate of wages in any country depends, therefore, not on the wealth which that country contains, but on the proportion between its capital and its population. - As population has wages can be prevented from falling to the lowest point only by adjusting the proportion of population to capital. — The lowest point which wages can be permanently reduced that which affords a bare subsistence to the labourer. - The highest point to which wage can be permanently raised is that which leaved to the capitalist just profit enough to make a worth his while to invest his capital. - The variations of the rate of wages between the extreme points depending mainly on the state of labour offered to the capitalist, the rate wages is mainly determined by the sellers, the buyers of labour. - Combinations of bourers against capitalists (whatever other fects they may have) cannot secure a pe manent rise of wages unless the supply labour falls short of the demand; in will case, strikes are usually unnecessary..... Nothing can permanently affect the rate of wages while does not affect the proportion of population capital. __ Legislative interference does not fect this proportion, and is therefore useless Strikes affect it only by wasting capital. are therefore worse than useless - Comba tions may avail or not, according to the sonableness of their objects.—Whether read able or not, combinations are not subjects legislative interference; the law having cognizance of their causes. - Disturbance the peace being otherwise provided against combinations are wisely therefore now left regarded by the law. _ The condition of bourers may be best improved, lst. Bourers and discoveries which create supporting strikes. 3d. By adjusting the pro-! We have no doubt that, to the majority of | might consider his shoes worth more than a loaf portion of population to capital.

a most interesting and dramatic fiction. The character of Allen, the leader of the strike, is as noble as it is natural. We also subjoin the following account of the children when the strike extends to them :--

"This was thought by some parents far from being the worst thing that had happened. While the committee shook their heads over this weighty additional item of weekly charge, many tender mothers stroked their children's heads, and smiled when they wished them joy of their holyday, and bade them sleep on in the mornings without thinking of the factory bell. It was some days before the little things got used to so strange a difference from their usual mode of life. Some would start up from sound sleep with the question, 'Father, is it time?'
Some talked in their sleep of being too late, and went on to devour their meals hastily, as if their time was not their own. It would have amused some people, and made others melancholy, to watch the sports of these townbred children. One little girl was seen making a garden ; -that is, boring a hole between two flints in a yard with a rusty pair of scissors, and inserting therein a daisy, which, by some rare chance, had reached her hands. Others collected the fragments of broken plates and teacups from the kennels, and spread them out for a mock feast, where there was nothing to eat. The favourite game was playing at being cotton-spinners; a big boy frowning, and strutting, and personating the master; another, with a switch in his hand, being the overlooker; and the rest spinners or piecers, each trying which could be the naughtiest and get the most threats and scolding. Many were satisfied with lolling on the stairs of their dwellings, and looking into the streets all day long; and many nursed their baby brothers and sisters, sitting on the steps or leaning against the walls of the street. Hannah Bray, when not abroad with her father, took pains to stir up her little neighbours to what she called She coaxed her father into giving them a ball, and tried to teach the children in the next yard to play hide and seek; but she often said she never before saw such helpless and awkward people. They could not throw a ball five feet from them, or flung it in one another's faces, so as to cause complaints and crying fits. In hiding, they always shewed themselves, or came out too soon or not soon enough, or jostled and threw one another down; and they were the worst runners that could be conceived. Any one of them trying to catch Hannah, looked like a duck running after a greyhound. Hannah began with laughing at them all round; out observing that her father watched their play with tears in his eyes, she afterwards conented herself with wondering in silence why iome children were so unlike others."

sicture? Not a creature in the kingdom, who on aught won from such debilitating toil, out must shudder at the cost. We are far rom believing that the idle are the happyontent is bought by labour; but not that la-Our which, instead of the sweat from the brow, vrings the blood from the heart. Public opition has, in our time, an earthly omnipotence. ut it requires to be both excited and directed. At this very moment, Mr. Sadler's bill for the At this very moment, Mr. Sadler's bill for the shoes, wanted a loaf of bread, I would not egulation of the hours of children's work has ecn lost—and from indifference to the subject; him to give a loaf in exchange for them, because ndifference to a subject involving the health that might only create confusion. The baker masters, such a regulation would be needless; These are put into action, and developed in still, how few are there who bear to be intrusted with power; and long experience shews that checks, even when not absolutely needed, are salutary. We do hope, for the honour of humanity, the condition of these poor children will be thoroughly investigated and protected.

> Monadelphia; or, the Formation of a New System of Society, without the Intervention of a Circulating Medium. By J. Thimbleby. 12mo. pp. 76. London, 1832. Ford.

ONE is at once attracted to this volume by its frontispiece-a plan of the town, which, though it displays work-places, a slaughter-yard, and a cemetery, far outbalances these human ills by a Temple of Wisdom, a ditto of Happiness, a Garden of Pleasure, and a Garden of Praise! Mr. Thimbleby, the apostle of this design, is a worthy person, and he differs from Mr. Owen in making pure religion the basis of his system. We mean no imputation on our old and esteemed friend Mr. Owen; but we were highly amused in a discussion by the expression of one of his followers, who, when rather pushed by an argument, exclaimed, "Thank G— we have no religion!" Now, as Byron writes, why any body should "thank God for that, is no great matter,"—but we must proceed with our desultory review. Mr. Thimbleby, we repeat, is a worthy person, and his plan a commendable plan, as well as extensive, for he assures us "it will be found to embrace every means of producing the most superior happiness to the whole world, by founding on the firmest basis a project, which will erase from the mind every error, will concentrate into one point the diversified opinions and prejudices that now exist with regard to religion, root out every misery from society, and make men really free, will establish truth, and, in short, will effect every blessing which the mind of man can compréhend."

We enrol ourselves among the disciples and upporters of this scheme. We were always supporters of this scheme. fond of indulgences, always hated misery, always longed for happiness to our liking, and always wanted to try how many blessings, and how much of them, we could comprehend and enjoy. Therefore, be Mr. Thimbleby, of Barnet, our guide, and to Barnet, if necessary, let us travel. But in the first place let us believe in his dictum: " My fellow-man, the primary cause of all thy distress, thy troubles, thy cares. and thy misery, is individual property; or, the circulation of money! two evils, which may be considered as synonymous; and which, before thou canst experience any degree of real earthly happiness, must cease to exist.'

As money is the root of all evil, Mr. Thimbleby shews us how to do without it, according to his system of real happiness. "A system (he states) in which men's necessities may be Is not this a more than pitiable—an awful for the future, either for themselves or their offspring, with regard to food or clothing; in which disease and all its dreadful ravages in a little time will cease; and in which every thing will harmonise, so as to produce the most beneficial results. To give a clear idea of the nature of the system to which I have adverted, I will briefly open the principle of it to the mind, before I proceed to enlarge upon it in detail. Suppose a shoemaker, who had made a pair of of bread. But I would desire the latter to take his shoes to a warehouse appropriated to that purpose, and the baker should bring him bread; and so on with regard to any other trade. The tailor, when he had finished a garment, should also take it to the warehouse; the hatter should do the same. In this warehouse should be different departments for all kinds of goods, both manufactured and unmanufactured; and when the tailor or the shoemaker were in want of materials to work with or upon, they should go to the department in which those materials were kept, and take them. When the baker or butcher found his clothes worn out, he should go to the clothing department, and fit himself with a new coat, shoes, or hat, as he might want. So it should be with all trades or classes of men. Each man should do his utmost for his fellow-creatures, and should receive in return from the public property every necessary. The baker and the butcher would daily supply him with food; and in regard to clothing, at any time when he found himself in want, he would go immediately to the warehouse and supply himself."

In further developing this project the various parts of the Town are described; such, for example, as "No. 14, temple of wisdom; the two wings for the education of youth, the centre for those who study the fine arts, composers, doctors, and astronomers. No. 15, temple of happiness. Part of this building for the reception of those who have arrived at that age when they would wish to retire from toil, both mental and bodily; the other part for those who prefer leading a single life. No. 16, the government hall. In this building the governors of the society are to assemble, to discuss the welfare of the community. No. 17, the garden of pleasure, for all persons to resort to, from three in the afternoon until ten in the evening. In this garden every thing that is either the work of art or nature, should be brought into requisition, to make it really the seat of innocent delight. The sublimity and grandeur of nature should be exhibited in her rivers, her rills, cataracts, grottos, and groves; and the pleasing and admirable effects of art shewn in her fountains, bowers, illuminations, and transparencies. Here should men realise their loftiest ideas of all that is sublime and beautiful, of all that they consider attractive and lovely. It should also contain four halls, those of statuary, science, mirth, and concord; and a colonnade, where the astronomer could display to his audience the wonders of the heavens, the naturalist those of the earth, and the composer delight the senses with the effects of music. No. 18, the garden of praise, which should be planned so as to excite the sublimest feelings on entering it. It should contain a promenade and a temple for worship. There should also be a collection of beasts, birds, and fishes, so arranged as to give the best possible effect; and a similar collection of the choicest botanical productions. In both of the gardens should be cottages for those who attend to keep them in order.

" As every man would be required to employ his time or talents for the general good of the society, all would at once see the expediency of furnishing the necessary supplies. Still no restraint would be put upon any one: every man would be left to act by his own free will, without any danger to the public welfare; for the system of education which I shall propose hereafter, would so act upon the mind, that employment would be considered a pleasure, and not in any way a toil. Every man, whatever might nd happiness of the young and the helpless! might not want the shoes, or the shoemaker be the trade or profession in which he at any time became engaged, would receive from the the disease in some measure seemed staved. and public stock whatever he required; clothes to wear, food to eat, and physicians to attend him when ill: and would enjoy pleasures which but few have now the possibility of doing, with the certainty of being provided for in old age, and the prospect of eternal bliss hereafter.'

In our hadly constituted world, it is true enough, " The man of genius is mostly doomed to struggle with poverty, while the man of no intellect, but of a low and sordid mind, is reaping all the benefits derived from their talents. Thus is genius trod in the dust, till at last, crushed to atoms by the weight which it is unable to shake off, it leaves this world of darkness and wretchedness."

We also see much matrimonial misery; but Monadelphia has a cure for that. "With respect (says Mr. T.) to the union between the two sexes, the parties should make their wishes known to the governors; who would thereupon appoint them the upper one of course was boarded: this cira dwelling-house, and see it properly furnished for their reception. The parties should stand up in the temple on the Sabbath-day, and openly take each other for man and wife. If they afterwards found, that, from difference of tempers, or any other cause, they could not live happily together, they should be allowed to separate, and repair to the temple of happiness. Thus would all unhappiness with regard to marriages cease.'

We have thus, we hope, said enough, without going into farther details, to induce a considerable number of our readers to commence a Monadelphic establishment, were it only to try how it would work practically. It does seem to us that there might be some inconveniences and objections. For example, that perhaps too many of the inhabitants might desire to be geniuses, and teachers, and philosophers, for whose productions, and advice, and learning, the artisans and mechanics might be unwilling to toil in return; but, as Mr. Thimbleby would say, we cannot tell till the experiment is made: and when human nature is susceptible of perfect wisdom and virtue, we should not wonder if it succeeded.

Captain Skinner's Excursions in India. [Third Notice: conclusion.]

BEFORE we return to this pleasantest of pleasant tours, and ascend the lofty Himalaya range with our entertaining traveller, we will copy a passage relating to the Indian cholera, as every fact touching that disease must be particularly interesting now.

"Before we had reached Monghyr, where on the 20th of April we arrived, the cholera morbus broke out in our fleet, and reduced it terribly. Many of the Europeans died as well as the natives, and no evening passed without a funeral. The dandies were either thrown overboard or deposited by the banks of the rivers to feed the vultures and the jackals; our own men were more decently buried in such graves as could quickly be scooped in the sand. Towards the end of April the disorder assumed a more alarming appearance, and every hour somebody was seized. Each officer was pro-vided with a mixture, the principal ingredients of which were laudanum and brandy; and, in order that no time might be lost in making for the hospital boats, every vessel on board which a man might fall sick, was desired to bear down upon the nearest budgerow for assistance, when a wine-glass of the cholera mixture was administered. It was a melancholy sight to see five or six boats at a time draw out of the line and hasten towards the nearest officers in their stalking over the ground; they are always close in Hindostanee, 'I'll teach you to a rear! The moment the draught was received attendants upon Europeans, and had come from scoundrels!' This ludicrous explain the sick boat dropped quietly down to the hospital. It never was considered contagious, nor was any precaution used to separate the affected from the healthy; and we did not find that the remainder of a hoat's crew was seized in consequence of any one of them having been attacked by it. It committed its ravages indiscriminately through the fleet. A native on board my budgerow died of the complaint in the course of a few hours; and although all the others were lying around him, it was not communicated to any of them. It has always seemed to me to be confined to particular spots: during the month of October, while we were in Fort William, the men who occupied one end of a lower room in the barracks were seized with it, while in every other part of the building they were perfectly healthy. This room had been undergoing repair, and was not properly flagged; cumstance proves it to have been entirely local; for there was a constant intercourse between all the parties, and it was not conveyed to the other quarters. It at length became general in the Fort, which at that season of the year, the period of the breaking up of the rains, it usually does. A regiment of British soldiers on its march from Berhampore to Calcutta, halted one morning in the neighbourhood of a morass, and in a few hours afterwards several men were attacked with the cholera morbus, always the attendant evil of such a place: the commanding officer immediately struck the camp, and moved to about seven miles further on; here the ground was drier and clearer; the sick men recovered, and there was no further appearance of the disease. I am not very certain what the opinions of the faculty may be in the East, but as no precautions are taken against contagion, I conjecture they do not consider them necessary. I shall never forget the afternoon of our arrival at Patna: the cholera had been raging some time amongst the native population, and all the dead bodies seemed to have been placed on a clear spot without the city, and under the walls of some rich man's palace. The hot wind blew very violently, and we were long within sight of this place without being able to reach it; the water was very low, and several dead bodies that had been washed from the bank by the river were stranded on the shallows in its centre. It was the 1st of May, and corruption was most rapid; every breath of the sirocco blew poison; the scene was indescribable; bodies floated sometimes against our boats, for they were nearly all aground, and remained under the bows for an hour at a time, while others swam uninterruptedly down the stream. with flocks of birds upon them: little could be heard but the noise of the vultures tearing off the flesh with their beaks, while the crows jangled in their quarrels for the morsels that fell from them. About sunset we reached the shore; but, alas! could get no further than the burial-ground, along the edge of which we were obliged to moor. It was strewed with skulls and 'dead men's bones,' and the air was pestilence itself. The jackals and the wild dogs skulked away from the mangled limbs as we approached, while the vultures, the very sight of which speaks of the charnel-house, rose from the half-eaten body, and, hovering for a moment above it, like evil spirits, descended to the completion of their horrible There were a great number of the Hargila large storks, known by the name of adjutants in India, from their measured step, the station of Dinapore to share in that death had prepared for the 'stealthy pace' seems we'll suited to yard, over which, to their designs, like ghosts. There is something trul ing in the appearance of these gigant the twilight, or 'the pale moonlight,' as we do, the object of their ravishit All night, for we were forced to co night in this spot, the howling of t was tremendous, and even the fires lit up by our numerous followers did to scare them; there must have been collected. So wild and so extraording I never before beheld; and so uncon one, to some of the senses, I have no see repeated. In so large a populati of Patna, any infectious disease must r havoc, but especially such a one as ti morbus, against which there seems to human remedies. At daylight, on May, we towed past the city of Pats time its crowds were assembled on t to bathe. The most animated scene p a native beach covered with bathers, s people of all descriptions; there wer horses, and elephants; the latter, lying sides while their drivers rubbed them appeared to enjoy the luxury beyond : them. In the afternoon, we had the tune to complete our voyage on the G

The following extract also relate voyage up the Ganges; and as the sale whimsical and well told, we make rou "On sailing up the Ganges, my pened to be moored by the side a budgerow, in which a somewhat cho tleman was, as I conceived, at rest boatmen and servants, to the numbe say, of twenty-five or thirty, were rolled up in their white shawls, upon of the apartment in which he was lyin rose like a poop above the deck. beautiful night, and in the neighbor Colgong, one of the most romantic pa river. I was seated on the deck, al was past midnight, enjoying the see my contemplations were disturbed b usual splashing in the water. On the direction of the noise, I saw the tunate men leaping and tumbling river from the boat of my passions bour, who was standing like a madm deck, brandishing a stick over his head shall I forget the scene. He was n Lieutenant Lismahago in his appearau moon lit up his bald head, for he ha his nightcap at one of the people, in not being able to reach him with I and while he stood in the midst of scenery around, with nothing on but dispersing the sleepers, I would have world for Smollett's pen to have pe the scene. The boatmen, who are a pert swimmers, and did not seem to presence of mind by the sudden t very soon reached the shore, and astonishment, as well as myself, at th in which they had taken such unexp conspicuous parts. I conceived som offence must have been given to have such an uncompromising severity, i one was driven from his berth. relieved from my suspense, howeve victor strutted two or three times deserted field; then turning towards t enemy, who seemed ready to rally banks, shook his stick at them, and the whole mystery affected the crew, as it did of civilisation casts over scenery, must yield, increase gave to it. The natives esteem the myself, and a loud laugh was the reply. So in grandeur and sublimity, to the 'snowy faquirs highly; and many are learned, and extravagant a punishment for so natural a Imaus,' and the mysterious rivers which rise perfectly sincers. They pass over the villages fault, they thought it absurd to think further in them: scenes over which superstition has about; and with the greatest good humour, cast a halo that invests them with something not willing, however, to run the risk of a second like a sacred character, even in the eyes of flight, they kindled a fire, and squatting round those who are free from its influence. Before it, smoked their pipes, and laughed at the me, towards the south, were less grand but event, till it was time to prepare for sailing. more varied prospects: at the foot of the hill It is not likely so touchy a traveller would where I stood, but far below, stretched yellow give a favourable account of the people he fields in terraces, to the edge of a winding travelled among, so he was always one of their stream; as well as wooded ridges and peaks, most violent abusers. Poor man! the recollection of his fate almost rebukes me for having written the above anecdote. He was murdered a short time afterwards, on the banks of the river, in his progress to Cawn-pore. He was alone, and his boat was moored to the shore, on the side of the kingdom of Oude. A party of decoits (robbers) came down in the night, and made an easy entrance to the place where he was lying. His servants, with the exception of one man, had deserted him, and his boatmen were dispersed. The following day no traces could be found of his body, but the deranged state of his room shewed what had happened. The remaining servant, too, heard a struggle, which was soon followed by a splash in the water. Some time afterwards, the vultures were seen feeding on the flesh of a white man, a little below the spot where the murder had occurred, and all was confirmed. The robbers, however, have never been discovered, nor is it likely that they ever will be."

In our preceding notices we extracted some of the author's admirable graphic descriptions of mountain scenery; and we cannot take our leave of him without adding another striking sketch.

" I climbed up to the top of the high ridge above it, over which lay the track; and from its summit beheld one of the most magnificent scenes the sublimest imagination could con-I had passed over about a mile of snow, four or five feet deep; but hard enough to bear me without much sinking; and was glad to have something to draw my thoughts from the fatigue, for such the natives even consider it; and many of the most devout have raised a species of altar to commemorate the feat, consisting of a heap of stones, surrounding a high one placed upright in the middle. They fringe the crest of the mountain; and to each in succession, as they reached them, my guides made their salaams, and returned thanks to whatever divinity they were dedicated, for having assisted them to reach such a height. Behind me, to the northwest, were the snows of Bunderpuch and Dootie, whence the Jumna flows: thence, towards the east, rose the high peaks which mark the source of the holy river, the Ganges - the Rudru Himaleh, like a white cloud, in the horizon - Kedar Nath and Badri Nath, hose mighty objects of Hindoo superstition, nixing with the skies; so far out-topping ther heights that I had almost considered them illusory, I began to doubt, as I gazed on hem, whether there was any interval between leaven and earth! When I remembered that [was standing, on the 30th of May, on a of worship. In a season of scarcity, the people nountain covered with snow, not ten degrees rom the tropics, and that the peaks I was ooking at were higher above me than Mont this mountain, 'Goverdhana.' They obeyed, Blanc from the plain, and Mount Ætna from and he, assuming another figure, sat on the he sea, I was breathless with astonishment. summit of it to receive their offerings, which he river Po,' though they may excel in ex- so heavy, that the hill bent under him, and to crowned with pines, their sides blooming with lilac and rhododendron. All around, far as the eye could reach-and that was far indeedwere mountains, interminable mountains, of every shape and every hue: the clefts on the edges of some were masses of snow, shining through the open trees: rough and rugged rocks, opposing their barrenness to gently-rising hills, as carefully and tastily planted as if by the hand of art: dark, impenetrable forests, with torrents of water roaring through them; and little clusters of fruit-trees, with birds of sweetest notes singing within them. The summit of Oonchal was, for a time, ecstacy.'

We have now left little room to pursue these lively and entertaining volumes farther; and must confine ourselves to two brief selections from the second volume; - the first relating to miracles,- the last to monkeys.

"Kedar Nath is fancied by the natives to have some resemblance to a buffalo, and to that circumstance, I believe, owes a great portion of its character for sanctity. It was once an animated being, and unfortunately had a quarrel with a powerful giant of the name of Bheem Singh. To revenge itself upon him, it assumed the shape of a buffalo, of no ordinary dimensions, and rushed at its enemy with its utmost violence. The wary Bheem Singh, however, bestrode the narrow hills like a colossus, and seemed to give the beast an opportunity of running between his legs; but when midway, closed them upon it, and divided it in two; the head and shoulder became Kedar Nath, while its hind quarters settled somewhere in the kingdom of Nepaul, and figure at this moment as one of the loftiest mountains in it. So much for mountain legends. It surely was an easy matter to rule a race of people who could believe such clumsy tales as these! The inventors of such fables had a most encouraging credulity in those for whom they were conceived. I do not know, however, that the freaks attributed to Krishna are a bit more absurd than the more classical ones of which Apollo was the hero. A calamba tree on the shore of the Jumma, near Bunderbund, still bears the impression of Krishna's back; for he leaned upon it when he played his pipe to the milkmaids, with whom he passed so merry a time; and one of them, who bore the pretty name of Toolsi (another Daphne), was turned, while endeavouring to escape his pursuit, into that plant which is still called from her the Toolsi, holy basil. There is a hill in the neighbourhood of this sacred place, which bears a holy character, and is at times illuminated and visited from afar for the purpose complained to Krishna, who recommended them to propitiate with offerings the god of The Alps, the Appennines, the Pyrenean, and must have been of food; for he presently grew

It is unlawful to injure, and irreligious not to feed them. The Brahmin assures me, that once, no less a number than ten thousand arrived at Sirinagur on one day, and claimed to be fed. Although his assertion is a little too bold to be implicitly believed, I have no doubt there were enough to cause, as he declares, the apprehension of a famine. The rajah, afraid of his stores being exhausted, was anxious to get rid of them, and offered each man a certain quantity of grain if they would scatter themselves about the mountains, and not move in so formidable a train. They not move in so formidable a train. refused the offer, and insisting on being served according to their appetites, established them-selves in a body in the town. They are bound to have no pleasures, and to close their ears and eyes to all gratifications. The rajah, pretending to tolerate them, as they were assembled at their meal, ordered all the musicians and dancing-girls that could be collected, to assail them with their blandishments, and on no account to relax from the music and the dance, till, scandalised by the scene, they were driven from the city. This ruse had the desired effect: fearing that their sanctity might be impeached by witnessing so profane an exhibition, they fled with the utmost precipitation. Some faquirs have been known to have performed miracles; but I do not believe much of that,' continued the Brahmin; for he is the most persevering story-teller I ever listened to, and sits in my tent as long as I please to allow him to edify me. 'I do not believe much in that; for indeed I never witnessed a man but once, who could work a miracle. A naked faquir came to the village where I was born, and asked me to be his guide to Gungoutri. He refused food, for he said he could feed himself whenever he felt hungry. 'Take your stick,' said he, 'and leave the rest to me.' 'To you?' I answered, 'why, you are a beggar! what can you give me?' He had nothing with him but the dried gourd, from which he drank water. He looked angry, and repeating, 'Bem', 'com',' desired me to set footh. When ' Ram ! vam !' desired me to set forth. When we reached Bairo Ghati, he bade me wait at the temple while he bathed; and on his coming up to it, asked if I was hungry, and what I would like to have: 'Some cakes of flour,' I replied. In a few moments after he had prayed, the ground was spread with cakes. He performed the same miracle at Gungoutri - on that very spot,' pointing to the front of the adjoining shed. ' I do not lie, for I saw it with my own eyes, and ate the cake; and very good they were. 'I do not lie, like Mr. Mathews' Longbow,' was the invariable summingup of every story he told; and it frequently offered a fair presumption why a verdict of 'guilty' should be recorded against him."

Of the monkeys the author tells : " In passing above a large tract of land, on which the crop seemed ripe enough to reap, I was astonished to see such universal activity as appeared to prevail. There was a person apparently at every ear of corn, busily employed in picking out the grain. I could not conjecture the cause of such extraordinary labour : till, on looking through my glass, I found the field was full of monkeys, each standing on its hind legs, and helping itself with the greatest assiduity. I was too well aware of the difficulty of obtaining meal, not to put an end to their repast. I fired a couple of balls above their minite beauty, and the charm a consciousness the present day retains the shape his sudden heads, and set them off, scampering and screaming, to the adjoining trees, which hung over a little brook, by the track of which I had soon after to pass. They were still in the branches, and chattered most discordantly while I walked through their dominions. Some eyed me, as if they suspected me of having been the cause of their interruption and alarm; and, jumping to the boughs above the road, shook them over my head, and grinned most hideously through them. A few of the oldest, who had their young to protect, came more boldly into the path, as if trying how near they could approach with impunity. It was necessary to be on the alert, for their manœuvres bore a most threatening aspect. Although the gambols and tricks of the monkeys are highly amusing when viewed from a little distance, there are few things more uncomfortable than to be so surrounded by several hundreds—particularly when, as in my case, the conscience whispers that they have no reason to be pleased with the intrusion. I have heard people boast of shooting them, and finding it capital sport; I never could appreciate the feelings of such men, however. The looks of a monkey in pain are so distressing, and his cries so pitiful, that, putting his near approach in appearance to our own race out of the question, it must be an inhuman spirit that could find pleasure in such amusement. I remember hearing an anecdote of a sportsman in the East having been induced to fire at and wound a large monkey: one of the boldest of the pack immediately approached him, and catching hold of his gun, endeavoured to disarm him. A struggle took place, in which the man of the woods proved the strongest, and bore away his prize. monkeys had observed the manner in which it had been fired, and attempted to imitate it: at length one succeeded in putting it to his shoulder; and the sportsman, not approving of his own battery being turned against him, commenced to make his retreat-when off went the second barrel of the gun! The recruits, frightened at the noise themselves had made, threw down the cause of it, and flew to the trees; while the intruder narrowly escaped being wounded, and was obliged to abandon his fowling-piece to the future entertainment of the wood-rangers. The natives do not venerate them in any part of the hills; but, nevertheless, they are as fat and sleek as the sacred broods that are met with in the plains."

And here we end; wishing that all the works we have to wade through would afford us pleasure in the measure afforded by Captain . Skinner.

The Graphic and Historical Illustrator. Edited by E. W. Brayley, Esq. F.S.A. M.R.S.L., &c. 4to. pp. 16. No. I.—Idem, No. II. London, 1832. Gilbert.

ONLY two weekly Nos. of this periodical have appeared; but they are so full of curious and interesting matter, that while we cordially award them our praise, as very superior productions of their class, both in authorship and embellishments, we may safely anticipate that the design, when completed, will form as instructive and pleasing a miscellary as has yet appeared. The subjects are most judiciously selected; and where original articles occur, they are marked by great information, presented in a highly entertaining manner.

Clarenswold; or, Tales of the North. Pp. 304. Edinburgh, 1832, Bell and Bradfute; Lonoccasion of the author's departing from old and endeared associations;" by them it will doubtless be valued.

Remember Me; a Token of Christian Affection, consisting of entirely [qy.-entirely of?] Original Pieces, in Prose and Verse. Pp. 180. Colchester, 1832, Filer and Totham; London, Simpkin and Marshall; Darton and Co. This fairy little volume, bound in green silk, does much credit to the provincial press whence it issues. The poems are well suited to the serious: a portrait of the Rev. William Marsh is prefixed.

Moral Plays. By a Lady. 8vo. pp. 276. London, 1832. Calkin and Budd.

WE are unwilling to be severe on good intentions; but we question whether, as in the present instance, they can be permitted to supply the place of every thing else.

Every Man's Library, No. I.: The Works of Thomas Paine abridged. 8vo. pp. 30. London, Lorymer.

COBBETT acted resurrection-man to the skeleton of Tom Paine, and had a hard job of it: whether the spirit of the times is such that the revival of his mental skeleton will pay, we can-not tell; but in our office, to hold as 'twere the mirror up to the literary publications of the day, we are bound to notice "pain abridged," which is at any rate a good title.

A Course of French Literature; containing a Critical Review of the French Authors of Eminence during the 16th, 17th, and 18th Centuries. By Adelbert J. Doisy. Pp. 432. Dublin, 1832, J. Cumming; London, Whit-taker and Co.; Edinburgh, A. Smith.

THIS work is exactly described by its titlepage, and will be a valuable library in itself to the French student. The extracts are judi-ciously selected, and accompanied by some clever criticism.

Biblical Cabinet Atlas. London, 1832. Bull. THIS beautiful little work is now published complete in a portable volume, with a very copious index. It is indeed a publication so well put together in every respect, so ne :. so careful, and so correct, that a more useful and agreeable companion to the reading of the Scriptures could not be devised.

The Voice of Humanity. (Quarterly.) Vol. II. 8vo. pp. 178. London, Nisbet.

This voice, we trust, will never be raised in vain; at all events we shall do our part in causing it to be heard; though in our present No. we can only announce the appearance of this vol., and return our thanks to the Association for promoting Rational Humanity to-wards the Animal Creation, for the honour they have done us at their public meeting. They may rest assured of our cordial co-opera-tion in all truly rational objects.

The Elements of the British Constitution, &c. By the Rev. J. D. Schomberg, B.A. 18mo. pp. 134. London, 1832. Longman and Co. A VERY concise, but clear and admirably arranged manual of our constitutional history and existing constitution. Mr. Schomberg is an enthusiast with regard to Burke, from token of remembrance to personal friends, on | manly, straight-forward, and English in spirit and substance; and a book more fit for general diffusion we could not mention. Great principles are fairly stated, and the details are full of information and utility.

> The Cook's own Book. 24mo. pp. 67. Griffiths. A CHEAP hash from Kitchiner; intended, according to the fashion of the day, for the buyer of small-priced publications.

> A Selection of Psalms and Hymns, &c. for the use of the Abbey Church of Great Matern. 24mo. pp. 368. London, Smith, Elder, and Co.; Malvern, M. Southall; Worcester, W. Close.

> This neat little volume is appropriately dedicated to Dr. Card, the vicar of Great Malvern, who, by his zeal and perseverance, has effected the restoration of the beautiful interior of the Abbey Church. The selection is ample, and made with great taste and judgment: it is well worthy of the attention of every clergyman, and is a beautiful collection for family use.

> A Companion to the Book of Common Prayer. 24mo. pp. 408. Same Publishers, &c. A SIMILAR and most meritorious publication, with apparently some varieties, and a different arrangement.

Family Classical Library, XXXIII. Valpy. THE second volume of Cæsar; and concluding that invaluable author.

Tales. By the Author of "Highways and Byways."

VARIOUS legends of the Netherlands are here put together in a most amusing and interesting form. The "Curse of the Black Lady very original, though melancholy, story. Still the whole have one fault for a reviewer. However pleased with them he may be. be finds them too long for extract, and yet so short that any abridgment would be a mutilation We can truly recommend them as ranking with the most entertaining volumes of the season.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

AFRICAN EXPEDITION.

THE following particulars relative to the Liverpool expedition for the interior of Africa, are copied from a Cork journal: — " Its first detination is to the mouth of the river Quarts. forty miles to the leeward of Cape Formusa The larger steamer is computed to be 145 tots burden, and propelled by a fifty-horse engine. Her sides are pierced, and mounted with wa six-pounders. Forward, a very formidable play is made by a twenty-four pound swire-gun, whilst a long swivel eighteen-pound carronade astern seems to threaten destruction to every foe. In addition to these precaution against the Spanish pirates who infest to coast, and also such of the native tribes might prove hostile to the expedition, she completely surrounded by chevaux de frisc. amply provided with small arms and boardis pikes for forty persons, which will compose to crew, &c. This steamer is named after it river she is intended to ascend, namely. Quorra, which is the Arabic for 'Shime-River.' Her present draft of water is early and in her ascent will not be more than to don, Duncan.

Whose works he illustrates his little volume by feet six inches, which is very small, consider this pretty-looking volume is published, to attaching splendid passages to his own data, in ing that no sacrifice has been made of the use the writer's own words, "principally as a the form of notes. The whole production is operations which constitute the beau ideal of the sacrification."

construction of the paddles is such that, should favourable winds occur, they can be removed in such a manner that she can use sails in place of steam, and receive no impediment to her progress by their immersion in the water. She is schooner-rigged, and rather lofty. The Quorra is intended to ascend the principal stream, and the lesser, which is built entirely of wrought iron, and of a draught of only eighteen inches, is intended to explore all the tributary streams, and likewise visit Timbuctoo, Warree, Sockatoo, &c. &c. The latter boat is fifty-five tons burden, and called the Alburkha, which is the Arabic for 'blessing.' The brig Columbine, which accompanies the expedition as far as possible, is principally laden with fuel and other articles for the use of the two steamers. It is expected that a sufficiency of wood will be found on the banks of the river to generate steam, when the supply of coal is finished, or not easily to be procured. The whole squadron is under the command of G. L. Harris, Esq. R.N., whose experience on the coast during a period of six years, entitles him to the confidence of the promoters of the expedition. The elder Lander, the companion of Clapperton, Macgreggor Laird, Esq., and Dr. Briggs, of Liverpool, accompany it; the latter as the medical attendant and botanist. Mr. Harris will act as topographical surveyor on the part of the company and government. by permission, and a naval officer on their part, for a like purpose. By the ample provision made, it would almost seem that every difficulty was anticipated; every thing that could be procured for the success, safety, comfort, and happiness of our adventurous countrymen has been procured; nor should the fact be omitted, that an abundance of trinkets, &c. &c. has been procured to conciliate the good will of the natives. No correct estimate can be formed of the length of the absence of the expedition. It may, however, be naturally inferred that it will not be great, as the steamers will present a facility hitherto unknown in exploring the African rivers, and that the progress thus obtained will in no way be impeded by the caprice of any of the African chiefs in obtaining leave to proceed, or paying compulsory tribute, &c. for such a favour. A glance at the Quorra will almost convince any one that her implements of destruction are such as to defy the whole condensed bow-andarrow force of Africa."

The Cambrian newspaper says, "the Quorra and Alburkha steamers arrived at Milford on Saturday last, from Liverpool, to wait for orders and the African traveller Lander, who is expected over-land to join, as well as to get clean bills of health. The sailing brig Columbine, 170 tons, Captain Miller, arrived on Sunday, being furnished with a supply of coals for the steamers, and a variety of articles for presents, trade, and barter, and a few passengers. These vessels possess all the requisite qualities for such a voyage, comprehending every comfort, as well as fitted for defence against any attack of the natives on the rivers and coast. The Alburkha, Captain Hill, is a beautiful little iron steamer, the hull, except decks, being wholly of that material; admeasures, exclusive of the engine-room, only 35 an error too common, however, to merit sevetons; and with her crew, fourteen in number, rity; but works of this kind have of late been coals, luggage, and articles for trade, draws only four feet water; when divested of those materials, can be made to sail on an even keel in two feet water. This little vessel, and the brig Columbine, were towed out to sea, on five lines on the tiger we can make no sense Tuesday evening last, by the Quorra, which whatever: we subjoin them as a riddle.

steamer, which the Quorra certainly is. The | vessel returned again, and now waits the arrival of Mr. Lander, to sail immediately for Porto Praya, on the African coast, the place of rendezvous. It is to be hoped, as the voyage is of a trading description, conducted at the entire expense of a body of Liverpool merchants, that the speculations will be attended with profitable results to them in a commercial point of view, and, finally, with great advantages to open a trade between this country and the whole of Western Africa.'

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

SIR ALEXANDER JOHNSTON in the chair-Various donations were made to the Society. and the following papers read :- On the methods of computing the division of time amongst the Hindus, by David Haliburton, Esq.; and an account of the ruins of Anaradhepura and Mehentélé, in Ceylon, by Captain I. J. Chapman, R.E. with drawings. This city, which is situated in the interior of Ceylon, in 8° 15' N. lat. and 80° 55' E. long. in the district of Acura Wanny, was, according to the native records, held in the greatest reverence by the followers of Buddha for the long period of nearly fifteen hundred years; it being the principal seat of their religion, as well as the residence of their kings. It is represented as having been very extensive, thickly populated, and abounding in magnifi-cent temples and other buildings; the only remains of which are nine temples, ruined tanks, and groups of pillars, scattered about for a distance of several miles. Thanks were ordered to be returned to Capt. Chapman for the communication of this very interesting paper, which reflects great credit upon his zealous exertions to illustrate the ancient history of the Buddhists by researches into the sites of their celebrated cities, while engaged in the performance of his official duties as chief engineer in the island of Ceylon. The drawings also, which accompany it, are bold and interesting delineations of the remains of these ancient seats of power, and shew that Captain Chapman has seized with great judgment the peculiarities of design and situation exhibited in these erections. The meetings were ad-journed till December next.

PINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Illustrations of the Surrey Zoological Gardens, Part 1. Drawn from nature on stone, with Descriptive Notices, by W. H. Kearney. 4to. A. S. Schloss.

THE South American Alpaca (Camelus paco) the Barbary Magot or Ape, and the Bengal Tiger, are the subjects of this new production. They appear to be accurately represented by a novel mode of lithographic execution, after the manner of etching, which we have no doubt may be carried farther with good effect. The literary notices are capable of improvement. For instance, the alpaca is in one sentence spoken of as "it," and in the next we hear not only of "him," but of "his person" being or-namental in the park. In the description of the magot we have " the Compte de Buffon," so much more correctly written than before, that we look for a better and clearer style than is here adopted, and we advise the editor to take pains in that respect. Of the concluding

"But the subjection of such of Nature's works as that now under our notice, being organised to exist by the destruction of animal life, and offering few or no equivalent advantages for the risk of a familiar acquaintance, answers the purpose of its creation in his native solitude, but in captivity can only become an object of curiosity.

National Portrait Gallery. With Memoirs by William Jerdan, Esq. Part XL. Fisher, Son, and Co.

THE portraits in this Part are those of Lord Egremont, Sir Benjamin Hobhouse, and Mr. Roscoe, after Phillips, Jackson, and Lonsdale, engraved by H. Cook, J. Cochran, and S. Freeman; so that we need hardly say they are fine specimens of art, exhibiting likenesses of men of much public interest. In the venerable Lord Egremont the splendid patronage of the Fine Arts and the munificent encouragement of every patriotic and liberal design is characteristically represented. The literary career of Mr. Roscoe is also a striking chapter of human life: while that of Sir B. Hobhouse shews how much may be accomplished in a higher sphere, by an active and intelligent mind, constantly directed to works of usefulness, benevolence, and improvement. The following anecdote of the late worthy baronet is new to us. Bred to the bar, his biographer says, "it was usual for many of the younger barristers to ride their circuits, and it was his good fortune to have Mr. Pitt for the companion of his first and last legal tour. He was in court when the future prime minister made his maiden speech, and handed a note to him, inquiring how he had felt during his performance. Mr. Pitt wrote back these words: 'Terribly funkt.' Mr. Pitt attended him at that time during a long illness with the most friendly solicitude; and their subsequent political hostility did not obliterate the remembrance of their former agreeable intercourse. Mr. Pitt, who seldom spared any antagonist, whether formidable or otherwise, treated him on all occasions with a marked civility both of expression and demeanour.'

This memoir also contains some particulars of his meeting Dr. Johnson, and some extracts from a private volume of his Travels in France and Italy-a volume sold for five guineas.

Westmorland, Cumberland, Durham. Northumberland Illustrated, from original Drawings by Thomas Allom, &c. With Historical and Topographical Descriptions by Thomas Rose. Part I. Fisher, Son, and Co.

IT was only in our last number that we announced the completion of Fisher's beautiful Illustrations of Devonshire and Cornwall; and we have here the commencement of a work which promises to be of equal value, devoted to the illustration of the grand and romantic scenery of the north of England. It is rather remarkable that the first part of this new publication, among many admirable and interesting views, should contain no fewer than three of the seats of cabinet ministers - viz. Howick Hall, the seat of Earl Grey; Brougham Hall, the seat of the Lord Chancellor; and Lambton Castle, the seat of Lord Durham.

Finden's Landscape Illustrations to Mr. Mur. ray's first complete and uniform Edition of the Life and Works of Lord Byron. Part V. Murray.

THE delay in the publication of the Fifth Part of this beautiful work is stated, by the proprietors, to have been "chiefly occasioned by their anxiety to produce a series of plates every way worthy of public patronage." That anxiety has been rewarded with success; and the result is seven plates, of at least six of which we may justly say that they are incapable of being surpassed. Our principal favourites are "Santa Maria della Spina, Pisa," from a drawing by Turner, and "Santa Maura," and "Ithaca," from drawings by Stanfield.

The Right Hon. Sir James Mackintosh, M.P. Drawn on stone by Isaac W. Slater, from an original sketch by Mr. Slater, in the possession of Sir Robert Harry Inglis, bart. Dickinson.

A STRONG resemblance, although tenderly executed. The countenance is calm, reflecting, and benevolent; but overshadowed with that expression of melancholy and indolence which mental or physical exertion, vicissitude of fortune, or the long pressure of ill-health, frequently produces in the finest and most intellectual faces.

A Series of Views in India, comprising Sketches of Scenery, Antiquities, and Native Character. Drawn from nature and on stone by Captain John Luard, Sixteenth Lancers. Part I. Smith, Elder, and Co.

It is pleasing to remark how many of our gallant officers have, "in these piping times of peace," distinguished themselves by the pencil as well as by the pen. Though last of the number, Captain Luard is by no means the least in merit. There is a firmness in his drawings which attest their fidelity; they are treated with the feeling of an artist; and we see no reason to regret that, as he states in his preface, "the enormous expense of line engraving has induced him to draw them himself upon stone." The most striking views in this first Part are, "Major Kennedy's House, Simla," and "Gun at Bhurtpore." There is also a very characteristic group of "Itinerant Snake-Catchers."

GERMAN PUBLICATIONS.

Sammlung Architectonischer Entwürfe welche ausgeführt, oder für die ausführung, entworfen. Wurden von L. von Klenze...-Collection of Architectural Sketches, executed, or intended for execution. Designed by L. von Klenze.

Auswahl der vorsüglichsten Gemälde der Hersoglich Leuchtenbergischen Gallerie. Herausgegeben von der Literarisch-Artistischen Anstalt der J. G. Cotta'schen, Buchhandlung.—Selection of the principal Pictures in the Gallery of the Duke of Leuchtenberg. Published at the Institution for Literature and the Arts of J. G. Cotta, at Munich.

Antike Bildwerks. Zum ersten male bekannt gemacht von Eduard Gerhard.— Ancient Sculptures. Published for the first time by Edward Gerhard.

Das Eleusiche Fest, Schiller's Dichtung. Bildich dargestellt von J. M. Wagner; gestochen von F. Ruscheweyh.—The Eleusian Feast, by Schiller. Illustrated by J. M. Wagner; engraved by F. Ruscheweyh.

Architectonische Entwürfe zu Kleineren Landgebäuden, Garten-Verzierungen, Monumenten, &c. &c.—Architectural Sketches for small Country-Houses, Garden-Ornaments, Monuments, &c. &c.

Erinnerung an Florenz, Rom, Neapel. Nach der natur und auf stein gezeichnet von Wilhelm Gail. Minchen.—Recollections of Florence, Rome, and Naples. Drawn from nature and on stone by Wilhelm Gail.

Denkmale der Baukunst vom 7ten bis zum 13ten Jahrhundert, am Uieder-Rhein. Herausgegeben von Sulpiz Boillerée. Munichen. —Monuments of Architecture, from the 7th to the 13th Century, on the Banks of the Rhine. Published by Sulpiz Boillerée. Munich.

Abbildungen der Wappen Sommilioher Europæischen Souveraine, der Republiken, und frein Stadte; nebst Erklärung der Einselnen Wappenfelder, und Titel der Regenten. Herausgegeben von C. H. von Gelbke. Berlin.—Armorial Bearings of all the European Sovereigns, Republics, and free Cities; with Explanations of the Quarterings, and the Titles of the Sovereigns. Published by C. H. von Gelbke. Berlin.

Die schinsten Ornamente und merkwürdigsten Gemälde aus Pompeji, Herkulanum, und Stabiæ; nebst einigen Grundrissen und Ansichten, nach den an ort und stelle gemachten Originalzeichnungen von Wilhelm Zahn.—The most beautiful Ornaments and the most remarkable Pictures in Pompeii, Herculaneum, and Stabiæ; with various Plans and Views, after original Drawings made on the spot by Wilhelm Zahn.

THE above are the titles of a number of German publications connected in a greater or leas degree with the fine arts, the whole, or portions of which (thanks to Mr. Schloss for affording us so fair an opportunity of glancing over the productions of Germany), are now lying before us. They do not demand elaborate criticism, and we will therefore content ourselves with saying a few words of each. M. von Klenze's Architectural Sketches evince great taste and professional knowledge. Of the Duke of Leuchtenberg's Gallery, the principal subjects in the Part under our notice are a rich and mellow Virgin and Child, after Murillo; and portraits of Rubens and his wife, chiefly remarkable for the grotesque character of the costume. The Ancient Sculptures are, in general, curious rather than beautiful; but there are some fine exceptions to this remark. M. Wagner's illustrations of Schiller's Eleusian Feast exhibit an intimate knowledge of composition, and of the most celebrated productions of Grecian art. Of the taste displayed in the Architectural Sketches for small Country-Houses, &c. we are unable to speak in terms of praise. The Recollections of Florence, Rome, and Naples, are whimsical and amusing. Except to the professional man, there is no great interest attached to the Architectural Remains on the Banks of the Rhine. The Armorial Bearings of the Sovereigns, &c. of Europe are emblazoned with great splendour:—it is impossible, however, to contemplate them without reflecting that the day of an awful conflict is rapidly approaching, which will determine whether such things shall not thenceforward be shewn as among the monstrous absurdities in which human beings once delighted. M. Zahn's is a most elaborate, beautiful, and interesting publication, and conveys a far more complete and satisfactory idea of the excavated treasures of antiquity which it represents, than any other work upon the subject which we have hitherto seen.

We may add, that in several of these publications the embellishments are beautifully printed in colours, not coloured by the hand; and that we reserve a notice of a number of works on natural history for another Gasette.

ORIGINAL PORTRY.

SONG.

SIT by the summer sea,
Thou whom scorn wasteth,
And let thy musing be
Where the flood hasteth;
Mark how o'er ocean's breast
Rolls the hoar billow's crest.—
Such deem his thought's unrest

Griev'st thou that hearts should change?

Lo, where life reigneth,
Or the free sight may range,
What long remainsth?
Spring with her flowers shall die,
Fast fades the gilded sky,
And the pale moon on high

Smile, then, oh greatly wise!
And if love sever
Bonds which thy soul doth prize,
Such was it ever.
Deep as the rolling seas,
Soft as the twilight breeze,
But of more truth than these Roast could it never.

IMPROMPTU, To a Lady at the Fianefurte.

LADYE, when notes like these are heard.
The fancy wakes; in vision'd dram
Embodies forth some ancient bard,
With magic lyre, by haunted stream,
Sweeping, with hallow'd hand, the strings
That breathe the language of the sky;
Whilst backward vocal echo flings
The varied lay of minstrelsy.
Strike once again that playful strain,

The witchery of whose changing measure.

Hath power to steal the wretch from pain,
Or rouse the heart of we to pleasure;
Or, luring from its fount a tear,
That melting, dying fall be given,
As if a seraph lingered near s if a seraph lingered near

To win an erring soul to heaven.

A. T. T.

BURIED PRIENDSHIP.

THE weary Sun hath sunk in Ocean's bress.

Fast, o'er the orient, clouds their shades fling,

In the mute grove the cushat shuts her vity.

Yet lingering rays illuminate the west—A trembling, beautiful, and chasten'd light. That still reveals the rock and winding rill. Paints every wood, and sleeps on everyhing the And softens down the frown of coming night. Thus, in the sombre chambers of the dead, When those the heart loves best for ever its still with us dwells their lovely memory. Which sweetens e'en the bitter tears we she chases the sad and pining spirit's gloom. And weaves a halo round their dreary tomb.

LINES.

Ow you dark-bosom'd mountain
The sunbeams are glancing,
On lake and on fountain
The light ray is dancing;
But you mountain is dark, though the subbeams are bright,
And you fountain is cold, though 'tis quiveris' with light.

So one bosom with sadness Feels dark and oppress'd,

While around mirth and gladness Illumine each breast; [glow, And the smiles that to others with rapture may Leave that bosom alone to its darkness and wo.

BIOGRAPHY. SIR JOHN CARR.

This gentleman died at his house, in New Norfolk Street, on Tuesday, July 17th, of an affection of the heart, after a short illness of a few hours, at the age of 60. Twenty years since, Sir John was publicly known as the author of many books of travels in various parts of Europe. His "Stranger in France," writ-ten after his visit to that country in the year 1803, when the world was greedy for information respecting the character and manners of a people changed by the events of a revolution, and severed from our intercourse by the consequent war, was read with avidity. The light and rapid sketches, the spirit and gentlemanlike feeling which characterised his volumes, led to his recurring to that class of literature, which gratified the public, whilst it benefitted himself and his publisher. The pungent satire of M. Dubois, in "My Pocket-Book," and the law-proceedings consequent thereon, induced him to retire into the quiet of private life. It is but justice to say, that the light, cheerful character of his writings was harmless; for that they produced positive good, by giving one portion of mankind a better opinion of another, is shewn in the fact, that he received the compliment of knighthood from the Duke of Bedford, in the year 1806, for the liberal view which he had taken of the character of the people of Ireland. And he was solicited to visit America, that his generous and benevolent pen might assist in re-moving the prejudices which still exist too strongly between the children of a common mother.

Since the death of his lady, which cast a gloom over his remaining days, he lived in a little circle of affectionate friends, beloved and respected. His extensive observations of mankind had enriched his mind with a store of sketches and anecdotes; and these, in spite of his own occasional depression of spirits, never failed to exhilarate theirs, by his happy and humorous mode of relating them.

A friend of thirty years bears this inadequate testimony to his memory. — From a Correspondent.

SKRTCHES OF SOCIETY.

LOCOMOTION OF MEDICAL MEN.

SIR WALTER SCOTT has remarked, or is said to have remarked, that the only thing in nature he does not understand, is, Why a dog turns himself round three times before he goes to sleep? As a pendant to this might be given the quære of, Why a medical man goes to sleep without turning himself round at all? oscil-lating backwards and forwards between the county town and the village, like an oyster between the panels of his shell, and, like that respectable conchologist, never clearing the rock upon which destiny first cast him?

All civilised beings, with the exception of medical men, have their seasons for locomotion, their recreative journeys, their accredited furloughs from campaign duties; but this proscribed race, having by strange fatality been excluded from the general amnesty, now appear even themselves to acquiesce in the unjust decision, and to be satisfied with astronomical are fain to imagine. Conversation in London of fiction to work up in the way of illustrative motion,—the consciousness that they swing is to the mental appetite what human fiesh is peculiarity? And yet, this is the principle a through the blue ether with a velocity equal to | said to be to the palate of the lion, -nothing

It boots not to the faculty that the steamengine has gone far to annihilate geographical distance-that a highway has been run from the standard in Cornhill to the Theban obelisks-and that America, in the exuberance of courtesy, has literally turned herself inside out to the admiration of strangers, having by the aid of canals and rail-roads made her inland towns lie coast-wise open to observation. They must not touch the forbidden fruit, lest they should be amerced in the fee simple of custom and credit : but must continue to draw mathematical lines in the parallelograms of their respective districts, and to practise the monotonous see-saw of the ursine sloth with the inveterate assiduity of the beaver.

The citizen has his July, in which he visits the rarities of other kingdoms; the country shopkeeper makes his annual escape from the counter to pick up pebbles on Margate beach; even Oxford and Cambridge have their gaol release, when the disembogued students do the duty of loval subjects, by increasing the customdues at their respective ports of embarkation, on pilgrimages to the uttermost ends of the earth; whilst men, peculiarly fitted by educa-tion and practical talent to derive enjoyment from a cosmopolitan survey, and to increase knowledge by coining the golden dust of op-portunity into a legal tender, stay for ever at home, as if afraid confiscation of property would visit the misdemeanor of breathing the air of a distant province. Now this is a crying evil-a sin or shame, as it may chance to be by choice or necessity: voyons un peu.

The causes which induce medical men to stay at home, when all the rest of the world choose to travel, appear resolvable into three: to wit, the love of science, the love of human nature, and the love of money.

It may be said of the love of science, that it may possibly prompt a medical man to wish to see every sickness to an end—to finish his work; in which case he might chance to find himself in the predicament of the countryman, who stood in a doorway in Cheapside "till the crowd had gone by." But it might be replied to this, that, however engrossing the details of professional routine, an occasional intercourse with the leading men of his class, with an opportunity of verifying some of the new theories always affoat upon scientific subjects, seems absolutely required of the country practitioner by the duties of good citizenship. If he be a man of bold and original intellect, his reach of mind, often nearly valueless in the drudgery of provincial practice, may refresh itself and benefit others by an occasional divergement from his beaten tract. If, on the contrary, of inferior calibre, one who follows scrupulously the data of the schools, who feels responsibility a weight, and decision an embarrassment, it appears still more incumbent on him to freshen his powers by recurrence to the fountain-head of knowledge_to make himself conversant with the nascent doctrines, their tests and authorities shake himself in the light of day from the dust of prejudice-look up at the luminaries of his system, and set his watch by the sun. There is always something to teach or to learn in London, the Mammoth of cities. The truths ever orally circulating there in scientific society, would form a stock in trade of a handsomer description than the distant or disaffected that of their most volatile patients, and as the earth turns round upon its axis, "turn with it, heads or tails!"

Whether from the earth turns round upon its axis, "turn with it, heads or tails!" titioner seems to possess an eye as quick in detecting disease, as is that of the experienced lapidary in ascertaining the gem : he is so conversant with its appearance under every variety of form and colour, that he decides as by intnition; whilst the country artisan, of perhaps not meaner powers, having learned his business through a slower medium, must apply his test ere he can authenticate it. It is worthy of notice, that sick folks in the country are perpetually finding out, when they repair to the metropolis for relief under their several ailments, that they have been injudiciously treated in the provinces; and it is likewise noticeable, that when a London physician, considering a case from the country, prescribes a change of treatment, it is usual to legislate for his patient upon a broader principle, to merge local disease in general, and to carry the war from the out-posts to the citadel. These anomalies would happen less often, probably, if the faculty in the provinces, as well as their patients, made a religion of an annual journey to London; or occasionally went a little farther still, to investigate the phenomena of a disease in its locality, east or west, as it might happen. It seems un-grateful to allude to a reversion of a decree of the lower courts in the great emporium of science, when we consider the exceeding fa-tigue, of the life of a country practitioner.
"Rather than submit to the slavery and drudgery a provincial goes through," observed a London practitioner to me, "I would slide through life upon the sum that my education cost." But why does the country practitioner submit to it? Why does not he wrench off at least a tithe of the round year for his own private benefit? Why flicker about like the flail of a thrashing machine, rooted to his tiny lo-cality? If he will devise the punishment of a muttee for himself, the public can only say, like Dan in the Irish legend to the flying eagle who soared up with him till he was tired, "My dear sir, who axed you ?"

The love of human nature, set forth as a second objection to the locomotion of medical men, may be met on its own ground, by the old adage that charity begins at home. Self and family versus the public, would, in such a cause, gain the verdict in any court of equity in Christendom. I do not understand why a man should be expected to stay at home always for his patients, unless they return the courtesy by staying at home for him; the golden rule is quite forgotten by those who are selfish enough to desire it. The enjoyments attendant upon change of scene are so numerous, and its physical effects upon the frame so beneficial, that it is a grievous injustice to any class of men to require their abiding presence on one spot of earth. An unrelieved residence in the same place belittles the mind (to borrow an Americanism). The sanative effects of travel on the mind resemble those of a vapour-bath on the body, which purifies from the miasma of contagion, and gives tone and elasticity to the fibres. Did ever any created being hear of man, woman, or child, however predisposed to illness, staying at home, lest he, she, or it, should not, under possible disease, have the advice of the usual medical attendant? Would not such an iota in the conduct of any one make his next of kin look about him a "trifle?" Would it not be too improbable for the writer out of tenderness to the feelings of his patients. Let his patients go one way and himself another-trusting to Providence or the policeand either party will pick up new acquaintances to physic or be physicked by, and both will be merry. " How very kind every body is!" said a kinswoman of mine when the boatmen on the Medina took especial care of her during an aquatic excursion; and she was right-people are kind, very kind (till they are affronted)it is human nature to be so: any action contrary to kindness we reject as foreign to our constitutions; for lo! as saith Confucius, we call it "inhumanity!" and there is no question but that folks who fall sick on journeys are seldom lucrative, the latter are not to be are, for the most part, satisfied with stranger medical men; and, when they write to their friends, will declare, under their sign-manual, that Mr. So-and-so was uncommonly pleasant, and they felt quite at home with him, &c. &c. | curious fact - a solecism in a page of the book The besetting sin of medical men seems their of human life-that the liberality of medical manage a matter as well as himself, would fain public grants in their names, and in omission, be persuaded that a suspension of the laws of if we note in various neighbourhoods the laxity the sphere of his diurnal rotation. A ludicrous anecdote, illustrative of this, occurred a few years ago at Brighton: A little boy, ill with a and surgeon; the crisis of the disorder camemessengers were despatched for the facultythe physician arrived first—the child was at the last gasp-the physician opened the throat, and gave him instant relief: presently the surgeon came running, and, when he heard what had been done, expressed disapprobation, saying, as audibly as embarrassment of breathing allowed him, that it was a "very indelicate thing for a physician to perform any surgical operation whatever."

In the third objection, the love of money, or rather the fear of losing it, lies, perhaps, the gist of the question. But here, if I possessed the pen of a ready writer, I should be proud to employ it in eulogy of the benevolence of a class of men of whom "many have gladdened as well as lengthened life" (to generalise the elegant compliment of Pope to his friend "Let the thief go first, and the Arbuthnot). executioner follow," was the reply of Diogenes to a question of precedence between a lawyer and a physician. This was, to be sure, but an equivocal compliment of the cynic; but it proves, that early in the history of the world a difference was acknowledged between the rapacity of the two classes. The faculty, however, no longer follow their vocation on foot, but are like the ancient Britons in their mode of warfare, "some slay in chariots, and some on horses." From the days of Linacre to those of Warren, the names of medical men eminent for liberality, as well as talent and sagacity, are prominent in the splendid catalogue of British worthies. Hunter and Ratcliffe, Mead, Heberden, Arbuthnot, and Fothergill, are but a few of the muster-roll. But, for household pleasantness and minor hospitalities, commend us to the manes of Sir Walter Farquhar! the courtly Sir Walter! who had counted the pulses of all the dutchesses in the kingdom, but never forgot the face of an old friend; his solitary fault was swerving a little from the perpendicular when he found himself on the shadowy side of four-

The College of Physicians was founded in 1518, about which time the study of medicine in this country may be considered to have made for itself a "local habitation." This date, little chronology to the physic and divinity of the The students of the latter, if we country. believe their affidavits when they enter on professional duties, deny a search after temporalities to be their main object in entering the profession, whilst the medical men never pretend to any thing more than a terrestrial vocation. The clergy have a state provision, the faculty provide for themselves. The education of a medical man is prolonged and expensive; and when he has received it, being for the most part a younger son, he is considered by his kindred to have the title-deeds of his estate handed over to him: the first years of practice depended on in a profession unavailable by proxy, -that has no sinecures to bestow, and admits no slumbering on their laurels to its soldiery: yet, with all these drawbacks, it is a exclusiveness; each, fancying no other can men, both in commission, if we look only at nature would follow his temporary absence from with which they press money claims (albeit always expected to be forthcoming themselves with the liberality of the spiritual pastors of parallel further, at a time when the tide of public opinion (or say, if you like it better, detached currents of public opinion,) are setting in like a maelstroom upon the subject of the temporalities of the church of England; but will observe upon the particular of liberality, that the faculty have given "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over,"-and may it be meted unto them of the same! Et c'est tout, as the French say when they have expounded themselves, and " to return to our mutton:"-if the resignation of a few weeks annually would diminish a medical man's income by striking off more than the average gains of those few weeks, excursions must be postponed, like Dr. Drowsy's sermons, to a fitter opportunity; for, so far from travel then benefiting the health and increasing happiness, it would be very possible, with a foreboding of pecuniary shortcomings, to commit indigestion under the eye of Mont Blanc, and to jaundice the liver with the spray of Shauffhausen. But I contend that such would not be the case. "Cut boldly," said the augur to the King of Rome, and he severed the whetstone accordingly. Any medical man determined to free himself from his strait-waistcoat would be little likely to lose patients of the more substantial class; and of chance customers he would have neighbour's fare when his brethren respectively journeyed likewise. And I doubt not but such an enterprising individual would soon make himself so popular and distingué by his novel line of conduct, as to furnish an argument on the subject against which one might lean one's back as a post.

When I contrast the joy and health attendant upon an excursion down the Rhine, as set forth by Dr. Granville, to be performed at a very fractionary charge of time and money, with the galley-slave toiling at the oar of a country practitioner along the warm channel On Saturday, Mr. Mathews closed his enter-of his daily progress, I console my benevolence tainments at this house, and made his bow to by indulging the fantasy of Soame Jennings, who wrote a whimsical essay to prove the docretribution it afforded for every misdemeanour:

medical man must act upon, if he tarry at home testantism in England, gives nearly the same tary, the desolator of Asia, was at that instant chased by the overseers from parish to parish in search of a settlement, under the semblance of a weary travelling woman, with two small children hanging at her back, and two in her arms: hence I entertain no doubt that the individuals so hardly dealt with, of whose untoward fate we so amiably volunteer a project of amelioration, are now only expiating offences against the law of kindness, committed when in a prior state of being, they inhabited this earth of ours as nervous ladies, whose egregious selfishness prompted them to oust their medical attendants from the shelter of their own roofs at all hours of the night and day, without regard to times and seasons, to administer w imaginary ailments!

New Town, Bedford, July 2, 1832.

B. E. M.

DRAMA.

ENGLISH OPERA, OLYMPIC THEATRE.

On Monday the Dilosk Gatherer, or the Eagle's Nest, a melo-drama, was produced at this theatre with success; the vocal music being selected by Mr. Hawes, and the instrumental by Mr. S. S. Wesley. It is well known that we are at the call of the public), will brave comparison not immensely fond of this species of compasition, or rather, indeed, that we have an espequinsy, was attended conjointly by a physician their respective vicinities. I will not press the cial and general aversion to it. Nor did the Eagle's Nest change our opinion. The story is of a child (the offspring of a secret marriage between a noble youth and a fisherman's daughter) with whom the said eagle flies away, leaving its mother in a state of distraction, and, subsequently, its father too. Ultimately the high-born father climbs the rocks, and rescues his more high-borne son; and his mother shocks the big beast of a bird. Nothing could exceed the deep tragedy, except the natural pathos of Miss Kelly's acting when bereaved of her child; but it is curious to say, that the very perfective of her performance destroyed the rest of the piece. Who could endure, if they felt the force of her extraordinary powers, the immediate rebound to common humour and the farcically of an Irish pedagogue and his scholars? We could not: to us it was like going from a death-bed to Punch's opera. We see it said in the newspapers that Miss Kelly was painfully correct, which is true enough: we, for ourselves, dislike martyrdoms in painting, but he cannot dislike such an exhibition of passion as Miss Kelly gives, per se; what we dislike is a martyrdom with a trifle-dish in the picture.

Call again To-morrow; such is the popular title of a smart and likely to be popular one act farce, from the pen of Mr. Trueba, produced at this theatre on Thursday. A spendthrift, dunned almost to death, affords excelent scope for the talent of Mr. Wrench, who deserves every credit for the manner in waid he evades and manages his numerous creditors The piece was altogether successful, and wiraise a laugh, whenever desired, to the end d the season.

Two fine German boys, of the name of Eichhorn, pupils of M. Spohr, play duets es the violin with much skill and precision.

ADELPHI.

a numerous audience, whom he had delighted as much after the fag of forty representations trine of transmigration by the well-balanced as if he had just started fresh on his archives race. It is impossible to glance back on these he felt certain, he said, that many a court lady exhibitions without again expressing our were for itself a "local habitation." This date, little would revive in the person of one of her caranterior to that of the establishment of Proriage-horses, and that the great Khan of Tatalent they display. The assumption of so many and such different characters; the perfect personation of male and female, old and young; and the rich colouring of humour thrown over the whole, render them altogether unique. We ne'er shall look upon their like.

VARIETIES.

Agricultural Employment for the Poor of the Metropolis.—At a meeting on Thursday week, at the King's Head, Poultry, Mr. Sadler delivered an animated address on this subject. We have always advocated this simple yet efficient plan, and we do trust to see it carried into effect, and diffusing comfort and contentment where now only want and misery dwell. We firmly believe that there are thousands of acres of waste land around London, which (besides the relief to the poor) it would speedily cover with smiling cottages and convert into regions of plenty.

Death of Count Chaptal .- The Paris papers mention the death of this celebrated chemist, at an advanced age.

The Penny Story-Teller, No. I .- August first, like the first of every month for a while past, has brought a new train of cheap publications. Among these we have to acknowledge the receipt of the Penny Story-Teller, with a tale of Genoa, another of Gordon the Gipsy, and a third begun. We have also

The Doctor, No. I. which is to furnish a new system of domestic medicine, in weekly Nos. The frontispiece represents the organs of digestion,-enough in itself to move the bowels of the public in favour of the work; but it is hardly fair to pun on such a representation, and could only be excused in a critic born to die-jesting.

The Anglo-German Advertiser begins well with its No. I., and has one peculiar merit, that most readers will only be able, or need, to read one half of it, being one column German, the other English. Of course we shall expect more from its foreign than its home intelligence; and accordingly find the account of the Bavarian Walhalla good, and the Sketch of Madame Schræder Devrient interesting. She was born at Hamburgh in 1805, is the daughter of Players, and came out at ten years old as a dancer. She is married and has four children.

Le Cercle, No. I. Too dear at sixpence : but at a lower rate, containing three languages, French, English, and Italian, and some pleasing and valuable matter, would, in our opinion, meet with friends. The lists of foreign publications is very useful: the notices and original papers well written.

Governesses' Mutual Assurance Society. Having thought and spoken well of this design at its origin, we are not indisposed to adopt the following communication, though from an anonymous correspondent. The directors of the Governesses' Mutual Assurance Society have just published their annual report. By the auditors' account, the funds of the Society seem in a very favourable condition, and the directors confidently recommend it to the notice of the public. It seems to us, that governesses, above all persons, are dependent upon youth and health for the exercise of their profession. In sickness and old age they are frequently destitute. We recommend, therefore, our fair readers to turn their attention to this admirable Institution, in which a refuge may be found against some of those changes and chances to which their life is subject.

Paganini was to conclude his engagement at Covent Garden last night; and we presume did The course has been very successful.

made in the House of Commons by Mr. Spring and therefore easily read in the squares of the Rice, the secretary of the Treasury. It is, to allow the University of Aberdeen 500l. a-year, in lieu of the works presented to it by publishers, as one of the eleven bodies entitled to this gift; and to exchange these books, so surrendered, for others published on the Continent. This would really be an odd way of huckstering. If Aberdeen does not want the books, in the sense of a very onerous act of legislation, let it relieve the sufferers so partially taxed; and if it be expedient, as we think it is, to interchange English with foreign publications, surely a thousand or two thousand pounds a-year ought to be voted for that national purpose.

A New System of Secret Writing .- Of this invention, by Charles Baron de Drais, a specimen has been sent to us, which we are sorry we cannot sufficiently explain without its accompanying lithography, for the accurate information of our readers. It pretends to perfection as a secret cipher, to facility of acquirement. to despatch in writing, and to capability of infinite variation, in which, in truth, consists its being a sealed writing except to a party possessed of the key. The New Leipsig Magazine, for all new inventions, declares that it possesses these qualities; and apparently it does so, though very simple in contrivance. Several sheets of paper are divided into a square of squares, sixteen in breadth and sixteen in length,—in all 256; and these again are subdivided, like windows, into smaller squares or panes, twenty-five in each, which smaller squares have a key of the letters of the alphabet promiscuously arranged, as a, p, o, i, h, g, &c. Thus provided, the sheets of paper are laid exactly upon each other, and pierced through with a thick needle in two places (where it may please the writer), in order to procure fixed or central points, and distributed among the correspondents; so that each receives one at least for writing and another for reading. Those for reading are never to be pierced in more than two holes. In writing upon a wooden frame, canvassed, one or several sheets of paper are fixed, so that they do not move, and upon them the lithographed sheet is placed. Then, say the instructions, pierce all through in the central points with a rather thick needle, and look for any letter you intend to represent in the key or lettered square, and with a fine needle pierce the small square, which, according to the rule, represents the intended or desired letter. Upon the conclusion of a word, leave one square empty, instead of a comma two, instead of a period three, and at the end of a sentence four squares; but if it should be desirable to save more space, you may represent a syllable, and frequently a word, in each square, by piercing the first letter heavy and the second lighter, and by abridging the word of all unnecessary letters. In the place of stops, the dividing lines may be pierced at the end of a word once, for a comma twice, for a period thrice, and at the conclusion of a sentence four times, But, for the express purpose of leading those astray who are not intended to read it, the direction of the writing may be upwards or downwards, instead of from left to right, &c. &c. The writing being finished, one of the pricked sheets of paper must be sent to each of the correspondents. For reading: - the newly received sheet of paper being placed upon the lithographed sheet, the central points must be brought exactly over each other, and both sheets being placed against the window, Literature and Publishing. — A proposition or, by night, before a candle, the holes in the of rather an extraordinary character has been lately received sheet will be easily perceived, lithographed sheet. The alteration of the fixed points alters the whole. Such is the plan of the Baron de Drais, which is at least worth a trial, to see if it works well.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

The Refugee in America, a Novel, by Mrs. Trollope, Author of "the Domestic Manners of the Americans." The fifth and concluding volume of Our Village, by Miss Mitford.

of Europe.

The Pilgrim of Erin.

Hours of Reverie, or the Musings of a Solitaire, by L. U. K. Coutier.

L.U. K. Coutier.

Reflexions sur l'Etude des Langues Asiatiques, adressées à (feu) Sir James Mackintosh, et suivies d'une Lettre à M. H. H. Wilson, ancien Secrétaire de la Société Asiatique de Calcutta, elu Professeur à Oxford,—are announced as being in preparation from the pen of Professor A. W. de Schlegel. This essay, from so celebrate and experienced a scholar, it is expected will contain some interesting and valuable considerations on the principal languages and literary productions of the East, especially of the Sanscrit; an investigation of great importance, considerad with reference to the intimate connexion subsisting between the oriental languages and those of Europe.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Rogers' Memoir of Rogers, 12mo. 5s. bds. — Brett's Astronomy, Part I. Plane Astronomy, 8vo. 10s. bds. — Savage on Printing-Ink, 8vo. 2l. 2s. bds. — E. Wilson's Sermons for Sunday Evenings, 12mo. 5s. bds. — The Ketformer, 3 vols. post 8vo. 1l. 7s. bds. — Mirabeau's Letters from England, 2 vols. 8vo. 2ls. bds. — Baskets of Fragments, 12mo. 3s. cloth. — Luther and the Reformation, by Scott, Vol. II. 12mo. 6s. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

July.		Th	mete	Barometer.
Thursday. 26		From !	50.	to	to 71.	30:12 Stationary
Friday		• • • • •	49.		71.	30.08	to	30.14
Saturday	28		50.	• •	70.	30.17	• •	30:30
Sunday	20	• • • •	51.	• •	71.	30.35	• •	30.29
Monday .	30	• • • • •	43.		73.	30:30	• •	30.34
Tuesday			42.	••	73.	30.22	••	30.14
Wednesday	1		44.		71.	30.07	to	30.01

Wednesday 1 44. ... 71. 30-07 to 30-01 Wind, N. and N.E. Except the first and last two days, generally clear; rain in the evening of the 1st inst.

On Monday evening, about five minutes before nine, a meteor of a rather extraordinary kind made its appearance in the northern part of our hemisphere. It was first seen in Camelopardalis, whence it slowly proceeded in a direction towards Coma Berenices, near to which constellation the meteor disappeared. Though scarcely dark enough to render even the pointers of Ursa Major visible, yet the meteor shone with great splendour; and by one more fortunate than myself, having observed its transit complete, its light was thought sufficient to have caused a shadow. But the more remarkable fact is, that the train, which was about 8° in length, remained visible and clearly defined for more than 3°. The evening was remarkably calm. remarkably calm. Edmonton CHARLES H. ADAMS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS. We have received the note of Tracts of the Metropoli-tan Temperance Society, about which we know very little, except that one of them points out the folly and dreadful consequences of inn-temperance. Much obliged to B. E. M., but cannot compliment him

N. P. is about the foremost writer of nons

N. P. is about the foremost writer or houseness with whom we ever met; yet, though he is almost the first in his line, we must decline his favour.

We entirely agree with Mr. William Twopenny in his remarks on the taste and effects of collecting fragments of ancient architecture, and, indeed, believe that much stronger arguments might readily be adduced to enforce his views. There is a good public spurit altracal upon this or ancient arcineture, and, instea, bettee that flucts stronger arguments might readily be adduced to enforce his views. There is a good public spirit abroad upon this subject, as well as upon the expediency of erecting new architectural buildings to adorn the metropolis, while at the same time they are devoted to receive and preserve productions of high intellect and the fine arts. The narrow mindel policy which could not see, even by its own glimmering light, that refinements and luxuries were the aurest "fructifiers" of pounds, shillings, and pence, either individually or nationally, is yielding to truth and reason: and we have only to regret that in the most recent instance of their triumph—we allude to the erection of a National Gallery—there has been so much parsimony and so dangerous a delay as to the time of finishing the structure. Were a private nobleman or gentleman to build a gallery, would he require paltry instalments and three long years to complete it?—it is ludicrous and competible for the British nation to expend only 50,000c, on so important a work, and to be able to allow no more taking.

ADVERTISEMENTS,

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

MALL.
The Gallery, with a Selection from the Works of the Ancient Masters of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English Schools, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till Six in the Admission, 1s.—Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.—The Classes in the Faculty of Medicine commence on the 1st of ctober. Those in the Faculties of Arts on the 1st, and of Law n the 7th of November.

lasses may be had at the University, and

GOVERNESSES' MUTUAL

OVERNESSES' MUTUAL
ANSURANCE NOCIETY. Enrolled under the protection, and with the privileges of an Act, 10 teo. IV. c. 55.
Under the Patronage of
H. R. H. the Princess Augusts.
H. R. H. the Dunhess of Kent.
In this Society, Annutiles and Provision in case of Sickness may be made on the part of Ladice engaged in Education.
Communications to be addressed (post paid) to the Rev.
W. J. E. Bennett, Secretary, 44, Devonshire Street, Pertland Place.

Place.

Subscriptions and Donstions will be received by Messas. Drummond. Messrs. Gostings and Sharpe, and Messas. Brummond. Messrs. Gostings and Sharpe, and Messas. Brunters; and by Messrs. Brunterton, Waterion Place and St. Paul's Churchyard, and Messrs. Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly: where Prospectuses may be had, gratts, and the Book of Rules, price 1s.

HOOPERN VILLA, EXETER. Mr. WM. WILL'S begs most respectfully to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public generally, that he will sell by Auction, on Monday, August the 13th, and Four following Days, the whole of the valuable Gallery of Faintings, Engravings, and select Library of the late Vim. Kendall, Fig. deceased.

Among the Faintings, are fine specimens of the following Masters:—

Leonardo da Vinoi Pynaker Ber Jordaesa Vandyke Mol Rubons Sir J. Reynolds Bra Watteau Canaletti Hou A splendid Landscape by Wilson Brawer Houghtenburgh

Among the many Engravings, are the Works of About Durer G. Andras Vischer
Boiswert Baudet Vanni
Miolts Kchmidt Edelinck
Callot Wooltet Raphi. Menghen Baudet Schmidt Woollet Scacciati Callot Polidoro

Callot Woollet Baphl. Merghem Polidoro Scarciati
Including a superb Set of the celebrated Battles of Le Brun. The Library comprises upwards of 1,000 Volumes, and contains various of the Delphin Classics—Dibdin's Works—Various Scenery by Batty, Corkhurn, and others—Canova's Works—Foster, British, and Niefford Galleries—Lodge's Portraits, folio—Brockedon's Advised Scarce Scarce Containing Scarce Containing Bronze Models of the Elvin Marbles.

The whole of the above will be on view at Hoopern Ville, Wedneyddy, August 1, and eight foliowing days, from 11 to 4 (Sundays accepted), by Catalognes, at One Shilling seach, without which will be can be admitted; but the Engravings can be riewed only special Appointment with the Auctioneer. The Sale will take place at Congdon's Reyal Subscription Reoms, Exeter, where can be admitted; but the Engravings can be riewed only special Appointment with the Auctioneer. The Sale will take place at Congdon's Reyal Subscription Reoms, Exeter, where Catalogness may be had; and of Longman and Co. Bookselier, Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London, Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Paternoster Rew; Harding and Lepard, Pail Mail East, London; Editors; Collin's Library, Bails; Pails Faire's Journal Office, Bristoi; Wheaton's Golden Lion, Honton; Whiddon's Royal Hotel, Piymouth; Mr. Bray, Bookseller, Lucueston; Somernet Arms, Totnes; Cockram's Hotel, Teigmmouth; Chepman's Reoms, Exmouth; and at the Office of the Auctioneer, 20, North Bireet, Extensi

Surrey Zoological Gardens.

This day is published, Part I. royal 4to. price 2s. 6d.;
Proofs on India paper, 6s.;
Proofs on India paper, 6s.;
ILUSTRATIONS of the SURREY
ZOLOGICAL GARBENS, drawn from Nature on Stone, with Descriptive Letter-press,
W. H. KEARNEY.
A. Schloss, 108, 8t. Martin's Lans, Charing Cross.

Just published, price 4s. 6d. Part II. of

THE BYRON GALLERY; a Series of splendid Historical Plates to illustrate the Poetical Works of Lord Byron. Beautifully engraved from Drawings and Paintings by the most celebrated Artists, and adapted by their size and excellence to bind up with and embellish every edition
of Lord Byron's Works.
A limited number of Proofs have been taken on royal quarte, price, on plain paper, 6s.; India, 7s. 6d.; India, before the letters, 10s. 6d.
"It was with no ordinary astisfaction that was with no ordinary astisfaction.

price, on plain paper, or, same, reter, lot. 6d.

"It was with no ordinary satisfaction that on examining the
"It was with no ordinary satisfaction that on examining the Pirst Part of this. 'Gallery' we found it not only be greatly in the exceed our unmost expectations, comply of secution. It consists of five many variety, all exacuted in the most finished style of art.
One plate alone is worth more than twice the very moderate sum charged for the whole number. This 'Gallery' is an indispensable accompaniment to every edition of the noble poet's works."

—Catedonian Mercery.

Published by Smith, Bider, and Co. Cornhill.

This day is published, price $2.6d.

THE SECOND PART of LANDSCAPE

ILLUSTRATIONS to the PROSE and POETICAL
WORKS of SIR WALTER SCOTT, containing Four beautifully segrated Views, and a Potract of "Mysic Rapper" (Moaastary), by Prentia, with Descriptive Letters of Co. Pall Mall;
Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand, Moon and Co. Pall Mall; and J. Fraser, Regent Street.

MECHANICAL PERSPECTIVE. Description of a Patent Pocket Instrument for Sketching freely and accurately from Nature, and of a Machine for Drawing in Perspective, from Measurements or from Plans and Elevations.

By FRAS. RONALDS, Esq.

Sold by R. Hunter, St. Paul's Churchyard, &c. &c.

The Instruments themselves may be seen in use at Mr. Cary's, 181, Strand; Mestrs. Hoizapffe's, 64, Charing Cross, &c.

They differ essentially from the Camera Lucida, the action having no dependence upon artificially refracted or reflected ight.

THE FIFTH PART of FINDEN'S LINDSCAPE ILLUSTRATIONS to LORD BYRON'S LIPE and WORKS, containing—

1. The Acropolis, Athense. J. M. W. Turner, B.A.
2. Santa Maura C. Atandeld
S. Mark Mark
St. Mark
Athense. C. Stanfeld
C. Stanfeld
C. Stanfeld
C. Stanfeld

A few India Proofs, price 7s. 6d., and plain Proofs, 5s. are taken; with these are given proof impressions of the Frontispiece and Vignette to the Fifth Volume of Leed Byron's Life and Works.

rs. hn Murray, Albemarle Street; sold also by Charles Tilt, Fleet Street.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

The Third and concluding Volume, with a fine Portrait of Queen Elizabeth, MEMOIRS of the GREAT LORD BURGHLEY, Secretary of State in the Reign of King Bdward VI. and Lord High Treasures of Bngland in the Reign of King of Queen Elizabeth; containing an Historical View of the Times in which he lived, and of the many eminent and illustrious Persons with whom he was connected; with Extracts from his Private forrespondence and Journals, now first published from the Originals.

Originals.

By the Rev. Dr. NARES, Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.

"This elaborate work is of the highest scalonal interest: it embraces and discusses a multitude of great historical, biographical, religious, and political questions, and thous much light upon an era of almost unparalleled national and universal importance."—Liferary (cartic.

Henry Celburn and Richard Bentley, New Barlington Street.

The most comprehensive Interest Tables at Five per Cent extent.
The 9th edition, carefully revised, in 1 thick vol. 8 vo. price 17.1s.; or may be had separate, Part I. from One to One Hundred Days, and One Month up to Twelve, 7s. ed.

"ABLES of INTEREST, calculated at Five per Cent, shewing, at one view, the Interest of any Sum from One Pound to Ten Thousand Pounds, from One Day to Thirtees Vests. To which are added, Tables for calculating Commission on Sales of Goods or Banking Accounts, from One-Eighth to Five per Cent, &c. &c.

By JOSEPH KING, Liverpool.
Sold by Longman and Co. and C. Tilt, London; and G. and J. Robinson, Liverpeel.

In 8vo. price 6s. boards,

THE DUTY of a CHRISTIAN PEOPLE under DIVINE VISITATIONS, with Prayers.
By the Rev. NEWTON 8MART, M.A.
Of University College, cambridge.
Londom: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall; and soid by J.
Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly; and other Booksellers.

Of whom may be had, separately,
The Prayers to be used in Times of great kness or Postlemos, price 1d. or 7s. 6d. per Hundred.

Cuvier's Natural History. Part XXXIII. the Sixth of the Class Insects, of

THE ANIMAL KING DO M, described and arranged in conferency with in organization.

By the late BARON CUVIER.

Member of the Institute of France, &c.

Translated, with large additional descriptions of all the circ hitherto named, and of many not before noticed, and it other original master, by E. Griffiths, F.L.S., C. Banks Smith, F.L.S., E. Pidgeon, John Edward Gray, F.O.S., and others.

mean Society, by J. E. Bichene, Rey. Secretary.

The Class Messmalia,
Complete in 19 Parts, with upwards of 500 Engraving, senig ô vois. in extra cleach beards, demy 8vc. It. sc.; repairs 18: 18.

"This is a valuable, or rather invaluable well. It is not clear and simple classification of Curier voy faith where to English reader, and it presents to the continental one the reconstructions, which have of late beam so largely madely a countrymen in those parts of the world to which he much of which is not excluded form, is which the same many rolumes, chiefly upon other samples, and the senigrated form is the same of the senigrated form.

The Class of Birds.

The Class of Birds,

Complete in 9 Parts, forming 8 vois seny 8m M. St.; repi 8vo. M. St.; ditto coloured, 101. 180.; desty 8vo. India prod.
101. 18c.

"The editors of this superior performance-certainly the isof the kind now in course of publication, broad all companies—prosecute their labours with unhalting diligance."—Southly Magnatine.

Magusine. The Class of Repilla,
Complete in 1 vol. denny 8 vo. 11, 164: repil 8vs. 8.14: 17vi
Svo. coloured, 8t. 18v: denny 4 vo. 11, 164: repil 8vs. 8t. 18:
"We have more than oase noticed this wet is its prepretowards completion, and bestowed our meed of prise on to:aductors, for the judicious manner in which they have back interesting illustrations of the habits and nature of minals will the scientific system of Cuvier."—Literary Genetic.

the scientific system of Cuvier."—Literary Genetic.

Complete in 7 Parts, forming 2 vois demy five. d. dr.; repl in ed. repl in view, July 1889.

The Radiata, Pishes, Mollinea, Crustans, &c.

Will form about 16 Parts.

The work is so arranged, for the convenience of the ris may confine their Zoological studies to either of the flat.

each Class will make a distinct work, as well as set of the via a distinct work, as well as set of the interest of the Wandmal Kingdom. The conclusion will cannot Tarbular View of the System, a copious Index, and a gent Tarbular View of the System, a copious Index, and a gent of execution, by different Artists of distinguished seines. Most of them are from original drawings make from armount of execution, by different Artists of distinguished converse from a copious and account of the work of the server for the form of the server of the form of the server of the form of the form of the form of the server form of the form of the server form of the server of the form of the form of the server form of the serve

VIEW of the LEGAL INSTITUTION

A VIEW of the LEGAL INSTITUTION.

However Hereditary Offices, and Feeds Barnin, sebilabed in Ireland during the reign of Endery the Seest, induced from Cert volts, tagget of the Seest, induced from Cert volts, tagget of the Seest, induced from Cert volts, and the segment of the content of The Law of Elections in the ancient Clies and Towns, Sec.

The above is the only work as yet uphilabed on the raise, and during the discussions which took place less west of lightities, in the House of Lords, it was cited by count for it of the contending parties as a work of terraing and reserving containing important decuments.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Lague.

UNIVERSAL FRENCH GRAMMAR Blomoniary French Works. being an Accurate System of French Accid By NICHOLAS HAMEL New edition, 4s. bound.

Orammatical Exercises upon the French Laguage, compared with the English. by N. Hamel. 46. bond.

Questions adapted to Hamel's Exercises, culated to perfect Sundents in a Knowledge of the French Laguage: with a Key. 56.

Key to Hamel's French Exercises, 3c. bond.

Would be the Second

World in Miniature, containing an Acoustic the different countries in the World, with Reference is the essential Rules of the French Language prefixed. By N. Einel. New edition, 4c. 4c. bound.

Key to Chambaud's French Exercises By

Explanatory Pronouncing Dictionary of the EXPIBIBIOTY Fronouncing Dictionary or French Language, in French and English, when the re-French Land Articulation of every Syllable are distinctly said. By L'Abbé Tardy. Gr. bound. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longua-and Whittaber, Treacher, and Amet-

Braser's Greek Gradus. 24 edition, now 18s. beards

GREEK GRADUS; or, Greek, Latin, and

TREEK GRADUS; or, Greek, Latin, and English Prosodial Lexicon; containing the Interpretation, in Latin and English of all Words which occur in the Greek Potes, from the earliest period to the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and also the Quantities of each Syllable; thus combining the advantaces of a Lexicon of the Greek Potes and a Greek Gradus. For Schools and Colleges. In I thick vol. 8vo.

By the Rev. J. BRASSE, D.D.

Late Fellow of Trin. Col. Cam.

It has been the object to present, in a comprehensive form, a manual, containing the three pretains on comprehensive form, a manual, containing the three pretains on the comprehensive form, a manual, containing the containing the containing of the containing the containing of the containing the containing of the containing the containing the containing of the containing the Caise for taste, learning, and manning.

"cekly Render."

Printed by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in Town and Country.

Of whom may be hed,
Stedition, 16e, beards, 17e, bound,
Stedition, 16e, beards, 17e, bound,
Schrevelius' Greek and English Lexicon, with many new Words. By the Rev. J. R. Major, Master of King's Coll. School. To this edition is added, a copious English and Greek Lexicon.

Valpy's Greek Teslament. 3d edition, with improvements, 3 vols. 8vo. 2l. 5s.

REEK TESTAMENT, with English REEK TESTAMENT, with English Tons.

Notes, containing Critical, Philological, and Explanatory Notes in English from the most emissest critics and hara-revences to Vigerus for Idioms, and Bos for Ellipses. To which is prefixed, about Treatise on the Doctrines of the Greek Article, according to Bishop Middleton, Mr. Granville Sharpe, &c. briefly and compendiously explained as applicable to the Criticism of the New Testament. The various Readings are recorded under the Text. Greek and English Indexes areaded at the end.

Two Plates are given, one illustrative of the Travels of the Apostles, and the other a Map of Judes, and a Plan of the City and Temple of Jerusalem.

* * To this third edition have been added Parallel References, from the plan of Blahop Lloyd's little volume.

This work is intended for Students in Divinity as well as the library.

This work is intended for Students in Divinity as well as the library.

"After a minute examination, the author of the present manual considers this edition of the Greek Testament as the most valuable of any that has yet been published with critical and philogical apparatus, especially for students who wish to purchase only one edition of the Greek Testament." Herne's Introduction to the Bible.

"This Greek Testament, with English Notes, is a valuable only one edition of the Greek Testament.——nevers a manuscion to the Bible.

"This Greek Testament, with English Notes, is a valuable accession to the aids of the under-graduates, the divinity student, and even the theologian. It is preceded by a very able summary of the important decrine of the Greek article—a field on which Socionanism, with all its affected display of studition, has been so signally folled. We cordially recommend it to our readers: and those who wish to purchase only one comprehensive copy of the fireck Testament, and that not very expensive, will find this edition the very object of their search."—Caristian Remembrancer.

"The young divine will find this work not only a asfe guide in his studies, but the best which he can obtain within the compass of the same price and size."—Classical Journal.

Also. 3d edition, in I thick vol. 8vo. $1s.

iof the same price and size."—Classical Journal.

Also, 3d edition, in 1 thick vol. 8vo. $1s.

Greek Septuagint, with the Apocrypha, edited by A. J. Valpy, from the Oxford edition of Ros and Holmes.

This edition is handsomely printed in 1 vol. 8vo. hotpressed.

For use in churches and chapels, as well as the library.

"This elegantly executed volume is very correctly printed, and (which cannot but recommend it to students in preference to the incorrect Cambridge and Amsterdam reprints of the Vatical text) its price is so reasonable as to place it within the reach of almost every one."—Hern's Introduction to the Bible.

"a" The Septuagint and Testament may be had in four uniform volumes.

Printed and published by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lien Court, Pricet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in London, Oxford, and Cambridge.

In Svc. 18c. boards,

I ISTORY of CHARLEMAGNE, with a
Sketch of the State and History of France from the Fall of the Roman Empire to the Rise of the Carlovingian Dynasty.

By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

For the Clergy, or Heads of Parishes or Pani Neatly printed, with Woodcuts, price 5s.

THE MEDICAL ANNUAL; or, Reece's THE MEDICAL ANNUAL; or, Recce's

Catalogue of Brugs (in English), containing a popular

Account of all the valuable Discoveries in Medicine within the last Twenty Years; Representations of the most approved in Efficacy; a complete of Modern Freecriptions of Established

Efficacy; a complete of Modern Freecriptions of Established

Efficacy; a complete and Acults; then, with their Properties and Doses to Children and Acults; then, with their Properties for the Michigan State of the cure of which their selection for their for the Michigan State of the cure of which his added, a Description of the dif ferent Medicine-Chesta, with an enumeration of their Contents, as adapted to different Climates and uses; a List of such Medi cines as are necessary to be kept by Families residing in the Cou tines, and the Auxiliaries used in Medicine.

By REECE and COMPANY, Chemists,

Medicial Hall, 170, Piccadilly,

"This is a very convenient work, and contains, in a short com nas, a great deal of useful medical information."—Critical Re tice.

Published by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Court;

Published by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Court; and sold by all Booksellers.

Professor Scholefield's Euripides.
In Sro. price lds. boards, the 3d edition of URIPIDIS TRAGEDIÆ priores quatuor.

URIPIDIS TRAGGEDIAE priores quatuor.

Ad fidem Manuacriptorum emandaise et brevibus notis emendationum potissimum rationes reddentibus instructure. Edidir RICARDUS PORSON, A.M.

Gracarum Literarum apud Cantabrigienses olim Professor Regius. Recensuit susaque Notulas subjectit

JACOBUS SCHOLEFIELD, A.M.

Collegii SS. Trinitatis Socius et Gracarum literarum

Professor Regius.

Cantabrigis: Veneunt apud J. et J. J. Deighton; et J., G., et P. Rivington; Longman et Soc.; G. Ginger; E. Williams; Baldwin et Cradock; Whittaker et Soc.; Black et Soc.; Simpkin et Marshall; Cowie et Soc.; et S. Walker, Londini.

Of whom may be had,

Æschyli Tragœdiæ Septem. Cum Fragmentis a.M. 8vo. 10s.

THIRD GREEK DELECTUS; or, New Analect Majora Greea, with English Notes, Prose and Verse, containing the Substance of Dalzell's three vols. Intended to be used after the Second Greek Delectins. By the Rev. F. VALPY, Head Master of Reading School. Printed and published by A. J. Valpy, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in Town and Country.

Also, Second Greek Delectus; or, Analecta Mi-2d edition, 9s. 6d

First Greek Delectus. By Dr. Valpy. 10th

Greek Exercises. 2d edition, 6s. 6d.

Of the same Booksellers may be had, Second Latin Exercises .. First Latin Exercises
Latin Delectus
Second Latin Delectus
Terenor's Andrian, Bagitah Notes
Latin Urammar
Latin Vocabulary
Latin Dialogues
Cicero Amicitia et Sensetuse, Bragitah Notes, by Barker
Germany and Agricols of Gradus, without Verses or Phrases or Phrases or Phrases or Horace, with English Notes.

Horace, no Notes of Horace, no Notes or Horace, no Notes or Horace, no Notes or Horace, with English Section of Order or Horace, with Heyne's Text, and Delphin Letin Notes, no Orde Cassar's Commentaries, ditte

s The same, with English Notes.
C. Nepos, with English Source and Questions, by Bradley Estroyens, ditte Guide Metamorphoes, ditto.
Listus Procedy, by ditto.
Listus Procedy, Cesar's Commentaries, ditte
Juvenal, ditto
Sallust, ditto
Juvenal, Text only, 13mo
Ditto, English Nets
Elegantic Lating

. Ask for Valpy's editions of the above.

Reith's Mathematical and Gasgraphical Works, &c. &c.

NEW TREATISE on the USE of the GLOBES, or a Philosophical View of the Earth and Heavens; comprehending an Account of the Figure, Magnitude, and Motion of the Earth; with the natural Changes of its Surface, caused by Floods, Earthquakes, &c. 18ms. with Plates, &c. &c. bound and lettered.

rice, esseed by Floods, Earthquakes, &c. Isma. with Plate, 67. 64. bound and lettered.

Elements of Plane Geometry, containing the First Six Beats of Euclid, from the Text of Dr. Sissson; with Netse, Critical and Explanatory. Te which are added, Beat VII. including several important Propestions which are not in Euclid; Beak VIII. consisting of Fractical Geometry; Book IX. Introduction to the Theory and Beak X. of the Geometry of Bolds. Svo. 3d edition, 10s. 6d. boards.

Introduction to the Theory and Practice of Plane and Spherical Trigonometry, and the Stereographic Projection of the Sphere, including the Theory of Navigation; comprehending a variety of Rules, Formule, &c.; with their practical applications to the Mensuration of Heights and Distances, &c. Svo. 5th edition, 14s. boards.

System of Geography, on an entirely New Plan, in which the recent Alterations in the Division of the Continent are carefully stiended to. Itmo. new edit. 6s. boand.

Arithmetician's Guide, or a Complete Exer-

Arithmetician's Guide, or a Complete Exere-Book, for the Use of Public Schools and Private Teachers, by illiam Taylor. 12mo. new edition, 2s. 6d. bound.

Key to the same, by W. H. White, 4s. bound. Introduction to Practical Arithmetic, in Two Parts, with various Notes and occasional Directions for the Use of Learners, by Thomas Melineux. 18mo. Part I. 14th edition, 2s. 6d. beand. Part II. 4th edition, 2s. 6d.

Keys to both Parts, 6d. each. London: Longman, Ress, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

THE LIFE and PONTIFICATE of SAINT PIUS the FIFTH. Subjoined is a Re-impr of a Historic Deduction of the Episcopal Oath of Allegias e Pops in the Church of Rome. By the Rev. JOSEPH MENDHAM, M.A. Printed for James Dumon, 60, Extensever Rew.

Abridged into English for Schools and Colleges,

VIGER on the GREEK IDIOMS. 8vo.

2s. 6d. boards.
This volume is compiled with much industry and judgment; altogether a more valuable service could not well have been dered to the inquiring student of the classics."—Oxford Literendered to the inquiring student of the classica."—Outprd Lite-rary Gazetts.

"But when they have made real advances in Greek prose, read over with them the whole of Vigeras. Mr. Berry, what I now recommend is really one of the most useful parts of education. You should make them read Vigerus in this way twice every year, for five, or six, or seven years."—Dr. Parr. Bee Johnstone's Life of Parr.

Hoogeveen on the Greek Particles.

76. 64. boards. "Hoogeveen's work on Particles has always been considered valuable aid in the study of the Greek language; and Mr. Seage has compressed and translated it in a manner which we could no leaire to be better."—Speciator.

3. Bos on the Greek Ellipses. 9s. 6d. bds.

"Mr. Seager has contrived to retain the essence of all that is beneficial to the student, while he has placed it more easily within his reach, by the order and arrangement into which it is reduced."

Intelligence.

"We have no hesitation in recommending this book to the beachers of Greek, as the best dictionary of elliptical expressions to which they can resort."—Edinbergh Literary Journal.

4. Hermann on the Greek Metres. 8s. 6d.

boards.

"My here is Hermann; he is not only a scholar, but a philosopher of the highest order; and he smiles probably, as I do, at the petty criticisms of puny scholars, who in fact do not understand what is written by this great critic."—Dr. Petr.

5. Maittaire on the Greek Dialects. 9s. 6d.

boards.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of the fidelity of the translation or the still of the shridgment. It is earliched by some modest neets, and more original matter than careless readers will spring credit."—attes.

"This volume completes Mr. Seager's epitomising labours. With Vigwr, Hoogereen, Bes, and Harmann, the Greek student has a set of scarcely dispensable subsidia; at all events, in a more accessible form than before. Mr. Seager has laboured zealously, and must be allowed to have deserved well of Greek literature."—New Monthly Magasias.

"This is an important and serviceable school and college book."

Graiteman's Magasine.

Graiteman's Magasine.

Printed by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in Town and Country.

Valuable Books for Schools.

T ETTERS to a YOUNG NATURALIST

ELIERS to a YOUNG NATURALIST on the STUDY of NATURE and NATURAL THEOLOGY.

By J. L. DRUMMOND, M.D.

First Steps to Botany, intended as popular Illustrations of the Science, leading to its Study as a Branch of general Education. By J. L. Drummond, M.D. 18mc. 3d edit.

A build an analysis.

with Cuts, 9s. boards.

Abridgment of Universal History, with Questions at the end of each Section. By the Rev. H. I. Knspp.
Ilmo- 5th edition, with Additions, 5s. bound.

Rules for English Composition. By John

Rippingham 19mo. 4r. bear Art of Extempore Public Speaking. By John pringham. 18mo. 3d edit. 6s. boards.

Aft of Lawrence Reprinted and Present Africa Described, in its Ancient and Present State. By Mrs. Hoffand. 18me. with Map, 5s. half-bound. Introduction to the Geography of the New Testament. By Lant Carpenter, LL.D. 18me. 6th addition, 5s.

Conversations on General History, from the conversations on the English Constitution.

Letters on English History, from Cassar's vision to the Battle of Waterlee. By J. Bigland. 60.

avasion to the Battle of Waterloo. By J. Bigland. 6s.
Letters on French History, from the earliest brief to the Battle of Waterloo. By J. Bigland. 6s.
Poetical Monitor, consisting of Pieces, select de etiginal, for the Improvement of the Young. Intended to coosed Dr. Watter Songs. 10th edition, 2s. bound.
Sequel to the same, consisting of Pieces, select designal. 2d edit. 2s. 6d. bound.
Archbishop Secker's Lectures on the Catellism, arranged in Quantition and Answers. for the Use of Schools.

Althousing Sounce a Locuston on Sounce of Soun

Dabitity from Age, Intemperance, &c. &c. &c. 4th edition, with Cases, price 3s. PRACTICAL TREATISE on the

A PRAUTICAL TREATISE On the Proper Diet, Exercise, &c. &c. of Elderly People, and of those whe were been weakly, ev who have brought on by indulgenoes or Abuses general or iscal Debility; or ow whom Symptoms of Breaking-up of the System, as Dropsical Swellings of the Legs, general Nevrousness, &c. appear, with Directions for regulating the Bowels, and the Use of the Reund-leaf Cornel when a Tenic is necessary.

By J. H. ROBINSON, of St. Croix.

Published by Simphina Co. Stationers' Hall Court; and seld by all Boeksellers.

Antipapal Spirit of the Italian Classics.

CULLO SPIRITO ANTIPAPALE che O produse la Riferna, e sulla segreta Influenza ch' esercito nella Letteratura d' Europa, e specialmente d' Italia, come risulta da molti suei Ciassioi, massime da Danto, Petrarca, Boccaccio, Disquisitioni

Di GABRIELE ROSSETTI, Lingua e Letteratura Italiana nei Collegio del Re in Leotte. Trenttei and Co. 30, Sobo Square. are di Lie

Climate in Consumption, &c.—New edition, 870, 123.

THE INFLUENCE of CLIMATE in CHRONIC DISEASE of the CHEST, DIGESTIVE ORGANS, Ac.; with an Account of the Placer resorted to by Invalids in England and the South of Europe-their Merits in particular Diseases and Directions for Invalids while Traveling Particular Discovers and Directions to a confidence of the Market and Residing Algorida.

Physician to 8t. George's Internaty & John Murray, Arbemarle Street.

The Thirty-Fourth Part, price II. is, boards,

The Thirty-Fourth Part, price II. is, boards,

NCYCLOP ÆDIA METROPOLI
TANA) or, Universal Dictionary of Knowledge, on an original Plan, comprising the two-fold advantage of a Philosophical and an Alphalieto al Arrangement) conducted by the Kestleward Smidery, with the assistance of many of the mixed storinguished literary and scientific men of the British domainions, whose names are appended to the title-papes of each volume.

London: Printed for Biddsim and Gradock, and other Prips, except.

This Encyclopedia is in four divisions, a portion of each of which is comprised in every part, and, on completion, each division will be a distinct and entire work. There are also distinct and entire work. There are had been distinct and entire work. There are had been completed of Pure Legislat Banguage, a Gazetteer, and a Technology, al Dictionary.

The binology al Dictionary.

The binology al Dictionary this important work are now before the Pupil and arrangements are made for brigging out the future parts with increased activity. In the Divisions there have been completted of Pure Payment on volume, of Mixed Science two solumos; of History and Biography two; and of the Mixed Lancoux Department eight. A Kepubon atton has also been commenced in monthly parts, at 7s. each, which has proceeded to the Fifteenth Part.

Small Sec. Mixed and arranged as the day of the Mixed Science.

Small fro. illustrated with 80 Woodcuts, 5t.

O. XXXIII. of the FAMILY
LIBRARY, LETTERS on NATURAL MAGIC.
By SIR PAVID BREWSTER.

September 1st will be published, Family Library, No. XXXIV.; being Lives of Scottish Worthies.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Bloomfield's Greek Testament.

In 2 large and closely printed vois, avo. price As. boards, (dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.)

THE GREEK TESTAMENT, with

THE GREEK TESTAMENT, with English Notes, Critical, Philological, and Exceptical. By the Rev. S. T. BLOOMFIELD, D.D. F.S.A.

Of Sidney College, Cambridge; Viera of Bi-Stooke, Rutland. Expressly adapted to the use of Academical Students (including the First Classes in Public Schools) and Candidates for Holy Orders; though, at the same time, intended as a commodious Manual Edition for the use of Theological Renders generally. Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co.; J., G., and F. Rivington: J. Murray: Whittaker and Co.; and J. Roin, London: and J. and J. J. Deighton; T. btevenson; and R. Newby, Cambridge.

THE NOOZEED AFFAIR; a Word for the People of India. Lendon: Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly.

London: Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly.

Portrait of Remard Lytton Bulmer, Esq.

RASER'S MAGAZINE for August,
price 21. 6d. Contents—

The Recollections of a Gentlewoman, No. I.; Madame du Barrit-Doctor O'Gorman—The Schoolmater's Experience in Newgate, No. III.; Necessity of an Appeal Court-Geographical and Statistical Account of the All-in-imper-Esq. or Fancy Idex—
The Bell of St. Bride's, by a Blackfriars' Man—Epistics to the Literati, No. V.; Nathan Butt, Esq. to Dr. Howring—Mary Hughes, a Tale of the Welsh Highlands—Romantle Poetry of Spain—Discoveries of Modern Geologists, No. II.—Elizabeth
Brownrigge, a Tale—The Church of England and the Liberals—
Domestic Manners of the British, by Colonel Hickory; Letters
V. and VI.—Secret Instructions to General Wolfe for the Conguest of Quebec—Gallery of Literary Characters, under nor one Politicial Economic—On the Contagious Character of Cholera—Str
Samuel R. Meyrick, Bell Diuose, Gol of the Sun, and Ned Conid the Bione-cutter—Letter to the Primate of Ireland on the State of the Irish Church and other Matters, by Sir Morgan O'Doherty, Bart.

James Fraser, 216, Regent Street, London; Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; M'Phun, Glasgow; Grapel, Liverpool; and Grant and Holton, Dublin.

Second Edition of Montgomery's New Poem.

Post Uro, price 8s. 6d.

THE MESSIAH. A Poem, in Six Books.

By the Author of the "Omnipresence of the Pelty."

"The Messiah is, in our opinion, equal to any of Mr. Montgomery's productions, and a lasting monument to his fame."—

Literary Gazette.

"It cannot be denied, that he has retained the sentiments and caught, on more care."

"It cannot be denied, that he has retained the sentiments, and caught, on many occasions, the spirit of the olden days."—Athe-

John Turrill, British Magazine Office, 251, Regent Street.

EBRETT'S PEERAGE of the United Kingdom, with the New Peers and their Arms. In Debrett's Baronetage, including the New Baronets, with their Arms. 2 vols. 11. 3s.

Printed for Rivingtons: Clarkes; Longman and Co.; T. Ca-dell; J. Richardson; J. Booth; J. Booter; J. M. Richardson; Baldwin and Co.; Barter; R. Scholey; Hatchard and Son; Hamilton and Co.; Partury and Co.; E. Lloyd; W. Pickering; E. Hodgson; J. Templeman; Houlstons; and T. Egerton's Executors.

DISSERTATION on the RUINS or

A DISSERTATION on the RUINS of REVOLUTIONS of EMPIRES; being a Critical Examination and Refutation of a Work entitled "Remarks on Volucy's Kunns, by W. A. Haile."

Ould digmum tanto feret hie promissor hiatu?

Parturiont montes, nasceiur ridiculus mus.

"H, as is the lact, the majority descrive themselves, and decrive themselves with state ettly, it follows that the human mind as retarby inhabits falsebood a truth, and in that case, how is it the conglutement "Entition, Chapter 18th.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Ostell's Ceneral Allas enlarged, with an Index of upwards of Engerera Tanusand Manner.
In regal to, with coloured Outlines, give 18c half-bound; or with the Mays full coloured, price 21c.

STELL'S NEW GENERAL ATLAS, including Maps of Unnan or Juda s, Ancient Greece,

STELL'S NEW GENERAL ATLAS, including Maps of Canaan or Judias, Ancient Greece, and the Romes Empire. A new obtains, on a neutrely new set of Plates, eng. aced on an entarged scale and corrected from the latest and best Author tree, containing Thirty Maps.

• • • To this ediction has been added, at a considerable cost, with attiniciation the price, a Consulting Index, with the Latitude and Longitude. The Index congresses up-ards of Fourteen Housand Names, which in teaching (besides other obvious uses) must answer als not every purpose of a foaretter.

London, Printed for Habbaria wainer, page, full coloured, and handsomely half-bound for libraries, price 11, 11s, 64.

The New Volume of Dadsley's and Rivington's Annual Register.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER; or, a View to the History, Politics, and Literature of the Pear Hill.

of the History, Politics, and Literature of the Year Hill.
Rivington: Longman and Co.; Jufferful A. Hosker; J. G., and E. Rivington: Longman and Co.; Jufferful A. Horosod and Co.; J. Martin; Hamiton and Mr.; Whitteler and Co.; E. Lloyd; J. D. Wing, Sujan and Mr.; Whitteler and Co.; E. Lloyd; J. D. Wing, Sujan and Mr.; Whitteler and Co.; T. Laycock, S. W. Sustenance; and Rendam and Rush.

By whom is also published, in a very large vol. p A General Index to the Annual Register, from its commencement in 1750 to the Ver 1819, inclusive; after which period cach accessive Volume has a distinct Index. "g" separate Volumes, to complete Nets, may be had of the Publishers; but so several are becoming caree, an early application is recommended.

tion is recommended.

A few complete Sets from the commencement in 1758 may still be had.

Reshit's Mensuration, Surreying, Sec.

REATISE On PRACTICAL

MENNIRATION: containing the Method of drawing constructed Figure—Land-Surreying—Mensuration of Superins, Solids, Drain, Canat., Mari-pits, Sec.—Conic Sections and circ bolds—Problems in Gauging—Terms used in Architec-

By A. NESBIT, Manchester.
5th edition, with numerous Plates, &c. 6s. bound. Key to the above, 3d edition, 5s. bound.

By the same Author, Complete Treatise on Practical Land-Sur-ting, 8vo. new edition, 12t. boards. Treatise on Practical Arithmetic, containing the latest Improvements in the Science, 2d edition, 5s. bound. Key to the same, 5s. bound.

Introduction to English Parsing, 4th edition,

Treatise on Practical Gauging, by A. Nesbit and W. Little (Officer of Excise). New edit, containing a Table of Arens, calculated for the new Imperial Gallon, and 180 Woodcuts, 5s. bound. Printed for I ongman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman, London; and Wilson and Sons, York.

Square 12mo, new edition, enlarged, 5s. 6d. bound; or with the English-Latin Part, 9e.

or with the English-Latin Part, 39.

TYRON IS THESAURUS, or Entick's Latin-English Dictionary, designed for the Use of Grammar-Schools and Private Education; containing all the Words and Phrases proper for Reading the Classic Authors in both Languages, accurately collected from the most approved Latin Authors, with a Classical Index of the Preterperfects and Supines of Verbs.

B. WILLIAM CRACKETT A.M.

of Verbs.

By WILLIAM CRACKELT, A.M.

Carefully revised throughout by the Rev. M. G. Savjant, B.A. of Queen's College, Oxford; with the Quantity of all the Syllables carefully marked by John Caregy, LL.B.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, and Chardson; Baldwin and T. Cadeli; J. Richardson; J. M. Richardson; Baldwin and Cradeck; J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Booker; E. Williams;
Hamilton and Go.; R. Hunter; Whittaker and Co.; J. Duncan; Simpkin and Marshall J. Sonter; J. Boin; Seeley and Burnslie; E. Hodgson; Poole and Edwards; Houlston and Son; and
J. Nunn: Wilson and Sons, York; and G. and J. Robinson, Literpool.

In 12mo. price 6s. boards,

PAROCHIAL SERMONS.

By the Rev. THOMAS AINGER, M.A.

Late of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Assistant Minister of the New Church of St. Marry, Greenwich.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth.
Being Vol. 33 of the above, Vol. II. of
ISTORY of the WESTERN WORLD,
(4 vols.)—United States, concluded.
On Sept. 1, Spain and Portugal, Vol. IV.
On Oct. 1, Treatise on Chemistry, in 1 vol.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

Prayers for the Sick.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchysri,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

WENTY-ONE PRAYERS, composed from the Pasims, for the Sick and Afflicted; rowth are added, Various other Forms of Prayer for the same Parawith a few Hints and Directions for the Visitation of the Children By the Rev. J. SLADE, M.A. Vicar of Bolton. 2d edition, 19ms. 2s. 6d.

2. Prayers to be used in Visiting the Sick;

cluding the Offices of the Church, and other Forms and other forms and other forms and other forms and other for the future of the Measure, Education of Haydron-le-Skerne, Durham. 19me. 4s. 6d.

3. The Order for the Visitation of the Ser.

from the Book of Common Prayer; with Prayers, Etherica and Interrogatories, taken from different Authors. By Le Richard Mant, D.D. Rector of All Saints, Southamptonedition, 12mo. 31.

4. A Manual for the Sick; containing Prayer and a Selection of Paslms, arranged in such a manner to be render the Reading them to the Sick more convenient and a vantageous. By the Rev. Thomas Huntingford, A.M. 1222 87, 64.

5. Plain Directions for Reading to the Sick By the Rev. Joseph Hordern, M.A. Vicar of Routherne. 1 edition, 21. 64.

Greek and Latin Classics, with English Sotes, by the Rev. W. Trullope.

THE ILIAD of HOMER, chiefly from the THE IDIAD OF HOMER, chiefly from the Test of Heyne, with copious English Noise, illustration of Grammatical Construction, the Manners and Castoms, the Mythology and Antiquities of the Heroic Ages, and Preliming Observations on Points of Classical Interest and Importance of nected with Homer and his Writings.

By the Rev. W. TROLLOPE, M.A.

Late of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and one of the Master of Christ's Hospital.

In 2 vols. 8vo. price 11. 4s. in boards.

Pentalogia Gressee. Somboelis (Faligus Tr.

18 2 vols. 8 vo. price 11. 42. in beards.

2. Pentalogia Graeca. Sophochis (Edipus Trannus; Cidipus Coloneus, et Antigone; Euripidis Promiser chechyli Septem contra Thebasa. Quinque schiete Dimanscricherims. Thebasde acripta. Notis Anglice scriptis illumine et Lexicon Vocum difficillorum adjecti, Guileimus Trollops X In 8 vo. price 14. boards.

8vo. price 14s. boards.

3. The Bellum Catilinarium of Sallust, and Sa

3. The Bellum Cathinarium or Saiuss, and Ciero's Four Orations against Cathine. With English we and an Introduction; together with the Bellum Jaguribus: Saliust. By the Rev. W. Trollope, M.A. 18ma. & d. bard 4. Excerpta ex Ovidii Metam. et Epic. With English Notes, and an Introduction, containing have Constraing, a Parsing Praiss, &c. By the Same. 18ms. & 6 bound.

ound.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchud, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Residence in New Zealand, &c. In 8vo. with 7 Engravings, 13s. boards

In 8vo. with 7 Engravings, 12t. boards,

NARRATIVE of a NINE MONTHS

RESIDENCE in NEW ZEALAND, in 12K; ver

Journal of a Residence in Tristan d'Acunha.

By AUGUSTUS EARLE.

Draughtaman to His Majesty's Surveying-Ship The Beage
"One of the most extraordinary narratives of persons are ture which has fallen within our observation for some time

"Mr. Earle's journal gives us much curious information, of very agreeshle manner."—Literary Gazette.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, md(a-

In 1 vol. 8vo.

K EEP YOUR TEMPER, a Comety
The Fate of I van, a Tragedy; Miss Betsy Bill, and Johnnies in Spain: a Melo-Drama.
Calkin and Budd, Publishers, Pall Mail.

DLACKWOOD'S EDINBURG

MAGAZINE. No. CXCVII. for August IES.
Contents.

I. Tom Cringle's Log. Chap. 19. Cuba Pichermen-II. For
-III. Christopher at the Lakes. Plight Third-IV. Door
Sace, and Eliezer the Simple-V. Derotional Melsies
Delta-VI. Chateaubriand. No. 2. Génie de Christower
VII. Six Songs for Music. By Mrs. Hemans-VIII. Virtinada. By a Backwoodsma-IX. To the Fauer Easter Great Britain.
Edinburgh: Printed for William Blackwood, No. 45, 6887
Street; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

THE ANGLING EXCURSIONS
GREGORY GREENDRAKE, Esq. in the Occup
Wicklow, Meath, Westmeath, Longford, and Caven.

Wiction, Beath, it withcards found to the distinct of distinct of the distinct

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPS the LITERARY GAZZITE OFFICE, 7, Wallington Evidence Bridge, Strand, and 19, South Marie Strip. Struct: sold also by J. Chappell, M. Rame Evider: Mariboragh, Ave Maria Longe, Ludgett Rill: A. Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and All and Co. Glasgow: and J. Cumming, Debits.—Agri America, O. Rich, 13, Rad Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Lelouster Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 812.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

INSANITY.*

[A recent remarkable trial is only one added to the score of many, where the conflicting opinions of medical men, and especially of such as seem to be justly enough called "Mad Doctors," puzzle (if there be') the common sense of the rational. Whether we are all mad more or less, or only all foolish at times as we egotistically acknowledge, is a question not to be disturbed here: but we imagine (the imagination is not a reasoning faculty!) that some light must be thrown upon the point at issue by the following view of a very curlous work. The philosophy and practical matter of the original are well worthy of regard; and we wish our scientific readers to believe, that there is much in the German author which we cannot touch upon—Ed. L. G.]

Skizze einer allgemeinen Diagnostik der psychischen Krankheiten. - Sketch of a general Diagnosis of Mental Diseases. By J. B. Friedrich.

THIS is an excellent and most instructive work, and hitherto a desideratum in our literature. We possess masterly descriptions of individual forms of mental malady, but we have yet no clever general system of insanity. The author makes the earliest attempt. In the first place, he directs attention to the principal symptoms of mental diseases: 1. illusions of the senses; 2. insensibility to corporeal influences; 3. constipation and ravenous appetite; + 4. irregular pulse; 5. superior muscular power; 6. increased sexuality; 7. a disposition to breed vermin, in spite of the utmost cleanliness; 8. the gestures and looks peculiar to the insane. To these, which are purely corporeal symptoms, are added others which belong to the soul and mind: 1. change of the moral character, hatred to persons formerly loved, the opposite ex-treme superseding chastity, a propensity to theft taking the place of rigid honesty, and rage that of gentleness; 2. defectiveness or irregularity of memory; 3. extraordinary associations of ideas, false acuteness which combines the most heterogeneous matters; 4. cunning and deception; 5. derangement of the thinking faculty, perversity of thought with otherwise correct views, skill to infuse sense into nonsense, astonishing eloquence, the art of extemporaneous versification; 6. timidity and unfounded fear, mistrust and secrecy, a disposition to raillery and malicious tricks; 7. a sense of right and wrong. It is one of the most remarkable traits in the insane, that, in spite of all their perversities, they always know whether they have conducted themselves properly or improperly towards their medical attendants and keepers. 8. Extraor-

In a popular publication like the Literary Gatette, intended for the reading of every age, sex, and class, it will be obvious that we must omit, in such papers as these, many details which are of primary importance to the professional and scientific. This is particularly the case in the present instance; and we are happy to announce to those unacquainted with the German language, that a Translation of Dr. Friedrich's able work is likely to appear under proper auspices, both philological and medical.—Ed. L. G.

† We cannot help shuddering to learn, from the facts

dlcal.—Ed. L. G.

† We cannot help shuddering to learn, from the facts
he has collected, that, in the Bictire at Paris, double the number of the insane died before than after the revolution, because the Constituent Assembly had the good sense and humanity, in fixing the allowance of provisions, to pay regard to the leat-mentioned symptom, namely, the greater appetite of the petients.

dinary predilections or dislikes, connected with many cases, therefore, it may be possible to illusions of the senses. One of the most re- afford relief by similar means. When, again, markable cases of this kind is the following: Esquirol mentions a lunatic who, whenever he heard the most exquisite music, flew into a violent passion, because all the tones seemed false to him. Gall states an instance bearing on this point. He possessed the skulls of two lunatics of Vienna, in which the organ of theft was developed in a high degree. These persons, before the derangement of their intellects, were the most honest creatures in the world, and did not begin stealing till they were confined in the madhouse. What are we to think of morality, and of our vaunted freedom of will, if a malformation of the brain, that is born with us, predestines us irrevocably to crime? Here man stands on the brink of a precipice, from which he cannot look without affright. But the instance here quoted also teaches that man, in his sound state, possesses the power to con-quer an innate evil propensity; for this propensity did not manifest itself in the abovementioned persons till they had ceased to be masters of their reason.

The doctor then proceeds to the mode of treatment and cure of lunatics, and throws out hints on those subjects which are well worthy of consideration, and for which the philanthropist will be the more thankful, inasmuch as the principles of humanity are far from being recognised in all the lunatic institutions of every country. In the first place the author desires that physicians and superintendents should make themselves acquainted with the cause of the disease, and then pay due regard to the present state of it. According to these, the patients require very different treatment; for it would be unreasonable, and only serve to aggravate the malady, were one general mode of proceeding to be adopted. In respect to the physician, the author urges that he should strive to gain the confidence of the patient by every sort of kindness and attention; that he should take every advantage of his lucid intervals, and keep a vigilant eye upon him when alone, lest he lead him upon a wrong scent, as maniacs are so fond of doing. But, especially, he insists on the importance of supplying the insane with suitable and sufficient food. since, according to all observation, the food has an essential influence upon their condition. These, however, are but external auxiliaries in the cure. With a view to the latter, it is indispensably necessary to investigate the disease closely in its prognosis, in its development, in its stages, in its crisis, and in its decline; for mental maladies, originating in physical abnormities, pursue the very same course as physical diseases. When we have once discovered the seat of the disease in a physical malady, we may cure it by remedies which operate upon the body, the diseased organ. In numerous cases insanity has disappeared when the patient grew fat, when he lost blood either by the lancet or by hamorrhage, or in consequence of perspiration and baths, cutaneous the physician has to contend with mental diseases which seem to originate not merely in the body, but also in the soul, he has moral means at his command. A person afflicted with silent melancholy, being put into a violent passion, recovered his sanity of mind. Another, who was going to drown himself, fell in with robbers, defended himself against them, and returned home cured. Fright, sudden affections, vehement emotions, have in hundreds of cases operated the instantaneous removal of

The statistical documents with which the author always supports his doctrines, furnish highly interesting results. Thus, the raving mad are more frequently cured than the melancholy - in Bedlam in the proportion of 62 to 27: a proof that it is easier to moderate too great irritability than to animate insensibility. In the year 1789, Black found in Bedlam insane from grief and misfortune 206, religion 90, love 74, jealousy 6, fright 51, study 15, pride 8, drunkenness 58, childbirth 79, constipation 10, hereditary complaints 115, contu-sions and broken bones 12, venereal disease 14, smallpox 7, repercussion of the itch and healed ulcers 5. From the year 1748 to 1820, the number of insane recorded in England was 32,744, of whom 12,254 were cured; from the year 1801 to 1813, there were admitted in France 4213, cured 1893; from the year 1798 to 1823, admitted in Würzburg 528, cured 292. The lists of the Berlin Charité exhibit. on an average, not more than 4 cures out of 15 cases. It appears, therefore, that the method of treatment pursued at Würzburg has proved most successful. It is to be regretted that we have not complete lists from all the principal hospitals for the insane, which would enable us to be more accurate in these details.

What Dr. Friedrich says upon natural organic defects or malformations, by which either madness, or remarkable moral faults, or extraordinary dispositions of mind, are occasioned, is extremely interesting. "Experience has shewn us that in criminals considerable defects have been found, as well in the position as in the structure of the heart. Nasse has taken the trouble to collect a number of cases of this kind. Amatus mentions a daring robber whose heart was found enveloped with hair: the same thing was observed by Benive-nius and Muretus. Zakutus saw in the heart of a robber, executed upon the wheel, three stenes of the size of peas, which together weighed one drachm. In a criminal, who was also broken upon the wheel, Reguier found, according to the statements of Cattier and Bartholin, the heart with the apex turned towards the right side, and the base to the left. The case mentioned by Mantel is probably the same which Reguier observed. Bartholin further relates that, in a robber executed in Norway, the heart was found with the apex cloven, which gave the two ventricles, even externally, eruptions, fevers, ulcers, evacuations, &c. In the appearance of being separated from one an-right, and the base to the left. Frank found in a culprit who had committed a crime for which he ought to have suffered death, but escaped by flight, an enlargement of the heart, together with inflammation of that viscus and its vessels. Haller, and after him Hildebrand, make mention of criminals in whom the heart was found in a reversed position. Testa says, that he has more than once met with an induration of the heart, combined with a very bright crimson colour of that organ and a false pericardium covering its surface, in the bodies of criminals who had suffered death for their misdeeds. He also mentions, that in the body of a man named Soja, who, on account of the atrocity of his crimes, was abhorred by his own comrades, he found the heart of enormous size, extremely hard, and red throughout. Larrey saw, in the body of a galley-slave, the heart with the apex turned to the right side. Béclard and Cloquet relate a case of the discovery, in the body of a criminal, of two distinct tubes to the vena cava superior, which terminated apart from each other in the right auricle; and the larger of these, which received the left subclavian artery, the jugular arteries of the same side, the inferior thyroid vein, and several other branches, had such a direction, that the passage of the blood through it must have been thereby greatly impeded. There was also this further deviation, that the veins of the heart terminated in three distinct valveless orifices in the horizontal part of the larger of the two superior vense caves. In Moll the murderer, Ennemoser found the heart, which was disproportionately small, lying more to the left, of a flat, long, narrow form. The sides of the right half were thin, and the cavity of the ventricle was small; but the sides of the left ventricle were thick and muscular. These examples will suffice to prove the connexion of an abnormal state of the heart with crime; and the objection which might be urged, that these defects of the heart may have been the consequence of remorse, fear of death, and the like, is refuted by the fact, that most of them are such as, depending on the position and structure of the heart, must have existed from the birth of the individuals; and thus we may venture to con-clude, from the cases of natural defects of the heart, that, in those with acquired defects, the deed was subsequent to the corporeal evil."

Of not less importance are malformations in the brain, in the lungs, in the abdomen, and more especially derangements of the sexual system. "The religious fanaticism of convents," says Busorini, "was often blended with the grossest sensuality; the more they strove to avoid the latter, the deeper they sank into a medley compounded of that and religious feeling." The legends of the religious enthusiasts, and the trials of witches and possessed persons, furnish a multitude of such cases.

Severe child-births, cutaneous disorders (when they are repelled), fever, gout, hæmorrhoidal diseases, and nervous complaints, not less frequently produce insanity. The same may be said of wounds. On this point it is very remarkable how injuries to certain organs in the brain occasion partial derangements of the understanding. Larrey makes mention of a man who, in consequence of a stab in the brain, forgot the substantives, but no other words. Another person, after a similar injury, forgot Latin and Greek, but nothing else of what he previously knew. The formation of the scull, in general, acts an important other. Hoffmann describes the false position part in every thing relating to the understandof the heart discovered in a female malefactor ing. "The head of Lalande, the celebrated executed at Halle: the spex was turned to the right, and the base to the left. Frank found in than on the left."

With respect to age, the author remarks, that children very rarely become insane, because, as Lessing says, they have not yet any understanding to lose; but there are nevertheless insane children. Dr. Friedrich mentions several instances. Most derangements of the mind, however, occur either at, or soon after, the age of puberty. In reference to the fire which have recently happened in France, and in most of which young girls were concerned, we find a most curious collection of facts bearing on this subject, and ascribing the propensity to a predominant venosity, and in the absence of the arterial blood from one place, and the congestion of the venous blood in another, especially in the region of the nerves of the eyes. In Cretins, whose depressed brain impedes the return of the venous blood, this fondness for fire manifests itself. In like manner it is observed that old animals, in which the arterial current to the head is weaker than in young ones, and especially old cats and dogs. will sometimes for hours together keep their eyes fixed on a light or fire, let it be ever so intense. So also the Negroes, in whom venosity predominates, can look without inconvenience at the sun. Lastly, it is worthy of remark, that new-born infants, who, it is well known, bring very dark blood into the world with them, are extremely fond of light, and can look for a long time intently at a strong

With respect to the sexes, the author further remarks, that in males raving madness, in females moody melancholy, is more prevalent; and that, when both suffer from fixed ideas, in the former derangements of the understanding, in the latter derangements of the imagination, are more common.

At the conclusion of this instructive work. Dr. Friedrich establishes, as one of the most important results, this position: that the principle of all mental diseases is but apparently to be sought in the mind itself, and really in the body, in deranged organisation. The writings of Nasse, Groos, Heinroth, and Jarke, have recently directed the public attention in Germany to the moral and judicial accountability of persons labouring under diseases of the mind Jarke, professor of jurisprudence in Berlin, who would have done honour to the darkes ages of Roman law, is for converting madhouses into criminal prisons, and has not hesitated, in a publication which may almost be called atrocious, to insist on the execution, in the most cruel manner, of an insane mother. who killed her children out of affection. Heinroth, the philosopher of Leipzig, has gone still further, and has declared that all diseases of the mind originate in guilt, consequently that every person so afflicted is, without further investigation, a fit object for punishment. Nasse and Groos, on the other hand, have espoused the principles of genuine humanity; and the work under consideration furnishes an additional proof that experience is on their side The question is not about punishment for criminals, but cure for the diseased, and precautions to prevent their doing mischief. "Who can deny," says Dr. Friedrich, "that crimes, and particularly those which are so aptly characterised by the common saying, that people must be out of their senses to commit them;' crimes which remove man quite beyond the sphere of humanity, and degrade him is below the brute; crimes which rend suner all the bonds of nature, the strongest tie tie bind man to his kind, and which nothing is: blind insanity is capable of destroying -r: can deny, I ask, that such crimes have the origin in corporeal diseases? Whoever deny this cannot bring forward experience s: witness in his favour; for on this point exp. rience has, if not wholly, at least in a great measure, saved the sacred honour of human I have collected, in section iv., a great number of instances, proving that absormities here been found in the structure and position of the heart in the bodies of criminals; and no date many other interesting peculiarities in other organs might be discovered if the corpset malefactors were always to be carefully enmined. Gall's craniology, though in ceru: points it may appear somewhat strained at hypothetical, yet, taken upon the whole, funishes valuable evidence in favour of what? have advanced. That offences of a less heinte kind, and other moral faults, frequently originate in corporeal diseases, is likevise proved by experience. I have already shewn that a disposition to sudden fits of passion is a frequent concomitant of diseases of the beart Riola relates that in Mary de Medicis, the mother of Louis XIII., so notorious for the vehement of her passions, the heart was found of lare size, with the apex turned towards the ricside, and the pericardium was cartilagines of the same side. The heart of Cardinal Munic was, according to Hoffmann, unconsect large, and penetrated with a calcareous matter A boy, whose temporal bone was depressed in a blow, and who was restored by the spittion of the trepan, manifested from this perm an irresistible propensity to theft. Dr. Jense related to Spurzheim a similar instance thick had come under his observation, and in the a mechanical injury to the head had protect the like disposition; and Nasse had occasion open the body of a female, who from her vest had been addicted to theft, and on account repeated offences of this kind had been banish from the city, in whom, probably owing me originally defective organization, a considerate portion of the enlarged stomach was found the spot which the heart usually occupies while the heart, displaced by the stomath in the upper part of the left thorax. Our instances of the sort might be cited.

* These remarkable cases are especially such as we cannot enter upon.— $Ed.\ L.\ G.$

"What positive jurisprudence may sty these opinions is perfectly indifferent to not the worthy Grohmann has given us a problegy of criminals, which should be earned recommended to the careful study of the who, grown rusty in their absolute form, existin a childish fear of that moment who not philanthropic views, which, on this point, a emanate only from the psychologist and philanthropic views, which, on this point, a emanate only from the psychologist and philanthropic views, which, on this point, a emanate only from the psychologist and philanthropic views, which, on this point, a emanate only from the psychologist and philanthropic views, which, on this point are must upon them, and what the feeling of age or of weakness, fanguer must perish in the fresh and impetuous sure of better times. Let these continue of quietly on the shore and lament that so judgments concerning crimes must make the positive law a dead letter. So the right humanity are gainers, no matter how such rights are done away with."

A Ramble of Six Thousand Miles through & United States of America. By S. A. Fer. Esq. 870. pp. 360. London, 1832. Wife This title is well chosen, for the rolume desultory; but nevertheless it is, even after we periodically read about America, an agreable and entertaining narrative. There is pense, though they are not unsuited to the reader who has not been (as we have) overladen with the American subject: but where Mr. Ferrall tells us what he did, saw, and heard, he is always a pleasant travelling companion. To shew this, and the spirit in which he has made his observations, apparently without prejudice or partiality, we shall select a few passages from his work; and if there are parts calculated to keep alive the demi-national, demi-literary feud which has been maintained between the Yankees and anti-Yankees of the press, we shall not mix in the quarrel; but, indeed, we do not think there is offence in it for either to take hold of. We commence with an Indian story.

" "A circumstance (says the author) occurred a few days previous to my arrival, in the Seneca reserve, which may serve to illustrate the determined character of the Indian. There were three brothers (chiefs) dwelling in this reservation. Seneca John, the eldest brother, was the principal chief of the tribe, and a man much esteemed by the white people. He died by poison. The chiefs in council having satisfactorily ascertained that his second brother Red-hand,' and a squaw, had poisoned him, decreed that Red-hand should be put to death.

Black-snake, the other brother, told the chiefs that if Red-hand must die, he himself would kill him, in order to prevent feuds arising in the tribe. Accordingly, in the even-ing he repaired to the hut of Red-hand, and after having sat in silence for some time, said, 'My best chiefs say you have killed my father's son; they say my brother must die.' Red-hand merely replied, 'They say so,' and continued to smoke. After about fifteen minutes' further silence, Black-snake said, pointing to the setting sun, 'When he appears above those trees'—moving his arm round to the opposite direction—'I come to kill you.' Red-hand nodded his head in the short significant style of the Indian, and said 'Good.' The next morning Black-snake came, followed by two chiefs, and having entered the hut, first put out the squaw; he then returned and stood but the squaw; he will be bent on the ground. Red-hand said calmiy, 'Has my brother come that I may die?' It is so,' was the reply. Then,' exclaimed Red-hand, grasping his prother's left hand with his own right, and lashing the shawl from his head, strike sure! In an instant the tomahawk was from the girdle of Black-snake and buried in the skull of the unfortunate man. He received several blows before he fell, uttering the exclamation Hugh, each time. The Indians placed him on the grass to die, where the backwoodsman who told me the story saw him after the lapse of two hours, and life was not then extinct,with such tenacity does it ching to the body of in Indian. The scalping-knife was at length passed across his throat, and thus ended the cene."

The condition of the remaining Indian tribes s represented to be one of great oppression; and the author warmly reclaims against the vstematic cruelty with which they are persented and driven from the land of their fathers y the government of the United States.

"The Lenni Lenape, or Delawares, as they were called by the English, from the circumtance of their holding their great 'councilire' on the banks of the Delaware river, were nce the most powerful of the several tribes borrowed episodes with which we could dis-, been driven from place to place, until at last, they were obliged to accept of an asylum from the Wyandot, whom they call their uncle; and now are forced to sell this, and go beyond the Mississippi. To a reflecting mind the scene was touching beyond description. Here was the sad remnant of a great nation, who, having been forced back from the original country of their fathers by successive acts of rapacity, are now compelled to enter into a compact which obliges them, half civilised as they are, to return to the forest. The case is this, - the white people, or rather Jackson and the southerns, say, that the Indians 'retard improve-ment'—precisely in the same sense that a brigand, when he robs a traveller, might say, that the traveller retarded improvement - that is, retarded his improvement, inasmuch as he had in his pocket what would improve the condition of the brigand. The Indians have cultivated farms and valuable tracts of land, and no doubt it will improve the condition of the whites to get possession of those farms and rich lands for one tenth of their saleable value. The profits that have accrued to the United States from the systematic plunder of the Indians are immense, and a great portion of the national debt has been liquidated by this dishonest means. The reserve of the Delawares contained nine square miles, or 5760 acres. For this it was agreed at the treaty that they should be paid 6000 dollars, and the value of the improve-ments, which I conceived to be a fair bargain. I was not then aware of the practice pursued by the government of making deductions, under various pretences, from the purchase-money, until the unfortunate Indian is left scarcely any thing in lieu of his lands, and says that ' the justice of the white man is not like the justice of the red man,' and that he cannot understand the honesty of his Christian brother. The following extract, taken from the New York American, will give some insight into the mode of dealing with the Indians .- ' The last of the Ottowas. Maumee Bay, Ohio, Sept. 3, 1831. Mr. James B. Gardiner has concluded a very important treaty at Maumee Bay, in Michigan, for a cession of all the lands owned by the Ottowa Indians in Ohio, about 50,000 acres. It was attended with more labour and greater difficulties than any other treaty made in this state: it was the last foothold which that savage, warlike, and hostile tribe held in their ancient dominion. The conditions of this treaty are very similar to those treaties of Lewis-town and Wapaghkenetta, with this ex-ception, that the surplus avails of their lands, after deducting seventy cents per acre to indemnify the government, are to be appropriated for paying the debts of their nation, which amount to about 20,000 dollars. [Query, what are those debts? Could they be the amount of presents made them on former occasions?] balance, if any, accrues to the tribe. Seventy thousand acres of land are granted to them west of the Mississippi. The Ottowas are the most depredating, drunken, and ferocious in Ohio. The reservations ceded by them are very valuable, and those on the Miami of the lake embrace some of the best mill privileges in the state.- 'The Delawares were too few (being but fifty-one in number) to contend the matter, and therefore accepted of the proposed terms. At the conclusion of the conference. the commissioners told them that they should have a barrel of flour, with the beef that had been killed for the occasion, which was received hat spoke the Delaware tongue, and possessed with 'Yo-ha!' They then said, laughthat the carcass to rot upon the ground. Thus in immense tract of country east of the Allehany mountains. This unfortunate people had them a little milk,' meaning whisky, which was of subsistence. Moreover, what guarantee can accordingly granted. They drank of this modern Lethé and forgot for a time their misfortunes. On the Osage fork of the Merrimack river there are two settlements of the Delawares, to the neighbourhood of which these Indians intend to remove."

Again. "To talk of justice and honour would be idle and visionary, for these seem to have been thrown overboard at the very commencement of the contest; but I would ask the American people, is their conduct towards the Indians politic? is it politic in America, in the face of civilised nations, to violate treaties? is it politic in her to hold herself up to the world as faithless and unjust - as a nation which, in defiance of all moral obligation, will break her most sacred contracts, whenever it becomes no longer her interest to keep them, and she finds herself in a condition to do so with impunity? is she not furnishing foreign statesmen with a ready and powerful argument in defence of their violating treaties with her? can they not with justice say, America has manifested in her proceedings towards the Cherokee nation that she is faithless—that she keeps no treaties longer than it may be her interest to do so; and are we to make ourselves the dupes of such a power, and wait until she finds herself in a condition to deceive us? I could produce many arguments to illustrate the impolicy of this conduct; but as I intend confining myself to a mere sketch, I shall dwell but as short a time as may be consistent on the several facts connected with the case. That the aborigines have been cruelly treated, cannot be doubted. The very words of the message admit this; and the tone of feeling and conciliation which follows that admission, coupled as it is with the intended injustice expressed in other paragraphs, can be viewed in no other light than as a piece of political mockery. The message says, 'their present condition, contrasted with what they once were, makes a most powerful appeal to our sympathies. Our ancestors found them the uncontrolled possessors of these vast regions. By persuasion and force, they have been made to retire from river to river and from mountain to mountain, until some of the tribes have become extinct, and others have left but remnants to preserve for awhile their once terrible names.' Now the plan laid down by the president, in order to prevent, if possible, the total decay of the Indian people, is to send them beyond the Mississippi, and guarantee to them the possession of ample territory west of that river. How far this is likely to answer the purpose expressed, let us now examine. Cherokees, by their intercourse with and proximity to the white people, have become half civilised; and how is it likely that their condition will be improved by driving them into the forests and barren prairies? That territory is at present the haunt of the Pawnees, the Osages, and other warlike nations, who live almost entirely by the chase, and are constantly waging war even with each other. As soon as the Cherokees and other half-civilised Indians appear, they will be regarded as common intruders, and be subject to the united attacks of these people. There are even old feuds existing among themselves, which, it is but too probable, may be renewed. Trappers and hunters, in large parties, yearly make incursions into the country beyond the boundaries of the United States, and, in defiance of the Indians, kill the beaver and the buffalo - the latter merely for the tongue and skin, leaving the carcass to rot upon the ground. Thus is this unfortunate race robbed of their means keep faith for the future, when it is admitted that they have not done so in times past? How can they be sure that they may not further be driven from river to river, and from mountain to mountain, until they reach the shores of the Pacific; and who can tell but that then it may be found expedient to drive them into the ocean? The policy of the United States government is evidently to get the Indians to exterminate each other. Its whole proceedings, from the time this question was first agitated to the present, but too clearly indicate this intention; and if we wanted proof that the executive government of the United States would act on so barbarous and inhuman a policy, we need only refer to the allocation of the Cherokees, who exchanged lands in Tennessee for lands west of the Mississippi, pursuant to the treaty of 1819. It was well known that a deadly enmity existed between the Osages and Cherokees, and that any proximity of the two people would inevitably lead to fatal results; yet, with this knowledge, the executive government placed those Cherokees in the country lying between the Arkansaw and Red rivers, immediately joining the territory of the Osages. It is unnecessary to state that the result was as anticipated — they daily committed outrages upon the persons and properties of each other, and the death of many warriors on both sides ensued. The sympathy expressed in that part of the message relating to the Indians, if expressed with sincerity, would do much honour to the feelings that dictated it; but when we come to examine the facts, and investigate the implied allegations, we shall find that they are most gratuitous; and, consequently, that the regret of the president at the probable fate of the Indian, should he remain east of the Mississippi, is grossly hypocritical. He says, 'surrounded by the whites, with their arts of civilisation, which by destroying the resources of the savage, doom him to weakness and decay-the fate of the Mohegan, the Narragansett, and the Delaware, is fast overtaking the Choctaw, the Cherokee, and the Creek. That this fate surely awaits them, if they remain within the limits of the States, does not admit of a doubt. Humanity and national honour demand that every effort should be made to avert so great a calamity.' From what facts the president has drawn these conclusions does not appear. Neither the statements of the Cherokees, nor of the Indian agents, nor the report of the secretary of war, furnish any such information; on the contrary, with the exception of one or two agents at Washington, all give the most flattering accounts of advancement in civilisation."

But we must leave this Indian question, certainly one which excites a strong sympathy; and turn to some of Mr. Ferrall's notices of the citizens of the U. S. themselves. In Marion, a town in Ohio, he tells us:

"I here saw gazetted three divorces, all of which had been granted on the applications of the wives. One on the ground of the husband's absenting himself for one year; another on account of a blow having been given; and the third for general neglect. There are few instances of a woman's being refused a divorce in the western country, as dislike is very generally, and very rationally, supposed to constitute a sufficient reason for granting the ladies their freedom."

In Cincinnati, he says -

"At Lebanon there is a large community of the shaking Quakers. They have establishments also in Mason county, and at Covington, the Indians have that the United States will tural. They contend, that confessing their municants whom I met in America, although sins to one another is necessary to a state of perfection; that the church of Christ ought to have all things in common; that none of the members of this church ought to cohabit, but be literally virgins; and that to dance and he merry is their duty, which part of their doctrines they take from the thirty-first chapter of Jeremiah. Their ceremonies are as follow: the men sit on the left hand, squatting on the floor, with their knees up, and their hands clasped round them. Opposite, in the same posture, sit the women, whose appearance is most cadaverous and sepulchral, dressed in the Quaker costume. After sitting for some time in this hatching position, they all rise and sing a canting sort of hymn, during which the women keep time by elevating themselves on their toes. After the singing has ceased, a discourse is delivered by one of the elders, which being ended, the men pull off their coats and waistcoats. All being prepared, one of the brethren steps forward to the centre of the room, and, in a loud voice, gives out a tune, beating time with his foot, and singing lal lal la, lal lal la, &c., being joined by the whole group, all jumping as high as possible, clapping their hands, and at intervals twirling round, but making rather ungraceful pirouettes: this exercise they continue until they are completely exhausted. In their ceremonials they much resemble the howling dervishes of the Moslems, whom they far surpass in fanaticism.'

Of Mr. Owen's late settlement at Harmony the account is by no means favourable; and it seems our worthy philanthropist is in very bad odour with those he left behind him, some calling him fool, and some much worse. Mr.

F. however notices that -

"Harmony must have been certainly a desirable residence when it was the abode of the many literary and scientific characters who composed a part of that short-lived community. A few of these still linger here, and may be seen stalking through the streets of Harmony, like Marius among the ruins of Carthage, deploring the moral desolation that now reigns in this once happy place. Le Seur, the naturalist, and fellow-traveller of Peron in his voyage to the austral regions, is still here. The suavity of manners, and the scientific acquirements of this gentleman, command the friendship and esteem of all those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. He has a large collection of specimens connected with natural history, which the western parts of this country yield in abundance. The advantages presented here for the indulgence of retired habits, form at present the only attractions sufficient to induce him to live out of la belle France. Mr. Thomas Say, of Philadelphia, who accompanied Major Long on his expedition to the Rocky Mountains, also resides here. He, too, is a recluse, and is now preparing a work on his favourite subject, natural history. His garden contains a tolerable collection of Mexican and other exotic plants."
"Some of Mr. Owen's friends in London say, that every thing went on well at Harmony until he gave up the management—that is, that he governed the community for the first few weeks, the short period of its pro-sperity, and that it declined only from the time of his ceding the dictatorship. Now Mr. Owen himself says, that he only interfered when he observed they were going wrong, - implying that he did not interfere in the commencement, but did so subsequently. These are contradictions which would require a good deal of mystificain Kentucky: their tenets are strictly Scrip- tion to reconcile in appearance. All the com-

they differed on almost every other point, yet agreed on this,—that Mr. Owen interfered from first to last during his stay at Harmony, and that at the time when he first quitted it nothing but discord prevailed. Very little experience of a residence in the back-woods convinced Mr. Owen that he was not in the situation most consonant with his feelings. He had been, when in Europe, surrounded by people who regarded him as an oracle, and received his ipse dixit as a sufficient solution for every difficulty. His situation at Harmony was very different; for most of the persons who came there had been accustomed to exercise their judgment in matters of practice, and this Mr. Owen is said not to have been able to endure. He would either evade or refuse answering direct questions, which naturally made men so accustomed to independence as the Americans are indignant. The usual answer he gave to any presuming disciple who ventured to request an explanation, was, that 'his young friend' was in a total state of ignorance, and that he should therefore attend the lectures more constantly for the future. There is this peculiarity respecting the philosophy pro-pounded by Mr. Owen, which is, that after a pupil has been attending his lectures for eighteen months, he (Mr. Owen) declares that the said pupil knows nothing at all about his system. This certainly argues a defect either in matter or manner. His followers appear not to be aware of the fact, that Mr. Owen has not originated a single new idea in his whole book, but has simply put forward the notions of Rousseau, Voltaire, Condorcet, Plato, Sir Thomas More, &c., in other language. His merit consists in this, and no small merit it is, that he has collated the ideas of these philosophers-arranged them in a tangible shape, and has devoted time and money to assist their dissemination."

The following is something in Mrs. Trollope's manner. But, after all, the pith of these matters lies more in the names or titles given to the parties than in the degraded state of the people. Call some of our lower orders counsellors, majors, judges, and colonels,-and you will have similar pictures of brutality.

"One day while getting our horse fed at a tavern in Indiana, the following conversation took place between the persons there assembled. We were sitting at the door, surrounded by captains, lawyers, and squires, when one of the gentlemen demanded of an ther if there had not been a 'gouging scrape' at the 'colonel's tavern' the evening before He replied in the affirmative; and after having related the cause of quarrel, and said that the lie had been given, he continued, 'the judge knocked the major right over, and jumped on to him in double-quick time - they had is rough and tumble for about ten minutes_Lord J_s Alm_y!_as pretty a scrape as ever you see'd—the judge is a wonderfully lovely fellow.'
Then followed a description of the divers punishments inflicted by the combatants on each other-the major had his eye nearly 'gouged' out, and the judge his chin almost bitten off. During the recital, the whole party was convulsed with laughter—in which we joined most heartily."

The great blot on the Union, however, is the perpetuation of slavery, and slavery of the worst kind, to which we will give our attention in a continuation of this review next Saturday.

Whistle-binkie: a Collection of Comic and Sentimental Songs, chiefly Original, &c. 32mo. pp. 128. Glasgow, 1832, Robertson; Edinburgh, Oliver and Boyd.

THIS is a little Scots song-book, which possesseth some mediocrity; but as it also betrayeth some originality, we will do our duty to the South by giving it a turn. And, first, of the name, Whistle-binkie, in the definition of which it seems Dr. Jamieson's Dictionary is incorrect—i. e. "Whistle-binkie, one who attends a penny wedding, but without paying any thing, and therefore has no right to take any share of the entertainment; a mere spectator, who is, as it were, left to sit on a bench by himself, and who, if he pleases, may whistle for his own amusement." But vice versa says our lyrist :-- " According to the most painstaking among our etymologists, the name was first conferred upon one who, in his attendance upon weddings and other convivial occasions. rendered himself so agreeable to the company by his skill in whistling, that he was allowed to sit at the bink, or board, and partake of the good things free of all expense; an honour, in the early ages of our history, which was only conferred on the highest degree of merit. In process of time, the cognomen of whistle-binkie, which arose in a rude age, came to be applied to men whose intellectual powers were either put forth in whistling, singing, story-telling, or any other source of amusement that caught the fancy and received the encourage-ment of their fellow-men, while engaged in their convivial orgies. Like the first family of mankind, the whistle-binkies had their origin in the East; and, did our limits permit, we could prove their existence almost coeval with the formation of society: we shall, however, in the mean time content ourselves with claiming no higher antiquity for them than 'King David, o' poetic brief,' who, it is well known, acted the part of a whistle-binkie, when, with the melody of his harp, he soothed to rest the troubled spirit of his predecessor, and was re-warded accordingly. Let this latter circumstance be kept in view; for we consider it essential towards constituting a man a whistlebinkie, that he receives a douceur of some kind or another for the pleasure which his talents have afforded the company. In the present times the profession is divided into so many castes, that we find it no easy task to assign them their proper places. In our endeavour to effect this, however, we shall begin with the sons of the 'sock and buskin,' with the celebrated Mr. Mathews at their head, whom we take to be the most renowned whistle-binkie of the age. In the next rank to the votaries of Thespis, we would place all professional singers who appear at public dinners, and receive the run of their teeth, and a per contra mair attour for their attendance. After them, comes a class of a more modest description, to whom a dinner-ticket is considered a remuneration sufficiently liberal, and whose powers of song, like the captive tenantry of the grove, is poured forth for the slender consideration of seed and water. Though in these three classes may be comprised a great proportion of those who are justly entitled to belong to the fraternity of whistle-binkies, yet there are fractions of the great body politic which we cannot properly assign to any of the above castes; some of these we would arrange under the head of amateur whistle-binkies: this description, though not so numerous, perhaps, as any of the others, are much inclined to consider themselves superior in point of personal respecta. Highlandman's exploits on the 12th of August, decide; suffice it to say, that an amateur courted on account of his possessing the talents we have described, and whose time is occupied "The in fulfilling an eternal round of dinner and tea-party engagements,-not that his entertainers have any personal regard for his character, but merely because they can make him a useful auxiliary in amusing their friends. Those men who relish this mark of distinction can easily be known by their perpetual atof conviviality which is ever and anon lighting up their countenances, where may be seen, traced in the legible hand of joyous dame Nature herself, 'Dinner, tea, or supper parties, attended in town or country, on the shortest notice.' There is also another description of the same genus, which may be called hooded whistle-binkies: these gents are invited out for the same purpose as the former; but perhaps from the delicate management of their host, or the obtuseness of their own perceptions, they are prevented from discovering that they are present for a motive. Men of this kind, if their time or inclination do not permit them to rank as whistle-binkies, ought, as soon as they are aware of the circumstance, which cannot be long concealed, to act on the shy. They can very well be spared; for the world abounds in whistle-binkies, though perhaps not exactly in the same walk. All lions, in our opinion, whether they belong to science, literature, or the arts, if they accept an invitation for the purpose of allowing themselves to be stirred up with the long-pole, and shewn off for the amusement or gratification of old ladies, young ladies, little masters and misses, come under the denomination we have so often referred to. Even the clergyman who attends a public dinner, and says grace as an equivalent for his ticket, may be considered (with reverence be it spoken) as coming under the designation of a respectable, well-disposed, timeserving whistle-binkie."

When people are disappointed of their whistlebinkies, the songs here collected are offered, in order that they may be their own entertainers. If in the way of sentiment, they may sigh forth the following sweet song by Motherwell :-

" The Parting. Oh! is it thus we part, And thus we say farewell, As if in neither heart Affection c'er did dwell? And is it thus we sunder, Without or sigh or tear, As if it were a wonder We e'er held other dear?

We part upon the spot,
With cold and clouded brow,
Where first it was our lot
To breathe love's fondest vow! The vow both then did tender
Within this hallow'd shade-That vow we now surrender; Heart-bankrupts both are made!

Thy hand is cold as mine, As lustreless thine eye;
Thy bosom gives no sign
That it could ever sigh!
Well, well! adieu's soon spoken,
'Tis but a parting phraseYet sad, I fear heart-broken,
We'll live our after-days!

Thine eye no tear will shed-Mine is as proudly dry; But many an aching head
Is ours before we die!
From pride we both can borrow— To part we both may dare— But the heart-break of to-morrow Nor you nor I can bear!"

Should humour be the vein, an account of a bility to any we have mentioned: this, how-| when sporting begins in the North, may raise ever, is a point which does not lie with us to a laugh. We copy the ballad, being most ap-decide; suffice it to say, that an amateur propriate to the date of our No.; but we fear whistle-binkie is one whose acquaintance is it will be a sore trial to be understood on this

> " The Twal o' August. "The Total o' August.
>
> She'll ta'en ta gun upon her shouther,
> A pack o' lead upon the tother,
> An' she'll had her horn weel fill wi' pouther,
> Upon the Twal o' August.
>
> For, oh but she's fond o' shooting,
> Fond, fond, fond o' shooting;
> Oh but she's fond o' shooting,
> Upon the Twal o' August.

Twa ponny tog rin at her heel,
An' oh tey'll snock the purd out w
She'll no be fear for man nor deil,
Upon the Twal o' August.
For, oh but, &c.

Ta first tey'll call'd her Cailach Mohr, Ta noter's name was Pruach Vohr,
An' troth tey'll raist a ponny splore,
Upon the Twal o' August.
For, oh but, &c.

Wi' pouther tan, she'll sharge ta gun,
An' tan she'll ram't in lead a pun',
Tan threw't her gun the shouther on,
Upon the Twal o' August.
For, oh but, &c.

She'll gang't a bit an' rise ta purd. But aye to shot, she maist turn't fear'd,
Upon the Twal o' August.

For, oh but, &c.

She'll teucht ta gun up ta her shouther, But whether ta fright, or n'else the pouther, But doon she'll drap't, an' maist was smother, Upon the Twal o' August. For, oh but, &c.

She'll fa'at back on a muckle stane, An' roar't a grunt, an' tan a grane, An' she'll thocht her back had lost ta bane, Upon the Twal o' August. For, oh but, &c.

Poor Prusch Vohr, he was nockt plin, An' aff his head was blaw the skin; He'll youll't a squeel, an' aff he'll rin, Upon the Twal o' August. For, oh but, &c.

For, on out, exc.

She ne'er will go a-shooting more,
To kill ta purds, an' tats what for;
Ta peoples say, ta plum was sour,
Upon the Twal o' Anquat.

For, oh but she's tire o' shooting,
Tire, tire, tire o' shooting;
For she'll shot her tog, an' lame hersel,
Upon the Twal o' August."

There is yet a more humorous touch in the following, which resembles the old sub-acid drollery of the Scotch muses.

" The Gudeman's Prophecy. The win' blew loud on our lum-head, About auld Hallowe'en; Quo' our gudewife tae our gudeman,
'What may this tempest mean?'

The gudeman shook his head, an' sich'd, Quo' he, ''tween you and me, I fear we'll hae some bluidy wark, And that ye'll live tae see.

For just before the Shirra Muir, We had sic thuds o' win',
An' mony a bonny buik lay cauld,
Before that year was dune.'

' Hoot, toot ! gudeman, ye're haverin' noo, An' talkin' like a fule ; Ye ken we've aye sic thuds o' win', 'Bout Candlemas or Yule.'

' l'll no be ca'd a fule,' quo' he,
' By ony worthless she,
My bodin it sall stan' the test,
An' that belyve ye'll see.'

' Tae ca' your wife a worthless she. Shows just ye're scant o' wit, But if ye'll speak that word again, I'll brain you whar ye sit.'

Now up gat he, and up gat she, An' till't fell teeth an' nail, While frae the haffets o' them baith, The bluid cam down like hall.

Our Gutchyre now spak frae the nuik, A sairie man was he, 'Sit down, sit down, ye senseless fouk, An' let sic tuilzeing be,

An' gudewife learn an' no despise
The word o' prophecy,
For ' bluidy wark' this nicht has been,
And that ye've lived tae see.

I could hae seen wi' hauf an e'e, The prophecy was sure,

For sican words 'tween married fouks,

Bring on a 'Shirra Muir.'

An' noo I hope ilk wedded pair, A moral here may fin', An' mind, though tempest rage without, A calm sough keep within."

Boucher's Glossary of Archaic and Provincia Words.

[Second Notice: Conclusion.]

Our arrangements for several weeks past have obliged us to leave our review of this work where we broke off in the midst of quotation; but we resume it with pleasure, convinced that we shall interest all our readers by a few further illustrations of so very valuable a design.

"Apple of the Eye.—The pupil; the point, or spot, of vision in the eye.

Or spot, of vision in the cyc.

He was no shepherd, cry'd the curate, but a complete courtier: keep him as the apple of thine eye.

Shelton's Don Quirots, p. 25.

He was my husband, brave Thrasimachus,

More dear to me than the apple of mine eye.

Locrine, v. 2.

- who esteemed it the apple of his eye, &c.

Morpson's limerary, p. 25.

- He kept him as the apple of his eye.

Deut. xxxil. 10.

In the Vulgate it is, ' quasi pupillam oculi sui,' but in the Germ. aug-aufel; and in the Dutch, oogen-appel.-The application of this word to the organ of vision is so little like its general acceptation, that it certainly merits some investigation. Some have thought it a diversified, or corrupt, pronunciation of pupil, formed of pupa, denoting what is sometimes called the baby in the eye; and which will be further inquired into under the word Babby. But this does not appear to be a very natural and plausible conjecture. What, then, is the primary meaning of apple; which we find may, without violence, be applied equally to a well-known fruit, and to the ball of the eye? Apple, abel, afel, is common to the Saxon, Belgic, Danish, and other northern languages (to which might have been added the Welsh afal, and the Irish or Gaelic ubhal, or abhal; and apel, which, according to Procopius, is in use in the Tauric Chersonese, and signifies an apple); and, by universal consent, has been appropriated to particularise the forbidden fruit. אבל abel, or, as it is sometimes softened in pronunciation, avel, signifies sorrow, mourning, wee. And it is agreeable to the figurativeness of that language to transfer the word to this fruit. and also to evil. See Burn and Nicholson's History of Westmorland and Cumberland, i. 309. And it is further worthy of remark that, like the Lat. malum, which signifies both evil and apple, aball in the Welsh hardly differs, either in sound or sense, from the Heb. אבל, but denotes want, defect, failing, need, scarcity, ruin; and aballus, is to fail, to perish. In the Germ. ubel is the same as our evil; both from the Heb. אבל, avel, the guilt, or penalty of evil; and rendered by the LXX. adizia, arouiz. Yet the term possibly may be formed of northern elements; and have regard only to the roundness of the fruit to which it is applied; being a compound of a intensive, and bal or boll, round: and it is worthy of notice, that it is applied not only to apples, properly so called, which are not always round, but to other fruits which, like apples, have a tendency to roundness, such as erd apfel, pommes de terre, or potatoes; cichapfel, acorns; our own English potatoe-apples, the seed of the potatoe; love-apples, &c. In the Germ., a, which adds to the force and signi-exactly, to the Lat. malum, signifying both an | times. apple, and evil."

Aroint is very happily explained.

"Aroint. — An interjection, which in the days of superstition was probably the established formulary for exorcising witches; being to be met with, in print, as far as I know, only in Shakespear; who uses it twice, as equivalent to away, begone, vanish, avaunt.

A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap, And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht:

This, it will be observed, is related by a witch to witches, as having been said to herself by a person extremely likely to be well acquainted with all the prevailing superstitious notions of

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold; — (or rather, the woles, provincial for wolds.)

He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold; — (rather, nine fwoles, also provincial for foals.)

Bid her alight
And her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee!

King Lear, iii. 4. This also is, professedly, a formal popular night-spell, or charm, against the ephialtes, or night-mare; and appears to have been founded on some story taken from the legend of St. Withold. The first four lines are particular, and applied only to the case of the incubus but the last line appears to be general, and such as was probably resorted to in all cases of magical incantation, but especially in witchcraft. The word is still in common use in Cheshire; and what is remarkable is, that, according to Ray, it is still coupled with a witch, as 'rynt you, witch, quoth Besse Locket to her mother,' which is given as a Cheshire proverb; but which, as the term sounded in my ears when I once heard it pronounced, I should not have hesitated to spell aroint. I have also seen it spelled, and by a Cheshire man of good information, runt: nor is it at all unlikely that it is the same exclamation which in Lancashire is pronounced and spelled areaut, as equivalent to get out, or away with thec. But it is most common in the middle parts of Cheshire; and there used, chiefly by milk-maids, when milking. When a cow happens to stand improperly, in a dirty place, or with one of her sides so near a wall, a fence, a tree, or another cow, that the milker cannot readily come at the udder, or to her neck, to tie her up in her boose, or stall,— in such cases, the milk-maid, whilst she pushes the animal to a more convenient place, seldom fails to exclaim, 'Aroint thee, lovey (or bonny), aroint thee: ' using a coarser and harsher epithet, should the cow not move at the first bidding. Dr. Johnson refers aroint to avaunt; and avaunt, even when it denotes rejection, or driving away, to the Fr. avant, which it resembles only in form and sound; for avant, in all its modes of application, however diversified, always has some reference to its theme, the Lat. ante, or antea, which the Eng. avaunt never has. The word has not presented itself in any other place, except in a print in Hearnes's Ectypa Varia, 1737, representing what was called by our ancestors, the Harrowing of Hell. On a lable issuing from the mouth of Satan are the words, 'Out, out, arongt,' or perhaps 'arougt,' for it has been read both ways. See the Notes of Johnson, and his corrector Steevens, on the passage in Macbeth: Boswell's Malone, xi. 28. - J. H.] It appears to me not improbable that aroint may have some connexion with the words rogne Fr., rogna It., which sig-

The word ronyon in the first quotation is probably referable to the same source. If this conjecture be well founded, the malediction 'Aroint thee,' is equivalent to 'the plague take thee,' or to a more modern anathema. The phrases 'scurvy fellow,' 'scurvy trick,' are still in use."

Askew deserves extract. " Askew. - Obliquely, aside, sideways.

For when you mildly look with lovely hue, Then is my soul with life and love inspird: But when ye loure, or look on me askew, Then do l die.

Screw your face at one side thus, and protest; let her fleer, and look askew, and hide her teeth with her fan, when she laughs a fit, to bring her into more matter, that's nothing: you must talk forward (though it be without sense, so it be without blushing), 'tis most court-like and well.—Ben Jonson, i. 259. Every Man out of his Humour.

Dr. Johnson does not seem to have been fortunate in illustrating this word, either by his definition of it, or by his etymology; for he defines it to be turning aside with contempt, a sense which it very rarely bears; and he refers it to a and skew, without saying, in its place, what skew is, or whence it comes; and without considering that skew and askew are, in fact, the same words, differing only as shame and ashame do. Askew is also nearly the same word as eschew, which is askew, with no other difference than the common one of the k being sounded soft; as skew, just in the same way, is now oftener pronounced shy. Skittish and askaunce seem also to be nearly connected, if not quite of the same family. Its true theme is the German scheuen, vitare, fugere, declinare, as schew pferdt is a skittish horse; and in some such form it is found in most of the languages of Europe. For I more than suspect that rcunian, whence our shun, is of the same family. In using the syllables shoo, shoo, now used only to drive away poultry, we do no more than soften, more Australi, the word skew, or askew. [Ellis suggests, that it may perhaps be from the word Askof.—S.]"

With this we would conclude but for "Auld-Nick," whereby hangs a tail. In speaking of this sainted Worthy, we have a curious passage from a MS. collection of semi-Saxon homilies, which proves that even as early as the time of Richard I. or John, his satanic majesty was styled "the old devil;" and regarding the origin of the name of Nick, Mr. Boucher proceeds to inform us that-

"Whatever may be the opinion entertained of Saint Nicholas, there is almost positive evidence that this 'Monarch of the North,' as Shakespear, in allusion to a passage in Isaiah, calls Satan (see 1. Henry IV. v.), owes this cans Satan (see i. henry iv. ...), were this his name of Nick or Auld Nick, solely to Northern mythology. 'Old Nicka,' says Sir William Temple (see his Essay on Poetry, Works, iii. 418), 'was a sprite that came to the country of th strangle people who fell into the water.' This sprite was a sort of water-deity, who was supposed to reside in lakes and rivers; having been deified, as Wachter observes, not for any benefits which he conferred, or was supposed to confer on mankind, but for the evil that he did. Of all that were drowned in swimming, or in any way perished by water, he got the blame. In the Germ. he is called nicks, or wasser nix; in Swed. necken; in Dan. nicken and nocken; and in Islandic, nikur. The people in all these countries imagined, that, like Neptune, he had some sort of empire in the sea, as well as in lakes and rivers; being actually in the Edda (see Mallet's Northern Antiquities, ii. 9) called nikuder; and they say fication of the word with which it is joined, nify scab, leprosy, scurvy; disorders very com-and bal, evil, forms also abal; and so comes up, mon and inveterate in this country in ancient were in danger of perishing by him, in the form and figure of a huge sea-monster, with a Latin glossarists have rarely, if ever, adverted human head, very exactly resembling that which is delineated as a real monster, at the end of a treatise on the Episcopus Puerorum, in the Works of the Rev. and learned Mr. John Gregorie. Sammes, in his Britannia Antiq. p. 450, takes notice of a water-deity, called socce; and observes, that it was not unusual to say of one who had been drowned, ' micken bath sucked him : it having been supposed that this water-god sucked out the souls of such as were drowned. See much more respecting all these points in Olaus Wormius; Mon. Dan. lib. i. p. 17; Keysler's Antiquilates Septentrionales, p. 270; Histoire de Dannemarc, par M. P. H. Mallet, vol. ii. p. 134; and Bishop Percy's Northern Antiquities (a translation of the foregoing), ii.

75 and Histoire de Languedoc, p. 515. Ni-75; and Histoire de Languedoc, p. 515. Ni-cholas, moreover, if we may credit Rabelais, liv. iv. cap. xix. tom. iv. p. 89, was regarded, if not as a deity, yet as a saint, who had some influence over the waters. And, accordingly, it is to Saint Nicholas that Panurge so earnestly applies in the storm, when he thought himself in danger of drowning. [Instances of the mention of sea-monsters, under the name of Nickers, are not very common in our early literature, but are to be met with in Beowulf and Layamon. It is unnecessary to make any apology for the insertion of some of those instances in this place, more especially as in the only edition which we have of the first of those poems, the text is so miserably corrupt as to render the detection of the word in question a matter of some difficulty; and the second exists, as yet, only in manuscript.

Wyrd oft nereth Unfægne eorl Thonne his ellen theah. Hwæwere me gesælde That ic mid sweorde ofsloh Niceras nigene.

Beowulf, p. 45, collated with MS. Cott.,

Vitell. A. xv.

Destiny oft helpeth An unfated man, When his courage prospers. But yet (destiny) permitted me That I, with sword, slew Thorkelin disguises the allusion most completely, in the printed copy, by reading the last line thus,

Niceras ni ce ne

which he translates

Nonne ego? minime tu hercule!

Nor is the description given by Layamon, of a Lake in Scotland, inferior in curiosity.

That is a seolcuth mere Iset a middel ærde Mid feune and mid ræode Mid watere swithe bræde Mid fiscen and mid feogelen mid nicen and mid reogeien Mid univele thingen That water is unimete brade Nikeres there bathieth inne. Ther is aluene ploge In atteliche pole. MS. Cott., Calig. A. ix. f. 125 b.

That is a strange lake et in middle-earth. With mud and with reeds, With water very broad, With fish and with fowls. With foul things,
That water is immoderately broad, Nickers bathe therein. There is sport of elves, In [that] filthy pool.

This word continued in use in England until a comparatively late period; the last instance which I have noticed of it is in that century, and printed by Pynson in 1499. In it we find 'Nykir' translated by 'Syrene.'—S.]

Necham.''

But we now take leave of M.— D.—.'

to it; yet there seems to be sufficient ground for at least supposing that the Lat. words nex and neco, (though, like noceo, ultimately from the Heb. הכה, to smite or strike, and to smite mortally, or to kill,) had occasionally some view or reference to the Northern terms now under consideration; for neco is undoubtedly often used by good Latin writers to express the killing or destroying by water.

Auferri jubet parvos et in amne se occurs in Ovid's Fasti. In the Latin of the middle ages it clearly bears this sense: 'Quidam juvenis de Fuissimo mortuus fuit, necatus scilicet in Rhodanum, casu fortuito.' See Du Cange, sub voce Necare; and 'alios occidit, alios necavit in flumine.' See Wachter, sub voce Nicks. The Ital. annegare, and the Fr. noyer, both of them formed from the Lat. neco, and both signifying to drown, are no doubt from the same Northern source. And, were the word necabit, in the following passage from Horace, instead of will kill, rendered will put into the water, or will drench, or drown, the translation, I apprehend, would not only be more apposite, but more faithful to the original.

> - Casus, medicusve levârit Ægrum, ex præcipiti, mater delira necabit In gelidá fixum ripà, febrimque reducet. Lib. ii. sat. iii. l. 288.

And as the Latins do not appear to have been aware of the origin of their nex and neco, so neither do the Greeks appear to have had a correct notion whence they had got their rexess and rixes; the latter of which is the same as the former, with no other difference than that it is spelled according to the dialect of the Æolians. It is true, neither the Greeks nor Latins apply the term exclusively to persons who had died a watery death. Yet we have just seen it so used by a Latin writer of the highest eminence; and the following instances shew that it was sometimes so used by the Greeks. Homer, speaking of the river Xanthus being choked up by a multitude of dead bodies, calls them vizuer and vizeeus. See Il. xxi. ll. 218, 235, 325. It is necessary further to observe this only, that the phrase Auld Nick, or Old Nick, is not in general applied to the Evil One in any very serious sense; but as we commonly speak of subordinate demons or elves. who are supposed to be only playfully mischievous. Neither do we find the term to have made any great progress in our language, and, like some other terms, to be in extensive either literally or metaphorically. The familiar term, to nick, meaning to outwit and impose upon, originally belonged to the nick we are considering; as, notwithstanding it implies the deceiving and even cheating another, it also implies its being done with dexterity, art, and skill. A particular throw at hazard, by which the caster wins, is called a nick. A nick name, I conceive, at first meant an ill name, (nomen iniquum; Fr. nom de nique; It. niquo,) given to a person supposed to possess some of the bad qualities of the devil. Those, however, who are not satisfied with this explanation of the term, will not be more gratified by referring to Skinner, who says that a nick name means no name, a name of no meaning; from nicht, Germ. not; (we usually find that nick names are very significant;) he might full as reasonably have referred the etymology of the word nick to the

But we now take leave of Mr. Boucher and of the name, being an instruction for instruc-his editors; and in doing so, we must repeat the great pleasure we have in seeing in the course of publication a work which supplies such a desideratum in our literature.

The Life and Pentificate of St. Pius the Fifth. By the Rev. J. Mendham, M.A. 8vo. pp. 325. London, 1832. Duncan. BESIDES Bower's very scanty History of the Popes, we have already in English separate works, the life of Alexander VI. by A. Gordon: of Sixtus V. (a translation from Gregorio Leti) by Ellis Farneworth; of Leo X. by Roscoe; of Pius VI. translated from the French of Azara; and, very recently, of Gregory VII. by Sir R. Greisley. To these we have now added a life of the canonised Pius V., a pope whose inquisitorial proceedings, and interference with England at a period of great interest, viz. the time of Elizabeth and the Scottish Mary, point him out as one well worthy of a biography in our language. This task Mr. Mendham has performed, taking for his bases the principal foreign authors who have previously treated of the subject, and especially Catena (Rome, 1586), Antonio de Fuyenmayor (Madrid, 1595), Gabuzio (Rome, 1605), Maffei, and De Potter. The volume is written in a high spirit of Protestantism, and exhibits the constitution of the Romish church, founded on the council of Trent, as one of great arrogance and encroachment, its doctrines upheld by equivocations and falsehood, and its ambition promoted per fas aut nefas. Without entering upon the opinions, which Mr. Mendham supports by references to many important and little-known documents, we may say, that as a historical précis of a remarkable era, affecting the principal countries of Europe, his volume is one which merits a place in every good library. We select a single extract as an example of the work.

" The Tridentine Catechism, Catechismus ex decreto Concilii Tridentini, ad Parochos, Pii Quinti Pont. Max. jussu editus, Rome, 1566, cum privilegio Pii V. Pont. Max., is a legitimate and essential subject of our biography. When completed, it was approved, not only by its pontifical editor, but by a pontifical successor, Gregory XIII., by Carlo Borromeo, saint and cardinal, by about twenty synods after the general one of Trent, and by eminent doctors without number. It is like-wise recognised by Paul V. at the beginning of his Ritual. Lagomarsini, in his edition of the Orations and Epistles of Poggiano, Rome, 1762, and particularly in the notes added to the life of that author by Gratianus, at the beginning of the second volume, has satisfactorily proved, that it had four authors, and that the fourth, the one most difficult to be determined, was Muzio Calini, archbishop of Zara. The exact and practised Latinity of Poggiano himself gave the work its ultimate form and polish. The work was in the self-same year, 1566, translated, as directed, into the vernacular tongue, Italian, and soon after into other European languages. Into English it was first translated by John Bromley, in the reign of James II., 1687; subsequently in Ireland, Dublin, 1816, by permission; and lastly, in the same unfortunate country, by Jeremiah Donovan, the reverend, and professor of Rhetoric and Belles-lettres in the Royal College of Maynooth, - as faithless and dishonest a translator as the church of Rome has any where produced, and that is saying something, but nothing more than the truth. It is enough to say of the contents of this document, which is by no means a catechism in the ordinary acceptation tors, that it embodies, although in a softened and cautious form, all the essentials of the corrupt Christianity of Rome, particularly the corporality of transubstantiation. It binds all the subjects of Rome with a chain of iron, as Doctors Doyle and Murray, at their mock-examination in 1825, before the commission, were obliged to acknowledge. But, independently of what were oaths then and perjuries in 1831, the fact is undeniable and eminently important. In his speculations and efforts Pius did not confine himself to the circle nearest to the centre, his own person, but carried them forward to a circumference co-extensive with the limits of the assumed universal church. This is the language both of his panegyrists and of truth."

Cabinet Cyclopadia, Vol. XXXII. The History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. III. tory of Spain and Portugal, London, 1832. Longman and Co.

As we said before, there is a singular dryness of style in this history, together with a want of any thing like analysis or reflection: still, the industry has been great, and a mass of material collected for any future writer who aspires beyond the task of a compiler. We select from the Appendix the following curious legend, so characteristic of the age which could invent and believe it.

" One day, while Sancho was absent on an expedition against King Bermudo of Leon, being in the vicinity of this once noble city, he resolved to hunt in the mountains. His attendants soon raised a wild boar, which Sancho pursued with great heat, until it took refuge in a cave that had once been a hermitage. He dismounted, and pursued the beast into the cave: it had sought an altar, which appeared in one corner, half in ruins. Without thinking of the sanctity of the place, he raised his arm to dart his hunting spear, when suddenly his arm stiffened so that he could not move it. In great surprise, he inquired what place this was; and hearing that it had been a hermitage of the holy martyr San Antonino, he fell down on his knees, and devoutly asked pardon of the saint for the sacrilege he had been about to commit; and if the holy saint would restore the use of his arm, he vowed to rebuild, in his honour, the church of Palencia. The vow was heard, for his arm was immediately restored to its right use: and the king royally fulfilled his pledge."

Some, too, of King Joam's (of Portugal) sayings mark the period to which they belong.

"A criminal, after fourteen years' impri sonment, was condemned to death - probably because he had not money enough to purchase pardon from his judges, who had, however, accepted of some. The king pardoned the criminal, on account of the long confinement and the corruption of the judges, and threat-ened them with the same fate if the offence were repeated. A gaoler persuaded another prisoner to counterfeit death, and thereby to escape the capital punishment: the gaoler was convicted and condemned; but he experienced the royal mercy in consequence of his ingenuity. A woman one day fell on her knees to obtain pardon for her condemned husband: 'Your husband is guilty,' replied Joam, 'and if I pardon him, he will only commit the more crimes; however, as you are in trouble, he may be enlarged!' Being once struck with the courage of a man in a bull-fight, he de-manded, 'Who are you?' 'I am a criminal, who have fled from justice: I killed a person volume, containing the Western Circuit, is well

This work is a strange medley, of which, who insulted me!' 'Corregidor,' said the entitled to the same praise. Neat little county to say the truth, we cannot make a satisfacking, 'purge this man of his crime; he shall maps; notes of ancient state and remains, and tory review, on such cursory perusal as we are be employed in my service!' One of his nobles had a sister who suffered herself to be dishonoured by a gallant; the brother slew the gallant, and fled to Arsilla. Joam no sooner knew the circumstance, than he wrote to the governor, whom he ordered to treat the fugitive well, as one who had shewn a proper sense of honour. These instances, however, were but exceptions to his general justice, which was characterised by undue severity. In other respects his whimsical disposition exhibited itself in a harmless or even amiable manner. He placed little value on the recommendations of his nobles; and a favour solicited through their medium was almost sure to be denied. But he was fond of honouring and rewarding merit, especially when, as is generally the case, that merit was dumb. To a faithful and valiant knight he one day observed: 'You have hands to serve me; have you no tongue to request a recompense?

Being at dinner, he was once served among others by Dom Pedro de Melo, a knight of great prowess, who had usefully served him in Africa. The soldier, who was better fitted for handling the sword than a dish in the palace of princes, let fall a large vessel of water, which sprinkled some of the courtiers, and made others laugh. 'Why do you laugh?' inquired the king: 'Dom Pedro has dropped a vessel of water, but he never dropped his lance!' Another brave soldier, Azambuja, who had erected the fortress in Guinea, and lance!' received a wound in the foot which made him lame for life, being one day at court, unable to push through the crowd, was ridiculed by some of the worthless audience. Joam perceived the affront, advanced towards the veteran, whom he seated by his side, and to whom he observed, 'Let them smile; they shall soon have reason to envy your honourable wound. To a third officer, who, on arriving at court, could not obtain a hostel, he said, 'Be not uneasy that every lodging is occupied; my palace shall suffice you. He had borrowed money of a rich merchant at Tavira, to whom, at the expiration of the stipulated period, he returned it with legal interest. The merchant -a wonderful instance of disinterestedness in such a capacity - refused to receive more than the principal; Joam sent double interest, with the order to continue doubling it as often as the merchant should persist in the refusal. In one of his public edicts, with the view of recruiting his cavalry, he ordered all his subjects to be in readiness to furnish excellent war-horses. The churchmen pleaded their immunities, and some of them went so far as to say that they were not his subjects, but those of the pope. To punish them in the way they deserved, Joan loudly asserted that he had never regarded them as subjects: and by another ordinance he forbade all smiths and farriers to shoe their mules and horses, -a measure which soon compelled them to sub-

The Family Topographer; being a compendious Account of the Ancient and Present State of the Counties of England. By S. Tymms. Vol. II. Western Circuit. 12mo. pp. 289. London, 1832. Nichols and Son.

On the appearance of the first vol. of this wellarranged, convenient, and useful publication, we bestowed upon it (see Literary Gasette, 12th Nov. 1831) the commendation its plan and execution so justly merited. The new of present state and appearance; list of seats and eminent natives; history, geography, and topography; and miscellaneous observations relative to each of the six counties of which this circuit consists, complete a performance of small cost and ready reference. We shall select only a single passage per county, for the sake of their curiosity; as it is impossible to illustrate such a work by extract.

Cornwall. —" Lizard Point, the most southern land in England, is composed of serpentine, a stone occurring in no other part of England; Liskeard well, with a stone at the bottom, possessing influence over matrimony; Ludgvan, chalybeate springs; Madern, a well, resembling the one at Menacuddle Grove, into which, if a crooked pin is thrown for good luck, all the pins of former devotees would rise to meet it!"

Devon. "On Brent Tor is a church, in which is appositely inscribed from Scripture, 'Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.' It is said that the parishioners make weekly atonement for their sins, for they cannot go to the church without the previous penance of climbing this steep; and the pastor is frequently obliged to humble himself upon his hands and knees before he can reach the house of prayer. Tradition says it was erected by a merchant to commemorate his escape from shipwreck on the coast, in consequence of this Tor serving as a guide to the pilot. There is not sufficient earth to bury the dead. At the foot of the Tor resided, in 1809, Sarah Williams, aged 109 years. She never lived further out of the parish of Brent Tor than the adjoining ones She had had twelve children, and a few years before her death cut five new teeth."

Dorset.-" At Studland, the Agglestone is called 'The Devil's Nightcap,' and affirmed to have been thrown by his Satanic majesty from the Isle of Wight, with the intention of destroving Corfe Castle."

Hants .- "Bishop's Waltham, and its neighbourhood, in the early part of the last century, was infested by a daring gang of depredators and deer-stealers, who, from the custom of blacking their faces to prevent discovery, were termed 'Waltham Blacks,' and to restrain whom the famous 'Black Act,' (which com-prehends more felonies than any law that had ever been previously enacted for domestic regulations,) was passed 9 Geo. II. 1723."

Somerset.—" In the chancel of Bathwick church is this inscription: 'Here lies the body of Mr. John Mackinnon of the Isle of Skye, an honest man. N.B. This Mackinnon was with the Pretender at the siege of Culloden, and the very man who carried him off. After his escape, by wandering about and lying in the woods and bogs, he lost the use of all his limbs; and some years after came to Bath for the benefit of the waters, and died there.

Wilts...." At Tytherington chapel service is performed but four times in the year. Sir Richard Hoare was informed, on authority which he had no reason to doubt, that a dog, accidentally left behind on one of these days, was found alive ten weeks afterwards, and liberated."

A Companión and Key to the History of England, &c. &c. &c. By George Fisher. Large 8vo. pp. 769, in part double columns, and with many Genealogical Tables. London, 1832. Simpkin and Marshall.

domains to afford it. Still, we are bound to treatise is beautifully in imitation of the Tus- is gradually increasing upon the remains of this state that it contains evidence of great research and labour, and that as a book of reference it may be consulted with much facility and advantage, where the ordinary histories would require much trouble and time. The author evinces strong opinions upon many points, which it is not for us to impugn, though we think they had better have been qualified or kept in the back-ground. The genealogies are monuments of assiduity; and altogether the work may deserve (though we do not vouch it) its name of a "Companion and Key to the History of England."

Reasons for the Hope that is in us. A Series of Essays on the Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, the Immortality of the Soul, and other important Subjects; adapted to the Understanding of Young Persons; with select Scripture Readings, and a Classification of Texts annexed. By Robert Ainslie, Writer to the Signet, Edinburgh; author of "A Father's Gift to his Children." Pp. 278. Edinburgh, Constable and Co.: London, Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; Dublin, Curry and Co.

WE have always considered the cause of religion and morality to be greatly strengthened when it is espoused by respectable and intelligent laymen. Such defenders of religion must be considered as volunteers in the service, undertaking the work purely from a sense of duty, a love of the subject, and a desire of doing good. Party interests and personal aggrandisement are here supposed to be out of the question; and the vulgar objection, "by this craft they gain their wealth," loses its force. Among those disinterested defenders of religion is Mr. Ainslie, the author of this small volume. He must be considered as a Christian volunteer in his preparation of it; and what he has voluntarily undertaken, he has executed with much credit to himself, and advantage to the cause which he advocates. The spirit which he manifests is at once rational, pious, and practical;he argues coolly and dispassionately, like a Christian philosopher and a good man. In all his discussions there is a laudable union of good feeling and sound reasoning. In the conduct of the whole there is shewn also, if we may so express ourselves, a business-like habit; and we can easily see that the author writes like a man accustomed (as he is professionally) to the laws of evidence; that he can seize with dexterity the strongholds of his case, and detect sophistry, as well as establish truth, with a dearness and precision indicative of honest intention and of a manly mind.

The first essay (for there are five of them) is on the Evidence of Natural Religion; and the second on the Testimony of Revelation both external and internal, where his views are sound and well expressed.

The third is that which we consider to be the most ingenious of them - on the Immortality of the Soul. We confess we are highly delighted with our author's mode of treating this important and interesting subject. Here he is completely at home; and his philosophical and acute turn of mind is most eminently displayed. He treats perspicuously of its possibility and its probability; demonstrates that there is no annihilation even in the material world; points out the longings of the heart after immortality; and the dismal state of those who have no hopes beyond the grave. And finally, he rests culan questions of Cicero, as the several topics ancient people. of it are imagined to be supported by different friends, who had retired to the country seat of one of them to canvass such great and important subjects there.

The fourth essay supposes an enlightened heathen to have gone from Rome into Judea in the days of Christ, led by his fame, and with the view of inquiry generally into the religious doctrines and moral precepts which he was teaching; and the author mentions, that the hint of it was taken from a sneer of David Hume, in his Essay on Miracles, wherein he says, that Lucian happening to be at Paphlagonia, detected the impostures of Alexander of Pontus; there adding, that a similar result would probably have happened at Jerusalem, had such a heathen as Lucian gone there in the days of Jesus. To try the question, our author sends an enlightened inquirer to Judea on purpose, who, after his investigations, which are conducted with great anxiety and candour, instead of effecting any detection, returns to Rome himself a zealous Christian. There is something not a little original in the whole of this treatise.

The last embraces, but in small space, an immense collection of the advantages which Christianity has conferred on mankind, and displays both skill and learning.

So much in favour of this book; but reviewers, it is said, must find fault as well as give praise; and we have been casting about our critical eye to endeavour to discover some cause for doing so. The views of religion by our author are sound, and the language good, distinct, and not more glowing than seems to suit its great subject. His knowledge of ancient history is also in general accurate, and the classical allusions just; but he has made one great mistake in saying that Solon's laws are reported to have been written in blood; whereas that was said of the laws of Draco, not those of Solon. Whether such a mistake would have been forgiven by Dr. Bushby at Westminster, or Rector Adams in the High School of Edinburgh, we know not. Probably our author may have been experi-mentally acquainted with the discipline of the last of these great masters. Be that, however, as it may, we are inclined to forgive this little classical slip; for, from a note on p. 148, it appears our author must be at least a sexagenarian, and may be naturally less accurate now in school-boy facts. After what we have said, we conclude with recommending the work warmly to all those to whom such subjects are interesting and important. It is particularly adapted to the understandings of the young; and we hope that while the elder branches of families may and will get much advantage from the perusal of it, it will find its place generally in juvenile libraries also, as it has already done in Scotland, in this end of the

The Library of Entertaining Knowledge. Egyptian Antiquities. British Museum. Vol. I. London, C. Knight.

A WELL-CHOSEN subject, and well compiled. No research into antiquity is of superior interest to that which takes Egypt for its field; and the editor of this volume has done his duty faithfully, in consulting the best authorities, and making a clear epitome of their materials. without attempting to settle the obscure and

The Poetical March of Humbug, &c. &c. Pp. 32. London, J. Gilbert

ONE of the satirical squibs of the day, and executed with more talent than is common to these ephemera. It attacks many popular writers, and in some cases gives amusing paro-dies of their productions, "after the manner of the Rejected Addresses." The ingredient called truth is not, of course, to be expected in a performance of this kind, and the author is evidently no better acquainted with many of his subjects, than the hackneyed ribaldry of the periodical press has enabled him to become; consequently his descriptions want veri-similitude: but still there is nothing coarse or venomous in the pleasantry; and as a jeud'esprit of considerable smartness, even the parties assailed may join in the laugh.

Constable's Miscellany. LXXV. The Book of Butterflies, Sphinxes, and Moths. Vol. I. By Captain Thomas Brown, F.L.S. &c. &c. London, Whittaker and Co.: Edinburgh, Waugh and Innes.

This is a delightful little volume, with no fewer than ninety-six engravings coloured after nature; and, both by the style of its scientific descriptions and its general arrangement, well calculated to convey ideas at once correct and popular of the habits and economy of the beautiful tribes of insects of which it treats. The Linnean arrangement has been adopted.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

CHRONOMETERS.

In no branch of human ingenuity-combining accuracy of science with incredible perfection in the mechanism of art, and both directed to a most important object as regards the preservation of that mighty mass of property and freight of life which navigate the face of the waters-can the mind take a deeper interest than in the improvement of the chronometer. We have accordingly from time to time turned the attention of our readers to this subject; to the annual reports of the Board of Longitude, and to the extraordinary productions of in-dividual talent. It thus happened that so long ago as November 11, 1826, we pointed out the gaining of both the Admiralty annual premiums of 300% and 200% by Mr. French, of the Royal Exchange; and expressed our hope that such distinction might induce him to proceed diligently with his experiments, for the yet further improvement of these wonderfully correct instruments. It affords us great pleasure now to record that our anticipations in this respect have not been disappointed; and we copy the annexed document with much satisfaction, not only as a just tribute to successful application, but as highly honourable to the state of art in our native land.

Extract of a letter received by his Majesty's hydrographer (Captain Beaufort) from Captain Fitzroy, of his Majesty's sloop Beagle, now on a survey, and dated Rio Janeiro, April 10th, 1832:—" One of the chronometers, French, No. 4214 (eight days), has behaved in a won-derful manner. Its daily rate has never exceeded eight-tenths of a second; and its measurement of each stage, and indeed of the [.] Note passim .- For instance, the Editor of the Literary the whole on the sure word of holy writ—the declarations of the Redeemer, and his resurdeclarations of the Redeemer, and his resurection from the dead. The structure of this whole distance, is the same as the mean of twenty chronometers."

So very close an approximation to absolute truth has never yet, to the best of our knowledge, and we have paid much attention to the matter, been made: it seems to identify the most minute conceivable divisions of time, and to render that palpable and practical which college; I. F. and Compounder.

Matters of Arts.—H. Clark, Grand Compounder. Worcester College; Rev. S. U. B. Lee, Oriel College; College. Rev. W. North, Jesus College. to render that palpable and practical which almost evades the imagination. But, in re-turn, it delights the imagination, by surrendering to it all the pictures of the sailor, after storm and hurricane, and darkness and disaster, thus enabled to steer his bark upon the boundless ocean to a certain point of safety and succour. He has but to consult his little guide and oracle, and the paths of the deep are as obvious to him as the great road to the traveller by land.

As connected with the mere science of this topic, we may add, that in 1822, when Dr. Tiarks ascertained the longitude of Madeira to be 1h 7' 35".11, in the British consul's garden at Funchal, by the mean of seventeen chronometers, the standard employed on that occasion, made by Mr. French, No. 720, determined the same results as the whole seventeen within the two hundredth part of a second.—See Dr. Tiarks' Report, page 36. Of Mr. French's chronometers in 1825 and 1826, when he gained three prizes at the Royal Observatory, one is particularised which only varied sixty-three hundredths of a second in its mean daily rate during seventeen months' trial there.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

OXFORD, May 3d,-The first day of Easter term the fol-

Oxfords, may 3a.—Ine first day of a nager term the following degrees were conferred:—

Masters of Arts.—R. C. B. Clayton, Grand Compounder, Brasennose College; Rev. W. M. K. Bradford, Rev. C. T. Cary, Magdalen Hall; Rev. H. J. Morshead, Exeter Col.

lege.

Backelor of Arta.—W. H. Bloxsome, Wadham College.

Backelor of Arta.—W. H. Bloxsome, were conferred:— Bachelor of Artz.—W. H. Bloxsome, Wadham College. May 19th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelors in Divinity.—Rev. E. B. Pusey, Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew, Grand Compounder; Rev. D. Veysie, Censor of Christ Church. Masters of Artz.—A. Morgan, University College, Rev. F. Morgan, St. John's College, Grand Compounders; Rev. C. H. W. Alston, St. Mary Hall; J. N. Harrison, Worcester College; G. S. Casement, Christ Church; Rev. A. Murray, Magdalen Hall; T. D. Whatley, Queen's Cellege; J. G. Cole, E. A. Dayman, Fellows, Exeter College.

College: Bachelors of Arts.—H. V. Russell, Corpus Christi College: F. A. McCachy, J. W. Pugh, Balliol College; R. Lloyd, Brasennose College, incorporated from Trinlty College, Dublin.

College, Dublin.

May 17th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
May 17th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Aris.—Rev. T. Page, Magdalen Hall; S.
Gaselee, J. Hussey, Balliol College; G. Eaton, Brasennose College; H. R. Barker, Merton College.
Bachelors of Arts.—W. H. H. Beach, Grand Compounder, Oriel College; F. Palmer, Christ Church; W.
Mears, J. Fisher, Queen's College.
May 24th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelor in Civil Low.—F. Povsh, Fellow, St. John's College.

May 24th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelov in Cvil Lavo.—F. Povah, Fellow, St. John's College.

Masters of Arts.—Rev. E. Auriol, Christ, H. Barton, Brasennose College, Grand Compounders: Rev. T. Furnivall, Queen's College; Rev. J. Purton, Trinity College; R. A. Hornby, Oriel College.

Bachelovs of Arts.—H. Hutton, Grand Compounder, Trhity College; G. W. Owen, G. J. Riddell, E. D. Barwell, New Ian Hall; D. C. Gill, Alban Hall; H. H. Harington, R. Sykes, H. H. Crommelis, M. A. Harmell, T. Cooper, E. Lowndes, J. S. Ifill, Magdalen Hall; H. Jones, T. French, T. Jones, Jesus College; F. B. Cole, Christ Church; R. Waller, Brasennose College; L. Miles, Queen's College; R. J. Dunn, Exeter College; H. Hobnuse, E. D. Wickham, A. M. Skinner, Ballod College; Hon. H. C. Cadogan, T. Stevens, G. Carwithen, C. Rawilins, Oriel College; A. Whipham, P. A. Ilbert, H. S. Powell, Trinity College; R. Wood, E. Alston, Fellows St. John's College.

May 30th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelov in Divinity.—Rev. J. R. Holcombe, Fellow of Jesus College, Prebendary of St. David's.

Masters of Arts. — T. Prickard, Grand Compounder, R. Rolland, St. Mary Hall; J. White, Queen's College; Rev. J. Vaugham, J. Cooke, Balliol College.
Backelove of Arts. — W. Cave, Grand Compounder, St. Mary Hall; Hon. C. B. Bernard, Balliol College: D. T. Knight, Lincoln College; G. Arney, Brasennose College; C. Turner, University College; W. H. Pooke, G. Lilling.

Maters of Arts.— H. Charle, Oriel College; G. F. Arthur, Trinity College; Rev. W. North, Jesus College.

Bachelor of Arts.—C. R. Moore, Grand Compounder; C. E. Lefroy, F. H. Doyle, V. P. Taylor, R. Williams, Christ Church; R. E. Roberts, Edmund Hall; P. Scholfield, University College; J. L. R. Kettle, C. J. D. Maraden, R. Spofforth, Lincoln College; C. Roe, Trinity College; J. Rowlandson, F. B. Wright, G. F. Whildborne, J. F. S. Phabayn, J. A. Smith, Queen's College; W. W. Fowler, Permbroke College; G. D. Johnson, W. W. Stoddart, Fellow, St. John's College; R. Prichard, Jesus College; E. P. Vaughan, P. D. Hadow, Balliol College; H. E. Strickland, F. Rogers, J. R. Burgess, H. L. Stephens, Oriel College; A. W. Tooke, H. Jelly, St. Alban Hall.

June 18th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Masters of Arts.—M. E. N. Parker, P. Boyle, Grand Compounders, Rev. W. J. Phillipotts, Oriel College; Rev. R. Dyer, Alban Hall; Rev. T. Furneaux, W. Duke, Worcester College; Rev. E. Ness, St. Mary Hall; the Hon. C. A. Murray, Pellow, All Souls' College; W. Watts, Scholar, University College; T. T. Bazely, Fellow, G. Barton, R. Lloyd, T. Hillyard, Brasemose College; C. Wordsworth, Student, Christ Church; S. I. Fell, Queen's College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. W. Curling, W. J. Blew, Wadham College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. W. Curling, W. J. Blew, Wadham College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. W. Curling, W. J. Blew, Wadham College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; Rev. E. Pole, Rev. T. L. Stewart, Exeter College; T. W. Stewart, M. L. G. Thistiethwaite, Brasennose College; C. H. Oakes, Bachelor in Medicine.

June 16th.—It was unanimously agreed to confer the degree of Doctor in Civil Law, by diploma, on Davies Gilbert, Esq. M.P. Honorary M.A. of Pembroke College, and some time President of the Royal Society.

June 20th.—In a convocation in the theatre the honorary degree of Doctor in Civil Law was conferred on the following gentlemen, as persons eminently distinguished in the scientific world:—Sir D. Brewster, K.H. F.R.S. Corresponding Member of the Institute of France; R. Brown, Esq. F.R.S. Vice-President of the Linnan Society; M. Faraday, Esq. F.R.S. Corresponding Member of the Institute of France; J. Dakton, Esq. F.R.S. Members of the Institute of France.

ciety; M. Faraday, Ed., F.R.S. Corresponding Memoer of the Institute of France.

The following gentlemen were admitted ad eundem:—

J. R. Corris, M.D. Corpus Christi College; T. S. Turnbull, M.A. Fresident of Gonville and Calus College; T. S. Turnbull, M.A. St. John's College; R. Willis, M.A. Fellow of Gonville and Calus College; R. Willis, M.A. Fellow of Gonville and Calus College; E. S. Halswell, M.A. St. John's College; W. Garnons, M.A. Sidney Sussex College; H. E. Fawcett, M.A. Trinity College; W. Gray, M.A. St. John's College; J. Cumming, M.A. Trinity College; W. Gray, M.A. St. John's College; J. Dunn, M.A. Trinity College, Cambridge: J. Dunn, M.A. Trinity College, Dublin.

In a congregation holden the same day, the following degrees were conferred:—

Musters of Arts.—Sir J. Mordaunt, Bart. Grand Compounder, Lord Ashley, Viscount Sandon, O. S. Morgan, Rev. G. Madan, Christ Church; C. Boyle, Fellow, All Souls' College; B. Price, Scholar, Worcester College; Rev. C. J. Laprimaudaye, St. John's College; R. Heelis, Queen's College; Rev. R. Bellamy, Rev. T. B. G. Moore, Rev. H. B. Snooke, Pembroke College.

Backetors of Arts.—J. Salt, Balliol College, J. Green-

Rev. H. B. Snooke, Pembroke College.

Backelore of Arta.—J. Salt, Balliol College, J. Greenfield, Braseanose College, Grand Compounders: A. W. Radcliffe, Braseanose College; W. Rigden, D. De Boudry, W. Eyre, Magdalen Hall; H. Usborne, Balliol College; T. Egerton, J. W. W. Tyndale, Christ Church; Hon. A. E. D. Dillon, B. Vaux, Trinity College; J. Liptrott, Worcester College; F. Wickham, Fellow, New College. The Theological Prise, "On the Fulness of Time at which Christ appeared on Earth," has been awarded by the judges to A. Grant, B.C.L. Fellow of New College; and the prizes to be recited in the theatre at this commemoration have been adjudged as follow:—

Chancellor's Prizes.

Latin Verse, "Attila," J. Thomas, Scholar, Trinity

College.
English Essay, "The Study of different Languages, as it relates to the Philosophy of the Human Mind," B. Harrians, M.A. Student of Christ Church.

Latin Essay, "De Stoicorum Disciplina," T. L. Claughton, M.A. Probationary Fellow of Trinity College.

Sir Roger Newdigate's Price. English Verse, "Staffa," R. Palmer, Scholar, of Trinit

Sir Roger Newdigate's Prize

English Verse, "Staffa," R. Palmer, Scholar, of Trinit College.

June 28th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelors in Divinity.—Rev. W. Ray, Fellow, Lincol: College; Rev. T. Price, Fellow, Jesus College.

Masters of Arts.—Rev. W. Gilkes, Pembroke College.
T. Lewin, Corpus Christi College, Grand Compounders.
H. C. Nowell, Corpus Christi College; Rev. A. Stewart Alban Hall; Rev. R. W. Whitford, St. Edmund Hall Rev. D. Adams, Rev. W. Moore, M. R. Jeffreys, Chrischurch; Rev. H. C. Smith, Ballol College; Rev. W. J. Meech, Fellow, New College; Rev. R. Eldridge, Rev. L. Tomlinson, Wadham College; Rev. R. Eldridge, Rev. L. Tomlinson, Wadham College; W. H. Edwards, Brasennose, Bachelors of Arts.—C. F. Broadbent, St. Mary Hall: W. Offley, University College; W. H. Edwards, Brasennose, College; C. P. Wyatt, J. C. B. Borough, S. R. Wood, Christ Church; T. Dand, T. Calvert, Queen's College, Subjects for 1833.—Latin Verse, "Carthago;" English Sessy, "De Atticoxum Comoedia;" English Verse, "Grenada."

Theological Frize.—"The analogy of God's dealings with men would not lead us to expect a perpetual succession of miraculous powers in the church."

July 3d.—At a Convocation the Honorary Degree of Doctor in Civil Law was conferred on the following gentlemen:—The Earl of Bandon; Lieut-Gen. Sir T. Brisbane, K.C.B. F.R. S. &c.; N. A. Vigors, Esq. F.R. and L.S. Secretary to the Zoological Society, &c.; J. D'Israeli, Esq. F.S. A. the Historian of Charles the First.

The prizes were recited in the following order:—
Latin Verse.—"Attila:" J. Thomas, Scholar, Trinity College.

English Ressy.—"The Study of different Languages, as College.

English Resay..." The Study of different Languages, as it relates to the Philosophy of the Human Mind: "B. Harrison, M.A. Student, Christ Church.

Lotin Essay..." De Stotcorum Disciplina: "T. L. Claughton, B.A. Fellow, Trinity College.

English Verse..." Staffa: "R. Palmer, Scholar, Trinity

College.
July 4th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—J. H. Philipps, Grand Compounder, Rev. T. H. Maitland, T. T. Jones, Oriel College: Rev.
J. E. S. Hutchinson, H. Bostock, Wadham College: Rev. J. E. S. Hutchinson, H. Bostock, Wadham College; Rev. B. V. Townshend, G. C. Bethune, Trinity College; Rev. B. V. Townshend, Brasennose College; T. S. Lightfoot, Exeter College; Rev. J. Dinning, Queen's College; H. B. Tremenheere, Fellow, New College; Rev. H. S. Sayce, Pembroke College; Rev. T. E. Burrow, M.A. Queen's College, Cambridge, admitted ad cundem.

bridge, admitted ad cundem.
July 7th.—Being the last day of Term, the following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—Rev. W. J. Goodden, Oriel College;
J. Goodden, Corpus Christi College; S. C. J. Berdmore, Student, Christ Church.

Bachelors of Arts .- H. B. Harenc, T. James, Christ

CAMBRIDGE, 9th May.—The following degrees were con-

Honorry Masters of Arts.—Hon. M. A. H. Harris, son of the late Lord Harris, Corpus Christi College; Hon. F. H. Y. Powys, grandson of the late Lord Lillord, Emmanuel College.

manuet College.

Master of Arts.—G. J. Cubitt, W. Ladds, Caius College; Rev. G. Phillips, Queen's College; H. Philpott, Fellow, Catharine Hall; C. L. Smith, Rev. E. H. Hopper, Fellows, Christ College.

Bachelor in Physic.—J. Ökes, Grand Compounder, Sid-per, Fellows, Christ College.

Bachelor in Physic.—J. Okes, Grand Compounder, Sidney College.

Bachelors of Arts.—M. N. Bovell, J. Hayworth, J. B. Darvall, Trinity College; W. Milne, J. Daniel, J. Jones, W. Spence, St. John's College; C. Bowen, T. D. West, St. Peter's College; F. Du Boulay, Clare Hall; Rev. W. S. Rowe, W. Acworth, J. Knight, Queen's College; E. R. Lascelles, J. W. Peers, Catharine Hall; W. Hamond, T. J. Scalé, Jesus College; T. A. Roper, Magdalen College; G. B. Garrow, Emmanuel College; Rev. A. P. Birrell, Sidney College.

May 22d.—The following degrees were conferred:

Masters of Arta.—W. A. Soames, Fellow, Rev. E. P. Williams, J. T. Ingham, C. Morris, Trinity College, F. M. M'Carthy, St. Peter's College; Rev. W. S. P. Wilder, Compounder, Caius College; R. F. Hartley, Queen's College.

Bachelor in Civil Lau.—J. Platt, Trinity College, Bachelor in Civil Lau.—J. Platt, Trinity College, Bachelor in Civil Lau.—J. Platt, Trinity College, Bachelor of Arta.—R. W. Brooke, W. W. Harvey, Fellows, King's College; J. Carey, Trinity College; C. Sawbridge, St. Peter's College; J. W. E. Ellis, W. D. Daniel, F. Watt, Compounder, Caius College; J. C. Somerville, Trinity Hall; C. Chapman, Corpus Christif College.

June 8th.—The following degrees were conferred:

Bachelors in Divinity.—Rev. T. Gregory, St. John's College; J. B. James, F.L.S. Queen's College; Rev. J. Morgan, Sidney College; D. B. Aldis, Trinity College; M. Scholefield, J. Jones, Caius College; L. B. Aldis, Trinity College; W. H. Yates, G. Wilson, St. John's College; M. Scholefield, J. Jones, Caius College; E. Blenkinsopp, T. D. H. Bachelors of Arta.—R. G. L. Blenkinsopp, T. D. H.

Wilson, J. Garnett, Trinity College; D. Williams, St. Lohn's College; J. C. Morphew, Compounder, G. T. Hall, St. Peter's College; P. B. Backhouse, C. E. Mayo, Clare Hall: W. Monkhouse, Caius College; E. Freeman, Corpus Christ College; C. J. Snape, Queen's College; W. Fulletten, Emmanuel College.

The Chancellor's medial for the best English poem was on Friday last adjudged to W. C. Kinglake, Trinity College. Subject, "The taking of Jerusalem in the First Crusade."

on Friday ast aquagen to w.c. harmalem in the First lege. Subject, "The taking of Jerusalem in the First Crussele."

June 13th.—The following degrees were conferred:—Buchelor in Divinity.—Rev. G. B. Paley, Fellow, St. Becker's College; Rev. S. Fennell, Fellow, Rev. J. M. Kirby, Queen's College; Rev. J. Taylor, Fellow, St. John's College.
Buchelor in Physic.—G. Pardoe, Caius College.
Buchelors of Arts.—A. Campbell, B. P. Hodgson, Triaity College.

June 20th.—E. Beck, Esq. Compounder, Jesus College, was admitted Doctor in Physic; and the Rev. J. Calthrop, M.A. of Brasennose College, Oxford, was admitted ad

Prizes. The following prizes were adjudged on the 18th:—

Members' Prizes for Bachelors of Arts.—1. J. Spedding, Irinity College; 2. H. S. H. Hildyard, B.A. St. Peter's Callege. Subject, Qua proctipue parts debilis sit et manca reter am philosophorum de officiis doctrina!

Members' Prize for Undergraduate.—J. Hildyard, Christ's College. Subject, finter silvous Academi quærere verum.
[No second prizes awarded.]
Prizes for the best translation of a passage from Shakspeare into Greek verse).—H. Lushington, Trinity College. Subject, Julius Casar, act 2, scene ii. beginning, Cas. "Casar, 1 never stood on ceremonies;" and ending,
'Seeing that death, a necessary evil, will come when it will come."

June 20th.—Sir William Browne's medals were adjudged

Stokow:—
Greek and Latin Odes—J. Hildyard, Christ's College.
Epigrams—W. Nicholson, Christ's College.
Subjects—Greek Ode — Quid dedicatum poscit Apolline

tatin Ode

Latin Ode—Occultum quatiente animo tortore flagellum. Greek Epigram—Quis enim celaverit ignem, lumine qui emper proditur inse suo ? ? Latin Epigram—Homo sum: humani nihil à me alienum

June 38th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Decter in Divinity.—A. Hudleston, Trinity College.
Bechelor in Divinity.—T. F. Beckwith, Catharine Hall.
Decter in Physic.—N. F. Davison, Calus College.
Bachelor in Physic.—R. Nairne, Trinity College.
Bachelor in Civil Law.—F. Merewether, A. A. Doria, Trinity Hall.

Bachelor of Arts.—J. Thompson, Christ's College. W. Boyle, B.A. Trinity College, Dublin, was admitted

ed cundem.
July 3d.—Commencement Day, the following Doctors and Wasters of Arts were created:—
Dectors in Divinity.—Rev. J. Brasse, Rev. A. Hudleston, Trinity College; Rev. W. Hewson, St. John's Col-

Decives in Piensity.—Rev. J. Brasse, Rev. A. Huelleston, Trinity College; Rev. W. Hewson, St. John's College.

Decives in Piensic.—J. Staunton, N. F. Davison, Calus College; E. Beck, Jesus College.

Masters of Arts.—G. W. Craufurd, J. Thackeray, C. Loft, King's College; G. Goldsmith, F. M. Mac Carthy, E. Phillips, L. B. Dykes, T. Fell, W. Tillotson, T. Smith, P. Hanham, S. Barker, H. S. Hildyard, St. Peter's College; G. Cooke, J. F. Francklin, E. Bates, F. Jackson, C. C. Beaty, Clare Hall; E. Nottidge, Pembaoke College; R. Murphy, A. Thurtell, T. Ladds, W. S. P. Wilder, J. Macdonald, C. Bevan, J. N. Dickinson, W. Pylunckett, J. Mainwaring, Caius College; G. Couleber, E. Greaves, B. Lodge, J. Netherwood, T. E. Willyams, H. Pearse, R. Cox, Corpus Christi College; W. Hutt, C. J. Shaw, J. D. Walford, A. Pearson, J. Pearson, E. P. Neale, S. N. Kingdon, R. Pashley, W. M. A. N. Crawford, J. M. Robinson, W. Airy, C. Campbell, W. A. Soames, W. Ogilby, J. R. Marshman, W. H. Ros, G. M. Valentine, J. Hassall, E. B. Beynon, E. F. Beynon, E. P. Willerm, H. J. Greene, T. K. E. Chatfald, J. Braine, J. Twells, E. C. F. Jenkins, T. J. Philips, T. Barber, S. H. Powell, W. Walker, G. H. Barlow, W. W. Autree, A. Martineau, W. B. A. Raven, G. J. P. White, M. Gibson, J. Locke, S. Hoare, Jun, T. J. Blofeld, E. O'Brien, J. Kenrick, J. Tate, J. P. Bablington, R. Long, J. R. Linge, C. S. Eustace, F. C. Rasch, H. Makhus, G. C. Hale, J. E. Middleton, M. J. G. Hawrey, Trinity College; W. Martin, H. E. C. Coden, L. Shadwell, Jun., G. Langshaw, D. B. Baker, C. Sparkes, A. Casseis, J. Simpson, T. Poole, S. Smith, W. Fison, W. Carle, J. Smith, W. Boyle, St. John's College; R. Palipis, T. Scott, A. T. Carr, D. Capper, T. Hooper, H. C. Michell, W. N. Nicholson, J. A. Morris, T. Cupiss, W. Locke, Queen's College; W. Atams, J. Parkin, G. Phillips, T. Scott, A. T. Carr, D. Capper, T. Hooper, H. C. Michell, W. N. Nicholson, J. A. Morris, T. Cupiss, W. Locke, Queen's Hellips, J. West, J. Hodgson, Jesus College; E. S. Whittread, Triatty Hall; W. L. Cha Licentizes in Physic.—J. Harris, Trinity College; F., Farre, St. John's College. Bachetor in Civil Law.—T. W. Greene, Trinity Hall.

PRINCE PUCKLER MUSKATT.

PRINCE PUCKLER MUSKAU'S remarks on England have been so much talked of, that any notice or explanation of them or their writer must possess interest. We have, therefore, pleasure in inserting in the Literary Gazette a communication from that author, addressed to the editor of the Morgenblatt, and extracted from No. 144 of that Journal, June 16, 1832.

the editor of the Morgenblatt, and extracted from No. 144 of that Journal, June 16, 1832.

Sir,—Being apprehensive that the pseudo Briefe eines Verstorbenen, "which appeared from time to time in the Morgenblatt, might contain things which I should be sorry to have laid to my charge, I took occasion in the course of the last year—not very seriously indeed, but still distinctly and intelligibly enough—to deny that I was the author of them. I was, therefore, extremely surprised to see that the very able and lenient critic who reviewed the laster part of my letters in the Litteraturblatt, did me the injustice to imagine that I had reproached Herr Börne to whose great literary talents no one can render more perfect justice than I do) with his Judsiam. Herr Börne has certainly attacked my letters, or rather their unknown editor, with some asperity; but I never made the slightest rejoinder, and most certainly should never have thought of doing it in the manner above mentioned;—first, because up to the present moment I have not troubled myself about the matter at all, and really never knew whether Herr Börne was a Jew or a Christian; secondly, because I never regarded the being born of another religion, nation, or rank, from those in which I happen to be born myself, as a subject of reproach. For my opinions on this point, my letters, perhaps, afford the best guarantee. Partly from this conviction, partly from indolence, therefore, I have hitherto taken no notice of this mistake; but as the pseudo letters above inentioned (whose merits or demerits I do not presume to discuss) have been published in some periodical works in England under a name which is there generally believed to be mine; and as a certain Anacharsis the Youngest announces in No. 110 of the Morgenblatt, that by the plebelan "happen to be born myself, as a subject of reproaching in the presence of the presussions, as maturally in serious alarm:—I therefore hasten to assure them and the gentleman who is so fortunate as to be in their condidence, most sole Briefe eines Verstorbenen.

In spite of this epistie, No. 146 of the Morgenblatt contains another Neuester Brief des Verstorbenen, ushered in by the following very curious note of the editor:—" In reference to the letter from the author of the Briefe eines Verstorbenen, which appeared in No. 144 of our journal, we must bear witness that the letters which we have published under that title in the Morgenblatt, and which we shall continue to publish, do not proceed from the pen of the person who generally passes as the author of the Briefe eines Verstorbenen,—but from a well-known correspondent of our own, who in assuming the pleasant mask of the Verstorbenen thought, indeed, that he might remain undiscovered; yet hardly flattered himself with the idea that he could be taken for the Verstorbene himself."

EGYPTIAN PAPYRUS AND PAPER-MAKING. AT a late sitting of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, M. Dureau de Lamalle read the analysis of a letter addressed by him to the Marquis de Fortia d'Urban, on the Egyptian, Sicilian, and Italian papyrus, and the manufacture of paper among the ancients. He then read the description given of it by Theophrastus. "The papyrus does not grow in deep waters, but in those which are about three feet or less

The work of Prince Puckler Muskau on England, we should state in explanation, was published in Germany by the title of Briefe cines Verstorbenen. The popularity obtained by this work led to the insertion of a series of papers in the well-known periodical, the Morgenblatt, entitled Neue Briefe cines Verstorbenen, the authorship of which the prince here ductaims.

† The cry with which the mob in Germany are, or were, accustomed to assail Jews.—Translator.

Masters of Arts.—Rev. W. M. Lawson, St. John's College; Rev. W. L. Weddall, Rev. W. D. Tyson, Catharine Hall; Rev. J. Hurnall, Emmanuel College; Rev. G. Johnston, Sidney College.

Licentiates in Physic.—J. Harris, Trinity College; F. J. angle with the stem, throwing out a number of fibres, which shoot into the slime of the river. The stem grows to the height of fifteen feet and more: the upper part, which is properly called the papyrus, is about four cubits in height; it is triangular, and crowned with a panicle which is of no use, and does not contain any seed (at least they generally fail). root shoots out stems at different points. The The wood of the root is handsome and strong, and is used by the natives in the manufacture of several household utensils, as well as for fuel. They make vessels of the entire stem; or, when split lengthwise, they manufacture it into sails, mats, cloth, ropes, and many other articles. The papyrus is well known in its use as paper; it also supplies nourishment, and is eaten raw, boiled, or roasted; it grows in Syria, and was employed by King Antigonus, of Palestine, in making the ropes for his navy."

M. Dureau de Lamalle infers, from a passage in Strabo, that the Jews of Alexandria had monopolised the raw material of paper; that it was cultivated with great care, and that its papyraceous qualities were improved by cul-We must not, therefore, be surprised (he adds) if Bruce could not make paper with the wild papyrus of Abyssinia, and if we could not manufacture with the Sicilian papyrus, deteriorated by the régime of the stove, a paper equal in beauty to the Augustan, Livian, or even the Hieratic paper.

M. Dureau de Lamalle affirms that this aquatic plant would grow extremely well in the marshes about Arles, on the swampy ground of the Var, and on the banks of the rivers of those departments which fall into the Mediterranean. "If this stem (says he), which is much improved by cultivation, is superior either in strength, fineness, or duration, to rags, straw, and other papyraceous substances, it would perhaps not be useless to attempt the cultivation of it in the south of France. Messrs. Chevreul and Dumas have undertaken to make an attempt at the manufacture with a small number of stems which we possess. If they should succeed, the two Academies of Natural Philosophy and History will gather the most pleasing fruit of their labours, and fulfil a part of their noble mission, by giving to France a new production, a new branch of industry, and a species of cultivation calculated to impart value to barren marshes, and even to render unproductive and insalubrious swamps healthy and fertile." M. de Lamalle enumerated the several qualities of paper obtained by the ancients from the papyrus. He recapitulated the divers ex-periments (all of them unsuccessful) hitherto made by the moderns, to manufacture paper out of papyrus, according to the method described by Pliny; and by a learned and luminous dissertation on the text of that author, he pointed out the means to be employed in order to obtain a more favourable issue.

The following are the inferences from his labours, as he himself represents them. The results are: 1. The explanation of the text, hitherto ill understood, of the eighth chapter of the thirteenth book of Pliny. 2. The precise knowledge of a branch of industry so important as the manufacture of paper in Egypt and at Rome. 3. The confirmation of some facts interesting to history and diplomacy. 4. The discovery made by M. Champollion, jun. of several Egyptian papyri dated and written in the years 1872 and 1571 B.C., compared with the passages in Exodus, which shew us the papyrus cultivated in Egypt __ with those of Sanchoniathon and of the Egyptian books quoted by Plato, which carry back the invention of writing and the manufacture of paper to Thoth - with the passages in Homer, which shew that the papyrus was brought from Egypt to Ithaca to make cordage, and the writing employed upon tablets, — all these comparisons, taken from authors so ancient, which had not hitherto been made, give great probability to the opinion already expressed by many learned men, but not supported by sufficiently convincing proofs, that the use of writing and of paper, employed in Egypt so far back as 1872 B.C., was communicated to the Greeks at least in the tenth or ninth century B.C.; that learned men made use of this means to transmit their thoughts; lastly, that the fragments preserved in the Greek authors, of the ancient histories of Chaldea, Persia, and India, were extracted from written books, and not derived from oral traditions, which must give to these facts a high degree of historical certainty. 5. The exact monography of the papyrus and of the manufacture of paper has led to these general results, which are so important to history.

" If they appear," adds the writer, " to my judges and to my readers as well founded as they seem to me after mature examination, they will perhaps a little shake their belief in the paradox that the Greeks did not begin to write till 600 years B.C. - a paradox which, I think, has not a little contributed to give us false ideas of the state of civilisation in Asia before the historical era."

PINE ARTS. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

England and Wales, from Drawings by J. M. W. Turner, Esq., R.A. No. XV. Moon, Boys, and Graves.

INTO all his topographical drawings Mr. Turner introduces some striking and poetical effect, which, although it may and does detract somewhat from their strict truth, communicates to them a charm of ample compensation. "War-wick Castle," "Kenilworth Castle," "Brinkburn Priory," and "Tamworth Castle," are the subjects which in this, the concluding number of the first volume of the valuable publication under our notice, have been submitted to the magical influence of his genius; and exquisitely beautiful they all are.

The Byron Gallery. Part II. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE plates in this second part of the Byron Gallery are all from drawings by Mr. H. Richter. The talents of Mr. Richter have frequently been spoken of in the Literary Gazette with the praise which they deserve; but we confess that we do not think those talents are of the peculiar description necessary to embody the conceptions of a Byron; — a task, indeed, to which few minds are equal. There is, however, a sweet and feminine expression in "She walks in beauty;" and the illustration of "The Deformed transformed," is very characteristic.

Scott and Byron. - Mr. Westwood has just published two small but extremely neat embossed likenesses of these celebrated individuals. Even after all we have seen of them, we cannot help liking these pretty specimens of an almost new art. Scott's expression is rather more severe than in reality: of Byron's countenance we have not so perfect a knowledge,

ORIGINAL POETRY.

YOUTH.

And herein have the green trees and the blossoming shrubs their advantage over us: the flower withers and the leaf falls, but the fertilising sap still lingers in their veins, and the following years bring again a spring of promise and a summer of beauty: but we, when our leaves and flowers perish, they perish utterly; we put forth no new hopes, we dream no new dreams. Why are we not wise enough, at least more preciously to retain their memory?

OH! the hours! the happy hours Of our other earlier time, When the world was full of flowers. And the sky a summer clime! All life seem'd so lovely then; For it mirror'd our own heart: Life is only joyful when That joy of ourselves is part.

Fond delight and kind deceit Are the gladness of the young-For the bloom beneath our feet Is what we ourselves have flung. Then so many pleasures seem Scatter'd o'er our onward way; 'Tis so difficult to deem How their relish will decay.

What the heart now beats to win Soon will be unloved, unsought: Gradual is the change within, But an utter change is wrought. Time goes on, and time destroys Not the joy, but our delight: Do we now desire the toys sight?

Glory, poetry, and love, Make youth beautiful, and pass As the hues that shine above Colour, but to quit, their glass. But we soon grow calm and cold As the grave to which we go; Fashion'd in one common mould, Pulse and step alike are slow.

We have lost the eager eye; All those inward chords are mute. Once so eager to reply. Is it not a constant sight-Is it not most wretched too.

We have lost the buoyant foot-

When we mark the weary plight In which life is hurried through? Selfish, listless, Earth may wear

All her summer wealth in vain-Though the stars be still as fair, Yet we watch them not again. Too much do we leave behind Sympathy with lovely things; And the worn and worldly mind Withers all life's fairy rings.

Glorious and beautiful Were youth's feeling and youth's thought-Would that we did not annul All that in us then was wrought! Would their influence could remain When the hope and dream depart;

Would we might through life retain Still some youth within the heart! L. E. L.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday the Opera season closed with an admirable selection of performances, and an overflowing audience. The effect of the house but it resembles the accepted portraits of him. superb in the extreme. At the end Mr. Mason body were alike exhausted—were as fine a pic-was called for, and, with some apparent reluctance, came forward and made his bow.

We cannot, however, take our leave in the same silent manner; for we must say a word on the unhandsome and cruel way in which this gentleman (for he is a gentleman, and not, as is too often the case, a dramatic adventurer) has been treated. He has lost a large sum of money, in an anxious and liberal—so liberal as to deserve the name of extravagant-effort to afford the public various and new entertainments, on a splendid scale. In the Italian Opera he has brought forward the highest talent which could be obtained; in the ballet very superior attractions; and in the German Opera a musical novelty, the effect of which must have much influence on all our future public music. To this indeed we may, in a great measure, attribute the exertions of Laporte, at Covent Garden: for competition is the true source of excellence. What, then, has been Mr. Mason's reward? The press has, with few exceptions, been inveterately hostile to him. He has been misrepresented, lampooned, and vilified; and all for lavishing a fortune in an honourable attempt to administer to the popular gratification. This were a strange return, did not petty jealousies and disappointed rivalry furnish the clue to it. For our parts, we have to express our earnest hopes that another and a more successful season may reward Mr. Mason for his lavish expenses on this; and that the just patrons of the drama will appreciate as they ought his unparalleled Which so charm'd our childhood's endeavours to minister to their pleasures. We trust he will not be made the victim to an effort which has not only produced a new medium of theatrical recreation, but which, in its consequences, must be felt through years of improvement hereafter.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday last the tragedy of Henri III et sa Cour was here produced, and with complete success. Of the play itself we have already had occasion to speak; but we must say Lord Leveson Gower's Catherine of Cleves retained little of its spirit. There is something picturesque and graphic about M. Dumas' drama, which evaporated considerably in the English imitation. Mdlle. Mars played the unfortunate duchess, as if she indeed were the very being she represented. The first unconscious tenderness of manner, as she awakens with St. Megrin at her side, was admirably contrasted with the successive emotions of surprise, shame, and the return to her natural dignity and former reserve. Over the interview with her husband she threw a touchingness, a grace which almost veiled the real disgust of the scene; but it was not till the last interview with her betrayed lover that her power was really called forth. You see her in the terrible solitude of the lonely chamber where she has been immured for hours; the despair only broken by a feverish hope that he may not come -her agony when he does arrive-the momentary forgetfulness of their situation while listening to St. Megrin's avowal of his love - the way in which she bends forward to listen to him - the sudden return to terror - the hope with which she hurries to the window-her search for something to aid his descent-her rapture when the rope is thrown in-her passionate energy as she rushes to secure the door-her entreaties to her husband for mercy-her final sinking to the earth when she hears that that St. when all stood up for the national anthem, was Megrin is killed, as if the force of mind and ture as poetry ever imagined and action emtodied. And yet it is wonderful by what slight means this great effect is produced; a word, a look, a tone, a gesture, gentle and subdued, are all. The great characteristic of Mdlle. Mars is her beautiful repose. Once only through the piece did feeling seek expression in vehemence: when, after looking in vain round the chamber for aught that can assist St. Megrin in his descent from the window, she puts her hand to her waist, she has no girdle on—she cannot offer even that slight aid - her whole frame becomes convulsed; she clenches her hands, stamps, and shrieks "rien." Madame Pasta's "io" only can compete with that "rien." Perhaps Mdlle. Mars's greatest charm is her voice; it is impossible to imagine "a deeper, tenderer me-lancholy" of tone,—the different accents are like so many notes of music-and vet, though singularly low, it is so distinct that you never lose a syllable. Among the other characters, we must mention with especal praise, Laporte's Henri; it was an historical portrait, giving the kind manner, the weakness, with one or two flashes of spirit, which marked the king to the life. Arnaud played the lover with much animation, and his defiance to the Duke de Guise took a fine chivalric tone; but there is a lisp in his voice which, to an English ear at least, makes his enunciation difficult to follow. An unlucky contre-temps happened at the end: Mademoiselle Mars fell, on dying, too forward on the stage, down came the curtain, and the dead body was obliged to turn on one side, to say nothing of a servant running across and holding up the green baize, so that the audience had a full view of the proceedings. The Sylwhide followed; and as our contemporaries, in speaking of Taglioni, have exhausted all the pithets of angel, fairy, peri, we shall content surselves with saying that she really induces u to believe in such aerial existences. We must also add a most well-merited eulogium on the exquisite style of dancing which distinguishes her brother, Paul Taglioni. The ballet, in story, costume, and execution, is perfeculy delicious.

"'Tis a sweet voice, which might chain all around, Although it had no other charm but sound;"

On Monday Laporte's benefit was a bumper; and no wonder, considering the attractions and the last of Taglioni, who, on this occasion, surpassed herself. Nothing more exquisite in grace, action, and expression, was ever exhibited on any stage. We are free to lavish these encomiums upon foreign performances, because we hope never to see this country so illiberal as not to encourage talent, and particularly transcendent talent, wherever it is found and in whatever branch of art. We are not the less the cordial friends of native merit which has acknowledged and superior claims to patronage. But, above all things, we would guard candidates for public favour against the absurdity of expecting patriotism in the enjoyment of amusements. What pleases most, what is the most agreeable relaxation from the cares of life and anxieties of business, will be, and ought to be, amply remunerated - gooseberry wine has no right to expect champagne prices. In this point of view we think ourselves much indebted to M. Laporte for his exertions, and we augur well from them both for the theatre and ourselves.

HAYMARKET.

announced it for future representation, gave it the more becoming title of a "little farce." The chief business of the drama arises out of the eccentricities of one Mr. Sudden, a gentleman who, as his name implies, decides on all occasions hastily, and whose first thoughts involve him in a variety of difficulties, from which he is relieved only by the superior judgment of his second. As a specimen of these scrapes, Mr. Sudden, merely because he happens to have a ward who, in a proposed marriage, is more anxious to please herself than her guardian, offers his hand to a plotting widow, a certain Mrs. Trapper, and gives her a written promise—but, on second thoughts, refuses to fulfil the contract-is prosecuted, and cast in 2000/. damages, which he determines to pay instanter, but, on second thoughts, declines doing, and which second thoughts turn in the end to his advantage, inasmuch as the supposed widow is found to have a husband still living; and, by this means, the old gentleman saves his money and preserves his liberty. There is also a second plot, turning upon the anxiety displayed by the aforesaid Mrs. Trapper, to get her three daughters well settled in the world - one of whom marries a starving miniature-painter; the second a swindler; and the third her mamma's footman. With these materials, to which we may add the characters of a pert and mischievous go-between of the name of Jabber, and a pair of sentimental lovers, Mr. Buckstone has wrought some entertaining scenes; and had the ball been kept up in the second act with the same spirit which pervades the first, a very admirable farce would have resulted. As it is, it evidently degenerates towards the close, and too often reminds us of its very slight pretensions either to comedy or originality. It was nevertheless highly successful, as indeed a piece so well acted, more especially by Farren and Mrs. Glover, might well deserve to be. Farren dressed his part after a certain Mr. P. well known in Berkshire, who has been recently caricatured; and Mrs. Glover acted, as she uniformly does, with the greatest spirit. Harley likewise made the most of a bustling, busy sort of meddler - a kind of mountebank we are sometimes doomed to meet with in society—a fellow who gives imitations of the French-horn, plays tunes upon his chin, and whistles whole overtures, à merveille ; whilst the three daughters were ably represented by Mrs. Humby, Miss Scott, and Mrs. Hill. The house, we were sorry to remark, was by no means full; but the performance of the Hunchback, which we see announced for next week, will, we have little doubt, from its own great merit, and the respectability of the cast, be of valuable service to the treasury.

ENGLISH OPERA: OLYMPIC.

A PANTOMIME in the dog-days is a novelty brought forward since our last by the active management of this theatre. The Magic Pipe, with Ellar, Barnes, Paulo, Sanders, and Miss Phillips as Columbine, is a variorum, though scarcely needed, in addition to the pieces already produced, and so well acted here.

STRAND THEATRE.

SINCE our last notice of this little theatre, two new successful pieces have been produced. Six to Four on the Colonel, by Mr. George Dance, on Monday; and on Thursday, the Loves of the Angels, by Mr. Reid, and for the benefit of Or Saturday, a new piece was produced at this Mrs. Waylett, who had a house crowded to the ders was most irresistibly droll. theatre, under the title of Second Thoughts. "utmost span." The first is very lively, with Covent Garden, August 2. I chiefly visited

The bills described it, rather ostentatiously, as smart dialogue, and pleasant equivoque. Abbott an "original comedy," but Mr. Farren, when he is the gallant Colonel, and Williams and Forrester, and Mrs. Honey (extremely sweet), sustain the chief parts with all the animation of which they are susceptible. The last is musical selections from popular composers, and was deservedly received with great applause.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden, July 26. First night of La Sulphide. In the midst of the incantation scene, one of the most prominent of the romping monsters danced off its superfluous head-that of a cat-I believe, and exposed instead, that of a little red-haired scrubby boy. Shouts of laughter arose at this impromptu metamorphosis, which there was no effort made to allay, for the poor child was so disconcerted at the accident, that he continued half human, half mouster, till the end of the scene.

Coburg, July 27. Monsieur Martin is here. The act-drop fell, either by accident or for lack of other scenery, immediately after his attack on the lion (for it is aught but the lion attacking him), and Monsieur happening to be the first who entered in front of the curtain, the audience thought he had only come forward to be applauded, and had commenced manual operations, when the entrance of other characters convinced them of their mistake.

English Opera, July 28. The Climbing-Boy is an odd mélée of the modern and the antique; the characters are dressed in the costume of seventy years ago, and yet there are new policemen introduced - people are carried about in sedans, and allusions made to the new game

Haymarket, July 30. In the last scene of A Duel, wherein Miss Taylor attempts to follow the combatants, her flowing white dress was in the struggle shut in by the door, and she, not being aware of the fact, made her customary rush forward, calling for help, while, by the vehemence of her action, she was fairly spun round by the trapped drapery, which continued to tear off around her in horizontal circles till she had reached the footlights, and was divested of her outer garment even unto the waist. The best of the joke was, that more than half the audience, taking this for a rehearsed stage effect, applauded the situation with more than ordinary vehemence.

Strand Theatre, August 2. The Merchant of Venice, got up for Keeley's Shylock, underwent most merciless mutilations from the rise to the fall of the curtain. What with omission, transposition, and substitution, I may safely affirm, that every other sentence was incorrectly given. Out of almost numberless instances, I can, however, only find room for one, but, as Copp says, "it's a main good 'un tho'." Lorenzo being asked by Jessica his opinion of Bassanio's wife, instead of answering

Even such a husband Hast thou of me as she is for a wife, replied

Even such a wife Will she be to him as I to you.

All supernumeraries were most plentifully deficient. Bassanio had no servants to whom to deliver his letters, and when Portia bid

Nerissa and the rest stand all aloof, there were no rest. Keeley contrived to un-Keeleyfy his appearance into something like the generally received Shylock; but when, at the call of his friends, he afterwards came forward with his own face reft of the beard, &c. the ensemble of Keeley's head upon Shylock's shoulthis theatre to see how Abbot, whom I had just left dressed as Bassanio at the Strand Theatre, could be performing in My Eleventh Day, which I thought must have commenced some time. I found the house in an uproar, owing to his non-arrival, and Laporte shortly came forward and stated, that "he had despatched for Mr. Abbott." When, after due delay, the deserter appeared, he was received with hisses, whereat he opened the left wing of his coat, and placing his right hand on the developed waistcoat, said ... "Ladies and gentleman, this is a most painful"—but as he could not find a word, the house hissed more, at which he became so disconcerted that he actually expressed a hope "that he had never been found wanting in disrespect to an audience !" *

Covent Garden, August 4. In Henri Trois, Gamard having littered the stage with parched peas, amused himself throughout a whole scene by dexterously kicking them down the aperture in front of the footlights. Mademoiselle Mars died out of bounds, and on seeing the curtain about to bisect her, rolled round out of its way, with as much grace as was consistent with the personation of a dead lady. But how shall I describe the dirty fellow who hurried on from the opposite extremity of the stage to save her? Even one of my horrors, a green-and-red footman, would have been welcome; but this thing! _ I really believe it was one of the monsters ready dressed for the incantation scene in La Sylphide. Nightly between the play and ballet, the ugliest piece of machinery I ever saw (a something between a clothes-horse and a coffin), which is used as a prompter's box in the middle of the orchestra, is thrust out therefrom on to the stage (several footlights having been purposely removed to facilitate its passage), where it lies, in spite of the hisses and laughter of the house, till a man sneaks from under the green curtain and coolly drags it through. During the whole of the fairy scene in La Sylphide, a pair of live sylph's legs were seen dangling at the top of one of the wings, the powers above being unable to heave her before the audience. The ballet concludes with the supposed carrying up of Taglioni inte heaven. I would suggest, that the puppet which does duty on this sublime occasion should not, as is always the case, be brought in sight before Taglioni is out of it.

Strand Theatre, August 6. Abbot, in speaking the tag to Sis to Four on the Colonel, said, "We hope that the odds are six to four against us," instead of for us.

Olympic, August 6. There are always the arms of a huge man seen in The Dilosk Gatherer, clawing the child over the rocks, to facilitate its passage, though every means is used to impress on the sudience that there is no human creature near. In a deadly-lively pantomime, which has been half got up at this theatre, the actual mimes have all doubles in the speaking introduction. I recommend to the whole of them the same advice I have just given to Taglioni and the puppet; for when the transformations are supposed to take place, the parties to change and the parties to be changed should contrive not to be on the stage together. Ellar having to change his dress o'the sudden in a subsequent scene, scampered out, as I have often seen him de before, in one character with the other hanging to his heels. N.B. He is the most practised harlequin on the stage. Just as the audience was beginning to yawn and hiss, by a special intervention of | ture exhibit the highest skill, but it is endowed providence, a live pig hurried, squeaking, over the foot-lights, and tumbled over among the fiddlers; whereat, and at the reminiscence whereof, the house laughed till the conclusion of the piece, which was thus fortunately rescued from its threatened fate. A committee of the company should present the pig with a

VARIETIES.

Institution of Great Britain the third part of one quarter of a claim on the Rajah of Tanjore, amounting to pagodas 883. 11. 74. with dividends from April 1823, at four per cent. This reminds us of a similar donation from the late Sir Claude Scott to the same amount. At a meeting of the managers last week it was likewise announced, that Earl Spencer had communicated his purpose of now carrying into execution an intention, which he has long entertained, to relinquish all claim, either of principal or interest, upon the sum of five hundred pounds; a loan made some years ago by his lordship to relieve the difficulties of the Institution, which he expressed himself very happy to observe were so much diminished.

French Medals .- Some more of the royal medals have been fished out of the Seine; and some of the robbers have been arrested. It seems that, headed by one Fossard, they found means of entering the library, by throwing a hook, to which a rope was attached, to the window; and thence penetrating into the spartment where the medals were kept.

Eisteddfod. - This congress of the Welsh poets, bards, and minstrels, at Beaumaris, promises, we hear, to be very interesting. Great preparations are making, and the potentates of the Principality will enjoy a scene well calcu-lated to remind them of the days of their forefathers, except that they have balls and sports instead of frays and battle, in addition to harp and song.

The Ladge Chapel.—The indefatigable friends of the Ladye Chapel have got up another fancy fair as Vauxhall Gardens, in aid of the funds for restoring this ancient fabric. Thursday and yesterday were the appointed days; and we learn, with satisfaction, that the affair was prospering in the hands of the fair dealers, whose fancy articles were the fairest of the Death of Mr. Colthurst.-It is with sorrow we have to mention the death of Mr. Colthurst, whose volunteer expedition to Africa, in company with Mr. Tyrrell, has been frequently noticed in the Gasette. The unfortunate traveller, it seems, had scarcely arrived on the fatal coast, when, in spite of all his zeal and enthusiasm, the climate smote him, and he died on the 15th of April.

Faucanson's Duck outdons!! - [We have received the following note.__Ed. Lit. Gas.] Sir, I have just read your marvellous account of M. Vaucanson's Duck, as described in Sir D. Brewster's Natural Magie, and presume you will not be disinclined to insert an account of a whole Stock, still more extraordinary, which have come under my own observation, and which also "have excited much interest in Europe." My Duck is so constructed that it not only eats and drinks usual food with avidity, but can maintain itself in full feather and activity upon Bubbles, which daily rise to the surface on the spot set apart for it to Dabble in. Not only does its austemical structure ple with a moral perception, hardly equalled by any automata hitherto produced. For example it shews no signs of terror if larger creature: are opposed to it, and will face a Bull or a Beau with a remarkable degree of courage, though either the one or the other may lame it for ever. Its motions are curious. Day after day you can see it, strutting about with all the dignity of a peacock, and it would seem as in nothing could alter this motion; but by and by, at a fixed period, when it is calculated to Royal Institution. — The late Mr. Daniel Settle, a very great Change is observable, and Ince has bequeathed by will to the Royal my duck Waddles in a fashion altogether different, and becomes invisible at least for a season. If its plumage, thus torn off, is restored, it will perform the same extraordinary things again; for which I pledge you my word (for I have witnessed it repeatedly), though almost beyond Credit. It is called "the Lame Duck;" and is sometimes sheltered under a shocking bad hat. I hope Sir D. Brewster will notice this in his next edition of Natural Magic; and am, sir, your servant,

N. M. ROTHSCHILD.

Stock Exchange, 5th August.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

A Memoir of the late Major Rennell, to accompany his Charts on the Currents of the Atlantic.
Historical View of the Councils of the Primitive Church, by the Rev. J. H. Newman, M.A.
The Translator of Prince Puckler Muskau's Tour is, we are told, occupied in translating a posthumous work of Falk, called Gothe, drawn from near personal intercourse. Falk was a privy of Weimar, and a distinguished man of letters. He sew Gothe daily, and wrote down in his journal the conversations he held with him.
Hustrations of Morbid Anatomy, in monthly numbers.

his journal the conversations he held with him. Illustrations of Morbid Anatomy, in monthly numbers, adapted to Andral's Elements, &c., by J. Hope, M.D. F.K.S., Physician to the St. Marylebone Infarmary.

The Author of Moral Plays has in progress, the Masquerade, a tragedy; Wild Roses, a comedy; and It would provoke a Saint, a melo-drama.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Sherer's Memoirs of Wellington, 2 vols. fc. 8vo. 10s. cloth.— Keir on Cholers, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Tod on the Ear, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Comparative Coincidence of Reason and Scripture, 3 vols. 6vo. 11. 7s.—Page's Memorials of Rev. E. Jones, 18mo. 3s. cloth.—Rowe's Brundary Act, 18mo. 3s. bds.—Santarem, 18mo. 6s. cloth.—Devonshire and Cornwall illustrated, 4to. 2l. 2s. cloth.—Prench Classics, Vol. XVI. 18mo. 4s. 6d. bds.—Constable's Miscollary, Vol. LXXV.; Butterflies, &c. Vol. L. 18mo. 3s. 6d. cloth.—Wilson and Bonaparte's American Ornitology, by Sir W. Jardine, 3 vols. 8vo. 3l. 3s.; half-mor. coloured, 6l. 16s. 6d.—Fawcett's Reflections and Admonitore Hints. Emo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Leasonia of the Rhine. coloured, 62. 16s. 6d.—Fawcett's Reflections and Admonitory Hints, Elmo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Legends of the Rhine, 6c., by the author of Highways, &c. 3. vols. post 8vo. 12. 11s. 6d. bds.—Memohrs of the Duchess d'Abrantes, Vol. III. 8vo. 14s. bds.—Hough's Missionary Vade Mecum, 12ma. 2s. cloth.

METEODOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832

	MELLOROHOGICAL TOURNAL, 1632.
	August.	Thermometer.				Barometer.
	Thursday	$	From					to	29.79
	Friday	3		56.	• •	70.	29.84	٠.	29.80
	Saturday	4		46.	• •	67.	29.82	٠.	29.86
	Sunday	5	••••	49.		65.	29-86		29.82
,	Monday	6		48.	• •	67-	29-82	••	29.85
	Tuesday	7		53.		73-	29-86	٠.	29-91
۰	Wednesday	Š							30:02

Prevailing wind, S.W. Except the 6th and 8th, cloudy; rain on the 2d and 5th. On the afternoon of the 2d, a violent storm of thunder and lightning, accompanied by heavy rain. At 15 and 30 minutes after six, a vivid flash of lightning was followed, after an interval of about 1 second, by as violent a peal of thunder as I ever remember to have heard; the particularly heavy fall of rain which immediately succeeded each fash of lightning above alluded to, excited the attention of many: from the hour of six till half-past seven, 6 of rain fell. Small meteors are nightly seen, particularly near the Rain fallen, 1-625 of an inch.

Edmonton. CHARLES I Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAWS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We do not find enough of originality in W. M.'s other-ise pleasing lines to anothou their insertion.

We know no performer, on the stage for so many ears, who has so seldom, if ever, given occasion for a slas, either through negligence or inattention of any tine.—Ext. Eds.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

MALL.
The Gallery, wish a Selection from the Works of the Ancient steer of the Italian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, and English hools, is seen daily, from Ten in the Morning till bix in the Admission, Ls.—Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

TURNER'S ENGLAND and WALES Fat XV. completing the First Volume, contains Views of Synth Costle, Kenilworth Castle, Brintburn Priory, and Turworth Castle, the Priors, 14s.; insperial 4to. Proofs, 14s.; totte Isilis, 1l. 11s. 6d.; before letters, folio, 2l. 12s. 6d.; distouth Exhings, M. Sa.

part XVI. will be published in October.
London: Meon, Boys, and Graves, 6, Pall Mall.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

MILITARY MEMOIRS of FIELD MARSHAL the DUKE of WELLINGTON. S vols.
By MAJOR MOYLE SHERER.
"A fair and lively view of the duke's achievements."—Spec tter. Lenden: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Of whom may be had,
Memoirs of the Life and Reign of George William Wallace, Eaq. Bearsten-et.Law. 3 vols. small to lik. clot.
One of the most successful biographical works with which we are avgained. In tone is manify, temperate, consistent, and mirely free from party apirit."—Allas.

Historical Memoirs of the House of Bour-

on. 2 rols small 8vo. 10s. cloth.

"The design of this work is excellent; and it were much to be strived that see earn, hastong were treated upon the plan which the author of these volumes has sketched out."—Monthly Review. Annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 1831.

"We should look in vaim for a better history of the late even ful year (1830)."—Speciator.

Nex and improved Editions of the following approved Books of Education, by Mavor, Blair, Goldentth, Joyce, &c. have just Orbital Plan, calculated to convey Instruction by means of the eriting and pleasing Associations produced by the pauliar Meseriches, and Characters of all Nations. New edition, actualing Extracts from second Voyages and Travels; with Enparagraph, dec. 14th. Demnit.

Goldsmith's Grammar of General Geography, inspects and mederalised, with Views of the principal Capitals of the World, Maps, Sec. Sc. 6d. bound.

Dowling's Introduction to Goldsmith's Gram-of Geography, for Junior Paylis, M. on the Maps in Westman Schemen of Mark in Mayor's Spelling-Book, 1s. 6d. bound.

Blair's Reading Exercises, 2s. bound. Blair's Class-Book, 5s. bound.

Miss Aikin's Poetry for Children, 2s. half-Mavor's Selection of Classical English Pee

Mayor's British Nepos, 5s. bound. Mayor's Natural History, 7s. 6d. bound.

Mavor's Abridgment of Plutarch, 5s. 6d. bd. Mavor's Universal Short-Hand, 6s. boards.

Joyce's Arithmetic, 3s. bound. Key to ditto, 3s. bound.
Barrow's 52 School Sermons, 7s. bound.

Morrison's Elements of Book-keeping, Single Crocker's Elements of Land Surveying, in in Branches. With Plates and Woodcuts, 9s. bound. Lendon: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In I was small five fa cloth

In 1 vol. small Sve. 6a. cloth,

ANTAREM; or, Sketches of Society and Ammers in the Interior of Portugal.

Antamer in the Interior of Portugal value illustrative of the manners and opinions of the interior of Portugal cannot, at the present crisis in the affairs of that crusty, is an unacceptable offering to the public.

The Netches here presented to the reader claim no higher sent, then that of being faithful transcripts of the scenes from which they have been made; and they exhibit, in a desultory assert, the state of Portuguese society disorganised by warfare-istration.

Lendon: Fisher, Son, and Co.

In Beno. 6s. boand and settered,

ISTORY of RUSSIA, from the Foundation of the Empire, by Rusick, to the present Time
tion of the Empire, by Rusick, to the present Time
tion of the Empire, by Rusick, to the present Time
tion of the Empire of the State of the Control Schools. With a Map, and Questions for Examination.

By the Rev. T. WILLOUKS.

Prince for Whittakor, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

School and College Classics, with English Explan
Notes, Examination Questions, &c.
I V Y. Books I. to V.

By Dr. HICKIB,

Head Master of Hawkeshead Grammar SchoolSmall 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Printed by A. J. Valpy, M.A.; and sold by all Booksellers.

On the same plan Mr. Valpy has lately published, Cicero's Select Orations, 7s. 6d.

2. Herodotus, containing the continuous History alone of the Persian Wars. By the Rev. C. W. Stocker, D.D. 2 vols. 18s.

B.D. y vois. 1857.

3. Euripides — Hecuba, Medea, Phoenisse, and Orestes. By the Rev. J. R. Major, Trin. Coll. Camb., and Head Master of King's College School, Londom. By each Play.

4. Sophocles — Œdipus Tyrannus, Œdipus

Coloneus, Antigone, and Trachiniae. By the Rev. J. Brasse, D.D. late Fellow of Trin. Coll. Camb. Sr. each.

5. Thucydides. By the Rev. S. T. Bloomfield, D.D. 3 vols, 1/, 7s.

6. Xenophon — Anabasis. By F. F. Bel-four, M.A. Oxos. F.B.A.S. LL.D. gr. ed. 7. Xenophon — Cyropædia. By E. H. Barr, Esq. 9s. 6s. 8. Demosthenes—Oratio Philippica I.; Olyn.

inca, I. II. et III.; de Pace; Aschines contra Bemosthenem; mosthenes de Corona. By the same. 8s. 6d. 9. Æschylus—Prometheus. By G. Burges, A. Trin. Coll. Camb. 8s.

10. Cicero-De Officiis; Text of Heusin-

11. Cicero... De Amicitia et de Senectute, 11. CICETO— DE PAINICHES et ue Senecuture, from the Test of Bruesti, with all his Noses, and Cirations from his Index Latin. Ciceron., and much original Matter, critical and Explanatory, in English. By E. H. Barber, Trin. Coli. Camb. 4th edition, 4c. 6d.

12. Tacitus— Germany and Agricola, from Brotler's and Passow's Text. By the same, 4th edition, 5c. 6d.

13. Cæsar's Commentaries — De Bello Gal-Meo. With Engravings. By the same. & &. &.

14. Grotius de Veritate Christ. Relig., with all the Notes of Grotius, Le Clerc, and others, translated into En-

13. Juvenal and Persius, with Notes on the Plan of Cicero's Offices and Virgit. 5a. 6d.

16. Plato - Four Dialogues. The Crito, Greates Hippias, Second Alcibiades, and Syphus. 9s. 6d.

Price 10s. 6d. 5th edition,

PAROCHIAL SERMONS preached at Giasbury, Brecknockshire.
By the Rev. C. BRADLEY,
Vicar of Giasbury.
Printed for Hamilton, Adams, and Co. Paterno

By the same Author, Sermons preached at Clapham. 2d edition,

Sermons preached at High Wycombe. 8th A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public

Wombip. Price 20. 6d.

S WALLOW BARN; or, a Sojourn in Virginia. An American Tale Virginia. An American Tale.
Printed for A. K. Newman and Co. London

Just publish Haunted Priory; or, Fortunes of the House The Water Queen. By Mr. Coates. 3 vols.

The Unchanged. By Selina Davenport.

Pirate of Bonne. By W. F. Dunne. 3 vols.

Doomed One. By Rosalia St. Clair. 3 vols.

Second Edition of Montgomery's New Poem.
Post 8vo. price 8s. 6d. boards, dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty,

THE MESSIAH. A Poem, in Six Books.

By the Author of the "Omnipresence of the Deity."

"The Messiah is, in our opinion, equal to any of Mr. Montgomery's productions, and a lasting monument to his fame."

Letterry Genzette.

Literary Gazette.

"It cannot be denied, that he has retained the sentiments, and caught, on many occasions, the spirit of the olden days."—Ather

John Turrill, British Magazine Office, 250, Regent Street,

Arronremith's Ancient Geography and Atlas, for Schools. GRAMMAR of ANCIENT GEOGRA

A GRAMMAK of ANCLENT GEOGRA.
PHY, compiled for the Use of King's College School.
By AARON ARROWSMITH.
Hydrographer to the King, and Member of the Royal Geographical Society.
18mo. price 6s. bound, or with 19 Maps, 18s. bound.
2. A Praxis on the Grammar of Ancient Geography.
By A. Arrowsmith.
3. An Atlas of Ancient Geography, for the Use of King's College School.
By A. Arrowsmith. 12mo. price
7. half-bound.

7s. haif-bound.
Printed for B. Fellowes, Bookseller and Publisher to the College, Ludgate Street; and S. Annowmith, Soho Square.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 7s. boards,

PRANSLATION of several PRINCIPAL RCAINGLE ALULY OF SEVERAN A TAXABLE BOOKS, PASSAGES, and TEXTS of the YEDS, and EXTS of the YEDS, and Controversial Works on Brahminical Theology.

BY RAJAH RAMMOHUN ROY,
London: Parbury, Allen, and Co.

New Works, Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longr ARRATIVE of a NINE MONTHS'
RESIDENCE in NEW ZEALAND, in 1897; together with a Journal of a Residence in Tristan d'Acunha, an island
centrically situated between South America and the Cape of Good Mope.

By AUGUSTUS BARLE,
Draughtsman to His Majesty's Surveying-Ship The Bengle.
In Sto. with 7 Engravings, 13. boards,
"Mr. Barle's journal gives us much curious information, in a very agreeable manner."—Literary Gazette.

New Children's Friend; consisting of Tales and Conversations. By Mrs Markham, author of the Histories of England and France. 2 vols. 19mo. 10s. 6d. cloth. "We recommend Mrs. Markham to our juvenile readers, as likely to interest and improve them."—Literary Gazette.

Woman, in her Social and Domestic Chacter. By Mrs. John Sandford. Foolscap. Svo. 2d. edit. 6s.

racter. By Mrs. John Danusure.

of this is not only elegantly written, but is evidently the work of a mind which education and moral feeling have qualified to speak upon the subject.—Le Bulle Assemble.

Prove

speak upon the subject."—La Balle Assemblée.

Music of Nature; or, an Attempt to prove that what is passionate and pleasing in the Art of Singing, Speaking, and Performing upon Musical Instruments, is derived from the Sounds of the Animated World. With curious Illustrations. By W. Gardiner, Editor of "The Lives of Haydn and Mozart." large vol. 870. Ba. cloth.

"This volume is entitled to a place in every library; and only needs to be known to be popular."—Literary Gasette.

Life and Pontificate of Gregory the Seventh. Sir Rozer Greisley, Bart. F.A.S. 8vo. 15c. boards. By Sir Roger Greisley, Bart. F.A.S. 8v

Sir Edward Seaward's Narrative of his Shipwreck, and consequent Discovery of certain Islands in the Carbbean Sea. With a Detail of many Extraordinary Events in his Life, from 1773 to 1749, as written in his ewo Disry. Edited by Miss Jane Porter. 3 vols. small Svo. 2d edition. 2ls. cioth. "The most curious and instructive work that has appeared since the first dawn of discovery."

Life of Frederic II. King of Prussia. By Lord Dover. 2 vols. 2vo. with a Portrait, 22s. boards.

"A most delightful work; judicious in selection, intelligent in arrangement, and graceful in style." Literary Gastite.

Memoir of the Life, Writings, and Cor-respondence of James Currie, M.D. F.R.S. of Liverpool, &c. Edited by his Son, W. W. Cuzrie. 2 vols. 8ve. with Portrait, Pen Tamar; or, the History of an Old Maid. By the late Mrs. H. M. Bowdier. Post 8vo. 2d edition, 10c. 6d.

"Written with great simplicity, and in the most engaging spi-t of benevolence."—Monthly Review.

rit of benevolence." Monthly Review.

Comparative View of the Social Life of England and France, from the Restoration of Charles II. to the French Revolution of 1780. By the Editor of Madame Du Beffand's Letters. 800. 128. boards.

"A most entertaining work." Literary Gazette.

Social Life in England and France, from the French Revolution of 1788 to that of 1830. By the same Author. 30th 17th boards. "Remarkable for its well-selected information, and for its an-

"Remarkable for its well-selected information, and for its application of liberal and emlightened opinions to the history of mannets."—Section Substance of several Courses of Lectures on Music, read in the University of Oxford, and in the Metropolis. By W. Crotch, Mus. Doc.; Freemsor of Music, Oxford; and Author of "Blements of Musical Composition." 8vo. 7s. 6d. boards. "A very popular and pleasant work."-Westwanster Review.

Journal of a Residence in Germany; written during a professional steadance upon their present most gracions Majerites, during their Visits to that Country in 1829, 1826, and 1826. By W. Beattle, M.D., &c. 2 volls, pest Src. 2 is, beards. "Replete with novel and amusing topios."—New Monthly Magusine.

Practical Works on Gardening and Bolane

SWEET'S HORTUS BRITANNICUS; or, Catalogue of every known Plant, with the Colour of the Flowers, &c. 3d edition, containing above 34,000 Plants, 21s.

"It certainly is the most useful and complete catalogue that has yet appeared."—Gent.'s Mag.

Sweet's Greenhouse Manual; or, Botanical Cultivator. 5th edition, 10s.
"Indeed, what Mr. Sweet has said, may be considered as the ultimatum for the British gardener."—Gordener's Magazine.

The Botanical Register; or, Ornamental Flower Garden and Shrabbery. By Professor Lindley, F.L.S. R.S. &c. &c. Published in muchly Numbers, price 4s. each, containing Eight Flates of fine Please, Collision of California Control of California C each in boards.

"This is in every respect the superior publication."—Gardener's

Professor Lindley's Genera and Species of Orchideous Plants. Part II. containing Ten beautifully finished Plates, &c. Imperial 6to. 30c.; or plain, 15c.
The Work will be completed in Four Parts.

James Bidgway, 160, Piesadilly; and through every Bootneller.

EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. CX. is just

DINBURGH REVIEW, No. CX. 18 Just published.

Contents:—I. Palgrave's Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth—II. Corn. Law Rhymes, and other Poems by the Author of the former.—III. Political Condition of the Italian States—IV. Landers' Vorage and Discoveries on the Niger—V. Recent Commercial Policy of Britism—VI. Inglish Spain in 1830; Present State and Prospects of that Country—VII. Dr. Thomson's Life and Writings of Cullen—VIII. The Americans and their Detractors; Mrs. Trollope's Manners of the Americans, &c.—IX. Tax on Policies of Insurance—X. Hossetti on the Anti-Papal Spirit of the Italian Classics.—XI. Dumont's Recollections of Mirabeau; the French Revolution.

Longman and Co. London; and A. Black, Edinburgh.

8, New Burlington Street.

Messrs. Colburn and Bentley have just published the following popular Works:— EGENDS of the RHINE and the LOW

COUNTRIES.

By T. C. GRATTAN, Esq. 3 vols.

II.
The Third Volume of the English Translation of The Third Volume of the English Translation or Memoirs of Madame Junot, including Anecdotes of Lord and Lady Cholmondeley, the Duchess of Gordon, Lord and Lady Conyngham, Lord Whitworth, the Duchess of Dorset, Lord Yarmouth, &c. III.

The Heidenmauer; or, the Benedictines. By J. F. Cooper, Esq. Author of the "Pilot," &c. 3 vols.

IV. Excursions in India. By Captain Skinner, Sist Regiment. 2 vols. with Plates. Comprising a Voyage of 1200 Miles up the Sanges, Account of Belti, Meerut, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Benares, and Journeyings amid the Himalays, &cc.

V.
New and cheaper edition, in 2 vols. post 8vo. price 16s.
The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. VI.

Private Correspondence of a Woman of Fashion. 2 vols. Including Anecdotes of the Courts of England and France, in 1814 and subsequent years.

The Highland Smugglers. By the Author of the "Kuzzilbash." 8 vols.

VIII. Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier. By the Author of "Darnley." 3 vols.

Fortune-Hunting; a Tale of Modern Life.
By the Author of "First Love." 3 vols.

Dramatic Stories. 3 vols.

The Pastor's Fire-side. By Miss Jane Porter. To be completed in 2 vols. small 8vo. with a new Introduction, price 6r. each vol. forming the 18th vol. of the Standard Novels.

Zohrab, the Hostage. By the Author of "Hajji Baba." 3 vols.

For the Use of Schools. In 19mo. price 7s. 6d. bound, the 3d edition, revised and corrected, of

EXCERPTA ex VARIIS ROMANIS

POETIS, qui in Scholis rarius leguntur, Seneca, Lucano, V. Flacco, S. Italico, Statio, Lucretio, Catullo, Propertio, Tibullo, Martiale, Juvenale, Ausonio, Ciaudiano.

Notulis illustrata, quas selegit
JOHANNES ROGERS PITMAN, A.M.
Veneunt apud J., G., et F. Birington, in Commeterio Paulino, et Vico dicto Waterioo Place.

THIRD EDITION of Mr. KENNEDY'S HISTORY of the CHOLERA, with the Results of his Observations on the Character and Treatment of the Disease in England.

England.

Also, price 10s. cloth,

The Population Returns of 1831. By J.

Rickman, Esq. Clerk of the House of Commons.

E. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

Brett's Principles of Astronomy. In 8vo. price 10s. boards,

PRINCIPLES of ASTRONOMY.
By WILLIAM BRETT, M.A.
Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.
Part I. containing Plane Astronomy.
Rold by Longman, Ree, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman,
London; and T. Stevennon, Cambridge.

Col. Hawker on Shooting.

In 8vo. 6th edition, with an Abridgment of the New Game
Laws, and 30 Plates and Cuts, 18s. cloth,

Laws, and 30 Plates and Cuts, Ize. cloth,

INSTRUCTIONS to YOUNG SPORTS
MEN in all that relates to Guns and Shooting; Difference between the Flint and Percussion System; Preservation of Game; getting Access to all Kinds of Birds; Specific Directions, with new Apparatus, for Wild Fowl Shooting, both on the Coast and in Presh Water; new Directions for Trout Fishing; and Advice to the Young Sportsman on other Gulpicht.

"Col. Hawker is one of the best shots in England, and his 'Instructions to Sportsmen' the very best book we have on the subject."—Blackmood's Magazine.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

THE SCHEME and COMPLETION of PROPHECY, wherein its Design and Use, together with its Sense and Application as the grand Fundamental Proof of Religion, specially adapted to all Periods of the World, and all Stages of the Church, are considered and explained; together with an Inquiry into the Shevituals and the Cherubim in the Holy of Holles, and the Visions of the Prophets.

By the Rev. JOHN WHITLEY, D.D. T.G.D.

Master of the School of Galway.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Historical Works from the Cabinet Cyclopadia.
In small 8vo. vols. bound in cloth, 6s. each,
O T L A N D.
By Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart.
2 vols. 12s.

France. By E. E. Crowe. 3 vols. 18s. Italian Republics. By J. C. L. De Sismondi.

Switzerland. 1 vol. 6s. Netherlands. By T. C. Grattan. 1 vol. 6s. Poland. 1 vol. 6s.

United States of America. 2 vols. 12s. Maritime and Inland Discovery. 3 vols. 18s.

Outlines of History. 1 vol. 6s.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

Scientific Works from the Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In small 8ro. vols. bound in cloth, 6r. each,
PRELIMINARY DISCOURSE on the STUDY of NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.
By SIR J. HENSCHEL.
1 vol. 6r.

Mechanics. By Capt. Kater and Dr. Lardr. 1 vol. 6s. Optics. By Sir David Brewster. 1 vol. 6s.

. Hydrostatics and Pneumatics. By Dr. Lardner. 1 vol. Ge.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

Works on the Arts and Manufactures, from the Cabinet Cyclopadia.
In small 870. volumes, bound in cloth, 62. each,
SILK MANUFACTURE.

Iron and Steel Manufactures. 1 vol. 6s. Porcelain and Glass Manufactures. 1 vol. 6s. Brewing, Distilling, Wine - Making, &c. l vol. 6s. London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

Waverley Novels.

VOLUME THIRTY-NINE, which com-Mences Woodstock, is published this day, with copious Introduction and Notes. The Illustrations by W. Boxall and

Volume Forty, which concludes Woodstock,

Volume Forty-One, to be published 1st Oct. will comprise

The Highland Widow,
The Two Drovers,
The Tapestried Chamber,
My Aunt Margaret's Mirror,
The Laird's Jock.
(The Tale of the Surgeon's Daughter will appear in an after Volume.)

Volumes Forty-Two and Forty-Three, com-Volumes Forty-1 wo and Forty-1 free, com-prising the Fair Maid of Perth, will appear on lat November and lat December; and the succeeding Tales regularly on the lat day of each month, till the whole of the Author's Works of Fiction are completed in Forty-eight Volumes, to be accompanied with a copious Glosar Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker, Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker,

Who have also just published,

1. The Twentieth Volume of the New Issue,

2. Captain Basil Hall's Naval Life and Early Voyages. First and Second Series. 2d editions. 6 vols. 30s. with engraved Titles.

3. Captain Basil Hall's Travels in North

THE EDINBURGH GEOGRAPHICAL

THE EDINBURGH GEOGRAPHICAL

and HISTORICAL ATLAS, Nos. 70, 71, and 73, completing that valuable work.
Subscribers who are in arrear are requested to complete their copies as soon as possible, as the whole stock will shortly be made up into complete sets, and no odd Numbers can then be supplied.

John Hamilton, St. Andrew Street, Edinburgh; and Simpkin and Marshall, London.

In 19mo. price 9s. boards, dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Lord Primate of Ireland, the 2d edition, improved, of DAS TORALIA; a Manual of Helps for the Parochial Clergy of the United Church of England and Ireland, containing a Scriptural View of the Clerical Builtes-Prayers for the Use of the Clergy-Scheme of Pastoral Visitation—Judlines of Sermons—and Books for the Use of the Clergy. By the Rev. HENRY THOMPSON, M.A. Of St. John's College, Cambridge, Curste of Wrington, Somerset, and formerly Assistant-Minister of St. George's, Camberwell. Printed for J., G., and F. Rwington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pail Mall.

Constable's Miscellany.

In 18mo. 3s. &d. cloth, the Seventy-fifth Volume of the Miscellany, being the First of The BOOK of BUTTERFLIES, MOTHS, and SPHINXES, containing, in addition to descriptive Letter press, 120 Engravings, coloured from Nature. By Capt. THOM SEROWN, P. R.S. F.L.S. M.W.S. &c.

Whitzaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Maria Lane, London; Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; and J. Cumming, Dublin.

Tod on Deafness and Imperfections of Speech.
In 8vo. with Plates, 7s. 8d. boards,
ANATOMY and PHYSIOLOGY of the ORGAN of HEARING, with Remarks on Congenitat
Deafness, the Diseases of the Ear, some Imperfections of the Organs of Speech, and the proper Treatment of these several Affections.

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Works on Phrenology, by Dr. Spurzheim.
Published by Treattel and Co. 30, Soho Square.

NATOMY of the BRAIN. With Eleven
Plates, 8vo. 14s.

Phrenology; or, the Doctrine of the Mind, with a Frontispiece and Fourteen Engravings, 8vo. 16s.

Philosophical Principles of Phrenology, 8vo.

Observations on Insanity, 8vo. 7s.

Elementary Principles of Education, 8vo. 7s.

Phrenology in Connexion with the Study of Physiognomy, Part I.; Characters. With Thirty-four Lithogra-phic Plates, royal 8vo. 29s.

Examination of the Objections made in Great Britain against Phrenology. 2s. VIII.

A Sketch of the Natural Laws of Man, 18mo. 6s.

Such persons as wish to have a practical as well as a theoretical knowledge of this science, are invited to attend the gratultous Lectures of J. D. Holm, Esq. which are delivered every Thuraday, from the Hours of Two till Four, at No. 19, North Crescent, Bedford Square.

The New Volume of Dodeley's and Rivington's Annual Register.
In a large vol. 8vo. price 16s. boards,
THE ANNUAL REGISTER; or, a View of the History, Politics, and Literature of the Year 1831. London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock; J., O., and F., Rivington; Longman and Co.; Jeffery and Son; J. Booker; J. M. Kichardson; J. Booth; J. Rodwell; Sherwood and Co.; J. Martin; Hamilton and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; E. Lleyd; J. Dowding; Simpkin and Marshall; G. Lawford; T. Laycock; S. W. Sustenance; and Renshaw and Rush.

By whom is also published, in a very large vol. price 24s. By whom is also published, in a very large vol. price 34st. A General Index to the Annual Register, from its commencement in 1788 to the Year 1819, inclusive; after which period each successive Volume has a distinct Index.  Separate Volumes, to complete Sets, may be had of the Publishers; but as several are becoming scarce, an early application is recommended.

A few complete Sets from the commencement in 1758 may still be had.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In monthly Numbers, price only 2s. 6d. super-royal 8vo.; or India Proofs, large paper, 5s. to commence on the 1st Septem-ber. 1832.

MAJOR'S CABINET NATIONAL

ber, 1838,

M AJOR'S CABINET NATIONAL

GALLERY of PICTURES, selected from the splendid Collections of Art which adorn Great Britain; to be engraved on Steel, in the Line Manner, and published at a price so moderate, as to place the best Works of the greatest Masters within the reach of all Classes. The whole illustrated with Historical and Critical Descriptions and Dissertations

Each Number will contain Three highly finished Engravings, price only 20.6d.; India Privil be struck off, price 72.6d. each Number will contain Three highly finished Engravings,
price only 20.6d.; India Privil be struck off, price 72.6d. each Number will contain Three highly finished Engravings,
price only 20.6d.; India Privil be struck off, price 72.6d. each Number will contain Three highly finished Engravings,
price only 20.6d.; India Privil be struck off, price 72.6d. each Number will contain Three highly finished Engravings, tis Plates, with about Two Hundred pages of Literary Illustration by A. Cunningham, Esq. Principal Draughtamen to the Work, T. C. Hofland, Saq. and J. Stephanoff, Esq. Historical Painter in Water Colours to His Majesty.

Early Numbers will comprise, bestdes choice Historical and other Subjects from the National Gallery, some valuable unpublished Specimens of Vandyck, Wilson, dainaborough, &c. &c.
from private Collections. The whole to be executed in the Line Manner by Edwards, Engelheart, Duncan, Fox, Nicholson, Robinson, E. and W. R. Smith, Worthington, &c. &c. &c.
London: John Major, Fleet Street; sold also by W. Talt, Edinburgh: W. F. Wateman, Dublin; and will be regularly supplied, by styring an Order, the same as for a Magazine, by any Bookseller in the Kingdom. Country Booksellers may receive enlarged Prospectuses of any London Agent.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Stread, and 12, South Moulton Street, Ozford Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Rechange; E. Marlborough, Arv Marla Lane, Ludgate Hill: A. Black, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Roberton, and Atkinson and Co. Olasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublis.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leloester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 813.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE DIFFUSION OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE, AND THEIR PUB-LICATIONS.

We have for a considerable time intended to call the public attention to the literary and publishing proceedings carried on under the saction of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge—or, at least, of the high and honourable names which adorn the list of its committee; but, like most tasks not altogether agreeable to be performed, we have postponed and postponed it, till much of our original impulse has evaporated,-though we trust what we may have lost in this respect will be compensated by the more dispassionate consideration which pause and reflection have enabled us to bestow upon the subject. It is one of very great importance, whether we take into view the effects produced upon individual interests, upon literature in general, or upon the population for whose instruction these efforts are announced to be made; and therefore, if long avoided, we feel it to be a duty which we ought not entirely to neglect, candidly and fairly to submit our opinions upon it to our habitual readers and to the world at large. We are sure we shall not be betrayed into any willing misrepresentation - into any censure not apparently founded in truth-or into any expression calculated to give offence to any one of the parties concerned in this system. With many of them we have the gratification of being on terms of friendly intimacy, and for others we have a very sincere respect and admiration; but as an associated body, we think them liable to very serious objections; and these we venture, in all good temper, to bring forward, even for their own calm notice and deliberate rumination.

We have now before us, issuing from this Society.

1. The Library of Useful Knowledge, Monthly Parts,

- 8vo. volumes.

 2. The Library of Entertaining Knowledge, Monthly Parts, 19no. volumes.

 3. The Quarterly Journal of Education, 8vo.

 4. A cheap Cabinet Atlas.

 5. The British Almanac, annually.

 6. The Companion to the Almanac, annually.

 7. Gallery of Portraits, monthly.

 8. The Penny Magazine, weekly.

 9. The Working Man's Companion, in periodical pocket volumes.
- 10. The Results of Machinery.
 11. Cottage Evenings, a series of volumes for the Agricultural Classes.
- altural Classes.

 12. The Rights of Industry; Political Economy.

 13. The Physician, 1. The Cholera; a Medical Series.

 14. Frugal Cookery.

 15. The History of the Church, in some twenty parts, and eming on.

Besides other small and separate publications, which we are not sure that we can correctly enumerate, and must consequently blend with the mass already sufficiently exhibited by the preceding catalogue.

It is now five years, Feb. 1827, since the Society commenced its publishing operations, thus announcing its purpose:—" The want of elementary treatises for instructing all classes elementary treatises for instructing all classes of the community in the various branches of publications, as they appeared, with warm praise.

knowledge, particularly in the sciences and the arts connected with them, having been long experienced by the friends of general education. the Committee for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge have adopted such measures as appeared best calculated to supply this defect." And they accordingly advertised a series of treatises, to remedy an evil which we grant existed in a certain degree, but by no means to the extent assumed-for our language abounded with many elementary works of the highest value and merit; and one popular publication alone, Pinnock's Catechisms, nearly supplied the desideratum here insisted upon. The treatises were to appear in sixpenny parts, and at the rate of two per month,—so that the charge would not fall heavily even upon the poorest classes; and so far, perhaps, there was rather merit in than any objection to the proposed plan, which was, however, ushered in with a palpable eye to Trade, and the ordinary principles of profit and loss; for an Introductory Discourse upon the Advantages and Pleasures derived from the Pursuits of Science, from no less an authority than the present Lord High Chancellor of England, was given gratis with the first No.; and reading societies, mechanics' institutions, and education committees in the country, were attracted by the offer of being "furnished with supplies at a liberal discount."

We have said, and we repeat, that this design was rather to be approved of than condemned; since a systematised and able set of elementary essays of the kind proposed could not fail to disseminate useful information throughout the kingdom upon such topics as were specified, viz.: astronomy, mechanical powers, practical mechanics, anatomy, hydrostatics, hydraulics, pneumatics, optics, electricity, magnetism, millwork, geometry, algebra, land surveying, navigation, chemistry. geology, meteorology, dyeing, bleaching, and other useful arts; natural history, agricultural buildings and machinery, farming, &c. &c. &c. But having begun well, and announced a laudable object fairly, we cannot justify the ulterior encroachments upon almost every branch of literary property which the Society have since been induced to commit. In the first place, it strikes us that the bare mention of their publications is enough to shew that they have departed from the fundamental principles of their establishment; secondly, that they have, under the weight of eminent names, injuriously interfered with individual capital most honourably employed, and invaded individual rights which ought to have been protected both by law and by patriotic feeling; thirdly, that they come in worse than a questionable shape as competitors into the market; and, fourthly, that their extended operations are now, and likely permanently to be, hurtful to the trade, the literature, the intelligence, and the prosperity of the country.

The existing aspect and condition of the Society is, in truth, neither more nor less than a huge Manufacturing Monopoly, turning out works of every sort and description, and underselling the fair trader by the aid of patronage and subscription funds, which never could have been meant to perpetrate the wrong done by this, their misapplication. Let us see how the matter stands broadly in this respect between the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, and publishers previously in business. Of the latter, every man and firm must have risen to respectability and consequent business by the expenditure of much capital, and by long years of assiduous toil and good conduct. It is rather hard upon such to have a powerful rivalry started, not only without the risk of one shilling of cost, or one hour of labour, or one act of liberality, but sheerly brought into repute and force by the announcement that such distinguished persons as Lord Chancellor Brougham, Lord John Russell, Lord Althorp, Lord Auck. land, Lord Dover, Sir John Parnell, Sir John Hobhouse, Sir Martin Archer Shee, Mr. Spring Rice, besides many literary and scientific men, who had all made their reputations and characters by different pursuits, were concerned in and at the head of the new undertaking. In a limited object, the array of great established names against existing individual interests is likely enough to produce individual distress, every portion of which affects the community and the whole body politic; but when this imposing array is pushed into almost every branch and department of a very important division of national industry and commerce, it is not easy to calculate the evil which it must produce.

As general argument cannot demonstrate this so clearly as particulars, we will shortly touch upon some few of the details which, at once, rise to our mind upon the question.

The Libraries of Useful and Entertaining Knowledge, of which some of the volumes have been worthy, and some (looking at the auspices under which they appeared), not very worthy of approbation, have materially affected the first production of this class, Constable's Miscellany: and thus (not, as we have remarked, by the usual competition between man and man, but by the help of adventitious and unbought advantages,) diminished the provision of a family, thrown out of employment printers, paper-makers, &c. &c. in Edinburgh, and changed relations the continuance and consistency of which were of value to society. In a similar way, these "Useful Knowledge" performances have seemed to run against private enterprise, with all the odds we have mentioned in their favour, and without a single superior claim to popularity, tending to subvert that spirit from which alone the public can expect sustained merit or excellence in so essential a concern as is involved in the literary productions of England. We see, for instance, that Mr. Murray has just published the "Trials of Charles I. and of some of the Regicides," as No. XXXI. of his Family Library, against which Lords Brougham, John Russell, Althorp, Dover, Ashley, Auckland, Suffield, and Co. bring out, as a piece of their Entertaining Knowledge, the "Criminal Trials," a rifacciamento of the old State Trials, so well known under a variety of forms, and at this very moment republishing in penny or twopenny numbers, by Strange, of Paternoster Row. Now, by the by, of these new editions we do not think that any one of them is congenial to the professed objects of the publications to which they belong; except, in-deed, Mr. Strange's, which has no professed object, and can only be surmised by its companionship with the ultra unsettling periodicals that issue from the same press. But if this guess well founded, how can a like work be fit for "Entertaining" the people? Nor can we conscientiously say that Mr Murray's selection of subject is the best and wisest for the appellation of Family Library. The Draco code of our criminal laws, the cruel deeds committed by tyrannical kings, and the sanguinary outrages of successful rebellion and revolution, are all well to be viewed amid the historical events of which they constitute a part; but to draw them out into a separate and conspicuous light, and thus teach every one to dwell upon, and by dwelling upon, imbibe a taste for their sin and horror, is, to say the least, bad taste; and instead of either amusing or useful instruction, a corrupting means of familiarising the public mind to things which had far better be left in shade and oblivion. The spectacle of executions never afforded a beneficial lesson; hanging human carcases in chains is but a disgusting barbarity: and the gibbetting of murdered monarchs or sacrificed subjects in lettered descriptions is quite as unlikely to improve the reader. Nevertheless, we perceive, by a recent newspaper paragraph, that "A charter of incorporation has been granted by his Majesty, on the petition of W. Tooke, Esq. F.R.S., to this Society (for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge), the objects of which are thereby designated to be, to cause to be composed, compiled, and written, treatises and works, and elementary tracts, on, or relating to, arts, sciences, and letters; and also causing to be made, engraved, and constructed prints, maps, plans, models, and instruments connected with arts, sciences, and letters; such treatises, works, tracts, prints, maps, plans, models, and instruments, to be printed, made, and published, in an economical manner, and to be sold at a reasonable price. The London general committee is by such charter recognised as the governing body of the Society, and of which committee the Lord Chancellor is constituted the first chairman, Lord John Russell the first vice-chairman, and Mr Tooke is named as treasurer of the Society." This is truly comprehensive enough; and we should be glad to learn where there is any property, though for a century vested in any of the lines of publication engrossed by this charter, which can now be considered safe from the unfair competition so embodied against it.

Let us look again, for example, at such persons as Mr. Arrowsmith or Mr. Cary. Both have expended vast sums and unremitting pains upon geographical improvements, and, through their exertions, the latest discoveries, and the most accurate observations, have made English maps, charts, and topographical works generally, articles of sale and consumption in every civilised country. The Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge have not contributed a single iota to this; but they step in, avail themselves of all that has been done by spirited

Mr. Cary alone has a stock of 50,000l. in copperplates and copyrights, consigned to waste in consequence of this invasion.

The Almanac and Almanac Companion was another inroad; but as it touched only another and a wealthy corporation — the Stationers' Company—and induced improvements in these Annuals, we shall not discuss the principle in reference to them. But not so the latest of the Society's process towards the universal business of bookmakers and booksellers - the Gallery of Portraits. Here the design is evidently taken from the superb work, Lodge's Portraits, published by Harding and Lepard, and already imitated in the National Portrait Gallery, published by Fisher, Son, and Co. In the first of these undertakings, Messrs. Harding embarked the fortunes of a respectable house, gave (like Boydell of a former date) immense encouragement to the fine arts and artists, and, as was to be wished and expected from their merit, prevailed in producing a publication the worth of which was duly appreciated by the public. As success is sure to engender competition, Messrs. Fishers took up a similar, though, in the subjects, more modern design, and in a similar manner laid out a very considerable sum on paintings, engravings, and literary effort. They, too, were lucky enough to please, and to meet their reward. But either of these parties might have lost ruinously by their expensive speculations; and it must never be forgotten, that it is such speculations which, in the aggregate, give bread to thousands and hundreds of thousands of the working classes, invigorate our commerce, support the government, and embellish and enrich the country. Can we, then, deem it either just or proper, that, stepping widely out of their original prospectus, the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge should also add this other iron to the multitude they had already in the fire? We are decidedly of opinion, that in so doing they trespass on private enterprise, in a way detrimental to the public interests: for they cannot, with the widest views, hope to supply all demands; and when, by grasping at too much, they have destroyed the springs on which supply depended, abuses, want, and confusion, must inevitably ensue. The manufacturer and shopkeeper, who was wont to keep up the stock, will no where be found; and the Monopoly, with all its guarantee of names, will deteriorate in its articles, and be at the same time inefficient to meet the consumption required. With regard to other points, this case is still stronger against the Society on this account : while Messrs. Harding and Lepard, and Messrs. Fishers, often gave large prices for original portraits, and even copies by clever draughtsmen, the Society, by its patrons and subscriptions, are enabled to go into the field without expense; and re-engraving mostly old pictures, or, through favour, new ones, they endeavour, very unhandsomely to undersell and supersede publications which possess, and well deserve to possess, the liberal support of the country. Let us add, that this work is irreconcilable with their avowed design; for it is not elementary, nor can it be held to be calculated for the diffusion of such knowledge as is fittest for the lower orders: it is neither more nor less than a bookselling job.

Come we next to the Penny Magazine -- an anomaly which has set the Stamp-office and the stamp-laws at utter defiance; and which we know, from our own experience, is doing that debted for their value. We have been told that | simply to avoid infringing! When we state this, we can assure our readers that we are not in the slightest degree sore upon the raw; but we mention it merely for the oddity of the fact, and to shew that, while dabbling in every thing, this Society is possessed of very unfair and injurious arms - arms not to be tolerated in a new monopoly at a period when all old monopolies are crumbling to dust under the "march of intellect," with "the schoolmaster abroad" at the head of the forces. This Penny Magazine, too, has not only to answer for itself, but for the host, bad and good (and some of them are bad enough, wicked, inflammatory, and obscene), of periodicals of the same kind, which must be tolerated so long as it is published by the lords, savans, and literati, &c. whose names grace the commission of managers of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

We need not, we trust, for the elucidation of our subject, go farther into minutiæ; and therefore we will just allude to one or two of the other productions of the Society, which cannot so well be reconciled to their ostensible declarations as to the mere mercantile contest with private persons and houses in the publishing trade. The Journal of Education is in direct competition with several periodicals; the majority of volumes of the two Libraries, from the subjects chosen, are liable to the same censure; the Physician is a piece of the hour, run against several medical publications; and a cheap Cookery Book is almost a climax ;-alas ! for Mrs. Glasse, Mrs. Rundell, Dr. Kitchiner, and Meg Dods, when the Lord Chancellor and Co. descend to the kitchen, with the most frugal receipts for chops and cutlets. How our friend Louis Eustache Ude must despise their low pretensions!

As we have said (and we trust not to be misunderstood), we highly appreciate many of the performances which have issued from the press of the Society: what we denounce is the principle on which they have extended their traffic, in a manner, we do not hesitate to assert, inconsistent with the character and station of those whose names are paraded to vouch for it to the public, and injurious to private and national interests. The subscriptions to that fund never were nor could be intended to put it in the power of any person or persons to employ them in partial and unfair contention against individuals who had set their all upon the chance of the business to which they had devoted their lives and energies: there is nothing on earth more repulsive to British sense and feeling. All our institutions are hostile to it; and the responsibilities of and restrictions on trading companies breathe the constitutional jealousy of overwhelming monopolies, which destroy all below and around them, without flourishing themselves. But here is a monopoly without bound or tie; raised on other grounds, supported as a benevolent or patriotic institution, and yet calculated to crush honest exertion, impair private fortunes, and deteriorate the true cause of letters and know-

Cheapness is desirable, but not the cheapness which withers honest competition - cheapness sustained by accident against character acquired by long and patient industry, and against real property and cheapness which, withal, must thrive (if it thrive to any extent) on the inferiority of the article supplied. This catchword of cheapness has already done much mischief to our literature. What have we now, with very few individual exertion, and they issue from the round of the Lord Chancellor of England exceptions, to support our character as an intel-press their low-priced maps, &c., at once robbing which it has cost us, at the dictation of the lectual people among the nations of the earth? Chancellor of the Exchequer, above 30,000%. Monthly compilations of the most ordinary kind, and plenty of penny and catchpenny! ephemera. There were no great harm if they did not supersede works of a higher cast; but they suffice for the appetite flattered with the silly assurance that they convey nntaxed knowledge. If there were ever so heavy a tax upon knowledge, few of them would have any duty to pay. Now the booksellers are beginning to find out that the little concections with which they have inundated the public have taken away the public taste for sterling and standard productions, and that all they can do is to be-picture and be-puff temporary trifles into notice, which, after all, seldom repay the cost. while they fill the space of genuine and lasting literature.

Hawking and peddling is another of the arts of modern publishing; and we hear with regret that the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge condescends to employ even an itinerant lecturer to travel from place to place and lecture upon the merits of their books. This is sad work; though we were amused, the other day, by an account of the lecturer (Mr. Fry, of the late firm of Tipper and Fryand a very clever and well-spoken person he is) being perplexed by the members of the Mechanics' Institute at Birmingham, who, instead of receiving his discourse as gospel, turned upon him and convicted some of the Useful Knowledge tracts of all sorts of practical error and blundering.

The History of the Church is another trading speculation, utterly removed from the original and declared intentions of the Society.
Obviously consulting the feelings of the hour, and addressed to a political purpose, we should like to know if Lord Brougham, or Lord John Russell, or Mr. Fowell Buxton, or Mr. Hallam, or Mr. Vigors, or Mr. Z. Macaulay, or Dr. Maltby, or Mr. Merivale, or any other individual belonging to the committee, holds himself responsible for this publication, which has already in extent outstripped and thrown into shade the avowed design of the Association?* If any or all of them admit that such proceedings have their sanction and authority, as they appear to have by the advertisements, we will undertake to prove that they are, instead of benefit to the country, forcing on a great national evil. They cannot suppose, however sounding their names, that the whole people will yield obedience to the inquisitorial power of giving instruction which they have assumed. It is a necessary consequence, that other opinions will seek other organs; and thus, instead of fair and general competition, the land will be divided into rival masses and opposing factions. Indeed, this is already the case; and the religious party have combined to meet their Penny Magazine by a similar periodical, on counter principles. † The tendency of this is not merely individually, but nationally, inju-rious; and it will be well if the growth of the mischief can be stopped.

But we have devoted as much as we can spare of our room to the desultory discussion of the matter in hand, which it is not improbable we may have occasion to resume. In the mean time, we hope we need hardly repeat the professions of the unfeigned regard and esteem in which we hold many of the committee. of whose joint acts we have felt ourselves, as no unmanly weakness. He had to sustain a take this notice

As we shall not, after this, separately review the volumes connected with these strictures, we beg leave to add a few remarks upon the most recent of them, separately and unconnected with the general question of fitness, price, and prin-

Trial of Charles I., &c. Family Library, XXXI. pp. 338. London, 1832. Murray.

THIS, we understand, is the work of Mr. Dodd. and, as a record favouring the royal cause, is an able performance. As a Family Library book, we do not consider it to be altogether in its most proper and eligible place; but it is a story of deep and unfailing interest and pathos.

The freshness of vesterday still hangs around the history of the great parliamentary war.

The bloody revolution of France and the vulgar riot of Brussels are contemplated with horror or disgust; whilst we peruse with an increasing sympathy the rich and vivid memoirs of the conduct and character of the wonderful actors in this most wonderful period of English story. We know no man, whatever may be his politics, if he have a heart of flesh, to whom an accurate, concise, and yet full collection of the principal events of those times, from the conclusion of the war, will not be deeply instructive and moving. Mr. Dodd very properly omits any discussion of the original grounds taken by the popular party at the meeting of the Long Parliament. Long before the battle of Naseby the real grievances had been removed; the balance of usurpation was completely reversed; and the constitution of England, upon any interpretation of it, was entirely out of the question. What took place after the extinction of the king de facto must be justified or condemned upon profounder and more elementary principles.

Whatever may be the estimate of the character of Charles I. as king, the severest discipline can scarcely save the understanding from the wonderful fascination of his personal virtues. So it is, we suppose, with all into whose souls the gall of Jacobinism has not entered. The love of liberty is, indeed, a holy passion, that which is the most surely founded on reason and religion, and which best justifies the fiercest efforts of man in obedience to it : but great and noble as it is, it seizes on the imagination rather than the affections of its votaries, and is for the most part without that spirit of personal heroism which has illumined so many pages of English history with the magical light of romance. Patriotism is generally presented to the mind in masses; it penetrates crowds; it arms a nation, a province, a town; it speaks the universal language; it addresses the universal feeling; it is generated by society, and is often destroyed by dispersion: whilst loyalty to a prince becomes prominent in particular instances; it begins and ends and is concentred in the individual; it speaks to personal habits, and grows more and more vivid and intense as the atmosphere around it is darkened, and the hour of its own extinction approaches. As the one excites admiration sometimes without sympathy, so the other moves our sympathy as often without our admiration. How many are there whom the public life of Charles alienates. and whom his death entirely reconciles!

In the end of 1648 the fate of the king was settled by the prevalence of the republican party. His behaviour during the short remainder of his life was magnanimous. He in-independent literary journalists, compelled to part of sorrow and of difficulty, for which he could have had no preparation, and he hore himself in it so well that his bitterest foes could not, and did not, refuse to him the tribute of their personal admiration.

Nothing in his life Became him like the leaving it.

He gave his enemies no advantage over his character: on the contrary, his sufferings created him friends from amongst those who had been his adversaries in the day of his prosperity. His dethronement procured him an affection which nothing else could have done: his errors were forgotten, and his virtues magnified: his weakness was power, and his death a victory.

Truly might Marvel say, in a strain of poetry which he never upon any other occasion reached .__

"He nothing common did nor mean
After that memorable scene;
But with his keener eye
The axe's edge did try:
Nor called the gods, with vulgar spite,
To vindicate his helpless right;
But bow'd his comely head
Down as upon a bed."

The volume contains memoirs, and very good ones too, of H. Ireton, Bradshaw, Harrison, Warton, Whalley, Goffe, and Ingoldsby, and concludes with the trials and execution of Harrison and Hugh Peters, in 1660. wish Mr. Dodd had spoken something more of Sir H. Vane, and had given us an abstract of his trial also. As he was by far the ablest, so he seems to us to have been by far the most remarkable man of those times, after Crom-

We meant to end here; but we have been so much struck with the following lines, given as a version of a motto from Lucretius, which we should guess to be from the pen of Mr. Lockhart, that we cannot pass them by:—

"The axe that strikes the King lays order low—
In every limb old Reverence feels the blow;
Law, Faith, Love, Honor, Grace, are trampled down
In the same bloody quagmire with the crown.
The awe of ages poisoned into hate,
Fierce leaps the rabble hoof on all that's great—
Till vulgar rage, expert ambition's tool,
Dies out—and some cold scoundrel grasps the rule."

Library of Entertaining Knowledge—Criminal Trials, Vol. I. Pp. 520. Lond. C. Knight. As the preceding volume is chiefly drawn from the records of Phelps the clerk of the tribunal, and the royalist Nalson; so do Howell's State Trials furnish the materials of this volume, which may be called interesting, or historically instructive, but is also misplaced under the title of "Entertaining," or for the diffusion of useful knowledge among the lower orders of the people. There is a good introduction; and the bearing of the whole is to exhibit the despotic power of our unconstitutional monarchs in an inauspicious and unfavourable light.

Gallery of Portraits, Nos. I. II. and III. C. Knight.

EACH of these contains three portraits:--1. Dante, Davy, and Kosciusko; 2. Flaxman, Copernicus, and Milton; and 3. Watt, Tu-renne, and Boyle. The portraits are very well engraved, and the memoirs written in an appropriate style.

A Grammar of Ancient Geography. Com-piled for the King's College School, &c. By Asron Arrowsmith. 12mo. pp. 329. Prasis on the same. Pp. 47. London, 1832.

A. Arrowsmith. THE scholars of the King's College are fortudulged in no useless invective, he sunk into nate in having so valuable a geographical pro-

When things are ill in themselves, rumour commonly makes them worse. Thus it is currently asserted, but which we cannot for an instant believe, and we trust the Society will contradict it, that the Committee sells its wary will contradict it, that the Committee sells its tame and authority to particular parties, for a bonus or profit on works with the preparation and publication of which it has no concern whatever.

† The Saturday Magazine, published under the auspicas of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge.

duction dedicated to their use. It is clear, the first in the field, the run at full speed for a able, and highly instructive; the maps cleverly executed, and the questions for examination pertinent and useful. In 1832, after the Landers' return, Mr. Arrowsmith should not, however, have spoken of the termination of the Niger as involved in doubt.

The Cynegeticus of the Arrian on Coursing. Younger Xenophon, translated from the Greek, with Classical and Practical Annotations, and a brief Sketch of the Life and Writings of the Author: to which is added, an Appendix, containing some Account of the Canes Venatici of Classical Antiquity. By a Graduate of Medicine. With Embellishments from the Antique. Large 8vo. pp. 314. London, 1832. Bohn.

CURIOUS in its contents, this volume is also remarkable for the classical beauty of its embellishments; not one of which, from the frontispiece (Arch of Constantine) to the smallest of the head and tail-pieces, but exhibits tine taste, antiquarian research, and editorial judgment. There is no attempt in them at prettinesses: every touch of the artist commands interest, from the appropriate correctness with which it treats the simple illustration so appositely drawn from pure ancient designs. The typography, too, is in unison with the rest of the work, and does much credit to the press of Valpy.

Having thus prefaced what we have to say of the matter, with a deserved encomium upon the strikingly handsome manner in which this translation of the Cynegeticus is presented to the eye, we may seasonably, as the sporting for the year has just commenced, offer a few remarks upon the subject.

To investigate pursuits which from the earliest age of the world have provided for the wants of half its inhabitants; till, latterly, as civilisation advanced, they have become more of a healthy, invigorating, and exciting exercise,— must ever delight the human mind. From the heroic hunter of old, whose might in war might almost be measured by his might in the chase, to the Nimrod of the nineteenth century; from the savage, dependent for his daily food upon the prey he can secure in his wild deserts or pathless forests, to the accomplished Squire of Melton fame - there is something so animating in the descriptions of the arts and adventures of the sportsman, that we hardly know an individual, far less a class, who does not enjoy them with an amateur's delight. Except love, perhaps there is nothing which agitates the bosom of even gentle woman so much as a horse-race: from the costermonger's rib in her own donkey-truck at Epsom, to the countess in her droski at Ascot or Goodwood, the passion is universal: and we lately heard a very lovely creature exclaim, in the enthusiasm of the moment of victory, "I could kiss him;"—meaning thereby the winner, though his name was Saint Giles! But if the fair feel such emotions on the vicissitudes common to every species of field-sport, what must be the sensation of the rougher sex, actively engaged in their uncertainties, their anxieties, their dangers, and their triumphs? Next to gaining a battle, we fancy there is no gratification of a more manly character than the winning of a steeple-chase, or being foremost in a well-contested, vigorous, or athletic game. Look at the bold rider, who has cleared fifty doublehedges, half-a-dozen five-barred gates, besides streams, hahas, ravines, downhills, ditches, score of miles has tried the bottom of both; and his gallantry is the theme of all tongues, especially of the huntsman and whipper-in-he is a sudoriferous deity on earth! Then the country squire-who can view his condition without becoming radical out of spite? To him every moon brings its different pleasure, every revolution of the sun its varied enjoyment. Now the fox, and now the hare, invite to the invigorating gallop; now the slower beagles cheer his more indolent mood, and now the majestic stag courts him to regal sport; now the swallow-like greyhound pursues his ap-pointed course in the open ground, and now the yelping spaniel threads for him the tangled maze of the wood; now the grouse and blackcock attract him to the heath-clothed and odour-breathing moors, and now the whirring partridge to the stubble-field, whence his rich harvest has been gathered. Anon the spangled pheasant woos his steps to the nutty cover, and the nimble rabbit falls before his quicker aim. And when the land has exhausted its stores for his amusement, the waters offer him their diversity of pleasures. The lake and the river are at his command: from the bottom of the one his ingenuity upheaves the cunning carp, the prickly perch, and all their finny brethren; from the surface of the other his finer skill decoys the speckled trout and swift-darting salmon. The very marsh and swamp contribute to his endless enjoyments; and the snipe, the teal, the curlew, and the duck, reward his unerring gun. Should these (is it possible?) pall through over-abundance, other and new sources of happiness are within his reach. The deep sea, fathomed by his deep sea-line; the wild goose and swan in wilder regions navigating the frosty air; the clamorous rook, with its sooty branchers; the red deer in his highland mountain fastnesses and glens echoing the torrent fall; the wading heron and the soaring eagle; the trained hawk and falcon; the otter, driven from his beaver-house, in vain to seek safety by running, swimming, hiding, or diving; in short, all that live, the denizens of three elements, seem to be created for his sake alone. And yet, O human nature! while we in our sedentary study contemplate, with quenchless desire, these fresh and glowing pictures, the squire is not altogether contented, but worries himself with cornlaws, and reform, and tithes, and poor's-rates, and the slave-trade, and such trifles—as if he had any thing to do but take the goods the gods provide him, and leave every question of politics to the sharp-witted hungry, the ambi-tious younger branches, and the school (justly so called) of political economists. But we must turn to our book.

Some forty or fifty years ago, we think, the Cynegetica were published in some English medley upon hunting, and in a way very unworthy of the treatises; for we must remember that the works here given are the earliest re-cords of the leash, and of the breeding, treatment, and qualities of the ancient dog and horse. And when we add to this, that the editor, by his profound research and extensive acquaintance with classic literature, has found means to illuminate his original by a vast multitude of later authorities bearing on the same points, we shall have conveyed but a faint idea of a production full in every page of curious and interesting information. Quotations from rare books, anecdotes, parallels, and all that palings, railings, and copses; look at him when can entertain either the scholar or the general the brush is won and his own; what mortal reader, abound; and we know of no publication relatives—his friends and correspondents—have felt too of the kind calculated to be more acceptable much already."

for the superb library or the popular shelf. ' It revives the courser of seventeen hundred years ago in Nicomedia in Asia Minor, and enables us to contrast his cares with our own modern practice. Yet from such a volume it is difficult to select any passages which can shew its tenour. We take from a note devoted to the late Mr. Barnard, of Brantinghamthorpe, whom the editor deeply regrets as an elegant writer, a fellow-lover of coursing, and a valued friend, the following poem from his pen.

following poem from his pen.

"Oh! dear is the naked wold to me,
Where I move alone in my majesty!
Thyme and cistus kiss my feet,
And spread around their incense sweet;
The laverock, springing from his bed,
Pours royal greeting o'er my head;
My gallant guards, my greyhounds tried,
March in order by my side;
And every thing that's earthly born,
Wealth and pride and pomp, I scorn;
And chiefly thee
Who lift'st so high thy little horn,
Philosophy!
Wilt thou say that life is short.

Philosophy!

Wilt thou say that life is short,
That wisdom loves not hunter's sport,
But virtue's golden fruitage rather Hopes in cloister'd cells to gather?
Gallant greyhounds, tell her, here
Trusty faith, and love sincere—
Here do grace and zeal abide,
And humbly keep their master's side.
Bid her send whate'er hath sold
Human hearts—lust, power, and gold—
A cursed train—
And blush to find, that on the wold
They bribe in vain.

Then let her present, the muses and I.

They bribe in vain.

Then let her preach! the muse and I
Will turn to Gracchus, Gaze, and Guy;
And give to worth its proper place,
Though found in nature's lowliest race.
And when we would be great or wise,
Lo! o'er our heads are smilling skies;
And thence we'll draw instruction true,
That worldly wisdom never knew.
Then let her argue as she will!
I'll wander with my greyhounds still,
(Halloo! Halloo!)
And hunt for health on the breeze-worn hill
And wisdom too."

Of Arrian himself, the editor says: " The amusement derived from the Cynegeticus of Arrian, its terse, elegant language, and valuable information, has been my principal inducement to present it to the patrons of the leash in an English dress; that those who might never have read the original, and might be unwilling, or, like Miramont in the ' Elder Brother' (who could 'speak no Greek,' and held the sound sufficient to confirm an honest man' without a knowledge of its sense), unable to peruse it, might have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the first author who had treated systematically of coursing. 'those,' says Christopher Wase, in his preface to Gratius, ' which are curious artisans, doe not content themselves that they have attained to so great perfection in their art, but are extremely pleased to look back and reflect upon the periods and steps whereby that art hath made its graduall progresse; if perchance by comparing the former with the latter, even the present state of it may be advanced.'

"As the originator," he says, "of the Courser's Stud-Book, and the indefatigable compiler of its genealogical tables, (an attempt 'multâ deducere virgă,' to derive 'by trees of pedigrees,' as Dryden says, the speed and shape of each celebrated descendant in the greyhound kennel, from the recorded genealogies and performances of a farfamed ancestry,—xyxsoi di iyirorro dià rò фūrzı iğ > οὐ γὰς οίδ ἀνιφγμίνας πύλας "Αδου, φάος τε λοίσθιος βλέπως τόδε.

" Many classical quotations have been introduced in the notes to elucidate and enliven the text; some in their original language, others in the English tongue. Where the former appeared more illustrative and expressive, it has been retained. The latter has been occasionally substituted, where the passages selected conveyed information acceptable to an English courser, or a version of acknowledged merit faithfully conveyed the sense of the original. And, in a few instances, the original and translation have been introduced in juxtaposition, to enable the reader to judge of their respective excellencies. To this too I have been 'moved,' as Wase very nicely observes, by a wish that the quotations from the dead languages 'may be understood with ease, and the delight of attending to the elegancies in them rather doubled than intermitted, by adjoyning a transla-tion in equal consort: ' wherein,' as he adds, 'I shall have pleased either those that have an affection to see our language enriched with the wit of former ages : or, on the other side, even those men whose inclinations do rather move to look upon the native beauties of every piece.' The references to antiquity, which have imperceptibly increased to some extent, - ' nec dubitamus multa esse, quæ et nos præterierint, homines enim sumus, et occupati officiis,'-have not been introduced for the sake of ostentatious display of knowledge of Greek and Latin literature, like those Who, for renown, on scraps of learning dote, And think they grow immortal as they quote; but that the classical courser might be induced antiquos exquirere fontes,

T examine all, and bring from all away Their various treasures as a lawful prey; to compare the beauties and defects of the seve ral authors who have treated on the same favourite subject; and that the issue of the comparison might be the illustration of the Ni-comedian courser. To the classic reader, ('cui nihil neque non lectum est, neque non intellectum,") no apology is necessary for the number of the extracts made from writers who must ever be prized while pure and correct taste prevails: and to the courser who, with his academic gown has laid on the shelves of his library the authors of Greece and Rome, to be no more disturbed, like ' the rude forefathers' of the rustic cemetery,

' Each in his narrow cell for ever laid;'

and who ' wonders' with Sir John Daw in 'The Silent Woman,' that 'those fellows have such credit with gentlemen; there is a summary power vested in himself, of reducing the number to the measure of his own taste and capacity. Such, however, not having been the fate of ' the crabbed authors' with myself, I confess that I have found it difficult to check my pen in transcribing apposite and explanatory quotations from these early friends. For, in the language of old Gervase, 'the minde being pre-occupied and busied with a vertuous search, is ever ready to catch hold of whatsoever can adorne or illustrate the excellencie of the thing in which it is imployed.""

"With the exception of Somerville, 'who is shewn' as Dr. Johnson observes, 'by the has shewn,' as Dr. Johnson observes, ' by the subjects which his poetry has adorned, that it is practicable to be at once a skilful sportsman and a man of letters,' I have extracted very little from writers of the last century: but the natural historians, poetic and prosaic authors of the olden time, whose works are not of very common occurrence in our libraries, have afforded much information confirmatory of Arrian's opinions. These selections, as well as those with this preface, have been left in their ori- harmonious concurrence in the design of preginal spelling, so happily expressed by Mr. Ellis as 'that fortuitous combination of letters, which the original transcribers or printers had assigned to them.' A knowledge of what others have written on a subject on which we ourselves are about to write, appears indispensable. 'Although I were very much experienced,' says the translator of Gratius, 'in any art, and were apt to conceive a good opinion of my own ability therein, yet being to publish a discourse concerning it, I was obliged to inform myself of what others had formerly proposed in the same matter, as far as may conveniently be attained. There are some who esteem it glory to be thought to have declined any other helps but their own wit, which I should charge upon myself as negligence.' Far be such self-sufficiency from me! I am ever glad to avail myself of the opinions and sentiments of others; and in so doing, to give the merit of originality to its rightful owner, and not to a modern plagiarist. Est enim benignum ut arbitror, et plenum ingenui pudoris, fateri per quos profeceris, non ut plerique ex iis, quos attigi, fecerunt. Scito enim conferentem autores me deprehendisse à juratissimis et proximis veteres transcriptos ad verbum, neque nominatos,' &c.

' For out of the old fieldis, as men saith, Cometh all this new corn from year to year; And out of old bookis, in good faith, Cometh all this new science that men lere.'"

These brief extracts will afford some notion of the nature of the work, and of the easy and charming style in which the whole is written; and farther we shall not venture to extend our selections, which, after all, could only give the most superficial and imperfect idea of the learning and variety (out of thirty-five Cynegetical authors, and thirteen of natural history connected with Venation), contained in this most agreeable production, of which, we are informed, only 250 copies have been printed. The book is replete with gems, and a gem in itself: it is enough to tempt one to wish that every day in the year were a dog-day.

Swallow Barn, or a Sojourn in Virginia: an American Tale. 4 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Newman.

THERE are some amusing sketches of American country life in these pages, which have the attraction of travel in countries little known; but as a novel they are deficient both in story and interest. We will therefore at once proceed to miscellaneous extract.

American Assizes .- " The first matter that occupied the attention of the court was the marshalling of the grand jury, to whom the usual charge was delivered. This office was assigned by the court to one of the members of the bar, a young practitioner, who did not fail to embellish the summary of duties, which he unfolded to their view, with a plentiful garniture of rhetoric. Notwithstanding the por-tentous exaggeration of the solemnity of the occasion, and the multitudinous grave topics which were urged upon the grand inquest, it seems that this quintessence of the freehold dignity was sadly puzzled to find employment in any degree commensurate with the exaltedness of its function. It is said that the jurors revolved in their minds the whole list of national grievances. One party suggested the idea of presenting the established mode of electing the president of the United States as a grievance to the good people of the county; another thought of a formal denunciation of the tariff; a few advocated an assault upon the supreme from ancient English authors, incorporated court; but all were happily brought into a senting a mad-cap ragamuffin, by the name of Jemmy Smith, for disturbing the peace of a camp meeting, by drinking whisky, and breeding a riot, within the confines of the conventicle. Accordingly, after an hour's deliberation upon these various suggestions, they returned to the court-room with a solitary bill, made out in due form, against Jemmy; and this matter constituting the sum total of their business for the term, they were thereupon discharged, with the thanks of the court for the able and vigilant administration of their inquisitorial duties. Jemmy Smith had anticipated this act of authority, and was now in court, ready to stand his trial. He had already selected his counsel - a flowery and energetic advocate, whose strength lay, according to the popular opinion, in his skill in managing a jury. The name of this defender of Jemmy's fame was Taliaferro (pronounced Tolliver), or, as it was called for shortness, Toll Hedges, Esq.; agentleman whose pantaloons were too short for him, and whose bare legs were, consequently, visible above his stockings. Toll's figure, however, was adorned with a bran-new blue coat, of the most conceited fashion, which, nevertheless, gave some indications of having been recently slept in, as it was plentifully supplied with down from a feather-bed. He was conspicuous also for an old straw hat, that had been fretted at the rim by a careless habit in handling it. This learned counsel had apparently been keeping his vigils too strictly the night before, for his eyes were red, and his face inflamed. His frame had all the morning languor of a sedulous night-watcher; and, altogether, Toll did not appear to be in the best condition to try his case. However, he had now taken his seat at the bar; and close beside him sat his client, Jemmy Smith, an indescribably swaggering, saucy blade, who had the irreverence to come into court without coat or waistcoat, and to shew a wild, grinning, disorderly countenance to his peers. Whilst the gentleman who conducted the case for the commonwealth was Whilst the gentleman who congiving a narrative of Jemmy's delinquencies to the jury, and was vituperating that worthy's character in good set terms, Toll was, to all appearance, asleep upon his folded arms, resting on the desk before him. When the charge was fairly explained, one witness was called to support it. This individual was pretty much such a looking person as Jemmy himself. He was rather down-faced and confused in his demeanour before the court, and particularly shabby in his exterior; but he told a plain straightforward story enough, in the main, and his evidence went the full length of all the traverser's imputed enormities. The truth was, Jemmy had certainly broke into the camp, and played some strange antics, considering the sanctity of the place. But during all this time, Taliaferro Hedges, Esq. maintained his recumbent position, except now and then, when Jemmy, feeling himself pinched by the testimony, would recline his head to whisper in his counsel's ear, which act would rouse him enough to bring upon Jemmy a rebuke, that was generally conveyed by pushing him off, and an injunction to be quiet. At length the whole story was told, and bad enough it looked for Jemmy! The attorney for the commonwealth now informed Mr. Hedges that the witness was at his disposal. At this Toll completely roused himself, and sitting bolt upright, directed a sharp and peremptory catechism to the witness, in which he required him to repeat the particulars he had before detailed. There was something bullying in the manner of the counsel that quite intimidated the witness, and the poor fellow made some sad equivocations. At last, said Toll, after admonishing the witness in a very formal manner, that he was upon his oath, and explaining to him the solemnity of his obligation to speak the truth-'I will ask you one question—answer it cate-gorically, and without evasion—When you and Smith went down to camp-meeting, hadn't Smith a bottle of whisky in the bosom of his shirt? Tell the truth.' The attorney for the commonwealth objected to the question, but the court overruled the objection. 'Why, yes, he had,' replied the witness. ' Didn't Jemmy buy that bottle himself, and pay for it out of his own pocket? On the oath you have taken.' 'Why, yes, he did.' 'Well, now tell us; why, yes, he didn't you drink some of that whisky your-self, along the road?' 'Why, yes, I did. I tell the truth, gentlemen.' 'More than once?' 'Yes, several times.' 'After you got down to camp?' 'Oh, yes! certainly - I don't deny it.' 'Did you and Jemmy drink out of the mouth of the bottle, or out of a cup?' ' Certainly out of the mouth of the bottle. You will not catch me in any lies, lawyer Hedges. ' Really, Mr. Hedges,' interrupted the attorney for the commonwealth, 'I don't see what this has to do with the question. I must apply to the court.' 'Oh, very well,' said Toll, 'I see how it is! Gentlemen of the jury, I don't insist on the question, if the gentleman does not like to have it answered. But you can't help seeing the true state of the case. Here's this fellow, who has been all along drinking out of the very same bottle with Jemmy Smith and Jemmy's own whisky too and now he comes out state's evidence. What credit can you attach to a cock-and-bull story, told by a fellow that comes to swear against a man who has been dividing his liquor with him? For the honour of the Old Dominion, gentlemen! cried Toll, concluding this side-bar appeal to the jury, with an indignant gesticulation, and a look of triumph in his face, that might be said to be oratorically comic. The look was a said to be oratorically comic. master-stroke; it took complete effect; and Jemmy was acquitted, in spite of the facts. As the crowd broke up, Toll, on leaving the courtroom, walked up to the witness, and slapping him on the back, said—' Come, let us go take something to drink; and off the two went together to the tavern. Hazard remarked to Hedges afterwards, that it was a little odd, as he had completely triumphed over the facts of his case by undermining the credit of the witness, he should be on such good terms with this person as to bring him down to drink with him. 'Ah!' replied Hedges, 'if the jury knew that man as well as I do, they would have believed every word he said; for there is not an honester fellow in the county. But I know how to work these juries."

A nice Distinction._" As the evening waned. the disputants began to leave the field; and Hedges being thrown by chance into the barroom, alone with his good-natured host, addressed him very seriously upon the subject of the countenance he had given to certain heresies that had been uttered in his presence, and seemingly with his concurrence. 'Lord, Mr. Hedges!' said he, in a quiet tone, and looking round to see who was within hearing, 'you know my ideas long ago about all that matter! It isn't my business to break with customers, or to be setting up against them. What signifies opinions this way or that! But,' he continued, erecting his figure to its full height, and putting on a look of extraordinary determination, sentiments is another thing! Let any man ask me my sentiments - that's all. Thar's no flinch in me, you may depend upon it!"

Classics of an American Barrister. - " It is told of him, that one fine morning in December, he happened to be with a party of brother sportsmen in full chase of a grey fox, under circumstances of unusual animation. The weather was cool-a white frost sparkled upon the fields, the sun had just risen and flung a beautiful light over the landscape, the fox was a-foot, the dogs in full cry, the huntsmen shouting with exuberant mirth, the woods re-echoing to the clamour, and every one at high speed in hot pursuit. Philly was in an ecstacy, spurring forward his horse with uncommon ardour. and standing in his stirrups as if impatient of his speed, when he was joined in the chase by two or three others as much delighted as himself. In this situation, he cried out to one of the party—' Isn't this fine? — don't it put you in mind of Virgil? - Tityre, tu patula recubans sub tegmine fagi.'"

Perhaps the great merit of these volumes is that no one could for a moment suppose them to be written by an English person; and in these days of repetition, any thing at all characteristic deserves notice.

Bibliotheca Scoto-Celtica; or, an Account of all the Books which have been printed in the Gaelic Language: with Bibliographical and Biographical Notices. By J. Reid. 8vo. pp. 178. Glasgow, 1832, Reid and Co.; Edinburgh, Oliver and Boyd; London, Whittaker and Co.

VOLUME dedicated by permission to his Majesty, and one of considerable bibliographical and philological value. A history, or rather catalogue of Highland literature (though necessarily imperfect in the first instance) must always be consulted with advantage when the Gaelic language is a subject of investigation; and the more important service of preserving the remains of that ancient tongue is another of the merits for which we feel ourselves indebted to Mr. Reid's labours. It is to be hoped, therefore, that persons possessed of other books or MSS., or of information on the subject, will communicate with him, and enable him to improve the list in future editions.

We have a slight sketch of the several dialects, the Cornish,* Waldensian, Basque, Bas-Bretagne, Welsh, Manks, Gaelic, and Irish, all, as the author says, originating in a common source; and specimens of some thirty-four varieties of them. We then approach the main subject, and learn that,

"At the present day there are two distinct dialects of Gaelic spoken in the Highlands of Scotland, so different indeed, that the natives in many cases cannot understand each other; arising partly from dissimilarity of pronunciation, and partly from using different words and different flexions. The West Gaelic appears decidedly to be the oldest of the two, and is spoken in the county of Argyle, and other western parts of the Highlands: in its character and genius it is less removed from the Irish than the other, which is called the North Gaelic, and is spoken in Inverness-shire, and the other northern parts of the Highlands of Scotland.

" The first printed work+ in the Gaelic language now extant, is the translation of John Knox's liturgy, by Bishop Carsewell, published at Edinburgh in 1567. There appears not to have been any other work printed for nearly a hundred years after this, except the translation of Calvin's Catechism, printed at Edinburgh in 1631.

"In 1740, however, the Gaelic Vocabulary of Macdonald was published, and gave a new impetus to Gaelic literature, which had, up to this date, been confined entirely to church

"In 1751, Alexander M'Donald published his volume of songs—they were bought up, and read with avidity by all the Highlanders who had it in their power to do so; and in many instances a whole hamlet clubbed together for the purpose of procuring a copy. They were reprinted in 1764, and in 1802, with an additional number of songs."

The appearance of Ossian's poems, in 1760, gave a new and greater impulse to the preservation and study of the Gaelic; but Mr. Reid informs us that it is now again rapidly declining, before the traverse of the Highlands by stage-coaches and steamers.

In the catalogue of Bibles, Psalters, Catechisms, and other religious books, published under various auspices, we find nothing susceptible of extract; and indeed a work of this kind can hardly be expected to furnish such material out of notices of dictionaries, vocabularies, and spelling-books. We must, therefore, content ourselves with general praise for useful intelligence; and copy a striking portrait of a Highland poet, viz. Alexander Macdonald, the son of the episcopal minister of Moidarl, born about the end of the 16th century.

"In person, Macdonald was large and ill-favoured. His features were coarse and irregular. His clothes were very sluggishly put on, and generally very dirty. His mouth was continually fringed with a stream of tobaccojuice, of which he chewed a very great quantity. His manner of composition was, to lie on his back in bed in winter, or on the grass in summer, with a large stone on his breast, muttering to himself in a low whisper his poetical aspirations."

What a capital frontispiece he would have made to this volume!

A. Comparative View of the Industrial Situation of Great Britain from 1775 to the present Time; with an Examination of the Causes of her Distress. By Alexander Mundell, Esq. 8vo. pp. 133. London, 1832. Longman and Co.; Ridgway.

THERE is a fund of the best of all sense, common sense, in this slight volume; and supported, as its views are, by official tables, returns, and documents, it is well calculated to open the eyes of the high as well as the low, the legislator as well as the peasant, to some of the clearest causes of the national distress which, after seventeen years of peace, not only continues to prevail, but to increase. We cannot go into the author's exposition of the state of our shipping interests, exports and imports, the operation of our money system, corn-laws and poor-laws, the mode of raising our revenue, and the amount of our national debt-but endeavour to convey a glimpse of the results at which he arrives, by a single quotation.

" Is it possible (he concludes) to attend to the facts disclosed in these pages with-out making these reflections? Seeing our shipping has increased with the removal of restraints, and our foreign trade with the absence of restraints, can we believe that our home industry would not have increased also, but for the presence of restraints? Can assent be refused to the consequences arising from the exclusive privilege of the Bank of England? When a rise in the exchangeable value of money is going on, are the directors of that bank, who are ignorant of its operation. and could not stay its course if they were aware of it, to be allowed to increase the mischiefs of its consequences, and to derange the general industry of the country? Are the evils of monopoly to be continued in an exclusive privilege, the most extensive in its operation of all monopolies, to the insecurity and uncertainty of all transactions? Are the restraints arising from a dear currency to be continued, and the benefits of a cheap currency to be withheld from the country, in ignorance of the nature of coin, bills of exchange, and bankers' notes?

^{*} Mr. Reid does not appear to be aware of Mr. Davies Gilbert's curious and interesting publications on this dialect.—Rd. L. G. † Of this book only two copies are known to exist.

Are the products of industry to be limited by such restraints throughout the country? With the increasing demand of an increasing population for food, could the most important branch of industry of all have declined, and continue to decline, unless by reason of the restraints imposed upon it since 1815? land to be suffered to continue to be unproductive, and our agricultural labourers to be thrown out of employment, through the operation of the corn-laws? Is our population to be un wholesomely increased, and the morals as well as industry of our labouring poor to continue to be destroyed, by abuses in the administration of the poor-laws? And, in raising a necessary revenue for the state, are we not to raise it in the manner which shall press the least upon the general industry of the country?
Amidst all our boasted love and cry for liberty, is the freedom of industry (of all kinds of freedown the most important) neither to be understood nor attended to? Ministers, legislators old and new, men of all parties, I call upon you not to take my positions for granted, but to inquire patiently and diligently, as I have done, in order to ascertain results by the evidence of facts; and then deny, if you can, the conclusions I have arrived at. If I am wrong as to the causes of our distress, find out what those causes are. Are we to have inquiries about West India distress reiterated and renewed, and are we to have no inquiry into the causes of British distress? Can the latter have proceeded without a cause, or is it less deserving of inquiry, or less capable of being ascer-tained than the former? Let an unrestrained impulse be given to general industry, by withholding from the Bank of England the renewal of its exclusive privilege, and by the issue of small notes, with our present standard; or by the rejection of a standard of gold, and the adoption of a standard of silver. Let capital be enabled to return to the cultivation of the sail, by restoring to the home-grower the advantages of the increasing demand of our increasing population for food, which he enjoyed previous to 1815, but which have been transferred to the dealer in foreign grain since that year. Let the natural employment in the cultivation of the soil, which the poor enjoyed previous to 1815, be also restored to them; and then the correction of the abuses of the poor-laws, as it has been already put in practice in three different counties in England, will be as extensive as it will be certain. Finally, let industry cease to be restrained through any legislative restraints, and particularly through fiscal restraints, by a proper modification of our duties of customs; and lessening our duties of excise, as our revenue from customs increases; and then, but not till then, will the country take a rebound, and proceed in a career of and then, but not till then, will the country of yellow brass in particular, the evolution of take a rebound, and proceed in a career of oxide of zinc is very great. It immediately prosperity even in this country before unexam- affects respiration: it less directly affects the pled. Every thing is ripe for it - capital, intelligence, skill, enterprise, industry—swelling even to overflowing, but pent up and diverted from their natural course by legislative interference."

The Effects of Arts, Trades, and Professions, and of Civic States and Habits of Living, on Health and Longevity: with Suggestions for the Removal of many of the Agents which produce Disease, and shorten the Duration of Life. By C. T. Thackrah, Esq. Second Edition. 8vo. pp. 238. London, 1832, Longman and Co.; Simpkin and Co.: Leeds, Baines and Co.

WE entered so much at large into the first edition of this book, that we need do no more upon its second advent, than notice those enlargements of the parts which obviously attract notice, and call upon us to examine more of the interesting inquiry and useful suggestions of the author. To the former classes of mechanic and industrious labourers, into the causes of whose peculiar disorders Mr. Thackrah carried his investigation, humanely offering hints for their removal or amelioration, and opening a wide field for other philanthropic and intelligent men to improve upon his example, he has now added, agricultural labourers, blanket makers, bleachers, bleachers of worsted, bobbinmakers, bone-button-makers, brassfounders and workers, bronzers, button-makers, calenderers, carders of wool, card-makers, carpenters (ship) clog-makers, cloth-pressers, cloth-raisers, comb makers, copperplate printers, cork-cutters, cotton-weavers, coverlet-weavers, cutlers, die-sinkers, draymen, dressers of hemp, dressers of japanned goods, engravers, farriers, file-cutters makers of fire-arms, flock-dressers, fly-makers geer-makers, water-gilders, gilt-button-makers. gold-beaters, gold-workers, preparers and dress ers of hair, harding-weavers, innkeepers, ironminers, japanners, stovers of japanned goods. jewellers and workers in gold, manufacturers of white lead, Spanish and coloured leather dress ers, looking-glass-makers, men who silver mirrors, makers of military ornaments, makers of sulphuric and nitric acid and sulphate of magnesia, marble-masons or dressers, men independent of business and labour, metal and iron button-makers, mineral acid-makers, modellers in plaster of Paris, nail-makers, night-men paper-stainers, pearl-button-makers, plane-ma kers, power-loom-weavers of stuffs, stuff and woollen printers, sailors, sail-makers, sheargrinders, shoddy-grinders, silk-throwsters, silkweavers, silversmiths, soap-boilers, soldiers spoon - makers, stencillers, stocking - weavers, stone-getters, stuff-weavers, sugar-refiners, tobacco-pipe-makers, tortoise-shell-workers, turners, working upholsterers, varnish-makers, ware-grinders, weavers of wire, weavers of worsted handkerchiefs, fancy goods, &c., whipmakers, wire-drawers,

From the remarks on these, (finding the chief class, i. c. the agricultural labourer, but slightly touched upon), we select the following :-

" Bleachers are exposed to chlorine both in inhalation, and by often standing for the whole day in water strongly impregnated with this gas. They work in open sheds, and are occasionally employed in the field, spreading out the yarn. They are healthy and strong. None are affected with rheumatism. They live to a good age.'

"The brass-founders suffer from the inhalation of the volatilised metal. In the founding digestive organs. The men suffer from difficulty of breathing, cough, pain at the stomach, and sometimes morning vomiting. The brass-melters of Birmingham state their liability also to an intermittent fever, which they term the brass-ague, and which attacks them from once a month to once a year, and leaves them in a state of great debility. As a preventive they are in the habit of taking emetics. They are often intemperate. In Leeds we did not find one brass-founder more than forty years of age : though we have since been informed that there are two brass-founders in the neighbourhood, of the ages of sixty and seventy, who have continued at the employ from boyhood. The turners, filers, and dressers of brass, if confined to this metal, do not seem to be more unhealthy than the generality of our townsmen. observe, among the filers, the hair of the head changed to green. This I suppose to result from the oil of the hair's combining with the copper in the brase particles."

"Gilt-button-makers, in the casting department, are subjected not only to great heat, but to rather severe effects from the fumes of zinc. These are giddiness, headach, sickness, reduction of the appetite, and bilious disorders. The men have the appearance of ill health : forty-five is about the average duration of life. In this, however, as well as other baneful occupations, it is difficult to determine the proportion of evil which the employ and intemperance respectively produce; for labour that distresses is generally well paid; high wages admit considerable intervals of rest and leisure : and leisure, by most uneducated workmen. is spent happily only at the alchouse. In gilding, the temperature of the rooms is 110° to 120°. But the principal evil is the mercurial vapour. Reduction of appetite and of sleep, trembling of the limbs, soreness of the gums, and disorder of the bowels are the common effects. At Birmingham, the women employed in this department begin their work at 10 a.m., and leave it at 5 p.m. They seldom live to full age."

"Comb-makers, exposed to a disagreeable odour from the bullocks' hoofs, are healthy and long-lived."

"Engravers fix the trunk and limbs more than almost any other operatives. The head is brought forward, and the eye intensely and long occupied with objects generally so small as to require a strong artificial lens. In one part of the process, the engraver is subjected to the annoyance of nitrous fumes, but this is only occasional. The posture and confinement affect the head, but more frequently, and more considerably, the organs of digestion. Sometimes the appetite is reduced, almost always the action of the bowels is greatly impaired. Organic diseases, however, of the abdominal viscera are by no means so frequent as in many other sedentary occupations, tailors and shoe-makers for instance. This I attribute to the less general intemperance of engravers. employment affects vision. Young men, for a short time after removing the lens, are unable to judge accurately of the relative size of objects, even at a foot's distance. And the eyes of old engravers are considerably impaired, both as optical and vital instruments."

optical and vital instruments."

" Mr. B., now about the age of 60, was closely employed in engraving for 30 years. His right eye, that which he applied with a convex lens to his art, is consequently obliged to close it when he looks at distant objects. Though not of late years engaged in engraving, he cannot accurately estimate the distance and relative position of near objects. In playing at backgammon, for instance, he frequently takes up a wrong marker. In weak light, the left eye is better than the right. Cases of this kind illustrate some points of function and discuss."

" Preparers or dressers of hair -- men, women, or boys—are in an atmosphere of dust and stench, especially when employed on the foreign article. The winnower suffers most. The complexion is soon rendered pale, the annetite reduced, the head affected with pain. respiration impeded, cough and expectoration established, the body emaciated. I scarcely need add, that life is sacrificed to a continuance of the employ. In most baneful arts and occupations the wages are high; but here we find with surprise, that the winnower does not earn more than 4s. 6d. or 5s. a week. For what a pittance is health broken and life destroyed! But why should the winnowing be effected by hand at all? Why not employ machinery to turn the fan? or why not collect the dust in a box, and carry it off through a wooden chimney by the current from the fan? Few persons, indeed, are employed in the dressing of hair, and fewer are acquainted with their situation and suffering. This may palliate, but cannot excuse the neglect.'

"The manufacturers of white lead are subjected to its poison, both by the lungs and the skin. The dust and exhalation are most from the white-beds and the packing; little from smelting. There is only stench from the grinding, and neither dust nor smell from the bluebeds. Such, at least, was the statement of the managers of an establishment at Hull; for we were not permitted personally to inspect the process, though we examined the men. In several departments the heat is such as to produce sweating. Drinking, however, is less than in many other hot employments: and white-lead preparers are not, as a body, intemperate. In all departments the men and women are sallow and thin, and complain frequently of headach and loss of appetite. effects of the lead are most marked in the whitebeds and packing departments. Here, men soon complain of headach, drowsiness, sickness, vomiting, griping, obstinate constipation; and to these succeed colic or inflammation of the bowels, disorders of the urinary organs, and, finally, the most marked of the diseases from lead __palsy. We observed the muscles of the fore-arm more frequently and sooner to suffer than other parts. The eyes are also affected with chronic inflammation, or reduced nervous power. Persons commence the manufacture about the age of twenty; many soon leave, from broken health: those who endure the employ do not remain, on the average, longer than the age of forty-five; and during one-third of these twenty-five years, the men are laid up in bed, or decrepit from colic or palsy. The oldest man known in a large establishment at Hull, we found to have attained the age of fifty-four; but he is now unable to work. It is sixteen years since he entered the employ, and during this period he has been laid up twenty-eight times from serious disease! Each attack has been worse than its predecessor. He has been, on one occasion, nineteen weeks in bed, with scarcely the power of stirring a limb, and was a month without any evacuation from the bowels. This miserable man is now partially paralytic; he has scarcely any motion in either wrist, and his lower extremities are so weakened that he can scarcely trail himself along, even with the aid of a crutch. His haggard countenance and emaciated frame give the appearance of the age of eighty rather than of fifty-four. No person while packing lead, and to have died soon after. and drunkenness is rare. Persons do not work in the lead-manufactory more than five days a-week on the average: and as no man could be induced to remain in the destructive departments, there is a regular change of duties. Thus, though none are destroyed, all are exposed in turn to the most baneful process. What means can be used to improve the state of these wretched operatives? Last year I examined with care the agency of white lead, which was said to have been rendered innoxious by a peculiar process. I regret to add, that I cannot support the statement of the projector. Will any chemical process avail to prevent the poisonous effects of this mineral? Can any substitute be found for its use in our arts and manufactures? For paint, Mr. Parkes, the chemist, recommends carbonate or oxide of zinc, which, if not wholly harmless, is a less noxious substance, and states, that though not quite so white, it keeps its hue longer than the common carbonate of lead. One means, at least, of prevention, is quite practicable—clean-liness. The success of this simple measure, at one manufactory, warrants our belief that more than half the diseases of lead-preparers would be prevented by washing and brushing the hands and skin whenever they leave work, cleaning the mouth, changing the dress, and the regular use of the bath. A linen dress is also recommended as excluding from the skin much of the dust which would enter through The rooms in which the processes woollen. are carried on ought, of course, to be spacious and well ventilated; and there should always be a strong draught through the furnace. A subsidiary chimney, anterior to the ordinary one, is mentioned by Dr. Christison as particularly efficient in carrying off the exhalations from the rakings. Men should never be allowed to take their meals in the workshops. Fatty aliments are recommended as a preservative from the poison of lead."

"Soap-boilers, exposed to exhalations from the oil and alkali, are healthy, and even ruddy. During the plague in London this employ was said to be remarkably exempt. Soap-boilers are generally temperate, and live to full age."

Soldiers .- " The capacity of the chest in soldiers appears to be considerably greater than that in artisans, and, indeed, in most other classes of society. Nineteen individuals from the 14th Light Dragoons, examined by an apparatus which may be termed a pulmometer, gave an average of 217 cubic inches of air, which a man could throw out at one full expiration. Nine were officers, and the average of these was 240 cubic inches; four musicians, who used wind instruments, and the average was 220; six privates, 247. A tall young cornet threw out 295; and this is the largest expiration we have known."

"Sugar-refiners are exposed to more heat than almost any class of operatives. The temperature in which they work is 70°, 90°, and sometimes 120°; and that of the stoves is 150°, 180°, and often 200°. Germans, bearing the work better than Englishmen, are almost ex-clusively employed. Though dressed only in flannel shirts and linen trousers, they perspire profusely: on coming out of the stoves, however, they take care to rub the skin dry. A disagreeable acetous exhalation arises during the process, but does not appear to affect health. The steam also is sometimes so great as to prevent the men seeing each other. A barrel of

They work from 3 A.M. to 3 P.M.: the labour is great. Sugarrefiners are healthy and remarkably muscular : they never suffer from the complaints commonly termed colds. They are said to be rather frequently affected with hernia, to be subject to rheumatism, and to be worn out, or die consumptive, generally before they reach the age of fifty."

With these selections we again take our leave of Mr. Thackrah, and we have no occasion to point out the interesting nature of the information he has brought together. We confess that to us his sketches not only afford great intelligence, but much amusement. Many of the employments he describes are hardly known to one in a thousand of general readers; and when we are also called upon to view their effects upon our fellow-creatures, surely fiction or romance would fail in exciting so strong a

> Ferrall's Ramble through America. [Second Notice: conclusion.]

In the previous part of our review of this volume, we promised to give from it some illustrations of the effects of slavery in the United States; and we now proceed, without farther remark, to fulfil that promise. Mr. F. thus describes them :-

"When Louisiana was ceded to the United States, in 1803, Orleans was then entirely occupied by Creole-French and Spanish; consequently the majority of the habitations and public buildings are in the French and Spanish style. The cathedral, which presents a handsome façade of about seventy feet, the town-hall, and courts, occupy one side of the place d'armes, these, with the American theatre, the théâtre d'Orléans, or French opera-house, the hospital, and three or four churches, are the only public buildings in the city. The houses are all flatroofed, and those in the back streets and fauxbourgs are seldom more than one story high : the practice of building houses in this manner was pursued in order to avoid injury from tornadoes, which occasionally visit the valley of the Mississippi; latterly they have not been of frequent occurrence, although, when they do arise, they are extremely violent. The town of Urbana, in Ohio, this year (1830) has been nearly destroyed by a visitation of this nature. Pharo-banks, roulette-tables, and gambling of all kinds, are publicly permitted; but the proprietor of each establishment pays a tax of 5000 dollars per annum. The théatre d'Orléans, on Sunday evenings, is generally crowded with beautiful French women. Every night during the winter season there is a bal pare et masque. and occasionally ' quadroon balls,' which are attended by the young men of the city and their chères amies quadroons, who are decidedly the finest women in the country, being well formed, and graceful in their carriage. The Louisianians are prohibited by law from marrying with quadroons, although this caste is free, and many of them have been educated in France, and are highly accomplished. In the south, slavery exists in its most unqualified condition, wanting those milder modifications which serve to dress and decorate the person of this ugly fiend. Here may be seen hundreds of animals of our own genus exposed in the public bazaars for sale, and examined with as much care, and precisely in the same manner, as we examine horses. In some of the slave states the law prohibits can be a month in the worst department with- ale placed in the sugar-house allows free potaithe separation of families; but this prohibition out a serious attack of disease. Drunkards tion; much, indeed, is taken—from three to suffer most. One of them was said to have four, or even five quarts each per day; but the bility of coming in contact with any dispensers been suddenly seized with violent insanity men do not appear to suffer from this quantity; of justice but the magistrates of the state, who, being slave-holders themselves, instead of redressing his grievances, would be more likely to order him a lashing for presuming to complain. Many melancholy instances occur here, which clearly illustrate the evils of slavery, and its demoralising influence on the human character. The arguments against slavery are deduced from self-evident propositions, and must carry conviction to every well-organised mind; yet from their application being of too general a character, they seldom interest the feelings, and in the end leave less impression than the simple statement of a particular occurrence. During my stay, a Doctor ---- came down the river with thirty slaves, among which were an old negro and negress, each between sixty and seventy years of age; this unfortunate old woman had horne twenty-one children, all of whom had been at different times sold in the Orleans market, and carried into other states, and into distant parts of Louisiana. The Doctor said, in order to induce her to leave home quietly, that he was bringing her into Louisiana for the purpose of placing her with some of her children - 'And now,' says the old negress, 'aldo I suckle my massa at dis breast, yet now he sell me to sugar-planter, after he sell all my children away from me.' This gentleman was a strict Methodist, or 'saint;' and is, I was informed, much esteemed by the preachers of that persuasion, because of his liberal contributions to their support. Negresses, when young and likely, are often employed as wet-nurses by white people, as also by either the planter or his friends to administer to their sensual desires - this frequently as a matter of speculation; for if the offspring, a mulatto, be a handsome female, from 800 to 1000 dollars may be obtained for her in the Orleans market. It is an occurrence of no uncommon nature to see the Christian father sell his own daughter, and the brother his own sister by the same father. Slaves do not marry, but pair at discretion; and the more children they produce, the better for their masters. On the Levée, at New Orleans, are constantly exhibited specimens of the white man's humanity, in the persons of runaway slaves. When such an unfortunate negro is retaken, a log is chained to one of his legs, and round his neck is placed an iron collar, from which project three sharp prongs more than a foot in length each. The evils of this infernal system are beginning to re-act upon the Christians, who are latterly kept in a constant state of alarm, fearing the number and disposition of the blacks, which threaten at no far distant period to overwhelm the south with some dreadful calamity. Three incendiary fires took place at Orleans during the month I remained in that city, by which several thousand bales of cotton were consumed. The condition of the slaves on the sugar or rice plantations is truly wretched. They are ill-fed, ill-clad, and worked in gangs under the superintendence of a driver, who is armed with a long whip, which he uses at discretion; and it is a fact, well known to persons who have visited slave countries, that punishments are more frequently inflicted to gratify the private pique or caprice of the driver, than for crime or neglect of duty. In the agricultural states, slave labour is found to be altogether unproductive, which causes this market to be inundated: within the last two months, 5000 negroes have been sold here. The state legislature has just passed a law, regulating the introduction of slaves, and commanding all free people of colour, who were not residents previous to 1825, to quit Louisiana in the space of six months. Georgia has enacted a law to the about the time of the last presidential election, same effect, with the addition of making penal tried the system of bribing, and obtained pro-

the teaching of people of colour to read or write. mises fully sufficient to insure their returns; The liberty of the press is by no means tolerated but on counting the votes, it was found that in the slave states, as both judges and juries more than one half the persons who were paid will always decide according to the local laws, although totally at variance with the constitution.

We learn, with some surprise, that reform, or a wish to render America more democratic, is gathering strength even in republican America; and that among the apostles of the broadest schemes for the division of property, &c. Miss Frances Wright (now Mrs. ____) has been one of the most successful. In ascending from Orleans by a steam-boat, Mr. F. relates:

"On board, whilst I was amusing myself forward, I was accosted by a deck-passenger, whom I recollected to have seen at Harmony. He told me, amongst other things, that a Mr. O , who resided there, had been elected captain, and added that he was ' a considerable clever fellow,' and the best captain they ever had. I inquired what peculiar qualification in their new officer led him to that conclusion. Expecting to hear of his superior knowledge in military tactics, I was astounded when he seriously informed me, in answer, that on a late occasion (I believe it was the anniversary of the birth of Washington), after parade, he ordered them into a 'groggery,' 'not to take a little of something to drink, but, by J-s! to drink as much as they had a mind to.' must be observed, that this individual I had seen but once in the streets of Harmony, and then he was in a state of inebriation. Another anecdote, of a similar character, was related to me by an Englishman relative to his own election to the post of brigadier-general. The candidate opposed to him had served in the late war, and in his address to the electors boasted not a little of the circumstance, and concluded by stating that he was 'ready to lead them to a cannon's mouth when necessary.' This my friend the general thought a poser; but, however, he determined on trying what virtue there was __not in stones, like the old off a wall, and have now in my possession. It man' with the 'young saucebox,'-but in a much more potent article, whisky: so, after having stated that although he had not served, yet he was as ready to serve against ' the hired assassins of England,'-this is the term by which the Americans designate our troops, as his opponent, he concluded by saying, ' Boys, Mr. - has told you that he is ready to lead you to a cannon's mouth-now I don't wish you any such misfortune as getting the contents of a cannon in your bowels; but if necessary, perhaps I'd lead you as far as he would: however, men, the short and the long of it is, instead of leading you to the mouth of a cannon, I'll lead you this instant to the mouth of a barrel of whisky.' This was enough-the electors shouted, roared, laughed, and drank—and elected my friend brigadier-general. Brigadier-general! what must this man's relatives in England think when they hear that he is a brigadier-general in the American army? Yet he is a very respectable man (an auctioneer), and much superior to many west-country generals. The fact is, a dollar's. worth of whisky and a little Irish wit would go as far in electioneering as five pounds would go in England; and were it not for the protection afforded by the ballot, the Americans would be fully as corrupt, and would exercise the franchise as little in accordance with the public interest, as the English and Irish who enjoy the freedom of corporate towns. Some aspirants to office in the New England states, to vote for, must have voted against the person who had bribed them. It is needless to say this experiment was not repeated. The Americans thought it bad enough to take the bribe, but justly concluded that it would be a double crime to adhere to the agreement. The bravo who takes a purse to commit an assassination, and does not do that for which he has been paid, is an angel when compared to the villain who performs his contract."

This logic is not very clear. But we proceed to our concluding extract.

"When I was (says the author, on his return) at New York, about fifteen months before, I was informed that the working classes were being organised into regular bodies, similar to the 'union of trades' in England, for the purpose of retaining all political power in their own hands. This organisation has taken place at the suggestion of Frances Wright, of whom I shall again have occasion to speak presently, and has succeeded to an astonishing extent. There are three or four different bodies of the 'workies,' as they call themselves familiarly, which vary somewhat from each other in their principles, and go different lengths in their attacks on the present institutions of society. There are those of them called 'agrarians,' who contend that there should be a law passed to prohibit individuals holding beyond a certain quantity of ground; and that at given intervals of time there should be an equal division of property throughout the land. This is the most ultra and least numerous class, the absurdity of whose doctrines must ultimately destroy them as a body. Various handbills and placards may be seen posted about the city, calling meetings of these unions. Some of those handbills are of a most extraordinary character indeed. I shall here insert a copy of one, which I took may serve to illustrate the character of those

THE CAUSE OF THE POOR. 'THE CAUSE OF THE POOR.
'The mechanics and other working men of the city of New York, and of there such, and such only, as live by their own useful industry, who wish to retain all political power in their own hands;

Who are in favour of And who are opposed to for deb An efficient lien law, A general system of edu-cation; including food, clothing, and instruction, Rich men for office, and to equal for all, at the pub-lic expense, without sepa-ration of children from parents. Exemption from sale, by execution, of mechanics tools and implements sufficiently extensive to en-able them to carry on bu-

Who are in fasour of
A just compensation for labour,
Abolishing imprisonment Monopolies and Monopolists of all descriptions.

> all those, either rich of poor, who favour them, Exemption of property from taxation-

'Are invited to assemble at the Wooster-street Mili-tary Hall, on Thursday evening next, 16th September, at eight o'clock, to select by ballot, from among the per-sons proposed on the 6th instant, Candidates for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Senator, and a New Committee of Fifty, and to propose Candidates for Register, for Mem-bers of Congress, and for Assembly, By order of the Committee of Fifty, John R. Soppa. Chairman. 'Are invited to assemble at the Wooster-street Mili-

JOHN R. SOPER, Chairman. JOHN TUTHILL, Secretary.

So far for the 'workies;' and now for Miss Wright. If I understand this lady's principles correctly, they are strictly Epicurean. She contends, that mankind have nothing whatever to do with any but this tangible world; __that the sole and only legitimate pursuit of man is terrestrial happiness; - that looking forward to an ideal state of existence, life, destroys all real sympathy towards his fellow-creatures, and renders him callous to their sufferings. However different the theories of other systems may be, she contends that the practice of the world, in all ages and generations, shews that this is the effect of their incul-These are alarming doctrines; and cation. when this lady made her debut in public, the journals contended that their absurdity was too gross to be of any injury to society, and that in a few months, if she continued lecturing, it would be to empty benches. The editor of The New York Courier and Enquirer and she have been in constant enmity, and have never failed denouncing each other when op-portunity offered. Miss Wright sailed from New York for France, where she still remains, in the month of July, 1830; and previous to her departure delivered an address, on which The New York Enquirer makes the following observations:—'The parting address of Miss Weights at the Property of Miss Weights and Property of Miss and Previous to the Wright, at the Bowery Theatre, on Wednesday evening, was a singular melange of politics and impiety-eloquence and irreligion - bold invective, and electioneering slang. The thestre was very much crowded, probably three thousand persons being present; and what was the most surprising circumstance of the whole, is the fact, that about one-half of the audience were females __respectable females. When Fanny first made her appearance in this city as a lecturer on the 'new order of things,' she was very little visited by respectable females. At her first lecture in the Park Theatre, about half a dozen appeared; but these soon left the house. From that period till the present, we had not heard her speak in public; but her doctrines, and opinions, and philosophy, appear to have made much greater progress in the city than we ever dreamt of. Her fervid eloquence - her fine action - her soprana-toned voice-her bold and daring attacks upon all the present systems of society — and particularly upon priests, politicians, bankers, and aristo-crats as she calls them, have raised a party around her of considerable magnitude, and of much fervour and enthusiasm.

The present state of things in this city is, to say the least of it, very singular. A bold and eloquent woman lays siege to the very foundations of society-inflames and excites the public mind-declaims with vehemence against every thing religious and orderly, and directs the whole of her movements to accomplish the election of a ticket next fall, under the title of the 'working-man's ticket.' She avows that her object is a thorough and radical reform and change in every relation of life - even the dearest and most sacred. Father, mother, husband, wife, son, and daughter, in all their delicate and endearing relationships, are to be swept away equally with clergymen, churches, banks, parties, and benevolent societies. Hundreds and hundreds of respectable families, by frequenting her lectures, give countenance and currency to these startling principles and doctrines. Nearly the whole newspaper press of the city maintain a death-like silence, while trines. Nearly the whole newspaper press of the city maintain a death-like silence, while the great Red Harlot of Infidelity is madly and triumphantly stalking over the city, under the mantle of 'working-men,' and making rapid progress in her work of ruin. If a solitary newspaper raise a word in favour of public virtue and private morals, in defence of the rights, liberties, and property of the community, it is denounced with open bitterness by some, it is denounced with open bitterness by some, and secretly stabbed at by them who wish to pass for good citizens. Miss Wright says she leaves the city soon. This is a mere ruse to call diverts his attention from the pleasures of this her followers around her. The effect of her lectures is already boasted of by her followers. Two years ago, say they,—'twenty persons could scarcely be found in New York who would openly avow infidelity—now we have twenty thousand.—Is not that something?' We say it is something—something that will make the whole city think."

But we leave the Americans to the issue, whatever it may be; and again recommend Mr. Ferrall's book to the favour it deserves.

> The Dawn of Freedom, &c. Pp. 46. London, Ridgway.

An English heroic (verse) composition, in which Lafayette and Lafitte are styled a new Timoleon, and a patriot never stained by gold, and the Duke of Wellington an arch cut-throat. The writer is probably very young.

A Familiar Introduction to Astronomy and the Use of the Globes, &c. &c. By W. Newton. Pp. 144. London, Sherwood and Co.

VERY useful elementary treatise, full of diagrams and illustrations; so that we do not know one more fit for the purpose to be put into the hands of youth.

The History of Contagious Cholera, with Remarks on its Character and Treatment in England. By James Kennedy, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London. 3d edition. 8vo. pp. 477. London, E. Moxon. A THIRD edition of this elaborate and able work proves how correct we were in our first estimate of its value. The dreadful disease still assails and carries off its hundred of victims daily; and while yet no means have been devised to arrest its progress or stay its ravages, we cannot do the community a greater service than in recommending Mr. Kennedy's volume to the most serious attention.

Canto XVII. of Don Juan. Pp. 48. London, J. Gilbert.

ANOTHER attempt to take up the broken thread of Lord Byron's poem; but, like all other attempts, a failure; though the writer displays talent enough to choose an original field on which to shew whether he is deserving of distinction or not.

The Oliad. 12mo. pp. 111. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Introduced by a not very delicate prose comparison, this is a poem more full of sound and fury than of intelligible matter. We discover more from the notes than from the verse that it is about Poland; and, from the declamatory style, we guess the writer to be young and enthusiastic. There is much about hells, and blood, and horrors, and demons, and devils, and Nemesis, and Tartarus, and damnation, &c. &c.; and three lines will serve to exhibit the manner. The Archduke Constantine is warned to go quickly to his tent, —— for the invisible hand shall lay

Thee lifeless, shoutless, bloodless, blackly blent
I' the most abhorred clay, with curded corpses pent."

of poetry, altogether political, we can only notice it as very warmly devoted to the Polish

The Anatomy and Physiology of the Organ of Hearing, &c. By David Tod, M.R.C.S. 8vo. pp. 147. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

Top on the ear, and on a frequent concomitant of deafness, imperfection of the organ of speech, is a volume of much good sense and practical utility; not swelled up by theories or extraneous matter. We cordially commend it to the attention of the faculty and the public, both for its clear exposition of the physical structure, and for its judicious advice as to the treatment of diseases connected with its subjects.

The Tradesman's Guide to Superficial Measurement, &c. 12mo. pp. 171. London, Hawkins; Page and Son; Simpkin and Marshall.

By no means a superficial little book, but a series of very useful tables for architects, surveyors, &c. &c., calculated from 1 to 200 inches in length, and from 1 to 108 inches in breadth.

Tables of Arithmetic for the use of the Junior Pupils of King's College School. By F. Ribbans, Arithmetical Master. Pp. 55. Fellowes.

A WELL-ARRANGED little elementary book and excellently adapted to convey instruction.

The Mercantile Navy Improved, &c. By Jas. Ballingall. 8vo. pp. 184. Lond. Morrison. Mr. Ballingall, manager of the Kirkaldy and London Shipping Company, has had much experience in the subject of which he treats, and was examined by the Committee of the House of Commons respecting the melancholy wreck of the Rothsay Castle. Without the explanatory drawings we cannot develop his plan—the leading principle is to assimilate the building of ships, &c. in the mercantile navy to what has been practised with advantage for years in the royal navy. It seems strange, in so important a concern, that manifest improvement should travel so slowly.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

NEW PATENTS

Granted by his Majosty for Inventions.—Scaled, 1831.

Granted by his Majesty for Inventions.—Scaled, 1831.

To Robert William Slevier, of Southampton Row, in the parish of Saint George, Bloomsbury, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, for his having invented or discovered certain improvements in the making or manufacturing of cables, ropes, whale fishing and other lines, lathe and rigger bands, bags, and purses; part of which said improved articles are applicable to other useful purposes. Sealed lat December, for enrolment—6 months.

To Cornelius March Payne, of Stratford, in the parish of West Ham, in the county of Essex, silk printer, for his having invented or discovered certain improvements in printing silk, cotton, and other goods or fabrics. 3d December—6 months.

To Claude Marie Savoye, of Oxford Street, in the county of Middlesex, merchant, for a new invention of which he is in possession, consisting of an improvement or improvements in mills or machines for grinding or reducing grain and other substances. 15th December—6 months.

To Abraham Adolph Mosse, of Canteschury Rose ations, be beneficially used as an internal medicine. 17th side, as the city is approached. This building

December—6 months.

To Daniel Lessum, manufacturer, and William Jones

To Daniel Lessum, manufacturer, and William Jones, srew manufacturer, both of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick, for their having invented certain improvements in machinery for making pins, rivets, woodcrews, and nails. 2dd December—6 months.

To Henry Gore, of Manchester, machine-maker, for his having invented an improvement in the machine commonly called by spinners "Throstle Frames," and spinning frames; which machines operate by spindles and flyers and bobbin, for spinning or twisting yarn or threads. 22d December—6 months.

To Pierreport Greaves, of Chorley, in the county of 22d December—6 months.

To Pierreport Greaves, of Chorley, in the county of Lancaster, gentleman, for his having invented or found out a method or methods of making ornamental or fancy cotton yarms and threads applicable to the making, sewing, or entwoidering of cotton and other fabrics. 22d December—6 months.

To John Christopher Tobias Kreeft, of Old Bond Street, in the city of London, merchant, in consequence of a consumination made to him by Stephen Von Keess and Motits Von Ischoffen, foreigners, residing abroad, for an invention of which he is in possession, of an improved apparatus for shaping plates of metal, and for manufacturing various articles therefrom. 22d December—6 months.

To Samuel Hall, of Basford, in the county of Newton.

facturing various articles therefrom. 22d December—6 months.

To Samuel Hall, of Basford, in the county of Nottingham, cotton manufacturer, for his having invented an improved piston and valve for steam, gas, and other eigens: also so improved method of lubricating the pistons, piston rods, and valves or cocks of such engines, and of condensing the steam and supplying water to the toilers of such steam engines as are wrought by a vacuum produced by condensation. 22d December—6 months.

To Besselict Nott, Eaq. of Liverpool, in consequence of a communication made to him by a certain foreigner, sading absord, for an invention of which he is in possession, of certain improvements in the construction of a furnace or furnaces for generating heat, and in the apparatus for the application of heat to various useful purposes, being further improvements upon a patent obtained by the said Benedict Nott, dated the 4th day of November, 1830. 23d December—6 months.

To Malcom Muir, of Hutchinson Town, Glasgow, Scotland, engineer, for his having invented or discovered certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for peaparing bossels for flooring and other purposes. 22d December—6 months.

To Best Walker Wingfield, of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick, brass founder, for his having invented certain improvements in the construction of bedreads; one or more of which said improvements is or re likewise applicable to other articles. 22d December—6 months.

Newton and Berry.

PINE ARTS.

MEW PUBLICATIONS.

Sketches in Italy. Drawn on stone by W. Linton.

Nos. IX. and X. of this superb and interesting work have just reached us. We need only remark of them, as we have of those already published, that they present the same uniform excellence of selection, where novelty, picturesque character, and grandeur of scenery, unite in exhibiting the first qualities of landscape composition. No. IX. contains views of Pozzuolo, Ivrea, Le Cascatelle, Radicofani, Temple of Peace and Colosseum, Elysian Fields, Mare Morto, Miseno, Baiouli, and the Via Sacra; Arches of Constantine and Titus, the Temple of Venus and Rome, and the Meta Sudans; Bridge at Civita Castellana. No. X. Papigna, near Terni; Lake of Avernus, Temple of Apollo, and Lucrine Lake, with the Bay and Castle of Baise; Atrani, near Amalfi; the Palace of the Cæsars, and Baths of Caracalla; Vesuvius, from Capo di Monte; La Cava, near Salerno; Isola Bella; and the Chigi Palace at l'Aricia.

Views in the East, from original Sketches by Captain Robert Elliot, R. N. Part XVII. Fisher, Fisher, and Jackson.

"AURUNGZEBE'S Tomb, Rozah," " Front View of the Kylas, Caves of Ellora," and Or the landscape portion of this publication we "Sultan Mahomed Shah's Tomb, Bejapore," repeatedly spoke in commendation, when the are the embellishments of this number. Of plates appeared in the shape of "Landscape" the last mentioned, Captain Elliot says, _ "The Tomb of Mahomed Shah is the largest ruins of Bejapore; and it may be observed is large, massive, heavy, and inelegant; differing considerably from the general style of the Mahomedan tombs, both as to the form of its dome, as well as in the absence of minarets of that graceful description which serve to ornament the generality of Mussulman sepul-chres. But though the effect which this structure produces to the eye of the beholder, from a distance, is not altogether pleasing, yet, when it is approached near enough to render all the parts of it distinguishable, its immense size, its square and massive form, the richness and propriety of its ornaments, and the venerable appearance that time has bestowed upon it, without having been able as yet to bring into ruin a single portion, or even to impair or shake its strength in the least degree, it claims, and probably receives, respect and admiration from every one who has the oppor-tunity granted him of exploring the magnificent remains of Bejapore."

Earl Grey; from Life. On stone by F. W. Wilkin.

This is a very pleasing portrait of the premier in his Garter robes, and well deserves a place in the portfolio of the amateur, as well as one more ostensible upon the walls of those who admire the man and the minister. The like-ness is good, and the whole effect mild and dignified. We know not if the artist has flattered the nose a little; but to our eye, from recollection of the original, we should say that he had a little, and that the features are in truth somewhat more sharp than in the copy. Still, the general resemblance is not only sufficient, but accurate.

Progressive Drawing-Book. By Childs. Com-plete in Four Numbers. Dobbs and Co. Among the numerous little publications of this description which have come under our notice. we do not recollect having met with one better calculated to assist the young student of land-scape. The examples rise gradually, from the outlines of simple objects to scenes of intricacy and effect; and they are executed very skilfully, in a style of at once sufficient breadth and sufficient detail.

The Spirit of the Plays of Shakespears. By Frank Howard. Nos. XXII. and XXIII. Cadell.

THE first of these Numbers consists of twenty. three plates, shared by Troilus and Cressida, and Pericles, prince of Tyre __ the last of nine. teen, exclusively devoted to King Lear. There is, as usual, much knowledge of composition, and great beauty and expression, in most of them. Among those which struck us the most forcibly are, "The meeting of Troilus and Cressida," "Simonides giving Thaisa to Pericles," "Marina and Lysimachus," "Lear in the storm," "Edgar leading Gloster," "Cor. delia receiving the news of her Father's misfortunes," &c. &c.

Landscape Illustrations of the Prose and Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.; with Portraits of the principal Female Characters.

Parts II. and III. Chapman and Hall.

Illustrations of the Waverley Novels." "To give an additional interest to the work," the and most conspicuous object amongst all the proprietors say, "it is their intention to add to each Number a beantifully-engraved portrait at a considerable distance, from almost every of one of the principal female characters of the novels and poems." When we consider that. with one or two exceptions, Scott's female characters are purely imaginary, we confess that we think the word "portrait" singularly ill-chosen as the title of any attempt to embody and render visible such exquisite creations of fancy. The portraits in these Numbers are those of "Mysie Happer" and "Mary Avenel." The former it is impossible for us to praise; the latter, which is engraved by H. Cook, from a picture or drawing by R. B. Faulkner, is full of Guido-like sweetness and delicacy.

Lord Brougham. On Stone by Templeton. Darton and Son.

This head is on a large scale, and rather a striking likeness, without attempting elevation in character or art.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE PROPHECY OF A DAY.

NIGHT fades o'erpowered, with scattering fires her starry host has set,

Save one, whose golden lamp is bright with parting glories yet;
And, gleaming where the rifled clouds in sullen masses sleep,

Lo! Morning's young and fiery glance is on the waveless deep.

The deer has left the shadowy fern, the lark the rustling brake,

And lightly flies the freshening breeze o'er hill and reeded lake;

And, bosomed in the crimson rack, the lark has called from far

Hyperion to his eager steeds and gem-encinctured car.

Hour of expectancy and hope, endeared and hallowed time.

When gladness walks the fragrant earth, and hails the dewy prime—Unsoothed in heart I see thee rise with radiance on thy wings,

And other thoughts than those of peace that smile of promise brings.

I think of Life's stern wakened truths, with chilling power revealed,

And how the fairy dreams which mocked the slumberer's sight must yield,

And what shall fade and fail below ere Day's bright course is run,

And Eve throws wide her crystal gates before the unwearied Sun.

Morn with her wouted state shall pass, but mournfully to those Who see but in that brightning ray the birth of many woes;

And Toil arouse the serf anew to curse the oppressor's chain,

And Slavery eye the sapphire vault and flowering earth in vain.

And many a slighted breast shall pine in anguish veiled and deep,
And many a widowed hearth behold the voiceless mourner weep

many a hoary head lament the blight of joys begun,

And bend beside the bier and cry, Alas! alas! my son.

Destruction with its lightning sweep, and war with tempest sway,

And Battle, whose accursed breath Despair and Wrath obey,

Shall meet amidst the light of steel with flaunting banners spread,

And beckon forth the vulture's brood to riot on the dead.

And Love, erewhile the child of Heaven, unfettered and unsold,

Shall bow his thralled and sullied neck beneath the chain of gold;

And visions of enduring fame and honour's meteor light,

Fade like you rent and scatter'd mist before the gazer's sight.

Oh! blind in sense and dull of heart! is this thy proffered speech?

Are these the thoughts that kindled sky and smiling ocean teach? With chastened glance look up and view the page of Heaven aright, And learn a better, nobler truth from morn's

A day is born -a fount unsealed of new and joyous life, arising light.

A world restored, a scene revealed of that enduring strife,

Where angels from their thrones on high with eyes of love look down,

And Sorrow for its victor weaves a more enduring crown.

Or He, who dwells in light unscanned, whose name is Mercy still,

Through Time's interminable course awakening good from ill,

And shielding with a parent's care the life his wisdom gave,

Say, is that ear too slow to mark or arm too weak to save?

Enough, that to thy view once more the courts of day are spread-

Enough, that on thy favoured brow the dews of peace are shed;

That thou art spared, thy thoughts afresh to loftier themes to raise,

And add at least one mortal voice to Earth's ascending praise..

J. F. Hollings.

THE BRITISH BOW.

HURRAH! the bow, the British bow, The gallant, fine old English bow! Never flashed sword upon the foe, Like arrow from the good yew-bow! What knight a nobler weapon wields? Thou victor of a thousand fields, Are lances, carbines, thy compeers? No: vouch it, Cressy and Poitiers! With hearts of oak and bows of yew. And shafts that like the lightning flew, Old England wore her proudest crown, Nor bolt nor brand might strike it down!

Hurrah! the bow, the British bow, The merry, true old English bow! Where fed the stag or sprung the roe, There bent the ready stout yew-bow ! What hoof of speed dared scorn its might? What plume outsoar its glorious flight? Oh! joyous was the greenwood then, And matchless all her own bold men; Her rovers rude by mount and flood, Her king of outlaws Robin Hood! Right daring, reckless, wild, and free, Great champion of the brave yew-tree, Hurrah!

Hurrah! the bow, the British bow, The stately, firm old English bow ! What souls with freedom's spirit glow, That love not thee, heroic bow? When haughty Gaul deem'd all-secure The victor's wreath at Agincourt, Thy shafts, triumphant from the string, Bore fate and vengeance on their wing.

And well the serried ranks might reel, When, like a hurricane of steel, They saw ten thousand bombs assail Their horse and horsemen, helm and mail! Hurrah!

Hurrah! the bow, the British bow, The graceful, light, old English bow! What island of the world may show Aught like our own unconquer'd bow? The guardian of our native wild, When liberty was yet a child; Ere yet were launch'd our ships of war, Our thunderbolts of Trafalgar; When Nelson was no magic word-Drake, Hawke, St. Vincent's fame unheard; Then O, whilst freedom's bounties flow, Thrice honour'd be the bow! the bow! Old England's bow! Hurrah!

C. SWAIN.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

LEXICOGRAPHY.

(From a Correspondent.) THE late Dr. Bell, A.B. Bell of scholastic renown, used to relate, that when in want of monosyllables for some purpose of early education, two friends waded through Johnson's Dictionary, extracting, in their progress, every monosyllable as it occurred. A story is told of some traveller, who, entering upon a tedious journey, thought to relieve the monotony of the way by a book: the work he selected was Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary, and the ground of his choice was the multitude of words which it contained. The proof sheets of Ponsonby's new Dictionary of the English Language have lately passed through our hands: we are aware that dictionary reading is an uninteresting task, and it is therefore one which we are little inclined to inflict upon our readers. In what way, then, are we to solicit attention? situated as we are, we dare not begin with eulogistic flattery; we dare not set forth the merits of a lexicographer beyond that of every other literary drudge, nor exalt the claims of Ponsonby's Dictionary over those of every other compilation in the language. To attempt extracts from a dictionary, were to remind our readers of the man who, when his house was for sale, exhibited the fragment of a brick by way of sample. The great fault which we have found with other works of this class is, that while the language is ever varying, their definitions continue ever the same. Dictionarymakers in general, instead of being guided by the signification in which a word is received, endeavour to fix upon it a meaning of their own, which it is ever arbitrarily to retain. Not such is the case of the work at present before us: Mr. P. has aimed at shooting folly as she flies, to perpetuate the ever-varying meanings of an hour. It were, however, un-just to say that all his definitions are those of gaiety, or dictated by a spirit of trifling: some of them exhibit considerable thought, and some are remarkable for condensing much meaning within a very small compass. After all, we cannot, perhaps, give our readers so just an idea of the work by any other means as by a few random extracts: the principal objection attendant upon this method (it is, indeed, inseparable from all alphabetic arrangements) is the unavoidable mingling of subjects - now grave, now gay, now serious, now in jest. We proceed with a few articles as, in reviewing the pages, they have caught our eye.

"Abuse: the reward of the eminent and the notorious. Advice: that which is given plentifully, but sparingly received.

Advise: what no true friend hesitates to do.

Allegory: an escape for a puzzled commentator.
Beauty: on the continent, the mark of aristocratic birth; in Britain, the heir-loom of all classes.
Bishops: a mark for every discontented withing.
Blessedness: not single.
Books: depositories of the wisdom of every age.
Cajoling: an art peculiarly practised by the candidates for the representation of a pot-wallopping borough.
Church Patrimony: an estate to which every man who chooses may bring up his son.
Clvility: that which costs nothing, yet buys every thing.
Clergy: an order of men who went out of fashion about the same time that religion did.
Cost: a covering—sometimes of broad cloth, sometimes of paint.

of paint.
Coloured Neckcloth: in Greek TOILLAND THE

Coloured Neckcioin: in Greek Nation 11.
Criticism: private malevolence under the cloak of public watchfulness.
Dentist: a man who extracts groans.
Digestion: a process equally necessary to the mind as to the body.

to the body.

Discretion: a great rarity.

Doctors: necessary evils.

Dress: the making of some men, as dandies and tailors.

Early Rising: a bore, nevertheless the parent of success
Equanimity: a thing often lost, but seldom found.

Ever: with divines and philosophers the whole of time, with coquettes a fortnight.

Experience: that which no one will buy secondhand.

Excuses: things easier found than remedies.

Fame: the daughter of nest disturbances, the mother.

Fame: the daughter of past disturbances, the mother

Fame: the daugner or past distanguates, are motivated of future.

Friendship: not a mere name, as would-be wits pretend.

Good Manners: the desire of gratifying others without reference to ourselves.

Grace: the result of an elegant mind acting upon mat-

High Wind: when it blows so that the very stars can scarcely keep their places.

History: a register of the crimes, follies, and missfortunes of mankind.

History is register of the trimes, homes, and massactunes of mankind.
Jealousy: folly.
Invective: a bait wherewith rabble are caught.
Junius: a riddle, very famous in a former generation.
Legs: the arms of man.
Love: that feeling which prompts us to desire the happiness of another.
Logic: the rules by which we reason, as grammar contains those by which we speak.
Luck: the last refuge of fools.
Marriage: sometimes the grave of love.
Memory: the fruit of attention.
Modern Music: the art of executing difficulties.
Novelty: a Frenchman's god.
Nudity: an attire fashionable in the first and last ages of the world.
Oasis: the tritest of all similes.
Original: nothing now.
Original writer: one who never borrows from others, and seldom from himself.
Patience: a game; often played alone, yet generally Patience: a game; often played alone, yet generally lost.

Patriotism; a sterling virtue, though seases.

Pedantry: the over-rating any kind of knowledge to which we pretend.

Pen: the most effective of all weapons, it acting upon the mind as arms do upon the body.

Perhaps: an excellent leading-string for weak assertions.

Personalities: the resource of a baffed controversialist.

Peers, otherwise Piers: blocks raised as a defeuce against a sudden storm. a sudden storm.

Posterity: those to whom we shall appear as indifferent as our progenitors do to us.

Pride: the incentive of strong minds, the destruction

Private Still: a trooper who has not yet attained a hal-bert.

Procrastination: a cancer of the soul.

Punctuality: in public business a duty.

Reading: the cheapest and most lasting of all pleasures.

Reform: that which is advocated in public, neglected in private life.

Resolutions: those things which when bad we keep, when good we break.

Romance: that which succeeds to the bread and butter of the nursery.

of the nursery

of the nursery.

Schoolmaster: formerly, one who was found at home;
now, one who goes abroad.

Self: the grand pursuit of half mankind.

Solitude: agreeable enough—in imagination.

Success: not the criterion of merit.

Success: not the criterion of merit.
Taste: the rule by which beauty is judged.
Time: the wise man's treasure.
Tongue: the only instrument which grown sharper by Trees: appendages to hedge-rows, as lamp-posts are to streets.

True Knowledge: an acquaintance with things, not words.

Vanity: the abortive illegitimate brother of Pride, whom he counterfeits.

Umbrella: vide Equanimity.

Weather: a subject for conversation—by no means dry. Wise Woman: in English, a witch; in French, une femme sage.

Wit: never defined, seldom understood.
You: the reader."

Digitized by Google

REASONING FACULTIES OF ANIMALS.

THAT animals possess the faculty of reasoning, and are not solely guided by instinct, is the minion of many British as well as foreign muralists, and numerous facts corroborative of this doctrine may be found scattered throughout their works; — doubtless a more enlarged acquaintance with, and a stricter attention to, their habits would still farther strengthen and wnfirm this hypothesis.

The sagacity of the beaver, the cunning of he fox, the polity of the bee, the industry of the ant, &c. &c. are so obvious to the most uperficial observer, as to have become proterbial; and amongst the volatile tribes, insances of foresight and reasoning are often esplayed, wholly unaccountable on the prin-aple of mere blind instinct. To this purpose, in American naturalist (Dr. Steel) mentions the sagacity of the swallows frequenting the banks of the Saratoga, which often alter the construction of their nests according to circumnances, in order to secure their young from the depredation of their natural enemies; and an assance of equal, if not greater, sagacity in this tribe of volatiles, I myself witnessed in the south of Scotland several years ago. The spring had been uncommonly mild, and the congresation of swallows in the vicinity of the Cheviot was greater than had ever before been observed by the oldest inhabitant of this border district. Numerous flocks of them might be seen constructing their nests underneath the straw-thatched roofs of the barns and farmsteads on the Kale and the Beaumont. The ancient straggling mansion of Thirlstane seemed in particular to be one of their favourite resorts; the walls were thickly studded with their nests, and two were even attached to the upper corners of one of the bed-room windows. An unusual commotion amongst this feathered poetry. community one morning attracted the notice of the family while seated at breakfast, and led to the discovery, that the two nests within reach of the house-maid's broom had been swept away.

Throughout the early part of the day the birds congregated in great numbers on a dilapidated shed in the rear of the house, and by their incessant chattering and agitation seemed to be engaged in deep consultation. Towards noon, however, the noisy conclave broke up. when the bereaved pairs immediately recommenced their labours at an angle of the roof farthest from the insecure site they had before chosen. The necessity for despatch was doubtless urgent, as the breeding season seemed at hand; and in this emergency they were not left unaided by their companions, since six, sometimes eight, were seen flying backwards and forwards, and poising themselves on the edge of the overhanging roof, loaded with materials, while as many as could find room assisted in the building operations.

Without entering on the disputed point, whether the lower order of animals, even admitting them to be endowed with a certain portion of reason, are, or are not, capable of transmitting their individual acquisitions to the species, it seems at least sufficiently evident in the above instance, that the swallows not only communicated a knowledge of their wants and feelings to each other, but profited by the united experience and assistance of their kind.

But, however this may be, I have widely deviated from my purpose, which was merely to recount what appeared to me a striking instance of reasoning in the common sparrow.

The day of the opening of London Bridge for private singing.

was a day of jubilee to the flocks of those little familiars in the outskirts of the metropolis, owing to the almost total desertion of the streets and squares by people of every rank and degree who had hurried to witness that splendid spectacle.

A few of them from an adjoining garden, that usually pick up in haste and on the wing the crumbs I am in the daily habit of throwing to them from the breakfast-table, emboldened by the absence of all bustle, alighted fearlessly on the pavement, and soon devoured their allowance, except a hard crust about the size of a walnut, which resisted their united efforts to reduce it to fragments.

As I stood watching their proceedings, they one by one flew off, with the exception of a single bird, which continued its efforts for some time longer. After a while, however, even its patience failed, and it hopped to the edge of the curb-stone, apparently about to take flight after its companions, when suddenly, as if actuated by some new idea, it returned, took up the hard-hearted crust in its bill, and flying towards the kennel immersed it in a little puddle of stagnant water. Thus softened, the sagacious little creature brought it back to the pavement, and readily succeeded in picking it to pieces.

A. C. Hall. to pieces.

MUSIC.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Beauties of Byron. Music composed by A. Lee. Goulding and D'Almaine.

THE words for the eight compositions contained in this musical volume are selected from the works of Byron; and, though not of equal merit, are in general truly beautiful. "The dark Suliote" is especially a fine and spirited song, with an accompaniment equal to the Six Original Melodies. Composed by

S. Philpot. Chapell.
S. Philpot is "late of the R.A. of Music," and not the Lord Bishop of Exeter, as blunderers, more accustomed to see the latter named in the newspaper, might stupidly imagine. Without having striking merit, his little collection of songs, from various authors, supplies an agreeable pastime for the evening hour.

I love my Love, because he loves me. Poetry by Barry Cornwall; Music by Chev. Neu-komm. Cramer, Addison, and Beale.

Count Balthasar. The same.

EACH beautiful in its different style: the first gay, the second grave. The first, perhaps, not so peculiar as the productions of this composer are in general, but graceful and admirably suited to the words: the second a wild air, with some of the sweetest bits we ever heard. "And they hunt through the valleys from night till morn," with the very original accom-paniment, is exquisite.

Say not you love me. T. H. Bayly. Cramer and Co.

Oh! why does he stay? The same. Two light ballads, pleasant and Haynes Baylyish: quite pretty enough to charm the lovers of simple melody.

Arise, and follow me, my Love. Composed by C. Butler, Esq. Hopkins.

ONE of the simplest and most captivating ballads of the season. A sweet Scots air, with a very slight accompaniment, and well adapted

The Heather's purple Flower. Sung by H. Phillips; composed by G. Harris. Boosey

ANOTHER Scots air-lively and pretty.

The lost Cavalier. C. Hodgson. Duff. SUNG by Miss Lyon; and sweet music, though not very original, as we remember some words by L. E. L. set to the first part of the same air by Mr. Manning.

The Adieu. C. M. Sola. Johanning. THIS air ought to become, if it has not already become popular. The words and music together are as charming as ballad can be; and it has another great recommendation—that of being within the compass of every singer accompanist.

Number One. T. Hood. C. M. Sola. Chapell. CAPITAL, from one of Hood's Annuals: we advise all our merry friends to take care of Number One.

DRAMA.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday Mdlle. Mars took her farewell in the character of Hortense, in L'Ecole des Vieillards, leaving with us the conviction that she has no rival and no successor. The triumph of art is to be known only in its results; this triumph she has achieved: it is impossible to be more graceful, and at the same time more natural. When she appears in full costume When she appears in full costume for the ball, which, while under the influence of a grateful impulse, she renounces, her regret was essentially French and feminine-she looks at her sleeves, her bouquet, and appears to pity her dress even more than herself for not being seen; and in those scenes where the gay and young spirit, excited by vanity, gives way to mirth made piquant by a little sarcasm, she overcame that greatest difficulty of being lively and lady-like at the same time. Hurteaux was excellent in the husband, and was admirably supported by Laporte in L'Ami Bonnard. One great merit, and one too much neglected on our stage, is the entire concentration of the French actors' attention on what they are doing they watch each other instead of the audience : they look at, they attend to each other. In the conversation between le Mari et l'Ami, we felt as if we were only overhearing an actual discourse. Mde. Paul Taglioni, who took her sister-in-law's place in the Sylphide, is young, pretty, and graceful; and promises to be une déesse de la danse in her turn. With this performance the French plays closed.

STRAND THEATRE.

THE Loves of the Angels improves upon repetition. The music is throughout very pleasing, and the orchestra of this theatre is conducted in so superior a style as to give full effect to all it has to do. The scenery is not so good as we are now accustomed to have even at the minor theatres, but the performance makes ample amends, and few pieces send away their audiences more completely gratified. We have also to repeat our praise of the shorter farces and burlettas, such as Damp Beds, the Day after the Wedding, the Four Sisters, et hoc genus omne, nightly played here: this is the right way to manage and attract in these small houses; and if they would only make a point of finishing by eleven, or half-past eleven o'clock at latest, we are sure they would draw thousands to witness them, whom the late hours deter from theatres which are open long after

RICHMOND THEATRE.

WE seldom visit boards out of the bills of mortality; but were allured on Monday to the Richmond Theatre, to witness the first attempt upon the stage of a fair débutante, of whom we had heard a very favourable report, and who wished to "imp her wing" in a small house, out of the ordeal of a London audience. The part chosen was Maria Darlington, in a Roland for an Oliver; and the name of its representative Murray. Of the lady herself it is but just to say, that we have seldom, if ever, witnessed a more prepossessing first appearance. She seems to enjoy every requisite for the top of the profession she has chosen; being extremely pretty—capable of much expression—elegant in person—lady-like in motion, and graceful in attitude-tuneful in speaking-voice and song-tender in pathetic scenes, and lively in those of gaiety; in short, giving ample promise of a development of all the qualities requisite for female dramatic excellence. Miss Murray seems to be about twenty years of age, and has, we understand, had only the advantage of a few lessons from Miss Kelly. Her performance elicited much applause; and this was the more flattering, as we observed some good judges of such matters in the house, attracted, as we were, by the reports in circulation respecting the beauty and genius of the fair ladye. Among these we noticed the managers of the two great theatres, M. Laporte and Mr. Bunn. Though inimical to the astronomico-dramatic system, we must add our tribute on this occasion, and hail the rising of a new #. Judicious cultivation and encouragement will. we trust, brighten its course in the theatrical sphere.

VARIETIES.

Concerts.—On Thursday we attended one of the juvenile morning concerts at the Egyptian Hall, and were much pleased with the performances of the four Swiss brothers Koella, and the Coburg Adelphi Eichhorn. Jean Koella in particular played a thema, with variations, admirably on the violin; and the Eichhorns, with equal merit, a pot-pourri. The Swiss songs were very sweet and characteristic.

Death of Mr. John Shaw, the Architect. This gentleman, who has just completed the new church of St. Dunstan, in Fleet Street, and who by the erection of the new hall in Christ's Hospital has embellished the capital with one of its greatest architectural ornaments, died suddenly, about a fortnight since, at Ramsgate. Mr. Shaw was a member of the Royal Society and the Society of Antiquaries.

The French Academy has elected M. Dupin, senior, in the place of M. Cuvier. Dupin, out of five-and-twenty votes, had the majority of twenty.

M. Douville's African Travels. - We have abstained from a review of this work, published at Paris, because, on examining its statements in detail (which we had no opportunity of doing when we had only the reports of the French Geographical Society before us), we were much staggered as to their authenticity, and wished to institute a more deliberate inquiry before we gave our suspicions to the public. But our doubts have been turned into conviction by an article in the Foreign Quarterly Review, which clearly demonstrates that apocryphal; that he never could have visited head.

presentation, either invented or founded on the reports of traders and itinerants upon the coast. All that is new seems to be a complete imposition, and the old to be made up from Bowdich and Portuguese missionary publications.

The French Medals. — We learn from the Paris journals that a number of the valuable medals stolen from the Royal Library have been recovered. They had been thrown into the Seine, near the Pont de la Tournelle. Those found are chiefly of bronze; but it is stated that a clue has been obtained to the robbery; and it is to be hoped, if the villains have not consigned the gold and silver to the melting-pot, that the whole of these rare and precious remains of antiquity may be restored to the Museum.

Earthquake at Jersey.—On Sunday the shock of an earthquake was experienced at Jersey; the violence was considerable, and it was felt all over the island.

A Voyage round the World. - We have received a prospectus offering us a voyage round the world, under a gentleman of the highest respectability, &c. who has just returned from a voyage round the world, principally in his own ship, and who intends starting again from London, upon a similar excursion, in about two months. It assures us that a voyage round the world may be most profitable for those who may be intended hereafter to make some figure in the world, and that the owner of the ship is not going into any but the finest climates of the world.

Earthquake in Cheshire.—The newspapers report an earthquake in Cheshire, which, but for frightening one old woman, seems to have done little mischief. The cheeses remain as round as ever.

Natural Phenomenon .- In the neighbourhood of Rotterdam, it has recently been observed, that the morning dews, instead of being pure and limpid, are of an unctuous consistency. Some persons have connected this with the coincidence of cholera and its atmospheric effect.

West Herts Infirmary.-It always rejoices us to record an act which has for its object the amelioration of the condition of the poor and friendless. In this spirit we notice a lithograph print of the West Herts Infirmary, built by Sir John Sebright, at his sole expense, and endowed with 100% a-year for ever. It is a characteristic structure, in the good old English style of architecture, and worthy the benevolence of a good old English country gentleman!

March of Pen'worths. - A penny paper, le Bon Sens, has been started at Paris by the leaders of the liberal party, and is published every Sunday.

Club-books. - The Livre des Cent et Un, brought out at Paris, inferior though it be in execution, interest, and genius, has, it seems, stirred up an imitation; for we are told that M. Hayn, the bookseller at Berlin, has engaged a score or two of authors to produce a similar work in that capital.

Pompeii. - Professor John has discovered another buried town near Pompeii. Several human skeletons were found in one of the buildings .- Foreign Quarterly Review.

Calmucs.—Our political contemporaries are very fond of calling the Russiaus, contemptuously, Calmucs; perhaps it will please them to learn that the schoolmaster is abroad there. and a Calmuc school has just been established the greatest part of M. Douville's Travels are at Petersburgh, with Mr. F. T. Schmidt at its the places he pretends to describe; and that Diving.—We lately described an adventurer that this nearly the whole is a tissue of error and misre- in a diving-dress who was amusing himself revenue.

with a walk at the bottom of the Thames, mean Battersea Bridge; and we now see that by means of a similar apparatus, a party of men. under the direction of a Mr. Bell, (Mr. Diving Bell he might be called,) are employed in recovering the remains of the Guernsey Lilly transport, which foundered in Yarmouth Roads, at the depth of forty-three feet, thirty-three years ago. The accounts from Yarmouth represent them as being very successful, descending in their caoutchouc dresses and metal headpieces, with tubes communicating to the sur-face, and remaining under water ad libitums, to fish up stores and parts of the decayed vessel.

African Civilisation A Mr. Buchanan, son of the master of the Infant School, Vincent Square, Westminster, has departed for Africa, with a view to the establishment of similar institutions among the natives.

March of Lithography! - A lithographic press has been established at Shiraz in Persia. under the direction of one Mirza Ahmet, who has thus began to print small elementary school-

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Dictionary of the Anglo-Saxon Language, containing the Grammatical Inflexions, Derivation, Meaning of the Anglo-Saxon Words in English and Latin, Substance of Somner, Lye, Manning, with additional Anglo-Saxon Words from Manuscripts, and a copious English Index, &c. &c. by the Rev. J. Bosworth.

Practical Treatise on the Growth of Cucumbers, by John Weeden.

New Gil Blas, or Pedro of Penafor, by the Author of "Spain in 1830."
History of the Revolution in England in 1688, by the Right Hou. Sir James Mackintosh.
The second volume of the Frieuds' Library.
Among new German publications announced by M.
Charles Jugel as a London publisher, we observe with satisfaction No. I. of Maler's Remains of Moorish Architecture in Spain, with 10 Plates folio, and an explanation in French. We may also potice, for the sake of our in French. We may also notice, for the sake of our readers fond of German literature, that M. Jügel's Catalogue is rich in the able productions of that intellectual and cultivated country.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Loudon's Hortus Britannigus, with Additional Supplement, 8vo. 1t. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Broe's St. Herbert's Isle, and other Poems, 8vo. 10s. bds.—Mundell's Industrial Situation of Great Britain, 8vo. 5s. 6d. bds.—Evaughan's Christian Warfare, 8vo. 1ts. 6d. bds.—Reply to the Aspersions on the late Lieut.—Gen. Long, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Lindley and Hutton's Fossil Flora of Great Britain, Vol. 1. Part I. 8vo. 1t. 2s. cloth.—British Prescher, Vol. 1IL 8vo. 7s. 6d. cloth.—Whately on Secondary Punishments, 8vo. 7s. bds.

WTEODOLOGICAL JOHDNAL 1880

AZIDOROZOGIONE TOURNES, 1002.
August.	The	877NO1	nate	Barometer.
Thursday 9	From						ODATY
Friday · · · · 10		53.	••	81.	30.05	to	30-13
Saturday · · 11	• • • • •	54.	••	77.	30.15	• •	3 0·19
Sunday · · · · 12	• • • • •	50.	••	72.	30-17	••	30.03
Monday · 13		45.	••	76.			29-89
Tuesday · 14	• • • • •	47.	••	76.	29-64
Wednesday 15		53.	• •	73.	29-86	••	29-64

Wind S.E. and S.W., the latter prevailing.

Except the 13th, generally clear; a few drops of rain in the morning of the 13th.

CHARLES H. ADAMS. Edmonton.

Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N.
Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Parliamentary Report on the Drama.—We had intended this week to direct attention to this Parliamentary Re-port, for which the theatrical world and the public are much indebted to Mr. Edward Lytton Bulwer, the chairinuch indebted to Mr. Edward Lytton Bulwer, the chairman of the committee: but the subject embraces so many considerations, and would extend to such length, that we are compelled to take it when we have no such paper in land as that which we have this week devoted to the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. There is still something wanting in W. M.

We are much obliged to a Constant Subscriber; but we cannot find room for Heinse's glowing description of the cataract at Schaffhausen.

To N. M. we can truly say that we never felt we had any thing to forgive; and as to forgetting, that would be a doubtful compliment.

W. complains of the deficiency of modern theological

W. complains of the deficiency of modern theological works in the British Museum: we always held the opinion that this national establishment is miserably stinted in ist

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL

BILL A Selection of Pictures by Ancient Masters for he lesses, Spanish, Piemish, Dutch, and English Schools, opendair, from Ten in the Morning until Six in the Evening, and will be closed on Saturday, the Stith instead.

Admission, is.—Casionge, is.
WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Historical and Biagraphical Works, Finied for Longman, Boss, Orme, Brown, Green, and Lon London. Architecton Centr's Historical and Biagraphical Works.

MEMOIRS of the ADMINISTRATION

MEMOIRS of the ADMINISTRATION of the RIGHT HON. HENRY PELHAM, collected from the Family Paperre, and other authentic Documents.
By the Rev. W. COXE, M.A. F.R.S. F.S.A.
Archeleacon of Wilto.
A few Copies are printed on large paper, aniform with the Author's preceding Works, price 10t. 10t. boards.
Memoirs of John, Duke of Marlborough.
18 vals. 8vs. with an Atlas, 5t. 5t.
Memoirs of Horatio Lord Walpole. 3d

Memoirs of the Kings of Spain of the House of Bourbon, from the Accession of Philip the Pifth to the Death of Charles the Third, 1700—1788. 2d edition, in 5 vols. 8vo. 3l.

History of the House of Austria, from the Poundation of the Manarchy, by Rodolph of Hapburgh, to the Death of Leopold II. 1218 to 1720. 5 vols. Sve. price 26. 12s. 6d.

Er. Shares The war's Eletory of England.
History of England, from the earliest Period to be beath of Elizabeth. By Sharon Turner, P.A.S. R.A.S.L. lall vol. 8-n. price 81. 2s. - boards.

Also may be had, by the same Author, separately, History of the Anglo-Saxons, comprising the Estate of England from the earliest Period to the Norman Con-

Reigns of Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth. a. 2 vals. 8vo. 1/. 18s. boss

History of England during the Middle Ages, comprising the Reigns from William the Conqueror to the Accessor of Resry VIII. 84 edition, 5 vols. 8vc. price 24. boards. History of the Reign of Henry the Eighth.

Sacred History of the World, from the Crea bea to the Deluge, attempted to be philosophically considered, in 1 bries of Letters to a Bon. By Sharon Turner, F.S.A. 8vo. 2d edition, 14s. beauts.

Life and Death of Lord Edward Fitzgerald.
7. Moore, Esq. 2 vels. post 8vo. with a Portrait, 8d edition, History of the Rise of the Mahomedan Power ndis, till the Year 1612. Translated from the Persian of Ma-nd Kasim Pershua. By John Briggs, Lieut. Col. in the Ma-at Maria 4 vols. 8 vo. 44. 44.

un Army. 4 vois. Sec. 41. 41.

History of Thucydides, translated into Entit, with Aunorations, &c. 2 vois. Sec. with Maps, &c. 20. ds. By the Rev. S. T. Bloomfield, D.D. Vicar of Bisbrooks, Author of Recensic Synoptics Annotationis Secres," and Bidtor of Dacydides in the Original.

"A version as literal and as perspicuous as exudition and industry combined can render it."—Bioestic Review.

Annual Biography and Obituary for 1832, being the 16th volume. Price 18t. beards.

• • Also Vols. I. to XV. 15t. each.

Mrs. Child's Frugal Housewife.

Price 2s. beards, or 2s. 6d. bound, with an Allowance to the Nobility and Gentry who are desirous of distributing the Book among their poor Neighbours,

THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated

THE PRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated to those who are not sahamed of Economy.

Author of "The Mother's Book," "Girl's Own Book," &co. "Economy is the poor man's revenue—extravagance the rioh man's rin."

The she dittion, newly arranged by the Author, to which is now added, Hints to Persons of moderate Portune, &c. This little werk is reprinted and published at the suggestion of a bighly distinguished Member of the Society for the Diffusion of Urful Knowledge.

Landam: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Halles, Fucadily; Bowdery and Kerby, Orford Street; R. Griffin and Ca Gisagow; and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

In 8vo. price 13s. hoards, the $d edition of SCHVLI TRAGEDIE SEI*TEM.

Com Fragmentis et Indicibus. Recensuit suasque Notules adjecti uss adjecit

JACOBUS SCHOLEFIELD, M.A.
Coll. S.S. Trin. nuper Socius et Graccarum Literarum
Professor Regius.
Cambridge: Frinted for J. and J. J. Deighton; and J., G., and F. Rivington, London.

Of whom may be had. Euripidis Traggedise priores quatuor. Edidit Ricardus Porson, A.M. Recensult J. Scholefield. Editio secunda, Sec. 146.

Miscellaneous Works, Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Long GREEK TESTAMENT, with English Notes, Critical, Philological, and Esceptical.

Notes, Critical, Philological, and Esceptical.

By the Rev. S. T. BLOOMFIELD, D.D. F.S.A. Vicar of Blabrooke, Rulland, &c.

3 closely printed vols. 8vo. 36s. boards.

Adapted for Academical Students, Candidates for Holy C.

and Theological Readers generally.

Selections from the Edinburgh Review, com-Selections from the Edinburgh Review, Conse-prising the best Articles in that Journal, from its commonements to the Present Time; with a Preliminary Dissertation, and Notes. Edited by Maurice Cross. Esq. Secretary of the Befrast Historic Society, 4 vols. 870. Nearly ready. General Ludex to the Edinburgh Review, m Voh. XXI. to L. In the press.

Index to Vols. I. to XX. 8vo. 15s. boards.

Traditions of Lancashire, by J. Roby, Esq. M.R.S.L. With highly finished Plates by Finden, and Wood-cut by Williams, &c. demy 8vc. (8d edit.) 2f. 2s. in cloth; royal 8vc. its edition with India Proofs, 4f. 4s.; and with India Proofs and Etching, 4f. 1s. demy 8vc. 4f. 8s. in cloth; royal 8vc. with India Proofs, 2s. 3s.; and with India Proofs and Etchings, 3f. 4s. 4s.

Plain Instructions to Executors and Administrators, shewing the Duties incident to the due Performance of their Trusts, &c. 8vo. 3d edit. enlarged, 3s. boards.

Works of William Paley, D.D. with Additional Sermons, &c. and a Life of the Author, by the Rev.
B. Faley, M.A. New edit. 6 vols. 2d. 14s. boards.

By the same Author. Sermons on Several Subjects, 8th edition

Treatise on the Valuation of Property for the Poor's Rate, by J. S. Bayldon, 7s. 6d. board

By the same Author Art of Valuing Rents and Tillages, &c. 4th

Lacon, or Many Things in Few Words, by Rev. C. C. Colton. S vols Svo. 14s. boards. Principles of Christian Philosophy, by John Burns, M.D. 4th edit, 7s, boards. Sunday Library; a Selection of Sermons from Eminent Divines of the Church of England, chiefly within the last Half Century. With Notes, &c. by the Rev. T. F. Dibding, D.D. 6 vols. anali 8 vol. 6 Portrait, 30c. cloth.

din, D.D. 6 vois small 8vo. 6 Portraits, 30s. cloth.
Instructions to Young Sportamen in all that relates to Guns and Shooting, by Lieut.-Col. P. Hawker. 6th edition, 8vo. with an Abridgment of the New Game-Laws, and 80 Plates and Woodcust, 18s. in cloth.
"Col. Hawker is one of the best shots in England, and his Instructions to Sportsmen' the very best book we have on the subject."—Blackwood's Bagasine.
Treatise on the Steam-Engine, Historical,
Paragical, and Description by J. Farres Haginese. 4th, with Practical, and Descriptive, by J. Farey, 25 Plates by Lowry, 51. 5s. boards.

Vol. II. in the press.

Ship-Master's Assistant and Owner's Maonip-Master's Assistant and Owner's Manual, containing general Information necessary for Merchants, Masters of Ships, &c. bp. D. Steel. The 50th edition, newly arranged and enlarged, and corrected to August 1838, by J. Silkeman, Custom-House Agent. The Mathematical Part by Dr. Keily, Author of "The Universal Cambist," &c. 1 thick vol. Medical Guide, for the Use of the Clergy, Heeds of Families, and Seminaries, &c. by R. Resce, M.D. 18th edit. enlarged, 12r. boards.

Literary Recollections, by the Rev, R. Warner, F.A.S. 3 vols. 3vo. 36t. boards.

Elements of Agricultural Chemistry, by Sir Humphry Davy, Bart. 8vo. 4th edit. 15a boards.
Substance of Several Courses of Lectures on Music, by W. Crotch, Mus. Doc. Prof. Mus. Oxon. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Price Six Shillings, No. XIX. of THE FOREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Art. I. Goethe's Works—II. Geology and Climatology of Asia.
—III. Free Trade—IV. The Byzandine Historians.—V. American Poetry—VI. Thierry's History of the Gaula—VII. The German Ultra-Liberal Press—VIII. Douville's Travels in Central Africa—IX. Thorvaisden the Sculptor—X. American Currency and Banking—XI. to XV. Critical Sketches of German and French Books—Miscellaneous Literary Intelligence from France, Germany, Islay, Poiana, Russia, and of Works on Oriental Literature—Sir Walter Scott's Farewell to his Reeders, and M. de Lamartine's Reply—List of the principal New Works published on the Continent from May to July Inclusive.
Published by Treuttel and Wurts, and Richter, 30, Soho Square; and Sizak, Young, and Young, 8, Tavistock Street; Treuttel and Wurts, Paris and Rirasburg; and sold by R. Cadeil and T. Clark, Edisburgh; J. Cumming, and Hodges and Smith, Dablin.

Of whom may be had,

The preceding Numbers of this interesting and popular Journal,

Nos. I. to X. price 7s. 6d. each; Nos. XI. to XVIII. 6s. each.

No. XX. will be published in October.

Williams on Cholera. 2d edition, revised and enlarged,

A PLAIN and BRIEF SKETUH of CHOLERA, with a Simple and Economical Mode 5 its Treatment, submitted with confidence, from repeated succe in its Application.

By W. H. WILLIAMS, M.D. F.L.S.
Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and President of the Ipwish Central Board of Health.

Frice 1s. 6d.

Published by Shalders, Ipwich; sold by Simplia and Marshal Stationers' Coart, London; and all Hocksellers. PLAIN and BRIEF SKETCH of rudon's Publications on Agriculture, Gardening, Botany, &c. N ENCYCLOPÆDIA of AGRICUL-Loudon's Publications on Agriculture, Gardening, Botany, &c.

An ENCYCLOPEDIA of AGRICULA

TURE, comprising the Theory and Practice of the Valuation, Transfer, Laying out, Improvement, and Management of Landed Property; and the Cultivation and Economy of the Animal and Vegetable Productions of Agriculture, including the latest Imprevement; a general History of Agriculture in all Muggestions for its Fatture Progress in the British Isles. With upwards of Eleven Hundred Engravings on Wood. New edities, in I large vol. 8vo. price $L. 10s. boards.

Ne pains have been spared on the part of either the Author or the Publishers, to render this second edition of the Encyclopedia of Agriculture as perfect as possible. The author undertook a journey into France and Germany on purpose to procure information respecting the state of Agriculture on the continent; had the Publishers have gone to the expense of nearly 500 new Engravings, nearly half of which are new subjects. The co-operation of upwards of forty individuals (a list of whom is appended) has also been procured, or voluntarity given i and their suggestions or additions have the Author thinks himself warranted in asserting that the work is now as perfect as its nature and the present state of agricultural science and practice will admit.

An Encyclopædia of Gardening, comprising the Theory and Practice of Horticulture, Profession for out of the State of the Company of the State of the State of State of State of the State of States of St Species are enumerated; preceded by an introduction to the Lin-mean System.

Part 11.—The Jussieusean Arrangement of nearly Four Thou-sand Genera; with an introduction to the Natural System, and a Description of each Urder.

The Linnean Arrangement is Supplement are entirely the Morean Arrangement in Natural Arrangement is found-town for the George Don't with additionand Alterations; and Dr. Greville assisted in arranging the Cryptogamia. The Appendix to this Work may also be had separately, price 2s. 6d. An Energelopmedia of Plants commerciating the Appendix to this Work may also be had separately, price 2s. 6d.

An Encyclopsedia of Plants, comprising the Description, Specific Character, Culture, History, Application in the Arts, and every other destrable Particular, respecting all the Plants Indigenous, Cultivated in, or Introduced to Births and State nearly on Thousand Engineering the Particular, the State of State
The Specific Characters, &c. by John Lindley, F.R.S. L.S. and (S. &c.; the Drawings by J. D. C.
Sowerby, F.L.S.; and the Engravings by R. Branston.
The Gendenous's Morgoring and Register of

Sowerby, F.L.S.; and the Engravings by R. Branston.

The Gardener's Magazine, and Register of Rural and Domestic Improvement. In 8vo. Nos. I. to XXXIX. (published every Two Months, alternately with the Magazine of Natural History, price 8t. 6d.

Yols. I. to VII. may be had in boards, price 6t. 2s. 6d.

The Magazine of Natural History, and Journal of Zoology, Botany, Mineratogy, Geology, and Meteorology. In 8vo. Nos. 1. to XXVIII. (published every Two Months, alternately with the Gardener's Magazine), price 3t. 6d.

Vols. I. to IV. may be had in boards, price 3t. 18s.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Natural History.
In Sec. heards, with 18 coloured Plates and 38 Cuts, price 18s. In see, heards, with M coloured Plates and 88 Cuts, price 18.

THE MICROSCOPIC CABINET of SELECT ANIMATED OBLECTS, with a Description of the new Jewel and Doublet Microscope, Test Objects, &c.

By ANDREW PRITCHARD.

With Memoirs on Microscopic Phenomena, the Achremantic, and other Microscopes, &c.

This is the only read the price of the control of t

Is a thick volume, Sc. cloth,

KEY to BOTH HOUSES of PARLIALords and Commons of Great Britain and Ireland; the Regulations and Standing Orders of both Houses, respecting Privileges, Private Bills, Pees, Pines, and Committee; Lists of the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, and of the Scottish and Irish Nobility who do not ait in the House of Peers. With every other species of information respecting the Constitution, History,

These of Parliament.

other species of information supported and Usages of Parliament.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In 2 vols. 4to. with 81 Views, Plans of Towns, Harbours, &c.

BRITISH DOMINIONS in NORTH AMERICA: or, a Topographical and Statistical Description of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, New Youndland, Prince Edward Island, and Cape Breton; with Condeferations on Land Granting and Emigration, Statistical Tables, &c.

at Tables, etc. By J. BOUCHETTE, Esq. Surveyor-General of Lower Canada, Lieut.-Colonel C.M. &c.

Also, by the same Author, in 4to. 32s. boards,
Topographical Dictionary of Lower Canada.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In 18mo. price 4s. boards, a new edition of

ELE'S SELECT OFFICES of PRI VATE DEVOTION—

VII. 1. Office of Daily Devotion, with a Supplement.

II. Office of Fenitence and Humiliation.

IV. Office of reit hely Communion.

With large Collections out of the Holy Scriptures.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, Booksellers to the Society for Fromoting Christian Knowledge, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piace, Pail Mail.

 This Work has been recently added to the Society's Catalogue.

Valuable Standard Works,
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman,

Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Oreen, and Longman, London.

NEW GENERAL ATLAS of FIFTYTHREE MAPS, with the Divisions and Boundaries carefully coloured; constructed entirely from New Drawings, and engraved by SIDNE' HALL. In Seventeen Parts, any of which may be had separately, 10s. 6d. each.

Alphahetical Index of all the Names contained

Alphabetical Index of all the Names contained in the above Atlas, with References to the Number of the Maps, and the Latitude and Longitude in which the Places are to be found. Royal 8vo. 21s. in cloth.

The Proprietors, being desirous of rendering the Atlas the most perfect of its kind extant, supply this volume at the cost price.

System of Universal Geography. By M. Maite-Brun, Editor of the "Annales des Voyages." 9 vols. 8vo. Parts 1. to XVII. are published, 7s. 6d. each.

"Superior to any thing of its class which has ever appeared." Literary Gazette.

The department of Great Britain has been entirely re-written for the English edition, on a scale commensurate with the importance which the Bnglish reader attaches to this portion of geography. The Index is constituted as to be a complete Table of Reference to the whole work, while it forms an extensive and useful Gazetteer:

Edinburgh Gazetteer; or, Compendious Geo-

Edinburgh Gazetteer; or, Compendious Geographical Dictionary, forming a complete Body of Geography, Physical, Political, Statistical, and Commercial. Abridged from the larger work. 2d edition, in I large vol. 8vo. with an Extract from the Population Returns of 1831, and Maps, 18s. boards.

Edinburgh Gazetteer; or, Geographical Dictionary. 6 vols. 8vo. 5l. 5s. boards.
As an Accompaniment to the above Gazetteers

New General Atlas, constructed by A. Arrowsmith, Hydrographer to the King, from the latest Authorities. In 54 Maps, including the recent Discoveries. Royal 4to. 86s. half-boand; coloured, 81. 12s. 64.

New Series of Museum Criticum. Price 5s.

THE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM. No. III. Contents: Imaginary Conversation—Solon and Psistratus—On the Historical References and Allusions in Horace, from the German of Buttman—On Xenophon's Hellenica, from the German of Buttman—On Xenophon's Hellenica, from the German of Niebuhr—Xenophon, Niebuhr, and Delbruck—On certain Passages: in the Fourth and Fifth Books of the Architecture of Vitravius—On a Passage in Xenophon's Hellenica, 1.6—The Comic Poet Antiphanes—On the Names of the Antehellenic Inhabitants of Greece—De Pausania Nitlo August Bleochthit Prolusio Academica—On certain Fragments quoted by Herodian, the Grammarian account Observations. Ilerodian, the Grands Blish Diminutives—Miscellaneous Core.
Printed for Deightons, Cambridge; Ri and Parker, Oxford.

Rivingtons, London

Of whom may be had,

The First and Second Numbers, price 5s.
each, or the First Volume, complete, price 15s. boards.

Printed at the Chiswick Press, in deodecimo, price 4s. 6d. bound,

THE MOTHER'S BOOK.

By Mrs. CHILD,
Author of the "Frugal Honewide," "The Girl's Own Book," Ac.

Testimonies in favour of this excellent book.

"We are so much in love with this modest, plain, practical, and judiclous publication, that we hope to see it ere long in the hands of every mother who would rear her child in the way it should go."—Scotman.

"We conscientiously and warmly recommend the Mother's Book' to all who have the superintendence of young children."— Athenayme.

Book' to all who have the superintendence or young chingren.—
Many more testimonials, equally favourable, might be quoted in commendation of this most valuable work. The Publishers trust the above will be sufficient to induce every mother who really loves her offspring to purchase the work and profit by its London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, No. 73, Chenpide; N. Halles, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kurby, Oxford Street; and sold by all Booksellers in the Kingdom.

FACTS and DOCUMENTS illustrative of T the History, Doctrine, and Rites of the Ancient Albigenses and Waldenses.

By the Rev. S. R. MAITLAND.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; Strong, Bristol and Excter; Jew, Uloncester; and Tims, Dublin.

In 1 vol. 8vo. in extra cloth boards, price Two Guineas,

A TREATISE on the PREPARATION of PRINTING INK, both BLACK and COLOURED.
By WILLIAM SAVAGE.
Author of "Practical Hints on Decorative Printing."
Printed for the Author; and sold by Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman,
Only 290 Copies printed.
"Mr. Savage's long experience and known talent will be sufficient guarantee that the recipes he now offers are extremely valuable; and we can confidently say that his work is well worth even the high price charged (Two Guineas), to any printer desirous of making the finest ink, black or coloured. It will be invaluable to persons abroad, or those who reside at a distance from London, as they may, through his instruction, enter into competition with the ornamental printers of the metropolis.'— Atherseum, August 4.

8, New Burlington Street.
The following popular New Works are just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley:—

EGENDS of the RHINE and the LOW COUNTRIES.
By T. C. GRATTAN, Esq. 8 vols.

The Third Volume of the English Translation of Memoirs of Madame Junot, including Anecdes of Let and Lady Cholmondeley, the Duchess of Gordon, Lord and Lady Conyngham, Lord Whitworth, the Duchess of Dorset, Lord Yarmouth, &c.

The Heidenmauer; or, the Benedictines. By J. F. Cooper, Esq. Author of the "Pilot," &c. 3 vols.

Excursions in India. By Captain Skinner, 31st Regiment. 2 vols. with Plates. Comprising a Vorage of 1200 Miles up the Ganges, Account of the Cities of Delhi, Meerut, Aliahabad, Cawnpore, Benares, and Journeyings amid the Alianaban, Campute, Actions, 5 and malaya, &c.

"Full of information, and abounding with living pictures of living things."—Athenaum.

V.
New and cheaper edition, in 2 vols. post 8vo. price 18s.
The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon.

The Pastor's Fire-side. By Miss Jane Porter. To be completed in 2 vols. small 8vo. with a new introduction, price 6s. each vol. forming the 18th vol. of the Standard Novels.

Also, just ready, in 3 vols. Self-Guidance. A Novel.

Lindley's Outline of Horticulture.
Price 2s.

OUTLINE of the FIRST PRINCIPLES of HORTICULTURE.

By JOHN LINDLEY, F.R.S.
Assistant-Secretary to the London Horticultural Society, &c.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

By the same Author,
Outline of the First Principles of Botany, 3s. Introduction to the Natural System of Bo-

Synopsis of the British Flora, 10s. 6d. Guide to the Orchard and Kitchen Garden; or, an Account of Fruit and Vegetables cultivated in Britain, &c. By G. Lindley, C.M.H.S. Edited by J. Lindley. 16s.

New Volume. In 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards, the Second Volume of ERMONS.

By the Rev. PLUMPTON WILSON, LL.B.
Rector of lichester.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mail.

Of whom may be had,
The Second Edition of the former Volume,

In 8vo. price 8s. 6d. boards, with a Map, the High Alps; and of his Labours among the French Protestants of Dauphine, a Remnant of the Primitive Christians of Gaul. MEMOIR of FELIX NEFF, Pastor of

Gaul.

By WILLIAM STEPHEN GILLY, M.A.
Prebendary of Durham, and Vicar of Norham.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, I'all Mall.

Price 3s. 6d. OLEIKHA; a Dramatic Tale from Holy Writ.
Printed for James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

Second edition, THE MESSIAH. A
By R. MONTGOMERY.
J. Turrill, 250, Regent Street. A Poem.

In 8vo. 16s. boards,

II STORY of CHARLEMAGNE, with a

Sketch of the State and History of France from the Fall of the Roman Empire to the Rise of the Carlovingian Dynasty.

By G. P. R. JAMES, Eq.

"Filled to overflowing with erudition. It displays talent of a very high order, and sapplies an important desideratum in English literature. We congratulate our author, with great truth, as we do it with great pleasure, on the talent with which he has performed his task."—Atheracum.

"This life is but the beginning of a great undertaking; and we cannot give Mr. Jumes higher praise than when we say we do not wish more than that the work should continue as it has commenced."—Literary Gastife.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

COMPARATIVE VIEW of the INDUS-TRIAL SITUATION of GREAT BRITAIN, from the Year 1755 to the present Time; with an Examination of the Causes of her Distress. By ALEXANDER MUNDELL, Eq. London: Longman and Co.; and J. Ridgway.

By the same Author.

The Operation of the Corn-Laws, with a emedy for their Attendant Evils. 21.64.

In 12mo. price 7s. 6d. boards, FAMILIAR INTRODUCTION to the

A FAMILIAR INTRODUCTION to the CHRISTIAN RELIGION, in a Beries of Letters from a Father to his Sons.

By A. SENIOR.

"We must conclude with professing it to be our judgment, that the author has furnished the world with a noble approximation to what is greatly needed, namely, an introductory manual, which shall make our sons and daughters acquainted with the essential elements of their religion, without presenting it to their minds as a severe and oppressive task. The volume is broken up into the form of letters of a very manageable length, which may invite even a somewhat indolent reader to an occasional prosecution of the subject, and, almost imperceptibly, create an interest in it more lively and permanent, than could be accomplished by a work of more austere didactic formality." British Critic, Jan. 1832.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall.

The Girl's Own Book.

4th edition, with 110 Cuts, price only 4s. 6d. boards, or 5s. 6d. bound, gilt edges, printed at the Chiswick press,

THE GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

HE GIRLI'S OWN BOOK
By Mrs. CHILD,
Author of the "Mother's Book."
The 4th edition.
London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Chespside; N. Halles, Picoadilly; and Bowdery and Kerby, Oxford Street.

Where may be had, price 2s. 6d. Lady Sandford's Stories from Roman His-

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days will be published,

TEEL'S SHIPMASTER'S ASSISTANT

and OWNER'S MANUAL, containing general Information necessary for Owners and Masters of Ships, Ship-brokers, Merchants, Pilots, and all Fersons connected with the Merchant Service: together with the Laws of the Customs, Duties, Navigation Act, Registry of Ships, Smuggling Act, British Fisheries, Insurance, &c. &c. &c. The 20th edition, newly arranged and enlarged, and corrected down to August 1823, including the Regulations of the New Customs Bill. By J. STIKEMAN, Custom-House Agent. The Mathemstical Part by Dr. KELLY, Author of the "Universal Cambist," and Mathematical Examiner to the Trinity House.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

ner to the Trinity House.
London: Longman, Hees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.
The interests connected with the business of shipping are so important and so diversified, whether considered with reference to the persons concerned with individual characters, as Ship-Owners, Masters, or Merchants, or with regard to the connexion which necessarily exists between them, that it has been deemed proper to put the present edition into an entirely new and systematic arrangement.
Following the original intention of compiling "An Assistant to the Shipmaster," all that relates to him, whether in the capacity of Master only, or as Master and Part-Owners, as well as what relates to the Crew; the Regulations of Forts and Harbours of Rogland; Pilots and the Rates of Pilotage, throughout England and Scotland (a thing never before done of Passengers, & Cacle). Commathe Fire Part-which embraces the various subjects in as many Chapters, in the following order:—
Chap. 1. Owners—2. Mastern—3. Seamen—4. Ports and Harbours; general Laws, particular Ports, the Docks—5. Pilots and Pilotage—6. Quarantine—7. Passengers—8. Allens—9. Conveyance of Ship Letters—10. Colours and Salutes; Ships Account.
The Second Part is of a more general nature, embracing what is equally important to the Merchant and the Shipmaster, and contains the Alterations made in the Laws down to the present time. The subjects are also in Chapters, viz.
Chap. 1. Registry of Ships—3. Navigation Laws—3. Smuggling Acts—4. Customs; Management—6. Customs; Duties—Reciprocity, Treaties—7. Castoms: Bounties and Allowances—9. British Possessions Abroad—10. Trade to the Site of Man.—11. Corn Laws—12. Coal Trade—16. The Part Part Part Parts—15. Consular Fee.

Chap. 1. Freight, Charter Party, and Demurrage—2. Insurance.

sular Fees.

The Third Part contains—
Chap. 1. Freight, Charter Party, and Demurrage—S. Insurance.

Ance. Part the Fourth.

Chap. 1. Bills of Exchange and Stamp Dutles—2. Factors and Factorage—3. Weights and Measures and Mooles of the different Trading Places in the World, reduced to the English Standard—4. Admiraity—5. Privateers and Porceign Enlistment—6. Mediterranean Passes—7. Transports—8. Slave Trade—9. South Sea Dutles; Dutles payable to the Russian Company; Scavage, and other Dues payable to the City of London.

An Appendix contains the American Maritime Lawa, and a Decree for Regulating the Trade of the Brazils.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia. In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in clot On Sept. 1, forming Vol. 84 of the above TREATISE on CHEMISTRY, in 1 vol. Oct. i, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. IV.

Nov. I, History of England, by the late Sir J. Mackintosh, Vol. III.

olished Aug. 1, Western World, Vol. II. United States concluded.

London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Walerloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulleon Street, Oxford Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchauge: E. Marllorongh, Aw Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill: A. Black, Rdinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Glazeow: and J. Cumming, Dublim.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Square, London. J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 814.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

THE PASHA OF EGYPT, &c. &c. &c.

AT the last annual meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, our report noticed the admirable address delivered by Sir Alexander Johnston. who as chairman of the committee of correpondence, developed a series of transactions which reflect the highest honour upon this branch of the Society, and shewed of what importance the Institution, conducted with so much judgment and diligence, is to the cultivation not merely of literary and scientific intercourse with the East, but of relations which may truly be styled national. Sir Alexander having been requested to commit the substance of his statements to writing, has complied; and a printed copy, for the Appendix of the Society's Transactions, being now before us, we have great satisfaction in availing ourselves of it to communicate, through the means of our more popular vehicle, a knowledge of the interesting matters of which it treats to the public at large.

In doing this, we pass over the view taken of various points of much consequence connected with our Indian empire, and proceed at once to a remarkable account of the Pasha of Egypt, who had just acknowledged the compliment of being elected an honorary member of the R.A.S., and whose recent victorious career affords a striking proof of the effects anticipated from his enlarged and liberal policy.

" The Pasha of Egypt (says Sir Alexander) one of our honorary members, a chief of a clear and vigorous mind, observing the advantage European states have derived from a similar policy, has publicly encouraged the introduction into Egypt of all those arts and sciences which are calculated to improve the understandings of the people, to mitigate the effects of their religious feelings, and to secure the stability of the local government. He has assimilated his army and his navy to those of Europe, and subjected them to European regulations and to European discipline: he has formed corps of artillery and engineers upon European principles: he has attached regular bands of military music to each of his regiments, with European instructors, who teach the Arab musicians, according to the European notes of music, to play upon European instruments the popular marches and airs of England, France, and Germany: a short distance from Cairo he has established a permanent military hospital, and placed it under European surgeons and the same rules as prevail in the best-regulated hospitals in Europe; and he has formed a school of medicine and anatomy, in which not only botany, mineralogy, and chemistry, are taught, but human bodies are publicly dissected by students who profess the Mahomedan religion. and who are publicly rewarded in the heart of a great Mahomedan population according to the skill and the knowledge which they display in their different dissections. At Alexandria he has established a naval school, in which the Mahomedan students are instructed in the several branches of geometry, trigonometry, as soon as he received intelligence of the battle mechanics, and astronomy, connected with naval architecture and the science of navigation, and a dock-yard under the control and superintendence of a European naval architect distinguished for his talents and his skill, in which, besides frigates and other vessels of smaller dimensions, four ships of the line, three carrying 110 guns upon two decks, and one of 130 guns, have been recently built: he has opened the old port, which was formerly shut against them, to all Christian vessels. He has encouraged the formation of regular insurance offices, and authorised Christian merchants to acquire a property in lands, houses, and gardens. He has employed an English civil engineer of great eminence,* on a very liberal salary, to improve all the canals in the country and the course of the Nile: he is about to construct carriage-roads from Alexandria to Cairo, and from Alexandria to Rosetta and Damietta; and M. Abro, the cousin of his minister, is about to establish upon them public stage-coaches, built on a model of one sent to him by a coachmaker from this country: he has introduced steam-boats, which navigate upon the Nile, and steam-engines, which are used for cleansing and deepening the bed of that river, and for various other public works: he has patronised the employment by Mr. Briggs of two Englishmen, taken for the purpose from this country, in boring for water in different parts of the desert; and he has discovered, through their operations, some very fine water in the desert between Cairo and Suez: he has encouraged the growth of cotton, indigo, and opium; and the former of these productions is now a great article of trade between Egypt and England, France, and Germany. He has established schools in the country, for the instruction of all orders of his people in reading, writing, and arithmetic: he has sent. at great expense to himself, young men both of the higher and lower ranks of society to England and France, for the purpose of acquiring useful knowledge; the former in those branches of science and literature which are connected with their service in the army, the navy, and the higher departments of government; the latter in those mechanical arts which are more immediately connected with their employment as artisans and manufacturers. He has constituted a public assembly at Cairo, consisting of a considerable number of well-informed persons, who hold regular sittings for forty days in each year, and publicly discuss for his in-formation the interests and wants of his different provinces. He patronises the publication of a weekly newspaper in Arabic and Turkish, for the instruction of his people: and, finally, he protects all Christian merchants who are settled in his country, not only in time of peace, but also in time of war; and afforded the European merchants who were settled at Alexandria and at Cairo a memorable instance of his determination to adhere under all circumstances to this policy, by informing them, of Navarino, that their persons and their property should continue as secure as if no such event had occurred. I have dwelt at some length upon this subject, because I have felt it to be my duty, in consequence of the information which I have received as chairman of the committee of correspondence, to give publicity in this country to those measures by which one of the most distinguished of our honorary members has restored to Egypt, in their highest state of perfection, all the arts and sciences of Europe—has emulated, as a patron of know-ledge, the conduct of the most enlightened of the caliphs of Bagdad-and has afforded, as a Mahomedan, a bright example for their imitation to all the Mahomedan sovereigns in Europe, Africa, and Asia.'

. Mr. Wallace, we believe .- Ed. L. G.

Since this was pronounced, we have the extraordinary results of the Pasha's system de-monstrated to the world by the capture of Acre, the possession of Syria, and the esta-blishment, if it please him, of his throne at Damascus or Bagdad. But we have still more pleasing proof of the benefits which ensue from intellectual culture, in his treatment of the Pasha who so firmly opposed him, though, in consequence of his wisdom and improvements in discipline, with unequal arms. Instead of the usual Mussulman mandate to decapitate him and butcher his race, the Pasha of Egypt demonstrated that humanity grows with the growth of intelligence, for he received his prisoner kindly, and assigned him a palace and a sum amounting to 8000l. a-year to live upon.

Another example of the great change which has taken place in Mohamedan feelings and hahits, is to be found in the curious fact, that the Pasha issued bulletins, in Italian and French, of the taking of Acre, and of his reception of its ruler; copies of which his agent transmitted to the chairman of the committee alluded to, who has presented them to the Society, in whose archives these documents now are. are also well assured that one of the first fruits of the Pasha's conquest will be to employ Europeans in the examination of the geological structure of Syria, and to ascertain where metals, and coals, and other minerals, are to be obtained. A single discovery of coal to any extent would enable him to alter the whole face and resources of the country.

It is surely gratifying thus to mark the progress of knowledge, where knowledge leads along civilisation in her hand; where improvement, humanity, enlightened policy, and the happiness of mankind, follow in the train. We are not enthusiasts, to employ terms of exaggerated hyperbole upon the subject; but, comparatively speaking, the prodigious alteration indicated and already operating to such an extent where the religion of Mahomet has so long prevailed in darkness and barbarity,* is an omen to be hailed with grateful emotion by every benevolent and well-regulated mind. The sun has broken through the clouds, and we may soon fairly expect a wide blue sky.

[•] Similar change is to be witnessed at Constantinop where the Sultan himself sets the example of a more en-lightened policy, — adopting European improvements in every part of his government, and casting away the worst of Mussulman despotism and barbarity, to make room for extensive civilisation.

Before concluding, we will quote Sir A. Johnston's sentiments upon two other circumstances intimately connected with the amelioration of immense multitudes of the human race-the government of Ceylon by Sir R. W. Horton, and the visit to England of Rammohun

Roy. Of these he says:
"Sir Wilmot Horton, a member of our Society, has been recently appointed by his ma-jesty to the office of governor of the island of Ceylon. The lectures which that gentleman has delivered at the London Mechanics' Institution, upon a subject of great importance to the interests and welfare of the different orders of society, and the very liberal manner in which he has discussed in print the merits of the opinions which he entertains upon the subject, shew the activity with which he applies himself to the diffusion of useful knowledge amongst all classes of his countrymen, and the manly view which he takes of the use and the influence of the press as an instrument for circulating throughout a country such ideas as may tend to the moral and political improvement of the people. Rajah Rammohun Roy, also a member of our Society, a Brahmin of ancient family, of high rank, of distinguished talents, and of great influence amongst his countrymen, acting upon the principles of a true patriot, has for many years written and published several very able works, the uniform object of which is, to enlighten the understanding of his countrymen, and so to raise the standard of moral and political feeling among them, as to enable the Hindoos of India once more to assume, by their proficiency in arts, science, and litera-ture, the high station which they held in former ages amongst the most enlightened nations in the world. Urged by the duty which he owes to his country, and unmindful of the dangers which he had to encounter from a sea voyage and a change of climate, he has now come to England, in order that he may, after having examined on the spot the practical effects of all our moral and political institutions, gradually introduce amongst his countrymen such of them as he may think applicable to their situation, and conducive to their prosperity and happiness. No event connected with the in-terests of India can be more important than the arrival in England of so remarkable a man at a moment when the British parliament is about to legislate for the whole of the British empire in India, and must be anxious to learn the opinion upon the subject of so great a scholar and so enlightened a philosopher."

In the midst of many evils and troubles elsewhere, it is a consolation even to fancy the future benefits which are likely to result from these noble efforts.

Mortality of the Metropolis. A Statistical View of the Number of Persons reported to have died of each [of?] or more than 100 kinds of Disease, and Casualties within the Bills of Mortality, in each of 204 Years, 1629—1831, 4c. 4c. 4c. By J. Marshall, Esq. 4to. pp. 82. Tables, &c. London, 1832, Treuttel, Würtz, and Richter; Cadell, Edinburgh; Cumming, Dublin.

PARISH-REGISTERS had their origin in England in 1538. The commencement of the returns of weekly bills of mortality in London is of the date of December 1592. They are furnished by the worshipful company of Parish-Clerks, which was first incorporated in 1233, under the title of the Fraternity of Saint Nicholas, the pa- | same day, some the same hour; but those that tron of scholars, and particularly of school-boys (hence the election, &c. of the boy-bishop); but among the drolleries of our elder writers, often confounded with St. Nicholas as a sobriquet for Old Nick, and thus the worshipful fraternity of parish-clerks made hail-fellows with robbers and thieves, whose patron the latter saint was slyly presumed to be. For a while the Bills only gave the births, marriages, and deaths; but in 1629 a statement of the diseases and casualties was added, as continued to the present day, and annually published by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, under the authority of his Majesty, though furnished by two old women in each parish, known by the name of Searchers, who, like carrion-crows, attend to all matters of fatal result within the sphere of their ken. Of this annual publication, contained in the Annual Register, we remember an amusing anecdote some thirty or forty years ago. A casualty appeared...

"Killed by a cow, 1;"

and next year (for, to save trouble, the printers keep the list standing), the return was graced by the following entry:

" Killed by a cow, 0;"

and but for the laugh raised, we have no doubt but that "killed by a cow" would have formed one of the yearly items to the present time.

But, leaving these matters, we have to express literally our wonder at the prodigious mass of statistical information which Mr. Marshall has collected and arranged in this volume. No idea can be formed of it without actual inspection; and the more it is examined, the more must surprise at its extent be increased. Upon the history of diseases, upon the ratio of mortality, upon population, upon the poors' rates, upon the administration of justice, upon property and revenue, upon trade and commerce, and upon many subjects connected with these topics, both at home and abroad, there are data of the most curious and valuable kind.

In tracing these, it is remarkable to notice how some diseases have remained almost stationary for two hundred years; how others have become extinct; and how new maladies have sprung up to do the work of death. Perhaps the mere change of names may partly account for these phenomena; but still the tables are very interesting. Of these tables it is impossible for us (as we have confessed) to afford any notion, for they defy abridgment or extract. We must therefore be content with having told what they are, and conclude by quoting a striking description of the plague of 1345-62, as translated from Cantacuzenus, the Greek historian, by Joshua Barnes, in the seventeenth century

"This plague, taking its rise from the Scy. thians or Hyperboreans, overran almost all the sea-coasts of the habitable world, and destroyed an incredible number of people. For it did not only pass through Pontus, and Thrace, and Macedonia, but also through Hellas, and Italy, and all the isles; and Egypt, and Libya, and Indea [Ethiopia], and Syria, and in a manner all the world round about. But it was such an unconquerable evil, that neither any diet nor strength of body could resist it; for it pulled down all bodies alike, as well the strong as the weak, and those who were most diligently looked after perished as well as those who wanted all things. That year was free from all other distempers; but, if perhaps any person was sick before, all other distempers terminated in this.

held out the second or third day were first taken with an acute fever, and, the distemper getting up into the head, were rendered speechless, and insensible to all that was done; and so dropt off as it were in a profound sleep. But, if any ever came to themselves a little, they endeavoured to speak something, but the tongue was with difficulty moved; and so uttering many inarticulate things, the nerves being stupified in the hinder part of the head, they presently died. Others were not taken in the head, but in the lungs: these had an inflammation in their inwards, which created acute pains about the stomach, so that they sent up blood and a loathsome and cadaverous stink from within; their jaws and tongues were dried up with heat, and black and tainted with gore; and whether they drank much, or little, it was all alike: these could take no sleep, but were in continual pain and disquiet. Some had imposthumous ulcers, and black blisters, bigger or lesser, on their arms and under their arm-pits; and some in the cheeks, and others in other parts of the body. And in others there arose black nodes. spots, or tokens, over all the body, in some more superficial and visible, in others deeper and obscure : and yet of both sorts all died alike ; for some had all these symptoms together, others more or less, but to most even one of all was enough to do the business. Yet those few who recovered were no more touched with the same mischief, but remained secure; for it never took any twice so as to kill. Sundry times there were great imposthumes in the thigh and in the arms, which, being cut, sent forth much stinking matter; and so the disease was carried off, flinging forth together therewith all the noxious humours. And yet some, though they had all these symptoms, were beyond all expectation saved. But there was no certain remedy; for what was good for one was to another, in the same condition, fatal: yet he that cured another got his own death thereby, and this made the greatest havoe, so that houses were emptied of inhabitants, even brute creatures dying with their masters. Yet nothing herein seemed more dismal than the despair to which men were reduced; for when any one perceived himself sick, he abandoned all hopes of recovery; and thus they gave themselves over and died presently, adding their defection of mind as an assistance to the disease. Such a kind of ma. lady cannot be expressed; and it was most manifest that it was not any plague natural or common to mankind, but a scourge from Heaven: wherefore many also were bettered there. by, not only of those who died, but as many as survived. For then, casting aside all their vices, they applied themselves wholly to the study of virtue, and several gave all they had to the poor. But, when any found themselves affected, there was none so stony or so obdurate but that he repented heartily of his sins, and thereby gave the Divine goodness some occasion of being gracious at his tribunal."

From this scourge, we are farther informed Naples and Avignon appear to have suffered in an extreme degree; at the former place 300,000, and, according to some, 400,000 per sons are stated to have perished; and Avignon which was at that time the seat of the papa see, under Clement VI., was nearly depopulated Of the members of an English college, then existing in that city, not one escaped, and up wards of 1200 citizens died in one day; and according to an official report made to Pop Clement, 23,840,000 persons are stated to have Here the knowledge of the physicians was put died within the pale of the see in one year to a stand : for some, enduring a little, died the [1347]. The report significantly concludes by stating, that 'no physician could tell the cause, rature. It is very little beyond a guide, or road-joval; and it consists of arches rising above or prescribe a cure : what was saving to one, was fatal to another. No astrologer could divine how or when it would cease.' As might be expected under such a fearful visitation, craft and ignorance propagated every kind of hyperbole. The following account was disseminated from Florence, in which city 60,000 persons are stated to have fallen victims to its ravages: 'It had its origin in Cathay, by reason of a cer-tain igneous vapour, or sulphureous fire, hor-ribly breaking forth from the earth (or, as others, descending from heaven), which utterly consumed and devoured men and beasts, houses, stones, and trees, to the very ground itself; and as - "I here saw such a thing - it far exceeded stretched forward, rolling along in smoky globes my expectations." An affectation of using of horrid stink, and pestilential fire, for more foreign phrases in a journey through foreign than 200 leagues of the country, or fifteen days' journey together; whereby the air became so infected in those parts, that there fell down carefully translates the easiest morsels, such as:

some millions of young serpents, and other wenomous insects; and in other countries, more sieur Irlandais, mange-t-on la viaude dans votre

Like Holbein's celebrated Dance of Death, remote from this fiery eruption, were found infinite quantities of huge vermin, with eight short legs, and tail, all over black, some living and some dead, the latter whereof stank over all the country; and the former were not only most dreadful to behold, but whomsoever any of them chanced but to touch, they became immediately to them as mortal poison.' account is said to have been communicated from Asia to a citizen of Florence. The history of the period is replete with accounts of atmospheric and other phenomena, as well as hyperbole in what relates to the virulence of the plague: it is stated that an unusual atmospheric phenomenon hung over Avignon on the 20th of December, 1348; that in Germany, in the same year, it rained blood, and that 'comets, meteors, fiery beams, and other coruscations, appeared in the air, with divers mock suns, and the heavens seeming to burn. In the same year, earthquakes appear to have prevailed at Rome, Naples, and generally over all the south-east part of Europe; violent storms in 1353; and a remarkable eclipse of the moon, from half-past four to half-past six A.M., occurred on the 17th February, 1355. In the fellowing year earthquakes were again general in Germany, Spain, and the south-west of Europe. On the 21st April, 1359, the bishop and priests of Sienna were struck dead in a violent storm, while in the act of performing high mass in the cathedral; and it is gravely stated that the chalice and cross were struck so deep into the ground that they could never afterwards be found!! In the present day a crucible would solve the latter mystery."

Let us only make allowances for the change of manners and the altered views of men in five hundred years, and, looking at the conduct of the learned in our own day, when a less fatal plague prevails, we shall have no reason to pride ourselves so much in the comparison, as we are in the habit of doing, on the " march of intellect" and the "spread of knowledge." It seems to be the same tragic farce played over again; the same hypothetical nonsense; the same folly and the same presumption; the same credulity and the same quackery; the same ignorance and the same mortality. Well might St. Real say, "qui dit doctour, ne dit pas toujeurs un homme docte."

Letters from Continental Countries. By Geo. Downes, A.M. 2 vols. 8vo. Dublin, 1832, Curry and Co.; London, Simpkin and Marshall '

THIS is not one of those works which, in critical phrase, may be called a desideratum in lite- its structure engages admiration. Its form is book; and of them, for the beaten and oft-fre- arches, in tiers, which are separated by sets of quented tracks to Rome and Naples by Geneva, enow. The second volume is of similar im- portions of this sublime edifice, for the purpose reflection, or new facts worthy of communication. The title would lead us to expect more in the centre a cross has been erected. than a bare catalogue of places and hotels—here satisfactory to add, that effective means are and there a list of pictures, with such comments taken to ensure the integrity of that part of the as cannot give the amateur the slightest idea edifice which still remains to attract and deof the works, and little beyond such reflections, light the traveller." countries, may, perhaps, be pardoned; but throughout the work the author, in his notes, pays?" " Vous pouvez juger;" " Passez parici, Madame et Messieurs, s'il vous plait." These tombs (not of the sort of Hervey's Meditations) are done into English, as if to shew the author's erudition and the reader's ignorance. But From Westminster Abbey, where heroes, statescome to some long Latin or German inscription, men, and poets, to the most obscure village which, to say the least of them, are as likely churchyard, where the rude forefathers of to be rather more obscure than the above to the hamlet sleep, there is almost invariably a Mr. Downes' fair readers who might wish to take a trip to the Continent, and they will find themselves left in utter darkness as to their meaning. Italian is the same.

There are some minor errors, such as, vol. ii. p. 42, where the author speaks of leaving Stuttgard, when he had not been near it, and must, we suppose, mean Strasburg. In p. 44, he rests at Ulm, a city to which he never went: we do not even recollect a little village of that name near his locality. He talks of walking along a river, instead of along the banks; and though he now and then rather mispells a town's name, we have no table of errata.

The nature of the book may be gathered from a sample. We have a letter, dated "Rome," no time mentioned. It begins:

" 'I have heard great things of Rome;' and I am in Rome. The object of our long journey is almost accomplished. No change but death or mental decay can obliterate the recollections of what we have just seen-but I will not anticipate."

It then immediately sets about describing Florence and the road to Rome. The last four lines of the letter are:

" We crossed the Tiber at the Ponte Molle. or Ponte Milvio, where, according to Sallust, the associates of Catiline were apprehended; and we shortly after entered Rome."

The next letter is dated Naples, and sets out with saying that the author took advantage of some opportunity, and resumed his journey after abiding for a day in that once mighty metropolis. That day was nearly consumed by passport arrangements; and, on his return, he allows to this mighty metropolis nine days. We were not disappointed at finding nothing here but what Vasi had told, and a great deal in Vasi not told here.

We conclude with an extract. Take the author's account of the Colosseum, a building which, in its ruins, is still one of the splendours of the world.

"The Coliseum (more correctly Colosseum), or amphitheatre of Flavius, is itself a personification of ancient Rome, rising in majesty above all the other buildings, as the city it adorned did above the other cities of the earth. While its great size excites wonder, the simplicity of mouldings, sweeping all round the edifice. Althe Simplon, &c., we have, Heaven knows, quite though modern barbarism has removed vast port and value with regard to the northern, or of building ports and palaces, the ruins are rather north-western parts of Germany; and still considerable. The interior contains much we look in vain for acute observation, sound to reward antiquarian research. Round the area are altars for the stations of the Passion, and

> The Churchyard Lyrist; consisting of Five Hundred Original Inscriptions to commemorate the Dead; with a suitable Selection of appropriate Texts of Scripture. By G.

> we have always found a contemplation of the an odd mixture of the sad and the ludicrous. strange medley of the touching and the grotesque. Shakespeare's immortal scroll, "the cloud-capt towers" by the side of Gay's facetious distich-

> > "Life is a jest, and all things shew it; I thought so once, but now I know it"— is a type of the whole system of epitaph-inscription, which makes us cry with one eye and laugh with the other. Neither the epitaph-writer nor the anatomist can say with Juvenal__ on the contrary, death alone makes the bodies of men of use to them; and the one carves their virtues, the other their limbs.

" Mors sola fatetur Quantula sint hominum corpuscula ;"

For hundreds of years we have been accustomed to the vagrant effusions of many a rustic muse, whether impersonated in poetical vicar, curate, parish-clerk, sexton, or other native Genius of the locale, for the records of contemporary merit, and descriptions of the various ways by which fate has disposed of mortality; and we confess we should be sorry to lose these memorials, original, traditionary, and quaint, even though superseded by the more polished and appropriate productions of Mr. Mogridge. But as there is little fear of this overthrow of old and rooted customs, we may do justice to our author and to the talent with which he has executed his task. He will thus receive his due share of applause, and his verses and texts will furnish mourners with fit themes wherewith to grace the tombs of those they lament. and divide the poetics of the grave with all his popular predecessors. We quote his own state-

"The object of the present volume is to offer to the public a greater variety of original epitaphs than has hitherto appeared; the want of such variety having generally led to the repetition of commonplace and inapplicable inscriptions.

" The most simple classification, of youth, maturity, and age, has been adopted in composing the inscriptions, with little reference to rank and those distinctions in society which in this life are so precarious, and which death utterly destroys. At the same time, the diversified character of life, and the varied circumstances of dissolution, have not been disregarded. The epitaphs are thrown together promiscuously in the volume, to impart a variety which may recommend it to the general reader. As the Churchyard Lyrist is intended to be practically and generally useful, it is adapted to different degrees of intelligence. Originality and taste, however desirable, affect comparatively but a few, while the many are more accessible to the plainer precepts of piety and morality."

[•] The author means gates here, we presume .- Ed. L. G.

As the compositions are for almost all classes and conditions, we shall select a few specimens as examples of their applicability to persons and circumstances.

"The lowly tenant of this grave designed
No mighty deed to benefit mankind;
From youth to age he passed his little span,
An honest, inoffensive, labouring man.

If this be praise, while in the world we dwell,
To do our duty and to do it well,
A brighter lustre to this stone is lent
Than shines round many a marble monument."

" Does the grave affright thee? Learn to look beyond it."

"The fool for length of life is ever crying:
The wise man knows that he is always dying:
Both seek for happiness, the fool and wise,
The one on earth, the other in the skies."

"O passing stranger! call this not A place of fear and gloom; I love to linger o'er the spot— It is my baby's tomb.

Here morning sunbeams brightly glow, And here the moonbeam shines, While all unconsciously below My slumbering Libe reclines.

His little waxen rosy face
I know will soon decay,
And every charm and every grace
Will moulder fast away.

But when the sun and moon shall fade, My baby shall arise, In brighter beams than theirs array'd, And reign above the skies.

"O trust in God in every strife,
And he shall give thee power
Midst all the suffering scenes of life,
And soothe thy dying hour.
What time the waves of Jordan swell,
His word shall whisper, 'All is well.'"

"The flower of the meadow, The leaf on the tree, The rush in the river, Are emblems of me. In freshness and beauty
They flourish a day;
I bloomed for a season,
Then withered away."

"Not more than these the proud can boast,
The rich, the wise, the brave—
A mouldering stone, an epitaph,
A green sod, and a grave!"

These are taken from 500 epitaphs, and will serve to exemplify the volume. Some are of a more commonplace cast, and some, we think (such as No. 296, for instance), such as could hardly befit the dead, or improve the living. Altogether, however, this work reflects credit on Mr. Mogridge's feeling and piety.

The Civil, Political, and Mechanical History of the Framework-Knitters, in Europe and America, &c. By Gravenor Henson. Vol. I.

8vo. pp. 425. Nottingham, Sutton.

Mr. Henson is, we believe, a journeyman lace-maker at Nottingham, to whose industry and ability this work does much credit. The are entertaining. Inter alia, we are told—
"The invention of the knitting machine, (since better known by the name of the stocking-frame, and the workmen as frame work-pointed love of the inventor, the Rev. William | Lee, curate of Calverton, in the county of Nottingham. This gentleman, it is said, paid his addresses to a young woman in his neighbourhood, to whom, from some cause, his attentions were not agreeable; or, as with more probability it has been conjectured, she affected to treat him with negligence, to ascertain her power over his affections. Whenever he paid his visits, she always took care to be busily employed in knitting, and would pay no atten-tion to his addresses; this conduct she pursued to such a harsh extent, and for so long a period, that the lover became disgusted, and he vowed to devote his future leisure, instead of dancing attendance on a capricious woman, who treated his attention with cold neglect, in devising an invention that should effectually supersede her favourite employment of knitting. So sedulous was Mr. Lee in his new occupation, that he neglected every thing to accomplish this new object of his attentions; even his sacerdotal duties were neglected. In vain did his sweetheart endeavour to reclaim him; she found, too late, that she had carried her humour too farall interests, all avocations, all affections, were absorbed in his new pursuit, from which he imagined he should realise an immense fortune. His curacy was despised, and at length abandoned, as beneath the notice of a person who had formed in his imagination such gigantic prospects. The old stocking-makers, particularly those in London, were fond of dilating in their cups, and in their general conversation, on the difficulties he encountered. He watched his mistress with the greatest attention while knitting, and he observed that she made the web loop by loop; but the round shape which she gave to the stocking, from the four needles, greatly embarrassed him in his notions of destroying her trade, by making a whole series or course at once, having as many needles as loops; it seemed impossible to construct a machine to make a round web. Pondering in his mind the difficulties of his task, on one of his visits he found her knitting the heel of a stocking, and using only two needles; one was employed in holding the loops, whilst the other was engaged in forming a new series: the thought struck him instantly, that he could make a flat web, and then, by joining the selvages with the needle, make it round. From that moment his whole soul was devoted to the object, which presented difficulties in that age that nothing but a species of enthusiasm could have overcome."

His farther progress is detailed at length, and the writer adds:

" The time which Mr Lee had chosen to make an application to the government, though to his sanguine mind very propitious for remuneration, was in reality the reverse: the treasury of Elizabeth was extremely low, owing to the enormous expenses which she had incurred in preparations to meet the Spanish armada in the preceding year. Already had the parliament begun to express their decided umbrage at the grant of the privileges of patents for monopolies; which, as they were then conducted, were justly considered national evils, and the most odious means of rewarding court favourites, by an excessively tyrannical mode of private taxation. Nearly all the nobles enjoyed early notices of stocking-making and weaving a patent for the most useful and general articles are entertaining. Inter alia, we are told—of consumption, such as iron, lead, saltpetre, salt, oil, glasses, &c. &c., to the amount of more than one hundred articles, which were sold, imported, or exported, by virtue of letters pa-

what prices they thought prudent for their commodities. When the general list was read over in the House of Commons in 1601, a member, indignant at the extortions, exclaimed, 'Is not bread amongst the number?' 'Bread?' cried the house, with astonishment. 'Yes, I assure you,' he sarcastically replied, ' if we go on at this rate, we shall have a monopoly of bread be-fore next parliament.' Another cause operated very powerfully against Mr. Lee's claim, - the nation had smarted most dreadfully under the misfortune of an unemployed population, and the invention, it was supposed, had a tendency to increase the evil, by driving so large a body Though as the knitters out of employment. supported by the powerful intercession of Lord Hunsdon, and his son Sir William Cary, equally a favourite with Elizabeth, she refused to make either a grant of money, or secure him a monopoly or patent. Her answer is said to have been to the following purport:—' My lord, I have too much love to my poor people, who obtain their bread by the employment of knitting, to give my money to forward an invention which will tend to their ruin, by depriving them of employment, and thus make them beggars. Had Mr. Lee made a machine that would have made silk stockings, I should I think have been somewhat justified in granting him a patent for that monopoly, which would have affected only a small number of my subjects; but to enjoy the exclusive privilege of making stockings for the whole of my subjects, is too important to grant to any individual. Hopes were thus held out to this extraordinary man, that if he would make silk stockings he might then have hopes of a remuneration by a monopoly; and he had the mortification to feel, what has been so often experienced by his successors, that because he had not accomplished every thing, he had done nothing."

Disappointed at home, he was invited by the Duc de Sully to Paris, where he established his frames; but the assassination of Henry the Great annihilated all his prospects.

" His fortitude forsook him, and he gave way to the melancholy which had attacked him in London; he thought himself the most unfortunate of men; alone, unprotected in a foreign country, after twenty-two years' struggles-he sickened at the thought, and sent for his brother James from Rouen; but before he arrived, the inventor of the stocking-frame died of a broken heart, in the midst of strangers. This hap-pened in the year 1610."

His brother returned and established the system in London and Nottingham. It is out of our power to follow the details of the charter obtained, and of the various laws and regulations which attended the progress of this branch of manufacture; of the disputes which arose; the projects entered into, the lawsuits, and the decisions. For all these matters, and for an account of the various articles made and how made, we must refer to the work itself, which shews not only the deep interest taken in his business by the artisan to whom we are indebted for it, but is a good sample of the understanding and intelligence of the class to which he belongs.

The Carding and Spinning Master's Assistant; or the Theory and Practice of Cotton Spinning. 8vo. pp. 282. Glasgow, 1832, J. Niven; London, Whittaker and Co.; Herbert; Edinburgh, Oliver and Boyd; Stirling and Kenney.

To those engaged in the cotton trade this must knitters,) owed its origin, as is universally tent. These patent rights were sold to persons be a very valuable publication; for it ably exagreed, to a singular circumstance—the disap- who farmed the profits, and thus demanded pounds the principles of the art, and as ably goes through all its practical details, with engravings of machines, improvements, &c. and suggestions, which, we dare-say, may be turned merely make a few notes.

The cotton known by the name of Smyrna very small quantity, chiefly for making candlewick, for which it is best suited by being inflammable in a higher degree than any other kind of cotton.

The Egyptian cotton, first brought to this and ranks next the Sea Island in price and estimation.

East India cotton is inferior to West India; there is a late improvement, however, in some has decreased much; and since 1790, the American supply, on the contrary, greatly increased.

In 1500, cotton first introduced into Engthe East India Company.

In 1725, linens, lawns, and cambrics, were first of yards of cotton cloth, estimated at 5,000,0001. sterling, were made there.

in Great Britain is estimated at 40,000,0001.; of which 20,000,000 l.'s worth is exported.

Advice to a Young Man upon first going to Oxford, in Ten Letters from an Uncle to his Nephew. By the Rev. E. Berens, M.A., &c. Pp. 167. London, 1832. Rivingtons.

This is a sensible performance, though not much allove common-place; perhaps the writer desired it to be useful through its familiarity and application to ordinary matters. The letters treat of religion, choice of friends, conversation, punctuality, amusements, expenses, temperance, reading, &cc.; out of which list we shall select two points to illustrate the character of the book.

" A young Oxonian is apt to feel very indignant if not treated by deans and tutors as a man and as a gentleman; but has be any right to expect to be so treated, if he condescends to adopt the practices of a mischievous or a truant school-boy? I am no friend to the unnecessary imposition of oaths; but I own I do not see how any thing like deliberate and systematic opposition to academical authority, can be reconciled with the oath of academical obedience taken by every freshman. I know well that the usual construction of that oath (I doubt not the legitimate construction) is, that the person who takes it will obey the statutes, or submit to the penalty imposed upon the infraction of them. I am aware, too, that the violation of the strict letter of many of the statutes is acquiesced in, and almost sanctioned, by those in authority; but surely a deliberate and contumacious contravention of the statutes, accompanied by a natural endeavour to evade punishment, is hardly consistent with the spirit of the cath."

It is scarcely possible to read this without perceiving that the laxity sanctioned by authority must be a certain cause to produce greater laxity in the governed. How is a lad to know the precise line where his oath may be broken with honest and respectable tradesman may someimpunity, and where its breach is a punishable outrage? Such a system calls loudly for reform, and for the repeal of every injunction sworn to which cannot be and is not obeyed. But all Mr. Berens' instructions for conduct and politeness are futile: no rules will do; but teach goodness of heart, and all the rest will follow.

*Of some of these scoundrels the motto is, — Trust as much as you can, and arrest as soon as you can. We knew a boot-maker, in a fashionable London street not a hundred miles from Bond Street, the other day, who ran a student up to above 10%, with law expenses, besides almost ruining his prospects, for a debt of some 3% foots and shoes, supplied without stint, and charged without conscience. outrage? Such a system calls loudly for reform,

On the subject of avoiding debt, the advice is very praiseworthy. If the young could only foresee a tythe of the unhappiness and mortifito future advantage. For our readers we shall cation to which their whole future life is exposed in consequence of owing what they cannot pay, they would avoid contracting debt as firmly wool, once almost the only article of the kind as they would the commission of an odious imported into England, is now used in but a crime. Even guilt is not attended by more severe punishment and more painful remorse. But we do not altogether coincide with the author's view of Oxonian affairs even in this respect.

"The habit," he says, "of running in debt country in 1823, is of a very superior quality, is pregnant with evil and misery of every descrip-It often - perhaps generally - amounts to positive dishonesty. The money which you owe a tradesman is really his property. The articles which you have received from him are from Madras. The West India importation hardly your own until you have paid for them. If you keep them without paying for them, when the seller wishes and asks for payment, you deprive a man of that which belongs to land; just a century before the first charter to him; and is not that something approaching to robbery? To a man possessed of proper feeling and a nice sense of honour, it must be very manufactured in Glasgow; in 1818, 105,000,000 painful to suffer a tradesman to ask twice for what is clearly his right. To affect to be offended with such an application, and to meet it with The value of cotton goods now manufactured superciliousness and insolence, is injustice carried to its height. The manner in which some men, who would be ready to shoot any one who disputed their claims to be considered as gentlemen, treat their creditors, whom they choose to call duns, would, from its contrariety to any thing like reason, be almost ludicrous, if it were not so culpable, so cruel, and so dishonest. A tradesman, from not being able to recover the money owed to him, sees himself in danger of losing his credit, and, together with his credit, the means of getting a maintenance: he sees his wife and children perhaps upon the very verge of misery; and yet, if he civilly asks for what is his due, he is considered as troublesome and impertinent, perhaps reproached and insulted !

Now, agreeing in the general principles here laid down, we are inclined to think that the picture is too much exaggerated, and too much on one side, to render the advice coupled with it as effectual as could be wished. There is not a student at Oxford who is not perfectly aware of the abominable and rascally impositions practised upon him by almost every tradesman he deals with; of the time-honoured custom of charging double and treble for every article, and taking the chance of their being paid for, or of netting an ample average profit; of the harpy means often resorted to by fashionable and most expensive ministers to the folly and extravagance of youth, to extort the sums so dishonestly mounted up from the tortured feelings of anxious parents and relatives; and of the many young men whose prospects in life are blasted by the legal proceedings to which their thoughtlessness, and want of strength to resist the temptation of credit pressed upon them, has exposed them.* Not one is ignorant of these things; and in endeavouring to imbue the mind with a just notion of the case, they ought not to have been omitted from the writer's consideration. But all the hint given is:

" Take receipts, and keep them.

times, in the hurry of business, omit to cross a charge out of his book, and will feel a satisfaction in having any doubt as to payment removed. Have such receipts tied up and docketed, so that you may refer to any one of them readily."

As far as it goes, we consider Mr. Berens' book to be well enough; but it might have been better, - more enlarged in its views, and more accurate in its deductions.

Reflections and Admonitory Hints of the Principal of a Seminary, on retiring from the Duties of his Station. 12mo. pp. 89. Lon-don, 1832, Simpkin and Co.; Westley and Co.: Leeds, Heaton: Halifax, Hartley: Huddersfield, Moore: Bradford, Stanfield: and Manchester, Ellerby.

MR. JOHN FAWCETT, the author of this wellmeaning and conscientious little book, was at the head of a respectable seminary for fifty years, and educated nearly two thousand youths during that period, principally resident under his care. There is something very honourable to the old man's feelings in this endeavour to perpetuate his moral lessons, and make his retirement from the busy world subservient to a useful purpose. The frontispiece, it is true, is somewhat whimsical, and the admonition itself rather solemn; but we can readily overlook these things in the laudable intention of the writer. The following reflections are very touching :-

"On looking over the names of those who were once endeared to him, as being part of his family-and not a few of them still more by their commendable conduct-collected from almost every part of the kingdom, and some from foreign realms, how many are there of the numerous assemblage who are gone before him to the grave—to that place whence they shall not return! Though once gay with hope, by fancy fed, rosy with health, and flattering themselves with a long succession of years, they have been cut off, some in the bloom of youth, like the flower, beautiful in the morning, and withering ere 'tis night, while the bereaved parents are left to mourn; others who had attained to a more advanced period of life, while engaged in busy cares, death has arrested in their career, and called away from connexions to whom their continuance here appeared most desirable. This is no ideal picture; it has been realised, not only in the instances now referred to, but in others almost innumerable. What a lesson of instruction, and what a solemn warning, is thus given to the survivors! With many even of those who remain in the land of the living, distance of residence and other circumstances will, in all probability, prevent any future personal intercourse; but should the perusal of these pages be in any respect beneficial to them, he will feel the satisfaction of not having laboured in vain. The pathetic language of the psalmist David, in the 71st Psalm, he is ready, at this period of his life and labours, to apply, in some respects, to himself. 'O God, thou hast taught me from my youth up; now, also, when I am old and grayheaded, O God, forsake me not, until I have shewed thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to that which is to come."

A fine poem might be composed on the retrospect of an aged teacher. How great his responsibility in training 2000 human beings for their career in life; and how important the thousands whom circumstances must involve in their sphere of action! And, again, the sad and fearful episodes which the fate of some must furnish: the contrasts between the rosv boy full of hope, and the pale exhausted man; between the lively and innocent child, and, perhaps, the dying criminal. The vision of Mirza realised, and with a personal knowledge of all the passengers: how melancholy, but for the reflection, that the old man was himself at the end of the bridge!

[•] It represents Mr. Fawcett (we suppose) as Plato, in his Greek garb, and amid the groves of Academe, instruct-ing half-a-dozen of smart boys in the natty dress of England's nineteenth century.

We are glad to see such a book as this likely to be much circulated in the manufacturing districts.

M'Gregor on British America. [Second notice: conclusion.]

As we broke off abruptly in the middle of a very interesting extract, we can only begin again in the same manner: the narration is of the last traveller to explore the last traces of the aborigines of Newfoundland.

"We spent several melancholy days wandering on the borders of the east-end of the lake, surveying the various remains of what we now contemplated to have been an unoffending and cruelly extirpated people. At several places, by the margin of the lake, are small clusters of summer and winter wigwams in ruins. One difference, among others, between the Bœothic wigwams and those of other Indians is, that in most of the former there are small hollows, like nests, dug in the earth, around the fire-place, and in the sides of the wigwam, so that I think it probable these people have been accustomed to sleep in a sitting position. There was one wooden building constructed for drying and smoking venison in, still perfect; also a small log-house, in a dilapidated condition, which we took to have been a store-house. The wreck of a large handsome birch-rind canoe, about twenty-two feet in length, comparatively new, and certainly very little used, lay thrown up among the bushes at the beach. We supposed that the violence of a storm had rent it in the way it was found, and that the people who were in it had perished: for the iron nails, of which there was no want, all remained in it. Had there been any survivors, nails being much prized by these people, they never having held intercourse with Europeans, such an article would most likely have been taken out for use again. All the birchtrees in the vicinity of the lake had been rinded. and many of those of the spruce-fir or var, (pinus balsamifera, Canadian balsam-tree,) had the bark taken off, to use the inner part for food, as noticed before. Their wooden repositories for the dead are in the most perfect state of preservation. These are of different constructions, it would appear, according to the rank of the persons entombed. In one of them, which resembled a hut, ten feet by eight or nine, and four or five feet high in the centre, floored with square poles, the roof covered with the rinds of trees, and in every way well secured against the weather, and the intrusion of wild beasts, the bodies of two full-grown persons were laid out at length on the floor, and wrapped round with deer skins. One of these bodies appeared to have been entombed not longer than five or six years. We thought there were children laid in here also. On first opening this building, by removing the posts which formed the ends, our curiosity was raised to the highest pitch; but what added to our sur-consequences, not only to them, but to tens of such a thing existed here, the idea of Mary the whole country around. A large fire at March occurred to one of the party, and the whole mystery was at once explained. In this cemetery were deposited a variety of articles, in some instances the property, in others the representations of the property and utensils, and of the achievements, of the deceased. There were two small wooden images of a man and woman, no doubt meant to represent husband and wife; a small doll, which we supposed to represent a child, (for Mary March had to leave she was taken); several small models of their canoes, two small models of boats, an iron axe, a bow, and quiver of arrows, were placed by the side of Mary March's husband, and two fire-stones (radiated iron pyrites, from which of culinary utensils, neatly made of birch-rind. and ornamented; and many other things, of some of which we did not know the use or meaning. Another mode of sepulture which we saw here, was, when the body of the deceased had been wrapped in birch-rind, it was. with his property, placed on a sort of scaffold about four feet and a half from the ground. The scaffold was formed of four posts, about seven feet high, fixed perpendicularly in the a half in length by four in breadth, with a floor rind, was enclosed in a kind of box on the ground. The box was made of small square posts, laid on each other horizontally, and notched at the corners to make them meet close. It was about four feet by three, and two and a half feet deep, and well lined with birch-rind, to exclude the weather from the inside. The body lay on its right side. A fourth, and the most common mode of burying among these people, has been to wrap the body in birch-rind, and cover it over with a heap of stones, on the surface of the earth, in some retired spot. Sometimes the body thus wrapped up is put a foot or two under the surface, and the spot covered with stones. In one place, where the ground was sandy and soft, they appeared to have been buried deeper, and no stones placed over the graves. These people appear to have always shewn great respect for their dead; and the most remarkable remains of them, commonly observed by Europeans at the sea-coast, are their burying-places. are at particular chosen spots; and it is well known that they have been in the habit of bringing their dead from a distance to them. With their women they bring only their clothes. On the north side of the lake, opposite the river Exploits, are the extremities of two deer fences, about half a mile apart, where they lead to the water. It is understood that they diverge many miles in a north-westerly direction. The Red Indians make these to lead the deer selves near where the deer get into the water of different kinds peculiar to these people, met with about this lake. One night we encamped night is the life and soul of such a party as ours: and, when it blazed up at times, I could not help observing, that two of my Indians evinced uneasiness and want of confidence in things around, as if they thought themselves usurpers on the Red Indian territory. From time immemorial, none of the Indians of the other tribes had ever encamped near this lake. fearlessly, and as we had now done, in the very centre of such a country; the lake and terriher only child here, which died two days after tory adjacent having been always considered to belong exclusively to the Red Indians, and to have been occupied by them. It had been our invariable practice hitherto to encamp near hills, and be on their summits by the dawn of day, to try and discover the morning smoke ascending they produce fire, by striking them together) from the Red Indians' camps; and, to prevent lay at his head; there were also various kinds the discovery of ourselves, we extinguished our own fire always some length of time before daylight. Our only and frail hope now left of seeing the Red Indians, lay on the banks of the river Exploits, on our return to the sea-coast. Red Indian Lake discharges itself about three or four miles from its north-east end; and its waters form the river Exploits. From the lake to the sea-coast is considered about seventy miles: and down this noble river the steady perseverance and intrepidity of my Indians carground, to sustain a kind of crib, five feet and ried me on rafts in four days; to accomplish which otherwise, would have required probably made of small squared beams laid close together two weeks. We landed at various places on horizontally, and on which the body and pro-both banks of the river on our way down, but perty rested. A third mode was, when the body, bent together, and wrapped in birch-as those seen at the portage at Badger Bay, as those seen at the portage at Badger Bay, Great Lake, towards the beginning of our excursion. During our descent, we had to construct new rafts at the different waterfalls. Sometimes we were carried down the rapids at the rate of ten miles an hour, or more, with considerable risk of destruction to the whole party, for we were always together on one raft. What arrests the attention most, in gliding down the stream, is the extent of the Indian fences to entrap deer. They extend from the lake downwards, continuous, on the banks of the river, at least thirty miles. There are openings left here and there for the animals to go through and swim across the river, and at these places the Indians are stationed, and kill them in the water with spears out of their canoes, as at the lake. Here, then, connecting these fences with those on the north-west side of the lake, is at least forty miles of country easterly and westerly, prepared to intercept al the deer that pass that way in their periodica migrations. It was melancholy to contemplate the gigantic, yet rude, efforts of a whole pri mitive nation, in their anxiety to provide sub sistence, forsaken and going to decay. must have been hundreds of Red Indians, and that not many years ago, to have kept up these fences and pounds. As their numbers were lessened, so was their ability to keep them ui for the purposes intended, and now the dee pass the whole line unmolested. We infer tha the few of these people who may yet survive to the lake, during the periodical migration of have taken refuge in some sequestered spot, in those animals. The Indians, stationing themthe northern part of the island, where they car procure deer to subsist on. On the 29th o to swim across, the lake being narrow at this November, we again arrived at the mouth o end, pursue the animals in their canoes, and the river Exploits, thirty days after our de kill them with spears. In this way they secure parture from thence, after having made a com their winter provisions before the severity of plete circuit of 220 miles in the Red Indian the winter sets in. There were other remains territory. The materials collected on this, a well as on my excursion across the interior few years ago, and on other occasions, put m prise, was the discovery of a white deal coffin, on the foundation of an old Indian wigwam, in possession of a general knowledge of the containing a skeleton neatly shrouded in white on the extremity of a point of land which juts natural condition and productions of Newfound muslin. After a long pause of conjecture how out into the lake, and exposed to the view of land; and, as a member of an institution fermed to protect the aboriginal inhabitants of house of James Simms, Esq. attorney-general, was to succeed the ensuing night, his fellow in other tribes, to be the medium of beginning the intercourse we have in view; and, indeed, I have already chosen three of the most intelligent men, from among the others met with in Newfoundland, to follow up my search. I have the pleasure to present to the Bosothic Institution Brothics; some of which we had the good fortane to discover on our recent excursion, models of their canoes, bows and arrows, spears of diffire is not only original, but, as far as we at present know, is peculiar to their tribe. These articles, together with a short vocabulary of their language, consisting of from 200 to 300 words, which I have been enabled to collect, prove the Bœothics to be a distinct tribe from any hitherto discovered in North America. One remarkable characteristic of their language, and in which it resembles those of Europe more than any other Indian languages do, with which we have had an opportunity of comparing it, is its abounding in diphthongs. In my detailed report, I would propose to have plates of these articles, and also of the like articles used by other tribes of Indians, that a comparative idea may be formed of them; and when the Indian female, Shanandithit, arrives in St. John's, I would recommend that a correct likeness of her be taken, and be preserved in the records of the institution. One of the specimens of mineralogy which we found in our excursion, was a block of what is called Labrador felspar, nearly four and a half feet in length, by about three feet in breadth and thickness. This is the largest piece of that beautiful rock yet discovered any where. Our subsistence in the interior was entirely animal food, deer and beavers, which we shot.' The Boothic institution of St. John's placed the Indians who had accompanied Mr. Cormack, on their establishment, to be employed under his immediate direction and control, as president, for the purpose of discovering the abodes of the Red Indians. The Indian woman, Shanandithit, was also brought to St. John's, where she lived in Mr. Cormack's house, until he left the colony in 1829, when she was taken into the house of the attorney-general, M. Simms. She died in June following. A Newfoundland Paper of the 12th June, 1829, notices her death by stating — 'Died, on Saturday night, the 6th instant, at the hospital, Shanandithit, the female Indian, one of the aborigines of this island. She died of consumption, a disease which seems to have been remarkably prevalent among her tribe, and which has unfortunately been fatal to all who have fallen into the hands of the settlers. Since the departure the country in which we live, and to prosecute where every attention has been paid to her inquiry into the moral character of man in his wants and comforts; and, under the able and first; and by this means, no man would be primitive state, I can, at this early stage of our professional advice of Dr. Carson, who has institution, assert, trusting to nothing vague, most kindly and liberally attended her for that we already possess more information con- many months past, it was hoped that her health cerning these people, than has been obtained might have been re-established. Lately, howduring the two centuries and a half that New ever, her disease had become daily more for-foundland has been in the possession of Eu- midable, and her strength had rapidly declined; ropeans. But it is to be lamented, that now, and, a short time since, it was deemed advisable when we have taken up the cause of a bar- to send her to the hospital, where her sudden barously treated people, so few should remain decease has but too soon fulfilled the fears that to reap the benefit of our plans for their civi- were entertained for her. With Shanandithit lisation. The institution and its supporters has probably expired nearly the last of the will agree with me, that after the unfortunate native Indians of the island; indeed, it is concircumstances attending past encounters be sidered doubtful by some whether any of them tween the Europeans and the Red Indians, it now survive. It is certainly a matter of regret, is best now to employ Indians belonging to the that those individuals who have interested themselves most to support the cause of science and humanity, by the civilisation of these Indians, should have their labours and hopes so unfortunately and suddenly terminated. They have. however, the satisfaction of knowing that their object has been to mitigate the sufferings of several ingenious articles, the manufacture of the humanity, and that, at least, they have endeavoured to pay a portion of that immense debt which is due from the European settlers of Newfoundland to those unfortunate Indians, ferent kinds, &c., and also a complete dress who have been so long oppressed and perseworn by that people. Their mode of kindling cuted, and are almost, if not wholly, exterminated.' The relics of the Boothics, which Mr. Cormack brought to England, are exceedingly interesting to all those who take an in-terest in the study of man, and who would trace his progress from his rude and natural state to what we consider civilisation. The Indians employed by the Bœothic Institution have been unsuccessful in their journeys, and it is now believed that the tribe is extinct. A very few may possibly still exist in the most hidden and wild places, among deep ravines, or in dark inaccessible solitudes, determined never to appear again in the presence of Europeans.

We have nothing to add, except a repetition of our hearty approbation of these volumes; from our final notice of which we have been detained longer than is usual with us, or agreeable for the sake of connexion.

Waverley Novels, Vol. XXIX. Peveril of the Peak, Vol. II. Edinburgh, R. Cadell. A VERY characteristic frontispiece, after R. P. Bonington, and a pretty vignette by A. Fraser, recommend this volume. An extract from Waldron, who published a description of the Isle of Man a hundred years ago, (a note on Chapter I.) gives us the following curious Manx tradition:
"They say, that an apparition, called in their They say, that an apparition, called in their language the Mauthe Doog, in the shape of a large black spaniel with curled shaggy hair, was used to haunt Peel Castle, and has been frequently seen in every room, but particularly in the guard-chamber, where, as soon as candles were lighted, it came and lay down before the fire, in presence of all the soldiers, who at length, by being so much accustomed to the sight of it, lost great part of the terror they were seized with at its first appearance. They still, however, retained a certain awe, as believing it was an evil spirit which only waited permission to do them hurt, and for that reason forbore swearing and all profane discourse while in its company. But though they endured the shock of such a guest when all together in a body, none cared to be left alone with it; it being the custom, therefore, for one of the soldiers to lock the gates of the castle at a certain hour, and carry the keys to the captain, to this errand should accompany him that went mention that the Mauthe Doog was always seen to come out from that passage at the close of day, and return to it again as soon as the morning dawned, which made them look on this place as its peculiar residence. One night a fellow being drunk, and by the strength of his liquor rendered more daring than ordinary, laughed at the simplicity of his companions, and though it was not his turn to go with the keys, would needs take that office upon him, to testify his courage. All the soldlers endea-voured to dissuade him; but the more they said, the more resolute he seemed, and swore that he desired nothing more than that Mauthe Doog would follow him, as it had done the others, for he would try if it were dog or devil. After having talked in a very reprobate manner for some time, he snatched up the keys, and went out of the guard-room: in some time after his departure, a great noise was heard, but nobody had the boldness to see what occasioned it, till the adventurer returning, they demanded the knowledge of him; but as loud and noisy as he had been at leaving them, he was now become sober and silent enough, for he was never heard to speak more; and though all the time he lived, which was three days, he was entreated by all who came near him, either to speak, or, if he could not do that, to make some signs by which they might understand what had happened to him, yet nothing intelligible could be got from him, only, that by the distortion of his limbs and features, it might be guessed that he died in agonies more than is common in a natural death. The Mauthe Doog was, however, never seen after in the castle, nor would any one attempt to go through that passage, for which reason it was closed up, and another way made. This accident happened about threescore years since, and I heard it attested by several, but especially by an old soldier, who assured me he had seen it oftener than he had then hairs on his head."

Upon this Sir W. Scott remarks: "It would be very desirable to find out the meaning of the word Mauthe in the Manx language, which is a dialect of the Gaelic. I observe, that Maithe in Gaelic, amongst other significations, has that of active or speedy; and also, that a dog of Richard II., mentioned by Froissart, and supposed to intimate the fall of his master's authority by leaving him and fawning on Bolingbroke, was termed Mauthe; but neither of these particulars tends to explain the very impressive story of the fiendish hound of Peel Castle."

The following is one of several fairy legends, quoted from the same old writer by Sir Walter in his illustration of Manx superstitions. As a proof of the reality of fairies, there was "a fiddler, who, having agreed with a person who was a stranger, for so much money, to play to some company he should bring him to, all the twelve days of Christmas, and received earnest for it, saw his new master vanish into the earth the moment he had made the bargain. Nothing could be more terrified than was the poor fiddler; he found he had entered himself into the devil's service, and looked on himself as already damned; but having recourse also to a clergyman, he received some hope; he ordered him, however, as he had taken earnest, to go when he should be called; but that whatever tunes should be called for, to play none of Mr. Cormack from the island, this poor whose apartment the way led through a church, but psalms. On the day appointed, the same woman has had an asylum afforded her in the they agreed among themselves, that whoever person appeared, with whom he went, though with what inward reluctance 'tis easy to guess; but punctually obeying the minister's directions, the company to whom he played were so angry, that they all vanished at once, leaving him at the top of a high hill, and so bruised and hurt, though he was not sensible when or from what hand he received the blows, that he got not home without the utmost difficulty."

Letters for the Press. On the Feelings, Passions, Manners, and Pursuits of Men. By the late Francis Roscommon, Esq. Pp. 255. London, 1832. Wilson.

Letters for the Press! They had better have been for the post, as certainly their contents are not worth publication. Feeble and wellmeaning is not very attractive commendation, yet it is all that we can bestow.

My own Fire-side. By the Author of "Solace of an Invalid," "Affection's Gift," &c. &c. Pp. 230. Colchester, 1832, Swinborne, Walter, and Taylor; London, Hatchard and Son; Harvey and Darton.

USHERED in by a deprecating preface and a respectable list of subscribers, this little volume scarcely comes within the pale of criticism: we wish its author success.

An Encyclopædia of Cottage, Farm, and Villa Architecture; accompanied by Analytical and Critical Remarks, illustrative of the Principles of Architectural Science and Taste on which these Designs are composed, and of Landscape Gardening, with reference to their Accompaniments. Illustrated by numerous Designs of Cottages, Farm-houses, Farmeries, and Villas, partly executed in Lithography, and partly engraved on Wood. By J. C. Loudon, F.L.S., &c. Nos. I. II. and III. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

WE know no living writer of whom it can be so truly said as of Mr. Loudon, that he is an over-flowing fountain of useful knowledge. His works on gardening and husbandry are of the utmost practical value. All the subjects of which he has treated are immediately and intimately connected with the common wants of mankind, and all the information he has furnished upon them is of daily and hourly utility. With his volumes in our hand we can do every thing requisite for our success and comfort in these important pursuits; and we can besides enter more fully into the enjoyment of natural beauties and the comprehension of philosophical

This is high praise for an individual; but Mr. Loudon has fairly earned it by his former works, and is now adding to his claim by the publication of the present popular Architectural Encyclopædia, of which we have seen three Nos. before we ventured to give an opinion concerning it; though we might without risk have anticipated, from the character of the author, that it would be both able and instructive. It is eminently so. Innumerable plans, outlines, elevations, and estimates, teach us how to build cottages, farm-houses, and villas of every description, and tell us what is the expense of each. We are also informed of their several capabilities, of their exterior effects in pleasing the eye, and their interior means in ministering to the necessary habits of life. Going minutely into details, it is shewn that even the poorest labourer may, with care and attention paid to the construction of his habitais as easy to consult cleanliness, ventilation, conveniency, neatness, and whatever is conducive to health, as to be destitute of these blessings, filthy, diseased, and miserable.

There is no part of the subject into which Mr. Loudon does not minutely enter; and we will say that, after the dissemination of his work, the landlord and architect who can perpetuate the crime of making dog-holes and hovels for the lower orders of the agricultural class, instead of cabins and cottages in which they may take a pride, will evince neither wisdom nor patriotism, good sense nor good feeling.

The Original. 4to. pp. 348. London, 1832. Cowie.

WE regret to see that our contemporary the Original has closed its career, having failed to obtain as much of the public patronage as would repay its expenditure: it has therefore, very modestly and sensibly, taken leave at the end of its twenty-second No.; and the whole, now bound up with an index, forms an entire and very amusing miscellany.

We repeat, unaffectedly, our sorrow that this weekly periodical has not met the success it deserved; for in actual intelligence, literary merit, taste in the fine arts, and pleasantry, it was, in our opinion, the best of its kind. Some of its antiquarian papers are particularly curious and interesting, and would do credit to any publication. It also deserves this posthumous testimony in its favour for the honesty with which it avoided the puffing system of too many of its compeers; -it stood on its own merits, and can neither be charged with trickery nor falsehood, which maintain appearances for a while, but ultimately sink the fragile speculation which they seem to support, without preserving the fair reputation that belongs, in spite of its failure, to the Original.

Knowledge for the People, or the Plain Why and Because, &c. &c. By John Timbs. 18mo. London, 1832, Low; Darton, Harvey, and Co.; Edinburgh, Constable; Dublin, Wakeman.

In this little volume the sciences of botany, mineralogy, geology, and meteorology, are familiarly explained, in the way of question and answer. There is a great deal of information collected together, with nothing to distinguish it from other useful works of the same description.

Alphabet of Insects, for the use of Beginners. By James Rennie, M.A., Professor of Zoology in King's College. Pp. 108. London, 1832. Orr.

This is one of a promised series upon natural science, and one well worthy of the reputation of Mr. Rennie. We enter not into his controversy with other naturalists as to the nomenclature, or arrangement or division of objects; but we will say that he is himself very clear and intelligible. His preference of Saxon words, now plain English, is deserving of much praise; and at all events, for instruction, infinitely better than the compounds half-Greek, halfbarbaric, with which so many sciences (and entomology not the least) are swamped to the beginner, and confused even to the learned. But how comes Mr. Rennie, let us ask him, with his affection for our good old language, to use the the vulgarism "talented," both in his introduction and elsewhere? Is talented a Saxon lowed, and say, ex. gr. "he was a very talented man, and the professors employed to talent him farther, succeeded beyond what ye could talent in your schools, or we could talent in former times, when the talent of talenting was by no means so talentedly understood?"

The Alphabet of Insects is all that it professes to be—and an admirable elementary book.

Translation of several Principal Books, Passages, and Texts of the Veds, and of some Controversial Works on Brahmunical Theology. By Rajah Rammohun Roy. Second edition. 8vo. pp. 282. London, 1832. Parbury, Allen, and Co.

WE have already written so much respecting the mission and efforts of the extraordinary person to whom the public is indebted for this important work, that we need now only mention its appearance in a second edition. Elsewhere in this sheet, a much more eloquent tribute is paid to the learned and distinguished Rajah than we could pen, and a striking view is taken of the probable consequences of his labours, by an individual most competent to estimate them.

The British Preacher. Vol. III. 8vo. pp. 324. London, 1832. Westley and Davis.

This volume contains twenty-five sermons, by able preachers, on various topics of high Christian concernment; including several of more human interest, viz. funeral discourses. Without going into their various doctrines or views, we may state that much of talent and sound divinity is here embodied.

The History of Morley and the surrounding Villages By Norrisson Scatcherd, Esq. 8vo. pp. 345. Leeds, J. Heaton.

The author appears to be an antiquarian and topographical dilettante; and he has here given us, without attending much to the lucidus ordo, a rather rambling account of a locality connected with the period of the Civil Wars and Commonwealth. But he also takes a wider range, and treats de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis: for instance, so early as page 5, he assures us that Saint Dunstan deserved to be hanged at Tyburn, and that Eugene Aram ought hardly to have been hanged at all. The Appendix, No. 1, contains information of another sort, viz. a list of all the oaths by which our kings were wont to pledge themselves to the truth of what they said.

"Edward the Confessor swore 'By God's mother;"—William the Conqueror 'By God's splendour;"—William Rufus 'By St. Luke's face;"—Henry First 'By our Lord's death;"—Stephen 'By God's birth;"—Henry Second, 'God's curse light on you and mine;"—John 'By God's teeth;"—Henry Third 'By God's head;"—Edward First 'By God's blood, per sanguinem Dei;"—Richard Second 'By St. Edward;"—Henry Sixth 'By St. Edward, 'his common word was 'Forsooth;"—Edward Fourth 'By God's blessed lady;"—Richard Fourth 'By God's blessed lady;"—Richard Third 'By St. Paul;"—Henry Eighth 'By St. Mary," when angry—'By God;"—Elizabeth 'By G—, or God's death, or God's wounds;"—James First swore (see Ellis's Letters, vol. iii. p. 118); but his oath is not mentioned. —Oliver Cromwell was not a swearer;—Charles Second, 'God's fish, a corruption of God's flesh.'" attention paid to the construction of his habitaintroduction and elsewhere? Is talented a Saxon tion, enjoy advantages which are too generally sacrificed, from the senseless and inefficient manner in which he is provided for. That it his minute particulars about Morley itself. To those interested in either, we refer the volume; which is so desultory, that we cannot digest it into any thing like a connected review, and dwells upon many matters hardly of sufficient interest for the distant reader, though still containing some curious scraps, and a Morley glossary of odd words and phrases.

The Olio, or Museum of Entertainment. Vol. IX. 8vo. pp. 508, double columns. London, 1832, Shackell; Longman and Co.; Whittaker; Sherwood; Simpkin and Co.; Steill; Strange; Carvill, New York.

THIS amusing miscellany of original and selected matter holds on its way with a fair share of the patronage it so well merits, even amid the cometition of a hundred rivals. In Vol. IX. we have the weekly Nos. from January to the present month bound up together; and we need only say, that, for desultory reading, there is no falling-off in the agreeable variety presented by the Olio.

Constable's Miscellany, No. LXXVI.: But-terfies, Moths, and Sphinxes, Vol. II. By Capt. T. Brown.

THESE two volumes are worthy of peculiar selection even from the most agreeable of the class of publications to which they belong; whether we consider them as exhausting a branch of natural study, or as forming a portion of the monthly series, of which, amid their abundance, it is hardly possible to pronounce any distinctive characteristic. Few objects in our common intercourse with animate nature possess more beauty, are in their perfect state more harmless, or attract more of the observance of old and young, than the varied tribes of the moth and the butterfly. The association of the ideas of happy childhood with them, and their remarkable metamorphoses, with which superstition, allegory, and mythology, are so interestingly connected, render the contemplation of their forms and habits always delightful. Captain Brown has shewn us them all as they live and flit around us; and he has given very pleasing descriptions of their larva, caterpillar, and imago appearances. As we have no doubt but that other editions will be called for, we would suggest, as a great improvement to the many coloured prints, that a line indicating the ordinary size of the specimen should be added. They are very prettily executed, and the work wonderfully cheap. A sketch of the early history of silk is, with much propriety, added to this volume, to complete an important part of the subject.

Introduction to the Arts and Sciences, originally compiled by the Rev. R. Turner, LL.D. 20th edition, newly arranged by R. Mudie. Pp. 348. London, 1832. Longman and Co.; Baldwin; Cadell; Rivingtons; Hamilton; Harvey; Scholey; Poole and Co.; Nunn. A VERY excellent little volume, in which, with good arrangement, an introduction to the arts and sciences is very ably given, and the information brought down to the latest period. We do not know a better work for the general instruction of the young and inquisitive.

Le Livre des Cent-et-un. Paris, 1832. L'Advocat.

We do not find in this volume any extract sufficiently amusing to deserve translation: the only attraction, we think, to English readers is in De Lamartine's touching address to Sir Walter Scott; but it is too long for quotation. port."

Saint Herbert's Isle; a Legendary Poem. By the late John Bree, Esq., of Emerald, near Keswick. Pp. 174. London, 1832. Longman

This is an appeal to the kindness rather than the judgment of the public. The author is dead, and the above volume is published by his family. There is a handsome list of subscribers, whose example will, we hope, be followed by others.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

IMPROVED RAW SUGAR.

" CONSIDERABLE interest has been excited in the market by the introduction of an improved native raw sugar, which portends very great advantages to all who are engaged in this so long unprofitable branch of colonial and commercial intercourse. It is pure raw sugar. obtained direct from the cane-juice, without any secondary process of decolorisation or solution, and by which all necessity for any subsequent process of refining is entirely obviated. It is obtained in perfect pure transparent granular crystals, being entirely free from any portion of uncrystallisable sugar or colouring matter, and is prepared by the improved process of effecting the last stages of concentration in vacuum, and at a temperature insufficient to produce any changes in its chemical composition; the mode of operation first proposed by the late Hon. Ed. Charles Howard, and subsequently introduced, with the most important advantages and complete success, into the principal sugar-refineries of Great Britain.

"By this improved and scientific process of manufacture, the application of which to the purpose of preparing raw sugar from the canejuice has now first been proposed, the most singular advantages are secured to the planter, in an increased quantity of sugar, the product of his operation, and in saving from the immense 'quantity of deteriorated material, uncrystallisable sugar and molasses, which were products of the former mode of operation, from the intense and long-continued degree of heat employed in the processes. The time and labour of the operation are also greatly decreased: the apparatus possesses the power to make double the quantity in the same space of time as the old method, and this is ready for shipment in four days, in lieu of three weeks, as heretofore. The sugar likewise readily commands an advanced price in the market to the planter of ten to twelve shillings per cwt. "This improved sugar readily ensures a preference for all purposes of manufacture, solution, or domestic economy. It is a purer sweet, and of a richer mellifluous taste than even the best refined; it is not apt to become ascescent in solution; and, from its superior quality, it well answers all purposes of the table. In the manufacture of rum from the molasses, which are separated during the first process of the operation, there is no danger of deterioration in the production of empyreuma, and a far purer spirit is obtained than that made from ordinary molasses.

" This improved process is now in complete and successful operation on eight estates in Demerara. The general introduction of the process is considered by the best practical judges to ensure certain means of revivifying the spoiled fortunes of the planters, and to open a new era in the prosperity of those portions of the British crown, of which this forms the principal staple commodity of sup-

With this communication we have received a small canister of the commodity referred to, which certainly recommends it strongly to our favourable report. It so nearly resembles pounded sugar-candy, that we should have taken it for that article in a very pure state, but for the accompanying explanation, and also for a plan and description of the apparatus by which it is produced. We have seen nothing for a long time in trade more worthy of attention; and if it be substantiated that this improvement will tend to relieve the suffering interests of our West India colonies, it will indeed prove a national as well as a commercial benefit.

NEW PATENTS

Granted by his Majesty for Inventions .- Sealed, 1831-2.

To John Samuel Dawes, of Bromford, for certain improvements in the manufacture of iron.

To John Dickinson, of Nash Mill, Hertford, Esq., for certain improvements in the manufacture of paper.

To William Sneath, of Ison Green, Nottingham, for certain improvements in machinery for the manufacture of bobbinson leve.

of hobbin-net lace. To John Lihou, of the Naval Club-House, Bond Street,

To John Lihou, of the Naval Club-House, Bond Street, Seq., for an improved method of constructing capstans. To Moses Teague, of Park End Iron Works, for certain improvements in making and smelting pig iron. To Elijah Galloway, of Blackfriars' Road, for certain improvements on paddle-wheels. To George Freeman, of Tewkesbury, for certain improvements in machinery for ornamenting and producing devices upon lace.

provements in machinery for ornamenting and producing devices upon lace.

To Alexander Beattie Shankland, London, in consequence of a communication made to him by a foreigner resident in America, for a new method of cutting, working, and plaining of wood, minerals, and metals, by means of merchinery.

ing, and planning of wood, nimerans, and metans, by means of machinery.

To William Crofts, of Lenton, Nottinghamshire, for certain improvements in machinery for making lace or net, commonly called bobbin-net lace.

To Raiph Watson, of London, Esq., in consequence of a communication made to him by a certain foreigner residing abroad, for an invention of a certain improved

To Thomas De La Rue, London, for certain improve-ments in making or manufacturing and ornamenting playing cards. To William Church, of Bordesley Green, near Birmingham, for certain improvements in machinery for making naile

To Samuel Walker, of Millshaw, near Leeds, for cer-tain improvements in gig-machines for dressing woollen cloths.

To John Joyce, of London, in consequence of a comabroad, for a certain improvement or improvements in machinery for making nails of iron, copper, and other machinery for making nalls of iron, copper, and other metals.

To Charles Beard, of Coggleshall, Essex, for an improvement in the construction of cocks for taps for drawing off liquids.

To George Oldland, of Hillsley, Gloucestershire, for certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for shearing, dressing, and finishing of woollen cloths and other fabrics.

To William Wells, of Manchester, for a new and improved method of making and constructing gig-machines, otherwise called raising-machines, or machines for raising the nap or pile of, and brushing and dressing, woollen and other cloths.

To Thomas Petherick, of Penpelleck, Cornwall, and John Filmore Kingston, of Islington, Devon, for their having invented improvements in certain machinery and apparatus for separating copper, lead, and other ores from earthly and other substances, from which they are or may be mixed. or may be mixed.

To Frederick Collier Bakewell, of Hampstead, for certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for making or manufacturing soda water and other aerated waters or Iduids.

To Joseph Gibbs, of the Kent Road, and William Chaplin, of the Adelphi, for their having invented certain improvements in wheeled carriages, and in the means of Chaplin, of the Adelpin, for their naving invented certain improvements in wheeled carriages, and in the means of constructing the same. To Henry Warner, of Loughborough, Leicestershire, and Charles Hood and Benjamin Abbot, also of the same place, for certain improvements upon machinery now in use for making ormanufacturing stockings, stocking net, or frame-work knitting, warp webb, warp net, and point net. To John Day, of Birmingham, for an improvement in the manufacture of cocks used for the stopping and drawing off gas and water, and for other purposes for which cocks are now used.

To Henry Brewer, of Old Kent Road, for certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for making paper. To John Walmsley, of Manchester, for a machine for cutting off fur or hair from beaver and other skins.

To Matthew Towgood, of Dartford, for certain improvements in cutting paper.

To William Day, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, for certain improvements in the construction of printing-presses.

To Bennet Woodcroft, of Manchester, for certain improvements in the construction and adaptation of a revolving spiral paddle, for propelling boats and other ves-volving spiral paddle, for propelling boats and other vessels on water.

To William Alexander Brown, of Liverpool, and Herman Hendricks, of Passs, near Paris, inconsequence of a communication from a certain foreigner residing abroad, for an improved method or methods of manufacturing the prussiates of potash and sods, and the prussiate of iron; also for the construction of certain apparatus, vessels, or machinery, to be used in the said manufacture; and a new or improved method of employing the said prussiate of iron, or other prussiates of iron, as a substitute for indigo, in dyeing alls sorts of wools, and whether in the fleece, skin, spun, or woven into cloths, stuffs, or otherwise; also in dyeing silks, cottons, or linens, and, in fact, all other sorts and descriptions of textile or other substances fit for the purpose of receiving colour of a blue, blue-black, greens, bronse, or any other colours for which indigo has been hitherto used, either as a groundwork or auxiliary; and also for an improved arrangement of certain utensils and machinery to be used in the said dyeing process. said dveing process.

To the Editor of the Literary Gazette.

THE POOR

SIR,—It is with unfeigned pleasure I notice the plans lately brought forward for the anpointment of small plots of land to the labour-ing poor, or, more properly speaking, the agri-cultural labourers of the country. Too much time has already been lost, and with it, alas! much of the moral and best feelings of the lower classes. The amelioration of cottage gardening has long been my favourite idea, and that by it the burden of the poors'-rate would be greatly diminished, and the moral feelings of the lower classes much improved. Landowners would be glad to have small portions of their land occupied, but for the trouble and unpleasant duty of collecting the rents from a number of persons. As this plan would ultimately, and even immediately, tend to lessen the labour of the parish overseer, why should he not lease the land from the land-owner on account of the parish, (without the creation of any new officer,) and let it out in small portions on the same terms, giving the preference to those labourers who are most deserving? Occasional assistance, by way of loan, might also be required; but even the free occupation of the land in addition, would not be so great a charge upon the parish as the part payment of the farmers' labourers out of the poors'rates. A system more demoralising and more wicked could not be devised. By such means the true English feeling of independence has been debased, and the labourer transformed into a pauper. If this career of mischief is not stopped, the whole fabric of society will be sapped, and sooner or later the tottering edifice will sink into a ruin.

I need not advert to the various instances of the successful results of the experiments made; the Literary Gazette of 24th Dec. last contains one. It is not only in a pecuniary point of view, but for the vast moral effect which would be produced. Would such labourers, who had land to cultivate, be found among the hardened incendiaries? Having himself some property to protect, he would feel that he has a stake in the country.

The principal object I had in addressing this letter to you, was to suggest that great permanent good might be effected by bequests or donations of land being made by individuals to parishes, for the express purpose of being let in small portions to the labouring poor. Permission might be granted by the legislature, and if thought necessary, the number of acres limited.

Were the system of cottage gardening (for in time the piece of land would almost become a garden) once in progress, I feel no doubt but hundreds of kind-hearted and benevolent individuals would bestow land for so praiseworthy and noble an object. Yours, &c. 2t Jan. 1832. CHARLES M. WILLICH.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

Penny Publications......In our last we mentioned the Saturday Magazine, published by aid of the funds of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; a diversion of those funds, as we think, hardly justified by circumstances, and, like the trade of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge (in opposition to whose Penny Magazine it has been started), inimical, as far as it goes, to the fair trader on individual capital, and to the best interests of the country. Upon this matter, the Pulpit of last Thursday, No. 511, remarks, that the contents of the Saturday Magazine furnish additional force to the objection, inasmuch as, instead of serious subjects, such as might be expected, in furtherance of their avowed objects, from the Society whose subscriptions are thus applied, the publication in question is filled with ad captandum descriptions and pictures of Hindoo temples, extracts from natural history, notices of antiquities, drawings of dilapidated walls, statements of the population of the country, statistical tables, the properties of numbers, &c., with scarcely ever a sentence having a directly religious or even moral purport. In short, it is no more Christian Knowledge, than the Useful Society's is always Useful Knowledge; but, on the contrary, both merely commercial speculations, and consequently addressed to every popular topic of the day likely to allure the greatest number of purchasers.

To shew how injurious, in more ways than one, the system of improper competition is likely to prove, we have to mention another new penny appearance, called the Penny Cyclopedia, and evidently brought out in haste, to obtain posession of the market before the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge can produce their announced work of the same kind. We thus see, that where right is disregarded on one side, moral obligation will be forgotten by others; and the result will not only be disgraceful to the parties, but have an irresistible tendency to deteriorate our literature, and substitute crude and hasty compilations for what might really benefit the rising generation, and instruct the ignorant. The very first sentence in this Penny Cyclopedia is a mistake respecting the first letter of the alphabet, which it tells its readers has "three distinct characters of sound,"—whereas every grammarian knows it has four. Where is the sound in at, according to this definition? In other respects this performance must be improved, to have the claim all such things should have to extensive public encouragement.

We have also before us "The Schoolmaster," a good title, an Edinburgh threehap'orth, which candidly avows that it will be as political as it dare to be, without exposing itself to a stampoffice prosecution. Its first Number is, nevertheless, a very fair specimen of talent.

Another penny journal has also appeared in London, which calls itself "The Truth;" and of which we shall only say, that if it stick to its name, it will be very different from all its contemporaries!

THE TALMUD.

WHILE the spirit of inquiry which distinguishes the present age is seeking to discover and to explain the remains of antiquity in all parts of the world - to decipher the hieroglyphics of Egypt, and to explore the literature of

A twopenny one is, we see, announced by Mr. C. F. Partington, whose previous publications, often noticed in the Lit. Gaz., shew him to be well fitted for the task.

India and China, -the Germans are, we learn, engaged on a no less valuable work of antiquity. namely, a version into their own tongue of the Talmud. That such a work is at this moment of great importance, especially towards the study of theology and the Shemitish languages, is generally acknowledged by the learned. This translation of the whole Talmud Hierosolumitanum et Babylonicum, on which they have been engaged for many years, and hope to complete in about eight more, will be published, together with the text and the commentators Jarchi and Thosaphoth, in twenty-eight volumes folio. The text of the Mischna will be furnished with complete vowel-points, and the remaining text of the Gemara accurately divided by interpunction; etymology and explanations will be added to each page, and at the end of the several treatises the extract of Rabbenu Ascher. As a specimen and introduction to this great work, there has already appeared a Compendium of the Jerusalem and Babylonish Talmud, being a contribution to the history of the Israelites, &c. It contains the origin, language, and authenticity of the Talmud, the life of one of its principal authors, the geography of all the towns mentioned in it. &c. The object of this volume is to facilitate the study of the Talmud and Targum by an elementary book. It has been submitted to the judgment and received the approbation of several distinguished scholars in this branch of learning; and Dr. Bellermann has furnished a preface on the importance of the Talmud. A review of the work, by Professor Dr. Rosenmüller, has also appeared in the Leipsig Literary Journal.

PINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Collection de Gravures, &c. Collection of Engravings after the best Modern Painters. Engraved on steel, under the direction of Mr. C. Trommel, by Ed. Schuler, and other able artists. Part I. French School. London, Francis Nöldeke, agent of C. Jügel, Francfort. In recent numbers of the Literary Gazette, we have noticed, with expressions of our satisfaction, that means were increasing for the establishment of a more general and regular interchange between Germany and England in their several productions of literature, science, and the fine arts; and we hail the present work as a gratifying instance of the value of such immediate intercourse, and of the pleasure and information to be derived from its cultivation. This first number of a foreign publication brings us acquainted with the principal picwith the names of painters hitherto unknown to us, and with subjects so new that they may are eighteen plates, about four inches by three in breadth, and executed by MM. Baume Pernot, Prud'hou, Swebach (?), Bonnefond X. Leprince, Laurent, Demarne, Roehn, Dau. loux, Revoil, Baron Crespy Leprince, Pingrel Grenier(?), Drolling, and Robert. We have views in Scotland and Switzerland; sailors conscripts, banditti, confessionals, Savoyards Vendean soldiers, marches, and other similar scenes in daily life: but there are some piece scenes in daily life; but there are some pieces of more uncommon character. "A haples family," by Prud'hou, is very affecting; "The Man in the Iron Mask," by Laurent, would do well as a frontispiece to Lord Dover interesting Inquiry; and "La petite Bou deuse," by Dauloux, is very natural and pretty. The whole, though not engraved in the very finished manner to which we are accustomed in our better class of illustrated volumes, is as entertaining and instructive a production as could be laid on the table of the amateur or artist. The future parts promise us all the great galleries on the continent.

Views of Benares: Second Series. By James Princep, Esq. F.R.S. London, 1832. Smith, Bider, and Co.

THIS series consists of eleven lithographic plates, which afford a very characteristic and correct illustration of the sacred city of the Brahmins, so interesting to oriental mythology. The designs have much of the picturesqueness of the artist, with the fidelity of actual representation; and the execution on stone does great credit to those employed in transferring Mr. Princep's very clever drawings to that popular medium. Both the subject and the style deserve a high encomium.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

LINES

On a Painting, now on the Easel, by Wilkie, of two Monks, as seen by him in the Capuchin Convent at Toledo. LOOK on that picture! There the artist's skill Has told a tale which sinks into the soul-He has embodied an impressive thought, And given, in sombre hues which Rembrandt loved.

One powerful view of abstract misery, Filling the imagination with a scene Of suffering intense. It seems to breathe Unutterable traits of sin and crime.

Look on that picture! In his holy seat A venerable monk is seen; before him, Upon his knees, another, ghastly pale, Pours out the burning anguish of his heart; For bloodless cheeks and lips, and a wild eye, At once declare his agony. He groans, And supplicates that aged monk, and grasps His palsied arm, to urge with deeper power Hope of salvation. He himself a monk, A young one, led astray perchance by love, Or mad ambition, scorning all control.

Look on that picture! List, I think a voice,

Hollow and passionate, strikes upon my car, And seems to say-

" Father! there was a time_but now,

When guilt is labouring in my breast-When horror trembles on my brow-Can I, by idle fears imprest, Shrink from the trial, and allow Flames to consume me unconfest?

What urged my fate it matters not-How I was tempted, how I fell; My soul it owns the leprous spot, The mark of an accursed spell; Within I feel that damning blot Which demons bear who merit hell.

Still I might live and be beloved-If scorpion thoughts had lost their force; For who can smile, or seem unmoved,

When on the rack of keen remorse? And can my crimes remain untold? Ambition's slaves are bought and sold; And hate, unfit for monk to feel, May chance to seize the murderons steel; May hurl, all weltering in his blood, A rival midst the foaming flood. But she was free from guilt or stain-Her spirit is snatched to heaven again; Her angel-innocence exempt From withering sneer, repulse, contempt; Whilst I, deserving all, must never Feel joy again , but, lost for ever, Linger in bitterest wo, my name The lasting mark of scorn and shame. But, Father ! crush me not-let none Know whence proceeds the sinner's groan.

Then what am I?-Corrupt, abased, Yet basking in the world's esteem: Austere, devout as ever graced
These convent walls—'tis all a dream; Can truth upon this cheek be traced? Alas! I am not what I seem.

Yet there's a canker-worm within, Which eats and wastes the heart away; Though outward virtue hide the sin, That worm gnaws deeper every day.

And pangs are felt, though closely veiled; Though sheltered from suspicion's blast, The conscious soul is still assailed, And shudders at the guilty past."

Yes, look upon that picture! breathes it not, With all the force the pencil can bestow, A deep revealing of some secret crime? JAMES ATKINSON.

Kensington, Aug. 1st, 1832.

ARROTSFORD.

DAY springs from distant Ocean-calm and bright, [Tweed_ Winds, like a glittering snake, the lovely

Rock, dewy forest, catch the rosy light—
The early bee is humming o'er the mead O'er white-wall'd cots the smoke is trailing fair,

And the lark sings, and flowers scent all the The shepherd resting on his crook-the line Of Cheviot mountains, distant, dim, and [shine-The waters murmuring, as they flow and Towers, spires, the summer foliage glancing through,

Enchant the gazer, till he dream he be In Tempe's vale, or Pan's own Arcady.

And here stands Abbotsford -- romantic dome! Attracting more than all this lovely scene, For glorious Genius here hath made a home.

Its turrets whitening o'er the woods of green,

Slopes, larches, to the small forget-me-not, A magic breathe, and tell of fame and Scott.

How sweet to view the scenes of his own song, Reclined on this flower-damasked, shady knoll!

Castles that held the gay and knightly throng, Glens where, in silver, storied rivers roll, And, faint as time long lapsed, mark Cheviot fell,

And hear, in fancy, Melrose-Abbey bell. Peace, Abbotaford, to thee and him whose fame

Hath haloed thee with interest, ne'er to die! Link'd with his immortality, thy name With "Vaucluse" and the "Hermitage" shall vie; Pilgrims from southern land, and o'er the sea. When we are dust, shall fondly bow to thee. N. MICHELL.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

NOCTES WESTMONASTERIENSES .-- NO. L. "Come like shadows, so depart."-Macbeth.

WHO has not felt the soul-subduing power of the solemn stillness of a Gothic cathedral? The lofty columns, clustered in amity, soaring, as it were, to heaven itself; the groined roof, the "dim religious light," the wide and spacious loneliness, broken only by some monumental statue, starting, apparently, into life, half corporeal, half ghostlike; silence unbroken save by the footfall of some votary of antiquity as devout as yourself! Yes; you may talk of your Grecian and your Italian architecture, your Doric and your Tuscan; but give me the Gothic for the house of prayer. Whether it be association, or what other cause, I know not; but, with all my prejudices in favour of the classical as opposed to the Gothic style, the swelling vanity of St. Paul's affects me not, while the lofty antique majesty of Westminster Abbey bears away my spirit, and wraps it in a dreamy sadness, not painful, but pleasing: in such a place "heavenly pensive melancholy reigns." In such a mood I wended my way thither last Easter Monday, being the anniversary of Shakespeare's birth, which has been my habit for years long past. Oh, how I love the spot! Methinks, when I behold his monument, and see the cenotaphs of such petty geniuses around him—Is poetry gone by? has Nature lost her bard? It is to be hoped not: it is to be hoped that there still remains a spark of that Promethean fire which embodied forth a Hamlet, an Othello. On this occasion I wandered about as is my wont, meditating now on this and now on that. Evening drew on, but I took no note of it. I observed that the vergers, although I was well known to them, grew impatient of my stay. Poor souls, they knew not what I felt! At length one of them addressed me. "I beg pardon, Mr. said he; "but you know it is time to close the doors." "Well, but can't you let me stay a little longer? The moon will rise soon, and I wish to see our old abbey by her light; you know I love it as much as you do." "Ay, ay, sir, I am aware of that, but—" "But—but what? Come now, I am just in the humour, shut me up here; let me stay all night. What, do you hesitate? Here, go get me a bottle of claret and a light, and keep the rest yourself." "Why thank your honour; but then the dean —" "Pahaw, never mind the dean; there's not another silver head to run away with: besides, you will lock me in, you know. "Ay, that's true, sir; but then, you know, the dean —' "Hang the dean! Here's another sovereign for you: do as I bid you."

* The well-known retreats of Petrarch and Rousseau.

"Thank you, sir! God bless you, sir! I'll do any thing you wish. But would not your honour like a bit of bread and cheese, or some sandwiches, and a blanket; you'll be main hungry and cold in the morning, I think."
"Thank you, John (his name is John), for your kind thoughtfulness: do as you like; only be as quick as you can, and leave me to myself." He then departed on his charitable errand to supply me with necessaries for my watch, which are in every respect desirable in an English spring. During his absence I roamed about from one part of the abbey to another. The shades of evening were rapidly lengthening. I felt an indescribable sensation of awe, almost amounting to horror. Not that I am by any means superstitious; but so it was. The ashes of the great lay around me - the mouldering remains of men who, in their day, were the ruling spirits of the age — of men who wielded the destinies of empires—of men whose mighty minds make their degenerate descendants look up to them as to gods-the statesman, the warrior, the poet, the man of science, nobles, sovereigns, are gathered here, undistinguished save by the pomp of their monuments. Reflections of this kind led me into a vein of soliloquising. " Such," said I, in the words of the immortal bard whose anniversary it was - " Such is the state of man!" Alas! for human greatness! to this we come at last.

"We strut and fret our hour upon the stage, And then are heard no more!"

"Yes." I exclaimed, arresting my steps before the monument of Sir Isaac Newton, "can science, can humanity boast of genius greater than thine? can—" I was proceeding in this grave tone (very consistent, my gentle reader will say, with the discoverer of gravity), when my excellent friend, John the verger, entered with all appliances, and every thing, good soul, that he thought would make me comfortable during my vigil: by the by, it was no fast.

"I think," says John, "sir, you had better rest yourself in St. Edward's Chapel, in the coronation chair." "Very good," said I; "much obliged for your attention. Apropos. there are two chairs there, so come along with me and help me out with my supper." "Thank you, sir; you're very kind, sir; I am sure I would do any thing to oblige you, sir." "I am sure you would"—when you can get any thing by it, thought I. "This way, sir; this way: take care of this step, it is rather broken." "Oh, never mind me; I've climbed many a rock in my time where I had no more footing than (excuse the bull) I could set the tip of my toe on.'

We reached at last the "point proposed," and found ourselves very comfortably seated in the coronation chairs. Our supper and claret were soon despatched: the latter not being a liquor potent enough for the verger, I had the better part to myself. "John," said I, "it In the 72d regiment, or said I. " it begins to be rather chilly; I wish I had some brandy, to keep out cold and cholera." John looked at me with a queer twinkle in his eye. "Ah, sir," said he, "I thought you'd find your wishy-washy claret rather a cold liquor, your washy-washy time! Taket a could reduce a could reduce a solution of the pouch. Here it is!" "Thank ye; that's very provident of you, very kind indeed. Give me a glass, and then we'll say good night, for I wish to be alone." This matter was soon despatched; and at length, to my great comfort, was left alone, without fear of interruption till the following morning. It was now nearly ten o'clock. Nothing could equal the sublimity of the scene which met my eyes on going into the nave. The moon had by this time risen high in the heavens, and showered in her silvery beams, almost animating every sculptured form they touched. The silence, the hour, all was overpowering: not a sound could I hear save my own footfall echoing through the many-columned aisles and recesses of the abbev. I wandered about for some time, almost worshipping the monuments of all the great men around me, my mind rapt in a state of ecstasy which I would not have exchanged for countless treasures. At length, however, nature asserted her prerogative, and sleep insensibly stole upon me. I repaired to my quarters, the coronation chair, and wrapping my cloak and eke John's blanket around me, incontinently fell into a slumber.

I dream? I know not; but on a sudden I started from my lair. The abbey rang with a thousand voices pealing forth the Te Deum. Was I awake? Yes. I saw every thing around me; I heard distinctly the majestic tones of the organ. What can this be? thought I. There was a blaze of light, but I could not see from what source it proceeded. I rushed into the chancel: it was crowded. By whom? By men and women of all ages, in all sorts of costume from the year 1000 downwards, all engaged in earnest devotion. I stood astounded.

What could this mean? In my agitation I jostled against one grave individual, and, as I fancied, stuck my elbow into his ribs; but there was no resistance: he smiled on me, and glided away-it was not walking.

My amazement was unbounded. I attempted to address the first I encountered, but my voice failed me. At length a short, busy-looking gentleman bustled up to me, and without any ceremony said, "Mr. —, I know why you are here: you are perhaps surprised to find me here. I'll tell you the reason. You are perhaps not aware who is speaking to you." "Indeed I am not." "I was David Garrick. I-" "Mr. Garrick, allow—" "Nay, no ceremony; I'll be your cicerone to-night, and let you into all the secrets of the denizens of the abbey.'

The communication of Mr. Garrick, however, and the result, my kind readers will have the goodness to expect in a future paper. 0. C. W.

A MILITARY REMINISCENCE.

DURING the blockade and siege of Gibraltar, in the year 1779, &c., there were in the garrison seven regiments of British infantry, three regiments of Hanoverians, a battalion of artillery, and a company of engineers; in all above five thousand soldiers, and between two and three hundred officers. Amidst so many officers, of different ages and of different countries, it may be supposed there were not a few curious and eccentric characters. I have preserved odd

In the 72d regiment, or Manchester volunteers, in which I was an ensign, there was an officer, an honest, worthy, but blundering Irishman (Lieut. Macnamarra), who had, to perfection, the natural habit of making "bulls." Mac had one day the command of ragged-staff guard, which being a central situation between the New Mole and the Old Mole, and close to the water's edge, had a ladder of ropes placed at the top of the line wall for the convenience of boats coming from or returning to the ships in the bay. This ladder was always drawn up at sunset, and fixed again at day-break. It happened that Lieut. Browne, of the Brilliant frigate, had dined at the mess of the 12th regiment, and having drank freely, had forgotten the hour, until he heard the evening gun fire: greatly alarmed, he instantly quitted the table, and hurried to ragged-staff guard, where the ship's boat had been waiting for him above an hour; -but he came too late, the ladder of ropes had been drawn up some minutes. What was to be done? He applied to Lieut. Macnamarra (to whom, by the by, he was an entire stranger) to fix the ladder of ropes again, that he might descend; but Mac told him it was contrary to garrison order, and that he dared not do it. Mac, however, at length yielded to the earnest entreaties of Browne, who descended into the boat and rowed off: but the one had neglected to ask for, and the other to give, the "naval parole." The boat had advanced but a few yards, when it was challenged by the How long I remained so I cannot tell. Did sentry on the line wall. "Who comes there?" "A naval officer." "Give the naval parole." "I don't know it; I am Lieut. Browne, of the Brilliant frigate." "I don't care who you are," replied the sentry; "but if you don't put back, I will fire into your loat." There was nothing else to be done but to return. In the morning the circumstance was reported to the governor (General Elliott) and the commanding officer afloat, Captain (afterwards Sir Roger) Curtis; and both Lieut. Browne and Lieut. Macna-

Lieut. Macnamarra wrote several petitions to the governor, but received no answer, and was in a state of great distress, walking up and down his apartment, and repeating, "If ever I do a good turn again, may the d—l burn Barnard Macnamarra." At last, on the seventh day, Major Harbrugh, of the 39th regiment, was sent to him with a message from the governor. "Well, what does he say?" was the eager inquiry. "He says, that whatever the navy do by Lieut. Browne, you shall share the same fate." "Then," exclaimed Mac, clapping his hands together in great agitation, "I wish the rascal may be hanged!" However, as they were both excellent men and officers, they were severely reprimanded and forgiven.

MUSIC.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The happy Mountaineer. G. Linley, Esq. Davids.

SPRIGHTLY and pretty—what the young ladies call a pet; meaning thereby a favourite, and not a tune to be rejected in a fit of ill humour.

She left us when the Spring buds. Linley. Rates

A CONTRAST, and a very sweet pathetic ballad: we like it much.

I saw her at the Fancy Fair. E. Smith; Composer J. Barnett. Goulding and D'Almaine. A NICE air; but for the song, it is but a fancy (a)fair.

Sterne's Maria. Composed by V. Novello. Novello.

WE regret to see a composer and arranger of such decided talent suffer his name to be tacked to such trash.

The Pleiad. By Mrs. Steele. Monro and May. WE could hardly recommend a prettier little piece for young performers.

The Grand National Reform March. By a Young Lady! and dedicated to Brougham and Vaux! Dale. Lord

WE hope pilfering and stealing are no part of the Whole Bill: if so, we are glad to see the matter is brought under the cognizance of the Lord High Chancellor. The Grand National Reform March is, with very little variation, taken from Bochsa's French March for the harp. O naughty young lady!

DRAMA. HAYMARKET.

On Monday last a crowded house assembled to witness the first performance of the Hunchback at this theatre. It was completely successful, and added another to the long and various list of Farren's dramatic triumphs; for he was the great support and attraction of the piece. At Covent Garden every other performer was thrown into the shade by Miss Kemble's Julia. When on the stage she engrossed your whole notice; and when off, your memory was more present than your attention. But at the Havmarket, Master Walter became what appears to us to have been the author's intention he should be, (though the actor failed to develop it), the leading and striking character in the piece. Farren's conception was morally beautiful, and his execution almost perfect. He delineated a man full of kindly affections, but warped and turned aside from the very beginning of life; flying to solitude for a resource, marra were placed under arrest. Knowing yet, finding it insufficient, returning to more that, if tried, they must be inevitably broke, active scenes full of the eccentricities he had contracted when alone. At length all his plans, | none of the sublimated horrors upon which too | some ten flashed in the pan-the roars of laughhopes, projects, concentrate in one beloved object, his child. He watches over and fences her happiness with every possible precaution; is disappointed; but—that true sign of love despairs not. He makes allowances; says, "Try the heart of my daughter by some higher test than a moment of passing vanity," and is rewarded by the strength of affection and character which that daughter evinces when they are really called forth by an appeal to her better feelings. Knowles's acting did not do his own creation justice, -Farren's did; and Master Walter's character is one of the most original and interesting in our modern drama. The only fault in its ideal has been well pointed out in a fine piece of criticism in the New Monthly Magazine,—" Would not the fact of Master Walter's having, in spite of his back, won a wife's affections, be quite sufficient to assure him of the probability of winning a daughter's?" The slightest allusion to a want of affection in his wife would have put this difficulty entirely aside, and the picture would have been made but the more touching. We estimate too lightly that which we do not suffer; but let any one think what it is to have, from earliest infancy, a mark set upon us which separates us from our kind, -to have the suspicion for ever flitting across our mind that we are the objects of disdain,-and no one can say but that the distrust of the Hunchback is true to nature. Among the scenes in which Farren was singularly effective, we would mention the one where he schools Clifford on his abrupt rupture with Julia; here you felt the mental superiority. Again, his interviews with his daughter were full of tenderness; and the way in which he kept recurring to, "Julia, you have a father," was exquisite. Of the rest of the performance we shall say but little; comparisons are odious, though sometimes inevitable. Miss Phillips looked very pretty in Julia, but dressed badly,-far too mo-There was much very feminine and dern. touching in her performance altogether. Miss Taylor had her original part, and sustained it with great spirit; though Mr. Vining acquitted himself very feebly in Modus. We shall conclude with a few words of praise to Webster, who looked the fop Lord, and played him well. The evening closed with the spirited farce of Second Thoughts, —very good; and with John of Paris, —very bad. Miss Turpin has fine eyes, and a sweet voice; but the singing strength at this theatre is very small: all the operatic attempts—for we cannot call them operas—have been wretched.

ENGLISH OPERA.

Ox Tuesday the Conscript's Sister, another new drama, was produced at the Olympic; and, through the excellent acting of Miss Kelly, Miss H. Cawse, Mr. Perkins, and J. Reeve, was perfectly successful. The music, composed by Mr. T. Millar, is exceedingly sweet; and Miss H. Cawse, in particular, sang the airs allotted to her very charmingly. The plot rests on the expedient of a sister (Hortense, Miss Kelly) assuming male attire to save her brother (François, the Conscript, Perkins) from disgrace; he being, in consequence of a fright she gave him in his boyhood, incapacitated by nervous tremors from sustaining the character of a soldier. Henrictte (the waiting - maid, Miss H. Cawse) adopts a similar disguise with her mistress, and follows her sweetheart (Pierre Cadet, J. Reeve) to the wars; where, however, the coward recovers his self-possession, and conducts himself most heroically. In this the parties forthwith tried to commence firing of a portrait of this celebrated republican genepiece there is much of touching situation, and at each other; but out of the dozen muskets ral, hid under a later work by H. Van Vliet, many of its congeners depend. It is therefore altogether more pleasing, and, being admirably performed in the principal parts, affords much gratification to the audience. We observe, with regret, that some of our contemporaries animadvert, as we think too severely, on the management of this theatre for not bringing out more regular operas, fully cast, for the encouragement of a national school in music-For ourselves, we cannot forget what Mr. Arnold achieved in this respect, till a great calamity befell his own theatre and property; and though we are no friends to the melodramatic system, when carried to any engrossing extent, we do feel that much forbearance is due to that gentleman, both out of gratitude for what he has done, and consideration for his present position, when, striving to keep his company together until a new and eligible house is prepared for them, he exerts himself to supply us with constant novelty, though not motherexactly in the line of his better efforts, time and place suiting his own judgment and fine musical tastes.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Strand Theatre, August 9.—The angels in the Loves thereof ascended on a nondescript piece of green canvass, resembling, if any thing, a gigantic cabbage. Its appearance exciting considerably more merriment than was intended, it has been, I find, withdrawn on all subsequent representations.

scene-shifters form part of the corps dramatique, or that to shift the scenes be part of the engagement of the actors, I know not; but certain it is, that every change on this occasion was effected by the manual agency of Spaniards, Peruvians, Poles, Tartars, &c. They occasionally join half a palace and half a prison, &c.; and if the audience object to the anomaly, they re-adjust it in the midst of a scene with the utmost sang froid. In Mazeppa, Mrs. Pope's dress as a Polish princess, is a scrupulously exact copy Ragusan peasantess.

Coburg, August 15.-I went to see Richard the Third-literally to see it, for to hear it was next to impossible. Amid the din and tumult in the house I caught several happy blunders on the stage. One of the best was Stanley's hailing Richmond with __ " Long live Henry the Second, king of England!" instead of Henry the Seventh. Did Shakspeare intend Richard, in his dream, to be haunted by the frightful forms of carpenters and scene-shifters? if not, let the Coburg stage-manager look to it. In the after-piece, Christophe, two of the actors were engaged in a sort of pugilistic struggle, wherein they scrambled forward to the footlights, and the act-drop falling, they were completely shut out on the audience side thereof. Whether from ignorance of the fact, or a determination to turn the accident to account, I know not; but they continued pommelling each other, and vainly endeavouring to force each other off the stage for several minutes, to the unspeakable delight of the house, who had just before so resolutely drowned, by their tumult, the language of Shakspeare.

Olympic, August 21. - In the Conscript's Sister there was one of the drollest stage-battles I ever witnessed. Half-a-dozen men, representing one army, first coolly stationed them-selves on a hill; half-a-dozen more, representing another army, straggled on the stage; and ter which followed each failure answering all the purpose of a report. The armies then walked off in different directions to see what was the matter with their guns. During the whole of the encounter somebody kept thumping or kicking a band-box outside, to give the audience an idea of volleys of cannon; and Mr. Baker, as commander-in-chief of the action, stood on an eminence, looking through a piece of pasteboard meant for a telescope, and winking and flinching whenever a gun went off or flashed.

Strand Theatre, August 21 .- I found Mrs. Waylett acting Clari. She sang "Oh no we never mention her;" but how think you she in-troduced it? "Alas," she said, "I will return to my wretched and forsaken mother: she will remember me; for if she loves as I have loved, she never can forget." After this preface, the following point was most tellingly applicable to the condition of the said wretched and forsaken

"They tell me she is happy now, The gayest of the gay," &c.

The father, in the episodal play, instead of the "balm and comfort," called his daughter "the calm and bomfort of his old age."

THE PAPYRO-MUSEUM.

In a former No, we noticed among the most attractive exhibitions of the season, that entitled the Papyro-Museum, and possessed of a very novel and interesting character. It seems to have survived its contemporaries; and, having Astley's, August 13 .- Whether it is that the enjoyed several opportunities of giving it a more minute examination, we are again induced to recommend it to public notice. The multitude of little figures of which it consists are wonderfully clever—a perfect epitome of action and costume. Nor ought we to forget, in praising the ingenuity and talent displayed on these remarkable productions, which form a paper world in miniature, that a yet nobler motive originated the design, and cheered the fair artists through all the patient application necessary for its completion. Charity has here anoof the well-known coloured lithograph of the ther blessing added to the Shakesperian catalogue; for it is blessed in adding a very delightful spectacle to the ordinary circle of our London recreations, and of affording an innocent source of gratification devoted to the best of purposes. But the merits of the performance need no adventitious aid, when viewed simply as works of art. The variety of the subjects, the perfect truth and accuracy with which they are copied from nature, and the ability with which they are grouped and finished, are quite enough to interest a hundred times more visitors than, we fear, the dulness of the year, where not troubled with politics, has yet permitted to see our beautiful and favourite Papyro-Museum.

VARIETIES.

M. Champollion's MSS. - We learn with pleasure, that the numerous MSS. left by the late M. Champollion are about to be edited for publication: we trust they are in adequate hands, and consequently likely to throw farther light on the remains of ancient Egypt.

Austria .- A catalogue of 5000 books relating to Austria has been published at Vienna, and a continuation is promised of this Bibliotheca

Original Portrait of General Lambert .-A letter has just appeared in Trewman's Exeter Flying Post, giving an account of the discovery and strongly resembling that engraved, in peared at Leipsig, and rather disappointed the Birch's Collection, by Houbraken. It is in expectation excited by the terms of its anthe possession of a Mr. John Force, and was, no doubt, concealed at the restoration, when the turbulent original was particularly exempted from the act of indemnity. The writer of the letter supposes that this likeness, which is Robert Walker, a contemporary and successful imitator of Vandyck, and hidden within five years of its execution, about 1653.

Madame Malibran, the French journals tell us, married to the admirable violinist De Bériot. has set out for Naples viá Rome. We hear that she is likely to appear next season at Covent Garden.

French Royal Medals .- We fear that many of the most rare of these remains of antiquity have perished in the crucible, wedges of gold having been found in several places, supposed to be the product of these precious memorials.

Aerostation.—Several of the French illumi-nati are busy with experiments for the direction of balloons in the air. MM. Lenox and Leberrier have tried their plan near Paris; and the Academie is about to give its attention to the subject.

Music .- It is said that the effect of the orchestra in the Parisian opera has been greatly improved in consequence of an invention of the leader, M. Habeneck, who has devised a plan for marking the time simultaneously at the wings on the right and left.

Coquetry. — Coquetry is the daughter of Gaiety, and the mother of Mortification. — Le Cercle.

Theatre burnt.—A great portion of the theatre of Baden, Switzerland, was destroyed by fire on the 8th of July. The piece concluded with a sham fire, but the theatre ended with a real one.

Rats.—A learned society has proposed for its prize-question this year, "What is the best means of destroying rats?" Unless the subject is political, one might have a chance for the premium in answering, " By encouraging the breed of cats."

M. Elie de Beaumont, celebrated for his investigation of mountain formations, has been appointed to the chair of geology in the College of France, vacant by the death of Cuvier.

Hearts of Criminals. A correspondent says, "As an addition to the list of criminals mentioned in your Gazette, in whom a peculiar formation of the heart has been observed, I would beg to add the name of Smithers. On dissecting his body at the London University, the heart was found to be on the right side, and the spleen and other viscera on the opposite to that, which is unusual."

Vesuvius. - The Italian journals mention a violent eruption of Vesuvius on the 29th ult. We have not heard particulars, nor whether it continues.

Phenomenon.—A Lausanne journal describes a curious phenomenon which occurred there on the 1st. At noon, a flame, about six inches in height, issued from the pavement of the Place de la Palud, near the fountain, and was followed by a thick black vapour and smell of tar. On digging several feet to ascertain the cause of this appearance, the ground was found to be firm and compact.

Goethe. — Dr. Eckermann is to be the editor of Goethe's posthumous works, as directed by the will of that distinguished man. Falk's book on his private life and manners has apnouncement.

Poet's Expedition M. Alphonse de Lamartine has just left France on a poetical tour. He has freighted, at his own expense, L'Alceste brig of three hundred tons, commanded by Captain Le Blanc. He takes with him his wife and their only daughter, Mlle. Julie, who is just ten years old. He intends first to visit Constantinople, thence to proceed to Jerusalem, Palmyra, and Balbec, if the Arabs will allow him; it being his aim to pass into Egypt, and ascend the Nile as far as Thebes. M. de Lamartine is to winter at Smyrna, and in the spring see the isles of the Archipelago, and return home through Italy. "Such," he observes, " is the plan of my long and adventurous voyage. I do not calculate upon writing; I go to seek a purely personal inspiration on this great theatre of the religious and political events of the ancient world; I go to read, before I die, the finest pages of the material creation. If poetry should find them fertile in new inspirations and images, I shall content myself with gathering them into the silence of my thought, to colour a little the literary future which may remain for me."

the softness and harmony of ——'s poetry." Yes," said his auditor, "he has boned our language."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Mr. Valpy is preparing a new edition of Shakspeare, uniform with the works of Scott and Byron, with the whole of the 165 Illustrations originally published in Boydell's edition.

dell'i edition.

A full-length Portrait of Earl Grey, from a Picture by F. R. Say, is announced.

A Series of original Novels and Romances, in monthly volumes, is about to be announced, with the general title of the Library of Romance, edited by Leitch Ritchle and Thomas Roscoe.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Maitland's Facts and Decuments respecting the Albigenses and Waldesses, 8vo. 16s. bds.—Taylor's Month in London, 19mo. & hf.-bd.—Anecdotes of Animals, 16mo.
2s. 6d. hf.-bd.—Hamard's Debates, 3d Saries, vol. X.
2d Vol. Session 1831-9, royal 8vo. 1f. 10s. bds.; 1l. 13s. 6d.
hf.-bd.—Sketches of the Edinburgh Clergy, 8vo. 7s. 6d.
calf gilt; 6s. sewed.—Edmonds' Philosophic Alphabet, 8vo. 6s. bds.—Burtt's Exemple Naccenaria, 18mo. 1s. 6d.
sheep.—Munro's Gaelle Primer, 19mo. 2s. cloth.—Roscommon's Letters for the Press, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—The Cotton-Spinner's Assistant, 8vo. 9s. cloth.—Astrologian's Guide in Horary Astrology, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bds.—Fernali's
United States of America, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—M'Gavin's Reply to Smith's Dialogues on Faith, &c., 12mo. 2s. cloth.
—Plain Sermons, 18mo. 5s. bds.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

August.	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 16	From				29-90	to	29-98
Friday 17		40.	• •	74-	30-04	••	30-10
Saturday · · 18		47.	••	71.	30-00	• •	29.90
Sunday 19		48.	••	71.	29-73	••	29.79
Monday . 20		47.	••	73.	29-96	• •	29-99
Tuesday · · 21		47.	••	71.	29.87	••	29.76
Wednesday 22		52.	••	69.	29-62	• •	29-73
Wind C W

Wind, S.W.

Except the 16th, 17th, and 19th, generally cloudy, with frequent light showers of rain; thunder in the afternoon of the 22d.

frequent ingin and the first of the 22d. Rain fallen, 3 of an inch.
On the evening of the 22d, from 10 till half-past 11, a steady northern light, from which coruscations proceeded for a few minutes before and after 11, darting up to a height of about 3%.
The generally favourable weather of the past two weeks has enabled the farmer to secure with much case a more productive harvest than has been for many years.

Edmonton.

Edmonton.

S10 27' 39'' N.

Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

40° Our sheet to-day is of a very miscellaneous character, thanks to the dulness of the times; which we trust will continue long enough to enable us to pay off a quantity of arrears accumulated during the more busy (though not very busy) publishing and Society-sitting season.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BETTISON'S LIBRARY, Hawley Square, Margata, with the Dwelling-House, and extensive Wine and Brandy Vaulta.

This well-known Freehold Property is now for sale by Private Contract. The various Branches of Business that have been successfully carried on for Thirty-two Years by the present Proprietor, are as follow:—A Circulating Library of the first class, and fully established in the Stationery, Jewierly, Plata, and almost every Description of a sure, Goods. The Dwelling-House is attached to also mained for There Rooms on a Floor, with every located in highly calculated (if required by a being a concented in highly calculated (if required by a being a concented in highly calculated (if required by a being a concent of the second part of the secon

None but Principals will be treated with.

Just published, containing 17 highly finished Engravings, Part I. price 4s. of WESTMORELAND, CUMBERLAND, DURHAM, and NORTHUMBERLAND ILLUSTROMORELAND, CHARLED, displaying their splendid Lake Scenery, Seats, &c. From Original Drawings by T. Allom, &c.; with Historical and Topographical Descriptions by Thomas Rose.

"It impresses us with the notion that we have never before seen by thing to truly chesp—cheap in the inviting sense of the seen by thing to truly chesp—cheap in the inviting sense of the seen by the control of the property of

MECHANICAL PERSPECTIVE; or,
Descriptions of a Pocket Instrument for Sketching freely and accurately from Nature; and of a Machine for Brawing in Perspective from Cround Plant, &c.
By PRAS BONALDS, Bac.

Seld by R. Hanter, St. Fault's Charebyard: Taylor, Architectural Library, Holbern, &c.
These Instruments differ essentially from the Camera Lucida, inasmuch as that they have no relation with artificially refracted and reflected light. They may be seen at Mr. Cary's, 181, Strand, and at Messrs. Holzapffel's, 64, Charing Cross.

MUSIC.

"T SAW HER at the FANCY FAIR." It is impossible to describe the semastion created in the fashionable world by the production of this flore. It is the same that excise so much attention at the Fancy Fair at the Swrrey Zoological Gardens last week, where upwards of 1000 copies were disposed of Barnett, the composer, in this beautiful Ballad appears to have eclipsed all his former productions; and both the Poetry and Melody have received the highest degree of praise from more than 100 Newspapers, provincial and metropolitan. It has been introduced in the Court Circle, and as the Neblity's Concerts, with the most distinguished success.

Leadon: Rathly Prowers, and Co., Cheapside; and to be had at every respectable Music Shop in England, Ireland, and Scotland.

THE highly successful MUSIC in "THE CONSCRIPT'S SISTER," will be published on Monday, at Hawer's Music Warehouse, 335, Strand.

Where may be had,

The whole of Mr. Millar's Vocal Compositions. The Pectry (written expressly for him), by the Right Honourable Lord Ashtown, T. H. Bayly, Reade, Gent, Halpin, Harding, &c.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

In 1 handsome vol. poet 8vo. dedicated to Samuel Rogers, &c.

RYANT'S POEMS.

Edited by WASHINGTON IRVING, Esq.

"Bryant's gentus combits in a tender pensiveness, a moral melancholy benedicated to the state of the Creator. His poeting plous in the felt omnipresence of the Creator. His poeting over the state of the s

Mrs. Child's Frugal Housewift.

Price 2s. boards, or 2s. 6d. bound, with an Allowance to the Nobility and Gentry who are desirous of distributing the Book among their poor Neighbours,

THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated

THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated to those who are not ashamed of Economy.

By Min. CHILD,
Author of "The Mother's Book," "Girl's Own Book," &c.
"Beconomy is the pose man's revenue—extravagence the rich man's ruin."
The 9th edition, newly arranged by the Author, to which is new added, Hints to Persons of moderate Fortane, &c. This little work is reprinted and published at the suggestion of a highly distinguished Member of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.
London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Hailes, Piccadiliy; Bowdery and Kerby, Osford Street; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and W. F. Waksman, Dublin.

Prom a picture belonging to the Earl of Bradford, in which Cromwell and Lambert are on the same canvass, by Walker.

Art. I. Gesche's Works—II. Geology and Climatology of Asia.

—III. Free Trade—IV. The Bytannine Mistorians—V. American Foery—VI. Thierry's History of the Gauis—VII. The German Umr. Liberal Fress—VIII. Douville's Travels in Contral Afras—IX. Thorvaliden the Sculptor—X. American Currency and Banking—XI. to XV. Critical Skatches of German and FrenchBoch—Miscellaneous Litterary Intelligence from France, German, Inhy, Poland, Russia, and of Works son Oriental Literature—Six Mater Scoti's Farewell to this Renders, and M. de Lamtrisc's Reply—List of the principal New Works peblished on the Continent from May to July inclusive.

Published by Treuttel and Wurtz, and Richter, 30, Soho Square; and Bizek, Young, and Young, 3, Tavistock Street; Trettel and Würtz, Paris and Bizseburg; and sold by R. Cadell and T. Clart, Edinburgh; J. Camming, and Hodges and Smith, Dublin.

Of whom max bahad

Of whom may be had, The preceding Numbers of this interesting and popular Journal Nos. I. to X. price 7c. 6d. each. No. I. to X. price 7s. 6d. each; Nos. XI. to XVIII. 6s No. XX. will be published in October.

Part Twenty-Ninth, price 6s. and Vol. V. Part II. price 18s. of the ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA, 7th

ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA, 7th edition.

Edited by PROFESSOR NAPIER.

This half rolume comparises a number of entirely new and interesting Articles and Treatises in History, Biography, Geography, the Arts and Sciences, and is illustrated with Pifferen Engraving. The History of Britain is brought down, under that head, to the completion of the great measure of Parliamentary Reform. Among the new Biographical Articles are those on Dr. Lawrence Borne, Dr. Thomas Brown, Lord Byron, Buchanan, Burman, Bursa, and Calderwood. In the Article on Buenos Ayres, there is I fall Ristorical and Scatistical View of that important Division of beath America, drawn from original sources of Information of the Article on Burtung Parameters of Information of the Article on Burtung and View of the Company of the Co Dictionary of English Synonyms, for Schools.

The 9d edition, enlarged, with an Index of every Word, price 2s. in cloth,

THE WRITER'S and STUDENT'S THE WRITER'S and STUDENT'S ASSISTANT; a Compendious Dictionary of English Sympus, readering the more common Words and Phrases in the English Language into the more eigant and scholastic; and presents at one view select for objectionable Words; a choice of the most appropriate from an asserted variety; and the oppertunity of consulting occasional concise Notes, interspersed threephoot the whole, pointing out, in a familiar way, the disincise between such of the words as are frequently, in error, ted spronymously.

"This may be characterised as a very useful Hitle abridgment, via considerable improvements, of Mr. Crabbe's more elaborate war to Spompus. It is calculated as once to accelerate literary cosposition, and to assist in establishing a correct and elegant title, both is peaking and writing." Conciliences' Ragessia.

Whitaker, Treacher, and Co., Ave Maria Lene.

On Health and Longevity. In 18me. 3d edition, enlarged, price 9s. beards

In 18me. 3d edition, enlarged, price 3s. beards,

CURE METHODS of IMPROVING

HEALTH and PROLONGING LIFE, by regulating the blet and Regimen. Embracing all the most approved principles if still and Longevity, and exhibiting the remarkable Fower of prowe Food, Wine, Air, Exercise, &c. in the Cure of obstinate throat Diseases, as well as in promoting Health and Long Life.
To which are added, an Account of the Art and excellent Effects a Training for Health, Rules for reducing Corpulence, and Maxiss for the Blitons and Nervens, &c. Illustrated by Cases.

BY T. J. GRAHAM, M.D.

Author of the "Modern Domestic Medicine."

"We are disposed to think it the most useful and rational vort of thind we have met with. It contains many hints form to thind we have met with. It contains many hints form to thind we have met with. It contains many hints form to the still proposes is unquestionable; and we warmly recomled it. It is intelligent, practical, and highly interesting."

Fire History Gasette, Sept. 1837.

"That men of all habits will derive information from it, calculated to increase their comfort and extend their days, is firmly our caviction." Existingly Abstract, Jan. 1839.

London: Published by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers'
Court; said by all Booksellers.

However with Emptid. Notes.—In 870, price 11s. in boards.

Worse with English Notes.—In Svo. price 11s. in boards, UINTI HORATII FLACCI OPERA, with Annotations in English, consisting chiefly of the be-upin Commentaries condensed, and of Selections from Desries and others. To which is added, the Delphin Ordo in the Estra.

nargin.

By the Rev. H. PEMBLE, B.A.
Formerly of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge.
Landon: Printed for Longman and Co.; T. Cadell; B. Williams; Baldwin and Co.; J. Richardson; Rivingions; J. M. Richardson; J. Booker; J. Dancan; Hamilton and Co.; J. Sonter: Whittaker and Co.; Sherwood and Co.; Simplin and Co.; E Hodgion; Cowie and Co.; Seeley and Co.; Poole and Co.; Blooking; Cowie and Co.; Seeley and Co.; Redinbergh.

COLLECTANEA LATINA; or, Easy Construing Lessons from the best Latin Authors, for the Use of the Junior Classes, and of Persons who wish to become their own Instructors.

their own Instructors.

By the Rev. W. ALLEN, M.A.

London: Printed for Whittaker and Co.; Longman and Co.;

Hamilton and Co.; J. Seuter; and Baker and Sen, Southampton.

Price Six Shillings, No. XIX. of

THE FOREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Art. I. Geology and Climatology of Asia.

-III. Free Trade—IV. The Byzantine Historians—V. American Petry—IV. Therery, History of the Gaule—VII. The

Art. I. Geology and Climatology of Asia.

-III. Free Trade—IV. The Byzantine Historians—V. American Petry—IV. Therery, History of the Gaule—VII. The

By the same Author, A Key to the Exercises, 2s.

Phædri et Esopi Fabulæ Selectæ, ad usum am accommodate. 4th edition, 2s.

roum accommodate. 4th edition, 2s.
Latin Grammar, grounded upon Lilly's and e Eton Grammar. 2d edition, 2s. 64.
Grammatical Figures; or, a System of Rheric. For the Use of the Senior Forms in Grammar Schools.
edition, 1s. 64.
Electronic Proteins of Considers Conference

Electronic Proteins and Considers Conference

Considers Conference Considers Conference

Considers Conference Co

sa estition, 1s. od.
Florilegium Poeticum, ex Operibus Ovidii, Tibull, Properti, Martialla, &c. Ia usum Tirenum castlesimd cură selectum. Nova editio, 3s.
Whittater, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

DODSLEY'S ANNUAL REGISTER (a genuine Set), complete from 1758 to 1830, inclusive, 4 vols. half-bound russia, 18.

Beauties of England and Wales (with the Introductory Volume), a Subscriber's Set, fine old impressions of the numerous Plates, elegantly half-bound russia, 26 vels. 121. 122. Philosophical Magazine (Tilloch's), complete, m 1798 to 1896, inclusive, half-bound (neat), calf and gilt, Monthly Review, complete from 1749 to 25, with Indices (5 vois.) uniformly bound in calf, a remarkably ise Set, 194 vols. 184. 185.

tine Set, 198 vols. 161. 162. Quarterly Review, complete, 1809 to 1831, neatly half-bound caif (new), 43 vols. 71. 72. Hume and Smollett's England (Scholey's edition), large paper, bound caif extra, 16 vols. 107al 8vo. numerous Engravings, 61. 184. 64.

Hogarth (Cook's), the first edition, 1800, royal folis, russia, with a 4to. vol. of Description, Anecdotes, &c. 1 vols. 71. 74.

La Harpe, Abrégé de l'Histoire Générale des Voyages (best edition), a fine copy, calf, gilt leeves, 38 vols. Plates, price 54. by.

Monthly Magazine, 1796 to 1827, 50 vols.

Chalmers's Poets, 25 vols. royal 8vo. boards,

Sismondi, Histoire des la Républiques Itannes (last edition), 16 tomes, 8vo. set nnes (last edition), 16 tomes, 8vo. sewed, 44. 8s. Encyclopædia Britannica (3d edit.), 20 vols.

Burke's Works (last edition), 16 vols. 8vo. ards (new), 4l. 10s.

Apply to J. Brumby, Beckseller, 14, Marylebone Street, Golden Square, near Warwick Street.

3d edit. improved, price 4s. 6d. bound and lettered, COMPANION to the GLOBES: A COMPANION to the GLOBES; comprising an Astronomical Introduction, the various Problems that may be performed by the Globes, preceded by the subjects to which they refer with numerous Examples, recapitalisty Exercises, &c. To which is added, an Appendix, containing the Derivations of the Names of the Sun and Planes, and a brief flistery of the extensional Sections of the Sun sed Planes, and of Schools and Private Hallows. Ev. Designed for the Use of Schools and Private Theodor. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Mario Van Printed for Whittaker, and Co. Are Mar

Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

INSI RUCTIVE GLEANINGS, Moral and Scientific, from the best Writers, on Painting and Drawing; arranged as a Book of Reference to the Fupil and Amateur, and containing much Imformation for Professional Students.

By ROWLAND MAINWARING, Capitain R.M.

"It is a shameful thing to be weary of inquiry, when what we search is excellent."—Circro.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman; Baldwin and Cradock; Simpkin and Marshall; and Meyler, Bath. INSTRUCTIVE GLEANINGS, Moral and

In 8vo. price 7s.

In 8vo. price 7s.

THOUGHTS on SECONDARY

PUNISHMENTS, in a Letter to Barl Greg.
By RICHARD WHATELY, D.D.

Archbishop of Dublin.

To which are appended, Two Articles on Transportation to New South Wales, and on Secondary Punishments; and some Observations on Colombation.

Printed for B. Fallowes, Ludgate Street.

Dr. Butler's Geography, Atlasss, &c.
In Sto. new edition, &s. boards,
KETCH of MODERN and ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY, for Schools.
By S. BUTLER, D. D.
Archdescon of Derby, Head Master of Shrawabury School, &c.

By the same Author,
Atlas of Modern Geography, consisting of 22 colourd Maps, with Index. 8vo. 12. half-bound.
Atlas of Ancient Geography, consisting of 31 coloured Maps, with an accentuated Index. 8vo. 12c. half-bound.

bound.

The Indexes contain the Latitude and Longitude of all the places: in that of the Ancient Atlas the Quantities are marked. Praxis on the Latin Prepositions. 8vo. 4th dition, 6c. 6d. beards.—Key to the same. 8vo. 6c. beards.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Published by Mesers. Simplifin and Marshall,

BIBLE STORIES, Part II.; containing Stories taken from the New Testament.
By the Rev. S. WOOD, B.A.
Price 2s. cloth boards.

These Stories are almost entirely in the Words of the common Version. Reflections are added to those Sections which seem to admit of them, and short explanatory notes where they are required.

Also, by the same Author,
Bible Stories, Part I.; containing Stories
ren from the Old Testament. 1s. 6d. cloth beards.

Addresses for Sunday Schools, with appro-Addresses for Sinnay Schools, with appro-priate Prayers. Sc. cloth boards.

"We have perused the Addresses to Sunday Schools with very great pleasure. They are written in that happy style.—pisla, affectionate, and familiar,—which is sure to fix the attention and interest of the young, and are eminently calculated to do good, both from their own intrinsic excellence, and as furnishing valu-able models to those emgaged in the interesting duties of the insti-tutions for which they are intended.—Christian Ploneer, for utitions for which they are massissed.

Dec. 1831.

Prayers for Sunday Schools, with Lists of Books suitable to the Children, and Hints to the Teachers. 2s.

Also, edited by the same,
The Well-spent Hour, reprinted from the

The Well-spoor merican edition. 2s. half-bound.

Alice and Ruth; or, the Duty of Obedience. eprinted from the American edition, and creamented with a 'cod Engraving. 4s. sewed in a neat Wrapper.

These Two little Works are well adapted for Prize-books in Schools.

In 18mo. Sc. &d.; on fine paper, &c.; and in small Svo. &c. in cloth, lettered, Vol. I. of THE BOOK of BUTTERFLIES, MOTHS. and SPHINVE

MOTES, and SPHINXES.

By Capt. THOMAS BROWN, P.R.S. F.L.S. &cc.

To be completed in 2 volu"This is a delightful volume, with no fewer than 95 engravings, coloured after nature; and, both by the style of its scientific descriptions and its general arrangement, well calculated to convey ideas at once correct and popular of the behits and economy of the beautiful tithes of which it treats."—Literary Gasatie, of the beautius titues — Aug. 11.

"The engravings alone would be astonishingly cheep at the price of the volume."—Sunday Times.
This Volume forms the 75th of Constable's Miscellany.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maris Lane, London; Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; and J. Cumming, Dublin.

PLAIN SERMONS preached in a Village Church.

Church.

By a COUNTRY CLERGYMAN.

"The humble title of this volume of excellent moral and practical lessons for a parachial congregation, does not conceal from us the writer of a finished education, and endowments equal to his ploty."—Literary Genetic.

Also, by the same Author, written for the Poor,
The Good Master's Message to his People,

A Serious Address to Persons recovered from

A Plain Letter to the Younger of my Parishners, 3d edition, price 2d.

a Plain Sermons, Vel. II. išmo. 5s. beards, will be ready let September.

Hearne, 81, Strand, London.

Latest Publication on Spain.
In 2 vols. 8vc. 85t.
In G L I S 'S S P A I N in 1830.
We recommend these volumes to our readers."—Edinburgh Reviews for August 1888.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Ready for publication, by the same Author,
The New Gil Blas; or, Pedro of Peneflor. A Novel, in 8 vols.

Welkingame's Arithmetic improved, with Key to all the Exercises at length.
Price 2s. bound,
THE TUTOR'S ASSISTANT.

THE TUTOR'S ASSISTANT.

By FRANCIS WALKINGAME.

The edition moderatised and improved, containing the New Tables of Weights and Measures, with Rules and Examples for comparing the New Measures with the Old; and an Appendix on Repeating and Circulating Decimals, with their Application.

By JOHN FRASER.

London: Printed for Longman and Co.; Baldwin and Co.; T. Cadell; J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Booker; Whittaker and Co.; E. Williams; Harvey and Co.; Simplin and Co.; and Poole and Co.

Also may be had, price 4s. bound,
A Key to the above, containing Solutions of all the Exercises, arranged in a neat and methodical manner for School Practice. Including several concise Methods of Computation, with Explanatory Notes for the private Student. By Published by Effingham Wilson, SS, Royal Exchange, in 1 vol. 870 price los. Ed.

SIX THOUSAND MILES through the United States of America.

United States of America.

By S. A. FERRALL, Beq.

"This is one of the best works on the United States that we have seen for a long time."—Weekly Dispetch.

"We recommend it to our readers as a plain, sensible, and serviceable volume."—Afterseen.

"After the vapid or impertinent course of observation which we have been accustomed to encounter in American tours, it is especially agreeable to meet with a sensible and unprejudiced traveller—and such is Br. Ferrall. He gives us all the advantage of a cool, impartial, and satute observer."—Exeminer.

Bee also Literary Gezette, 11th instant.

On Friday, 94th August, 1833, was published, price 6d. the Fifth No. of a Weekly Journal of Foreign Science and Literature in the French Language, called

E CERCLE; Journal de la Littérature et dei Arts, Théatre, Critique, Mours, Modes Françaises, &c.
The object of this undertaking is to lay before the British Publicand Foreigners extracts from the literary press of the Continent, and to make known, as much as possible, that which is amusing and instructive in French literature.
Fenwick de Porquet and Cooper, 11, Taristock Street, Covent Garden; to whom Communications for the Editor, Advertisements, and Works for Review, are to be addressed.

With Two Engravings, price 3s. sewed, HENATURALSON. Poem. London: Published by W. Simpkin and R. Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court.

Interesting Works,
Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

IR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PERSONAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES. The Third and concluding Volume of Sir Joan Barrington's Personal Sketches abounds still more than the two preceding in racy anecdotes of the true Hibernian character, and is particularly rich in the lumours of the Irish Bar. The following names figure conspicuously in this new Volume:—Chief-Justice Clonmell—Chief-Barons Velverton, Avonmore, and Hussey Burgh—Lords Norbury and Clare—Judge Fletcher—John Philipot Curran—Counsellors Byrne, Flizgibbon, Norcott, and Lysight—Mr. Flood—Fighting Fitzgerald—Mr. Martin of Galway—Sir John Burke—Sir Hercules Langreish—Mr. Dundas—Beauchamp Baginal Harvey (Leader of the Rebels in 1798)—Mr. Bushe—Sir Judkin Fitzgerald, &c.

geraid, &c.

Mr. D'Israeli and Lord Nugent.
In 8vo. price 2s. 6d.

2. Eliott, Hampden, and Pym; or, a Reply of the Author of a Book entitled "Commentaries on the Life and Remorals of John Hampden, his Party, and his Times."

Mr. D'Irrael's Commentaries.

Mr. D'Irrael's Commentaries.

The Fifth and concluding Volume, 1900. 142.

"The 'Commentaries on the Life and Reign of Charles I.' form by far the most important work upon that important age that modern times have produced. More curious diligence and sugacity have seldom been exercised upon any portion of history, and with so much success."—Quarterly Review, July 1809.

1832.

3. Memoirs of Sir James Campbell, of Ard-kinglas, (formerly Sir James Caltander). Written by Himself. In 2 vols. 8vo. with a Portrait, 24z.

"Sir James Campbell is the father of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan. He served during the greater part of the Seven Year." War in Germany as Aide-de-camp to General Mostyn—visited most of the German Courts—had familiar intercourse with Voltaire—was a member of the most celebrated hondon Clubs, the 'Savoir vivre,' the 'Pandemonium,' &c.—held the post of Secretary to the British Embassy at Paris on the eve of the Revolution—journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Parisian society during the Ailled occupation of France."—Globe.

Just compolete, in 3 vols. with Portraits, &c.

Just complete, in 3 vols. with Portraits, &c.

Just complete, in 3 vols. with Portraits, &c.

4. Memoirs of the Great Lord Burghley, Secretary of State in the Reign of King Edward VI. and Lord High Treasurer of England in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth; containing an Historical View of the Times in which he lived, and many of the eminent and illustrious Persons with whom he was connected; with Estracts from his Private Correspondence and Journals, now first published from the Originals. By the Rev. Dr. Nares, Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.

This elaborate work is of the highest national interest: it emplicates and discusses a multitude of great historical, biographicates and the publical questions, and throws much light upon an errof almost political questions, and throws much light upon an errof almost political questions, and throws much light upon an errof almost called national and universal importance."—Literary Gazette.

5. David Garrick's Memoirs and Correspond-

